THE INTRODUCTION.

INnumerable have been the Labours of the Learned in all Ages, for the Promotion of Piety, ever ſince Chriſtianity was firſt planted in the World. The Religion of our Saviour has been commented on by a thouſand Authors, his Precepts canvaſs'd, and his Doctrines diſcuſt, with all the Force of Reaſon human Nature was capable of; yet, in ſpite of all theſe honeſt and laudable Endeavours, Infidelity has prevail'd, and a Spirit of Oppoſition, againſt the moſt eſtabliſh'd and fundamental Laws of our holy Faith, has endeavour'd to bear down, with an impetuous Tide, all the Notions of a Revelation: inſtructing ſome to look upon the New Teſtament as meer Artifice, contrived by the Schemes of Civil Government, and preſerv'd by the prevailing Power of the Prieſthood; others, to diſpute the Authenticity of ſome particular Books contain'd in it, thereby to eradicate the whole; others, to calumniate every Part of it, as an immethodical and inſipid Compoſition, unbecoming the Spirit of God to dictate, or Men of Letters to peruſe.

But although this Complaint be too juſt, it does not follow, that Others, being ambitious of treading in the Steps of ſuch brave Examples, ought to deſiſt. When the Degeneracy and Corruption of our own Times are conſider'd; the Reflection brings nothing but a Train of melancholy Ideas along with it; every religious Treatiſe, as ſoon as publiſh'd, is openly attack'd, to the Diminution and Diſgrace of Chriſtianity, and the Increaſe of its inſolent and impious Opponents: For when any Argument, on any fundamental Article of our Faith, is ſtarted, which is irrefragable in itſelf, yet he, who preſumes, by meer Sophiſtry, and Cavils to depreciate it, ſhall bear away the Prize, and be encourag'd. How then ſhould Religion ſucceed, or Virtue gain ground amongſt us?

To comment on any particular Treatiſe, is a very laborious, and ought to be a judicious Undertaking; and the Commendation ariſes from the Quality of the Subject commented on: Every one, therefore, will allow, that ſuch Diſſertations as are wrote to explain and vindicate the Life, Doctrines, and Precepts, of the great Founder of our Religion, and of his Apoſtles, by far tranſcend the reſt, and are of the greateſt Importance, as they help to illuſtrate thoſe Myſteries which confound our Opinions, rectify our Judgments, and confirm us in a free Belief of them.

With how great Eſteem do we receive the Memory of the antient Poets, Philoſophers, and Lawgivers? They ſtrike upon our Imagination with ſurprizing Warmth: To mention an Homer, an Heſiod, a Plato, or an Ariſtotle; a Solon, or a Lycurgus; an Anaxagoras, or an Anaximander, is the readieſt Way to raiſe our Admiration. The ſacred Penmen, are with Partiality and Prejudice, rejected, when theſe are applauded, although infinitely more ſublime Sentiments, and more elevated Expreſſions are interſpers'd in Abundance throughout their Works, for which I refer the Reader to the pathetick Paſſages of Job, and the Fire of St. Paul. But how low and groveling were the moſt extended Notions of theſe celebrated Antients concerning the Attributes of God, compar'd to thoſe far more exalted Ideas of him which we meet with in the Books of the Prophets and Apoſtles? There Omnipreſent, Omnipotent, Immutable, Eternal, Uncreated, All-merciful, All-juſt, and many Epithets of the ſame Tranſcendant Nature ſet off the Dignity of the Godhead, ſome of which, none of the great Men above, nor any of the Sages who ſucceeded them, could ever arrive at, with all their boaſted Wiſdom and Penetration. Yet theſe are they whoſe Opinions and Precepts are held in ſo much Veneration to this Day.

But what can any other Religion in the World produce, which will be able to ſtand in Competition with thoſe excellent Duties and Precepts, mentioned in the Chriſtian Syſtem; which teaches us to revere the Majeſty of God above all Things; to curb our impetuous Paſſions, to preſerve an Equanimity in all the Viciſſitudes of this Life; to abſtain from all inordinate Deſires; to cultivate mutual Love and Charity, and to be merciful, not only to our Fellow-Creatures, but even to the Brute Creation, with other Commands of the ſame Divine Stamp; which inſtructs us to be valiant, yet forgiving; patient, yet not too ſubmiſſive; benevolent, ſociable and free. Theſe are the Topics by which the Author of our Redemption illuſtrates his Religion, and are ſome of the Fundamentals on which it is built, which, beſides, has ſo many Charms in it, That a Mind, deſirous of extending its Ideas to divine Things, cannot find a Study more amiable and ſatisfactory. For the Impulſes we receive from a pious Reflection are ſtrong, perſuaſive, and tranſporting, and the more fervent our Contemplation, about the Greatneſs and Incomprehenſibility of the ſupreme Being, is, the nobler and more ſublime are our Sentiments: While we are thus rapturouſly employ'd, the Soul diſregards, as it were, the Body which ſhe animates, leaves the World behind it, and ſoars up to Regions of viſionary Bliſs, which, one Day, will prove real, and well reward her divine Reſearches.

There is no Occaſion to inſiſt on the Advantages that ariſe from the Peruſal of Books of Divinity, much leſs to make Panegyrics on the Fountain of our moſt holy Religion; all Encomiums being infinitely ſhort of it. Every one who has the leaſt Veneration for Chriſtianity, knows this. Nor need we ſtrive to ſet off in gay and lively Colours the Characters of the ſeveral eminent Men, whoſe curious Annotations make up the greateſt Part of the following Sheets: A Grotius, a Hammond, a Locke, and a Whitby, are too well known to the learned World to want our inferior Commendations.

Some may object againſt this preſent Undertaking, and charge us with giving them but a Compendium of what others have more copiouſly handled and explain'd; and that all Abridgments are virtually bad, and ought to be rejected. But ſuch an Accuſation, we doubt not, will appear falſe and ill-grounded, in the Opinion of every impartial and judicious Reader. For by a careful Peruſal of the long and laborious Works of thoſe juſtly admir'd Commentators above-mentioned, and by a faithful Contraction, of their full Senſe and Meaning, within a narrow Compaſs, we reduce many Volumes into one, and oblige the Public with their invaluable Obſervations, for a Trifle in Compariſon, which, of themſelves, are too coſtly for the Purchaſe of common Readers.

CRITICAL and EXPLANATORY
ANNOTATIONS
UPON THE
ACCORDING TO
St. MATTHEW.

THERE are various Opinions about the Language in which St. Matthew wrote this Goſpel, ſome ſay in Hebrew, others in Greek; but the moſt receiv'd Account is, that it was compoſed in the firſt: and eight Years after the Aſſumption of our Saviour. St. Matthew and St. John were always converſant with Chriſt, and Eye-Witneſſes of the Facts they have ſet down; but St. Mark and St. Luke were not ſo, receiving their hiſtorical Accounts from the Relation of others, though the ſame Credit is to be given them, and they are to be look'd on, equally as Authentic and Canonical as the two former Evangeliſts.

CHAP. I.

1. THE Book of the Generation of Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of David, the Son of Abraham.

Some learned Commentators ſay, That this is not the Title of the whole Book, but only of the firſt Part of it: That it doth not only contain the Birth of Chriſt, but alſo his Genealogy, which, together, are but inconſiderable, in reſpect of the Whole: That the real Book comprehends the Story of the Birth, Life, Death, and Reſurrection of Chriſt, and of all the Events that belong to that Matter, as recorded by the Evangeliſt; as the Acts of the Apoſtles are all that befel the Apoſtles afterwards: That the Word Geneſis or Generation, is of that Latitude as to compriſe the Hiſtory of our Lord's Death, &c. but that it ought, in this Place, to be reſtrain'd to the Birth of Chriſt, as appears from a parallel Phraſe, This is the Book, or, the Rehearſal, of the Generation of Man from Adam to Noah, Gen. v. 1. from the Deſign of the Evangeliſt, here, of ſetting down the Deſcent of Chriſt from Abraham, and his Alliance to King David, by his Father Joſeph: That St. Matthew, deſigning to write a Narrative of our Saviour's Life, begins with his Pedigree and Genealogy, and ſhews from whom he deduc'd his Deſcent, namely, from David and Abraham, by which we are to obſerve, that David is mentioned before Abraham, as being an illuſtrious Type of the Meſſiah, and becauſe the Jews expected that the Son of David ſhould be their King. [The Son of David the Son of Abraham] St. Matthew, in this Place, makes particular mention of Abraham and David for the Promiſes given them; to the former, concerning his numerous Poſterity, for in his Seed ſhould all the Families of the Earth be bleſt; which is more general to the latter, in relation to the long Continuance and Eſtabliſhment of his Kingdom, for, in his Seed would he eſtabliſh the Throne of his Kingdom for ever; both which have been remarkably fulfill'd in Chriſt: This Promiſe is more plain and explicite: A very curious Commentator ſays, That Chriſt was the Son both of Abraham and of David, as Alibamah was the Daughter of Anab, and the Daughter of Zibeon, Gen. xxxvi. 2. which Senſe is moſt ſuitable to the Deſign of the Evangeliſt, which is to prove, that Chriſt was the Son of both, and that in him were fulfill'd the Promiſes made to both. Another eminent Author ſays, that they who have had a more elevated Idea of the Bleſſed Jeſus than the reſt, call him Ben, or the Son of David.

2. Abraham begat Iſaac, and Iſaac begat Jacob, and Jacob begat Judas, and his Brethren.

The Evangeliſt, by the Way here, recommends Chriſt as related to all the Iſraelites; and ſome Annotators, on this Paſſage aſſert, That Interpreters might ſave themſelves the Trouble of giving a Reaſon of many Things contain'd in this Catalogue, by ſaying, St. Matthew here recites it, as he found it in the authentic Copies of the Jews, who doubtleſs had preſerved ſome known, and approv'd Genealogy, of their Deſcent from Abraham, the Father of their Nation, in whom they ſo much gloried, and from whoſe Loins they expected the promis'd Meſſiah.

3. And Judas begat Phares, and Zara of Thamar, and Phares begat Eſrom, and Eſrom begat Aram.

Zara is added here to recal to mind the illuſtrious Event that fell out at the Birth of theſe Perſons, and to be a Step towards fixing a Belief of that which was to be born of the Virgin: Zara is mentioned with Phares, as being born at the ſame Time, and ſtriving with him for Primo-geniture.

4, 5. And Aram begat Aminadab, and Aminadab begat Naaſſon, and Naaſſon began Salmon. And Salmon begat Booz of Rachab, and Booz begat Obed of Ruth, and Obed begat Jeſſe.

'Tis agreed by all, that this is taken from a Tradition of the Jews, which ſays, That Rachab was married to ſome Prince of Iſrael; but the Jews, in Contradiction to St. Matthew, aſſert, that ſhe was married to Joſhua, which makes directly againſt their own Tradition, that Rachab was the Mother of eight Prieſts and Prophets; whereas Joſhua was neither of the Tribe of Judah, nor of Levi, but of the Tribe of Ephraim, Num. xiii. 8.—That Rachab was the Wife of Salmon and Mother of Booz, is not ſet down in the Old Teſtament, nor mentioned in the Genealogy in St. Luke, but recited by this Evangeliſt, either out of the Cabala or Tradition, or elſe from ſome other written Authors of ſufficient Credit among the Jews, as the Names of Jannes and Jambres, 2 Tim. iii. 8.

6. And Jeſſe begat David the King, and David the King begat Solomon of her that had been the Wife of Uras.

The Women, in this Liſt of Names, are but few, and mentioned curſorily, being famous for their foreign Extraction, and criminal Conduct, and whoſe Hiſtory is an Introduction to the Call of Idolatreſſes and Sinners by the Goſpel of Chriſt: All of them have a Brand of Infamy upon them; Thamar committed Inceſt; Rachab was an Harlot, Ruth an Heathen, and Bathſheba an Adultreſs. This is to make us underſtand that Chriſt came to ſave the moſt notorious Sinners, and is recorded for the Support of ſuch as are illegitimate and baſe born.

7, 8. And Solomon begat Roboam, and Roboam begat Abia, and Abia begat Aſa. And Aſa begat Joſaphat, and Joſaphat begat Joram, and Joram begat Ozias.

From the Books of Kings and Chronicles we find, That Ozias was the Son of Amaziah, but according to the Language of the Hebrews and their Maxims, relating to this Matter, The Children of Children are reputed the Children not only of their immediate Parents, but alſo of their Anceſtors, and theſe Anceſtors are ſaid to beget thoſe who are removed ſome Generations from them. So Iſaiah ſaith to Hezekiah, Of thy Sons which ſhall iſſue from thee, which thou ſhalt beget, ſhall they take away, and they ſhall be Eunuchs to the Palace of the King of Babylon. Which Prediction was fulfilled only in the Days of Jechonias, long after the Time of Hezekiah. The learned Gentleman upon this Place goes on, and ſays, that the great Queſtion is, why Azariah, Joaſh, and Amaziah, are left out of the Catalogue of the Kings of Judah? He anſwers, not for being Sinners, ſince Manaſſes and Amon are retained in it. But ſeveral Omiſſions of this Nature are to be found in the Books of the Old Teſtament. Cain and his whole Poſterity are left out in Chronicles; and Simeon is omitted in the Bleſſing of Moſes. So that there is no more Reaſon to ſuſpect the Evangeliſt here, than the Jews have to queſtion their own Scriptures on this Account.

9, 10, 11. And Ozias begat Joatham, and Joatham begat Achaz, and Achas begat Ezekias. And Ezekias begat Manaſſes, and Manaſſes begat Amon, and Amon begat Joſias. And Joſias begat Jechonias and his Brethren, about the Time that they were carried away to Babylon.

There is an Objection brought againſt this, that Joſias did not beget Jechonias, who was the Son of Jehoiakim. The Author above anſwers, that the Jechonias in this 11th Verſe, is not the ſame Perſon with the Jechonias mentioned in the 12th, but is, indeed, Jehoiakim, the Son of Joſias, and his Firſt-born. For though the People of the Land made Jehoahaz, the ſecond Son of Joſias, King after his Father, yet That the Kingdom, by Birthright, belong'd to Jehoiakim, is evident, becauſe Jehoahaz was only twenty three Years old when he began to reign, and reigned but three Months; whereas Jehoiakim, who immediately ſucceeded after his Depoſition, was twenty five Years old when he began to reign. 2 Kings xxiii. 31. 36.

12, 13. And after they were brought to Babylon, Jechonias begat Salathiel, and Salathiel begat Zoro- And Zorobabel begat Abihud, and Abihud begat Eliakim, and Eliakim begat Azor.

In a very antient Hebrew Copy of this Goſpel, this Verſe is ſomewhat varied, thus: And Eliakim begat Abner, and Abner begat Azor., by which Interpoſition of Abner, the fourteen Generations are compleated, in which, otherwiſe, there will ſeem to be a Defect. Salathiel, probably, being the firſt of this third Fourteen, and not Jechonias (as Solomon was the firſt of the Second, and not David) from whom to Chriſt there will be then but thirteen; if Abner be not thus added to ſupply. The above are the Words of an emiment Commentator, who, expreſſing the Difficulties that occur in this Genealogye, abſtains from treating more largely upon it. An Author of late Date ſays, that both St. Matthew and St. Luke, making mention of our Lord's Pedigree, (the former by his reputed Father's Side, the latter by his Mother's) their Deſign was to preſent us with a general Draught of his Deſcent, and not to be ſtrict and accurate in enumerating every individual Perſon, which ſhould teach us not to be over curious in ſcanning the Parts of this Genealogy, much leſs, captiouſly to object againſt it.

14. 15. 16. And Azor begat Sadoc, and Sadoc begat Achim, and Achim begat Eliud. And Eliud begat Eleazar, and Eleazar begat Matthan, and Matthan begat Jacob. And Jacob begat Joſeph the Husband of Mary, of whom was born Jeſus, who is called Chriſt.

Grotius's Remarks on this Paſſage are very curious. The Opinions of thoſe who alledge, ſays he, that Matthew hath recounted the Race of Joſeph, and Luke that of Mary, ſeem to me altogether improbable; for ſince Luke in the ſame Context ſays, as was ſuppoſed the Son of Joſeph, who was the Son of Heli; and ſo of the reſt in the Sequel, joining, in a continued Series or Line, the Sons with the Fathers, that he would then, by leaving Joſeph out of the Number, either have Chriſt to be called the Nephew of Heli, or Joſeph not to be the Son, but the Son-in-Law of the ſame Heli, is againſt common Senſe and Propriety of Speech. Upon the whole, it muſt be confeſs'd, therefore, That the former has given an Account of Joſeph's Lineage in a direct Line downwards, and the latter inverted the Deſcent, and traced it upwards; neither is Joſeph's Original to be thought any Way uncorreſponding with Chriſt, ſince he was born of her whom Joſeph held in Marriage, for, if the Law hath determin'd that the Iſſue of a Widow, begotten by a Relation of her deceaſed Husband, hath a Right to ſucceed to the whole Inheritance of ſuch Deceaſed, in as extenſive a Manner, as if he had been the legal Son deſcended of his Marriage; what hinders, but that which was born of Joſeph's legitimate Wife, without the Interpoſition of any human Aid, as if a divine Power had been virtually inherent in it alone, may not be eſteem'd belonging properly to Joſeph? And from hence it comes that not only the Writers of the Goſpel ſtile Joſeph the Father of Chriſt, and that he was ſo, his Marriage is a full Proof, but even Chriſt himſelf performed all thoſe Commands and Duties to him, which, from a Son, appointed to execute the ſacred Will of his celeſtial Father, could poſſibly be thought or expected; beſide, if in all other Parts of the World, where Sons are adopted, they deduce their Honour, from the Rank and Figure that Nation makes, whence they had their Deſcent, how much more reaſonable is it to conclude, that all the national Rights of Joſeph, and the divine Promiſes, made to his Progenitors, belonged to the Lord Jeſus? The current Opinion among ſome, that Mary's Deſcent may be traced out of Joſeph's Pedigree, is, I ſuppoſe, not ſo effectually eſtabliſhed on thoſe Foundations as are commonly receiv'd; for what they tell us of Perſons of one Tribe, intermarrying with the Perſons belonging to the ſame Tribe, neither holds always true, nor, granting it ſhould, is there any thing to be inferred from thence, ſufficient to make it appear, that Mary was deſcended form the Houſe of David; upon which, it muſt be prov'd that Mary neither had Power to marry out of her Tribe, nor even out of her own Family, which is certainly true, ſince ſhe had no Brothers of the ſame Blood; for the Women of Iſrael, who had no Brothers, were enjoin'd, by the Law of Moſes, to marry the next of Kin, their Explanation of which is extant in the laſt Chapter of Numbers, where an Example of this very Affair, which came before Moſes, may be ſeen. For the Word, which ſometimes occurs there, doth not ſignify a Tribe, if it be only underſtood for a twelfth Part of the People of Iſrael, bnt has a more copious Meaning, and implies a Race, eſpecially in this Place. And that it ought to be uderſtood ſo, a Reaſon which is added to the Law requires it: the Scope of which is this, that the Inheritance of a Father ſhall not devolve upon Strangers, which, from the Similitude of another Law about Ranſoms, ſeems to be made, not only for the ſake of preſerving the Tribes, but the ſeveral Families; and from this Proviſion it is, that he who wrote the Hiſtory of Tobit, a ſtrict Obſerver of the Jewiſh Cuſtoms, introduces, Chap. iii 18. Sarah, a Virgin complaining that her Father had no Sons to inherit his Subſtance, nor She a Brother, to whoſe Son, as the Law enacted, ſhe might give herſelf in Marriage; and conſonantly to this, the Writer of Judith's Hiſtory ſays, that her Husband was not only of the ſame Tribe, but alſo of the ſame Family. Beſides Chryſoſtom and Epiphanius, who reſided in thoſe Places, where great Numbers of Jews were, and conſequently could not be ignorant of their Cuſtoms and Laws, agree, with me, in the Interpretation I have here put upon this Law of Moſes, which may be further confirmed, eſpecially what I have added upon this Article, from the Attic Conſtitution, the more antient Laws of which Government are eaſily to be prov'd to have been borrow'd, though not written, from the Laws of Moſes. Another Author ſays on this Place, that it was neceſſary the Genealogy of Jeſus ſhould be deduc'd from Joſeph, becauſe it was generally receiv'd by the Jews, that Jeſus was the Son of the Carpenter, that is, the Son of Joſeph: So that if Joſeph had not been acknowledg'd to have been of the Tribe of Judah, and of the Family of David, they would not have fail'd to have objected this, as a juſt Prejudice againſt all Chriſt's Pretences to have been the Meſſiah. Some object, ſays he, that Joſeph being not the natural, but the reputed Father of the holy Jeſus: This cannot be ſufficient to prove that Jeſus came from the Loins of David wherefore the divine Wiſdom was pleaſ'd to direct this Evengeliſt, to remove this ſtubling Blockout of the Way. But it may be objected, ſays the Author quoted above, that Joſeph being not the natural, but the reputed father of the holy Jeſus, this cannot be ſufficient to prove, that Jeſus came from the loins of David, or, was the fruit of his body according to the promiſe: he anſwers; that Joſeph and Mary, were of the ſame tribe and family, and, therefore, by giving us the genealogy of Joſeph, we have, at the ſame time, the genealogy of Mary, and conſequently of Jeſus the ſon of Mary, which ſhews that he was of the ſeed of David. Hence, ſeveral of the antients, enquiring, why Jeſus was conceived of the Virgin eſpouſed, and not of one perfectly at liberty, ſay, this was done, That, by the family of Joſeph, the family of Mary might be ſhewn. Mr. Whiſton has advanc'd a new and ſtrange opinion, namely, that this genealogy was chiefly deſign'd to ſhew, that Chriſt was born at Bethlehem, only becauſe 'tis thus enquired by the Jews. Hath not the ſcripture ſaid, that Chriſt ſhould be born in the town of Bethlehem, where David was? John, vii. 42. But hath not the ſame ſcripture as expreſly ſaid, that he was to be of the ſeed of Abraham and David? Can, therefore, any man reaſonably imagine, that a genealogy beginning thus, The generation of Jeſus Chriſt, the ſon of David, the ſon of Abraham, ſhould not be primarily deſigned to prove, he was the ſon of David, and of Abraham? Matthew and Luke, indeed, in their ſecond chapters, prove that Jeſus was born in Bethlehem, becauſe they expreſly ſay it; but this genealogy ſays nothing of it, and, therefore, abſtracted from them, proves nothing of it: and can it be the chief deſign of this long genealogy, to prove that which it doth not prove at all, and which is only proved from what follows in another chapter, and in another Evangeliſt? the very laſt clauſe of this genealogy, that Joſeph was the husband of Mary, of whom was born Jeſus, who is called Chriſt, is all that can relate to Chriſt's being born at Bethlehem, and all that goes before is evidently impertinent to that matter, and, therefore, can have no ſubſerviency to that deſign, whence we may reſt aſſured, that it was not intended by the Holy Ghoſt for ſuch an end, ſeeing he never could deſign to prove a thing, by an account of any thing impertinent, and which has no relation to it Certain it is that theſe genealogies, could never be deſigned to prove, that which they do not prove, for, then, theſe ſacred writers would have fail'd in their deſign. If, then, they do not prove this, but only that Jeſus was the ſon of Joſeph, by being the ſon of his wife Mary, they could not be deſign'd to prove more. Moreover, the genealogy of St Matthew could never prove this to the Jews, unleſs they owned that Mary was of the family of David. And if this was then owned by the Jews, what need was there to prove that to them, which ſo infallibly followed from it, namely, that the Fruit of her womb was of the ſame family? The genealogy of St. Luke doth not prove it, becauſe there is not one word of Mary, or any other woman in it; nor would the expreſs ſaying in it, that Mary, the mother of Jeſus, was the daughter of Heli, prove it, unleſs they owned it to be ſo, which had they done, (as the proof of this would have been needleſs to them, ſo) why is it that the kindred of our Lord delivered a contrary tradition to this? why do Africanus, Euſebius, Epiphanius, and St. Jerome, all born, or living in Palæſtine, run into that opinion, which is ſo inconſiſtent with it, namely, that Joſeph himſelf was only, in conſtruction of law, the ſon of Heli? Why is it that none of the antient chriſtians owned it. To oppoſe, againſt this tradition, and unanimous conſent of chriſtians, an impious and lying viſion of the Talmud, of a doubtful conſtruction, as Doctor Lightfoot confeſſeth, is, as if we ſhould oppoſe, to the tradition of all chriſtians, that our Saviour was born of a Virgin, the blaſphemous tales of the ſame Talumd, that Mary was a whore, and that Chriſt was the baſtard of one Pandeira.

Ver. 17. So all the generations from Abraham to David are fourteen generations: and from David, until the carrying away into Babylon, are fourteen generations: and from the carrying away into Babylon unto Chriſt, are fourteen generations.

So that the genealogy here ſet down (not by enumeration of all the Severals, which ſucceeded one another from Abraham to Chriſt) in that manner, as is ſufficient to deduce his pedigree from Abraham and David, may, for memory's ſake, be devided into three fourteens; one of thoſe from Abraham to David, before they were kings; a ſecond from David to the captivity, while they enjoyed the regal power entire; the third from the captivity to Chriſt, when there were only ſome weak remainders of the regal power among the Jews. A learned commentator, on this paſſage, ſays, that it is to be obſerved, that the Evangeliſt ſaith of the generations from Abraham to David, that they were, in all, fourteen; but when he comes to the ſecond interval, he does not ſay, as before, all the generations. The fourteen, mentioned by him, were all the generations of that ſpace of time, as knowing, that, for good reaſons, he had omitted three belonging to it. but only that the whole number of thoſe, which he had named, was fourteen, as really they were; that, in every one of theſe ſeveral intervals, they were under a ſeveral and diſtinct manner of government; and the end of ſuch interval produced ſome alteration in the ſtate: In the firſt they were under prophets, in the ſecond under kings, and in the third under Haſmomæan prieſts. The firſt fourteen brought their ſtate to glory in the kingdom of David, the ſecond to miſery in the captivity of Babylon, and the third to Glory again in the kingdom of Chriſt. The firſt begins with Abraham, who received the promiſe, and ends in David, who received it again more clearly; the ſecond begins with the building of the temple, and ends in the deſtruction of it; the third begins with their peeping out of miſery in Babel, and ends in their accompliſh'd delivery by Chriſt.

Ver. 18. Now the birth of Jeſus Chriſt was on this wiſe; when as his mother Mary was eſpouſed to Joſeph, before they came together, ſhe was found with child of the Holy Ghoſt.

Meaning, the birth of Chriſt was not in the ordinary and natural way, but his mother Mary was found to be with child, by the extraordinary and miraculous operation of the Holy Ghoſt; by which we are to note, that the eſpouſal of Mary to Joſeph was for the ſafety of Chriſt, and for the credit and reputation of the Virgin. It was for our Saviour's ſafety, becauſe, being to fly into Egypt, he had Joſeph, his reputed father, to take care of him; and it was for the Virgin's reputation, leſt ſhe ſhould have been accounted unclean. — Before they came together. It does not appear ſays Grotius, to have been a conſtant rule, from the day of the eſpouſals, for the bride to go to the habitation of the bridegroom, tho' Chryſoſtom affirms it, which I believe may have been practic'd at Antioch in his time; but, becauſe the Jews themſelves differ in this point, it is more probable, that it was a ſpontaneous act, and done, as either party found their advantage in it: for Rebecca was conducted to Iſaac, before her nuptials were ſolemnized, becauſe Iſaac found it not for his intereſt to travel into Meſopotamia. On the other hand, Sampſon's wife remained in the houſe of her father. And that this was a more frequent practice, ſufficiently appears from Deuteronomy, xx. 7. which may be further confirm'd from the Roman Laws, according to Modeſtius, which ſay, that the Woman eſpouſed did not change her habitation, before the contracted marriage: however, it appears that the bride remained untouch'd, until the marriage was ſolemniz'd, before a full audience ſummoned for that purpoſe: a circumſtance, not only confirm'd by the law, but what the moſt antient fathers taught.

Ver. 19. Then Joſeph her husband, being a juſt man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily.

Joſeph, being an holy perſon, and a ſtrict obſerver of the rights of his nation, was unwilling to accompany with a defiled woman, and, therefore, minded to put her away, by giving a bill of divorce into her hand before two witneſſes, but, being gentle and kind, he intended to put her away privily, leſt ſhe ſhould have been expoſed and ſtoned to death. But, ſays another commentator, an act of divorce is not only meant by theſe words, but it muſt be underſtood ſo, as that no notice might be taken of the betrothing, which, being ordinarily performed at home, might be kept from public notice, and ſo her being with child, needed not bring the puniſhment of one found, by her husband, to be no maid upon her, but only that which belonged to the unmarried. The Sentiments of another gentleman are theſe. That Joſeph being a juſt man, that is, one who was a ſtrict obſerver of the laws of his country, was minded to give her a bill of divorce privately into her hand, or into her boſom, before two witneſſes only; for a juſt Jew held it infamous to retain an adultreſs, and this was all Joſeph could do in this caſe, for tho' the law required, that a married woman, found lying with a man, ſhould dye, that is, be ſtrangled, and an eſpouſed Virgin, for the ſame crime, was to be ſtoned, yet neither was Joſeph certain that ſhe was guilty of this crime, after the eſpouſals, nor had he two witneſſes of the fact, without which ſhe could not be ſubject to the Jewiſh canons tho' ſhe might be divorced after eſpouſals, without proof, by witneſſes, or otherwiſe, of ſuch defilement. Grotius puts the following interpretation on the word privily. That it was impoſſible for Joſeph to put her away, without any body's knowing nothing of the matter, ſince it was cuſtomary, both with the Jews, and Romans, to have witneſſes, when either they contracted or diſſolved marriage; but Joſeph did not care that ſhe ſhould undergo a public trial, or he render a cauſe for ſo doing, for that is the import of the word privily, as oppoſed to the words, to make her a public example. Now the objection which ſome learned men bring, viz. that Joſeph might have thought that the Virgin had loſt her honour before eſpouſals, is of little weight; for it ſeems more likely that her pregnancy anſwered to the time of her conception, which was after the eſpouſals. However, the extraordinary behaviour of Mary gave Joſeph all the reaſon in the world to think well of her; and if we may credit St. Ambroſe, a juſt man will never take revenge upon, or accuſe any one. Joſeph's clemency to the ſuſpected Virgin was extraordinary; for kind and merciful men always preſume the beſt, and proſecute with gentleneſs, eſpecially where life is concerned.

Ver. 20. 21. 22. 23. But while he thought on theſe things, behold, the Angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, ſaying, Joſeph, thou ſon of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy Wife: for that which is conceived in her, is of the Holy Ghoſt. And ſhe ſhall bring forth a ſon, and thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus: for he ſhall ſave his people from their ſins. (Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken of the Lord by the prophet, ſaying. Behold a Virgin ſhall be with child, and ſhall bring forth a ſon, and they ſhall call his name Emanuel, which being interpreted, is God with us.)

It may be ſaid of Chriſt, that he delivers us from ſin three ways, firſt, in being born for the remiſſion of ſins; ſecondly, in making us, while we live here, that ſin ſhall not reign within us, and thirdly, in beſtowing on us eternal life, whereby he entirely aboliſhes ſin, and the wages of it; tho' the Angel ſeems to point out here his being born for the remiſſion of ſins. That it might be fulfilled. It is of no ſmall moment to underſtand rightly this paſſage; for it was the practice formerly of Celſus, Julian and of the antient, as it is of the modern Jews now, to object this, and other paſſages of the ſame nature, to the chriſtians, as if the Evangeliſts and their followers, had not been accurate enough in citing the authorities of the prophets. It muſt be remark'd that the Apoſtles do not oppoſe the Jews with theſe paſſages, as tho' they were teſtimonies to prove that Jeſus was the promis'd Meſſiah: thoſe which they bring in vindication of this affair, are not many, they ſatisfying themſelves with the miracles and reſurrection of Chriſt, (for he himſelf ſaid formerly) either theſe are ſufficient, or nothing is ſufficient. In the foregoing verſe, we have a prediction of our Saviour's birth, namely, the Virgin ſhall bring forth a Son, and thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus, which ſignifies a Saviour: the reaſon why this name was given him, was, becauſe he ſhould ſave his people, not temporally, as Joſhua did the Iſraelites from their enemies, but ſpiritually and eternally, from their ſins. Now the great end of Chriſt's coming into the world, was to be a Saviour from ſin; he came to obtain pardon for ſin, and to reconcile us to God; he came to weaken the reigning power of ſin, and implant a new principle of holineſs in the heart; laſtly, he came to perfect and accompliſh all thoſe happy beginnings, at the end of this life, in heaven. From theſe Words, Behold a Virgin ſhall be with child, which is a prophecy of Eſay the Prophet, who has the honour of being firſt recited in the new teſtament, the great miſtery of our Saviour's wonderful incarnation, was reveal'd (tho' darkly) to the church of God, under the Old Teſtament.

Ver. 24, 25. Then Joſeph being raiſed from ſleep, did as the Angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife. And knew her not, till ſhe had brought forth her firſt born ſon, and he called his name Jeſus.

From Joſeph's obeying the command of God, and taking Mary, without making any heſitation or ſcruple about it, Mankind are taught, that a ſincere Perſon, being ſatisfied of the order of the Almighty, will not ſtand to diſpute any thing, but inſtantly complies, tho' the duty may ſeem to be attended with hazardous and difficult conſequences. And he knew her not, The Roman church hath made it an article of faith, that our Saviour was the only child of the Virgin, and that his mother continued ſtill a Virgin; nay, it hath made it hereſy to hold the contrary opinion; but how is it conſiſtent with good divinity, to make that an article of divine faith, which hath no divine revelation to back it, or to make that a neceſſary point to be believed, which the holy ſcripture ſays not a word of, a learned commentator ſays, he cannot tell how the church of Rome will anſwer this difficulty Indeed, it is a probable opinion, tho' not an article of faith, that Mary had no other child but our Saviour; for Until ſignifies in ſcripture as much as never: as in Gen. 28, 15. I will not leave thee, until I have done that which I have promiſed, meaning, I will never leave thee. In like manner, her firſt born ſon, do not imply ſhe had any child after, but that ſhe had none before: the ſcripture commonly calls that child, that firſt opens the womb, the firſt born, tho' no other ſons or daughters were born afterwards. So Joſhua 17, 1. Manaſſeh's firſt born is called Machir, tho' he had no other children. However, 'tis a captious queſtion to enquire whether Mary had, or had not, any children after our Saviour; 'tis of little advantage to the miſtery, and ſmall account can but be drawn from it, therefore 'tis more prudent, and argues greater wiſdom to let it alone, without ſifting or making enquiry into an affair, that, after the beſt traces we can get from it, will but do us an inconſiderable piece of ſervice at the laſt.

CHAP. II.

The foregoing chapter contain'd the miraculous conception of Chriſt, by the power, and efficacy of the Holy Spirit: this records ſeveral remarkable circumſtances which regard his birth: namely, the place, Bethlehem, and the time, under king Herod.

Ver. 1, 2. NOW when Jeſus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, in the days of Herod the king, behold there came wiſemen from the eaſt to Jeruſalem, Saying, where is he that is born king of the Jews? for we have ſeen his ſtar in the eaſt, and are come to worſhip him.

Three perſons, of the name of Jeſus, occur in the new teſtament; namely our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, Jeſus the ſon of Nun, Act, vii, 45. and Jeſus ſirnamed the juſt. Col. iv. 11. But our buſineſs is with the firſt, the Evangeliſt ſays here that he was born in Bethlehem, about which ſeveral controverſies and opinions have been ſtarted, both by chriſtians and jews. Some have expreſs'd their opinions ſo, as if the genealogy of Chriſt, in the preceding chapter, had been for no other end, but only to prove, that he was born in Bethlehem, to confute which, we have obliged the reader with the remarks of a very curious annotator. 'Tis ſaid that when he was born, wiſemen came from the eaſt to worſhip him, that is, men skilled in the ſcience of the ſtars, according to that paſſage of St. Jerome upon Daniel, Magi dicuntur qui de ſignis philoſophantur, conſuetudo autem, & ſermo communis Magos pro maleficis accipit, qui aliter habentur apud gentem ſuam, quod ſint philoſophi Chaldeorum; ſo that theſe Magi or wiſemen were no other than aſtronomers; not conjurers, as the general opinion of mankind will have them, being Chaldean philoſophers, and otherwiſe eſteem'd in their own country. Several learned men hold, that they were Perſians, which ſeems a very probable conjecture; but the ſtrongeſt reaſon they bring for this, is from the word Magicians; yet even this appears of little weight, becauſe every one will agree, that the Greek commentators upon the holy ſcriptures, and the Evangeliſts themſelves, frequently us'd foreign eaſtern words in their writings, which were of the ſame ſignification And it appears from the former, eſpecially, in their comments on Daniel, that this and the Chaldean word Aſapin are of the ſame import, which latter, Daniel, in his ſecond chapter, v. 27. makes uſe of to denote Magicians or wiſemen. Moreover, it is plain that, in St. Matthew's time, the word Magician not only meant a Perſian, who philoſophiz'd about the ſtars, or, as we call ſuch a one, who was an aſtronomer; but it likewiſe ſignify'd a Chaldean, in the ſame capacity. Another reaſon, to prove they were Perſians is fetch'd from this, becauſe the magicians or wiſemen are ſaid to come from the eaſt. But this reaſon evinces nothing, for the eaſt is ſo call'd, firſt, with reſpect to the ſun, or the eaſt ſimply, which the Seventy, Deut. iv. 41, ſtile, like the Hebrews, the riſing of the ſun; ſecondly, the eaſt is ſo nam'd from a region frequently occurring in the ſcriptures, that lies eaſtward with reſpect to all Judea; and, thirdly, it is called the eaſt with reſpect to Jeruſalem, as in Zachar. xiv. 4. where the mount of olives is ſaid to be before Jeruſalem on the eaſt. And in the ſame verſe, the ſame prophet once uſes the eaſt for the eaſt ſimply, and once for the eaſt of the city; tho' in other paſſages of his book, the eaſt is to be found mention'd abſolutely, without any addition. So that it may be queſtion'd, whether the magicians or wiſemen came from the eaſt of the ſun, that is, from Perſia, or from the eaſt of the city Jeruſalem, that is, from Chaldea, from Aram; whence Balaam, being call'd formerly, ſaid he was call'd from the mountains of the eaſt? ſeveral of the antients favour this latter part of the queſtion, who aſſert, that Balaam's prophecy inſpir'd the magicians to follow the leading of the ſtar. It is probable that Matthew meant neither, and that the words from the eaſt, were not deſign'd by him to ſignify the point from which the magicians took their journey, but the place where they were born, as if he had ſaid, eaſtern magicians; ſo 'tis ſaid elſewhere by the Evangeliſt, that Joſeph came from Arimathea; meaning, Joſeph the Arimatheate; and ſo is Balaam mention'd to come from Euphrates, with numbers of the like paſſages. But 'tis beſt to wave conjectures of this nature, and place ſuch indeterminate queſtions among thoſe, which the Jews imagine will not be reveal'd, until the coming of Elias, that is, until the end of the world. Theſe magicians are ſaid, by St. Auſtin to pay their adoration to Chriſt before the day of purification, which the Roman church admits, and celebrates the memory thereof on the thirteenth day from Chriſt's nativity. A grave author of antiquity ſays, that notwithſtanding ſo many differences of opinion appear, among ſuch as have publiſh'd accounts of Chriſt's nativity, about the day of his birth, which the will of providence or the ignorance of Calculators might cauſe, yet perſons ought not therefore to caſt reflections about it; ſo that the Saviour of mankind, who was born in time, ought to be worſhipp'd, tho' we cannot aſcertain the true point of time when he was born. We have ſeen his ſtar in the eaſt. A gentleman, a very good commentator, and a religious perſon, argues thus on theſe words: they ſaw a ſtar; but how did they know it was the ſtar, ſhewing that Chriſt was born; probably by divine revelation; they had a light within, as well as a ſtar without, or they had never found Chriſt: it is probable, that the illumination of the holy ſpirit accompanied the apparition of the ſtar.

Ver. 3. 4. 5. 6. When Herod the king had heard theſe things, he was troubled, and all Jeruſalem with him. And when he had gathered all the chief prieſts, and ſcribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Chriſt ſhould be born. And they ſaid unto him, in Bethlehem of Judæa: for thus it is written by the prophet; And thou Bethlehem in the land of Juda, art not the leaſt among the princes of Juda: for out of thee ſhall come a governour, that ſhall rule my people Iſrael.

Meaning, that all the people of Jeruſalem were, with king Herod, put into a pannic, as appears from the words in the next verſe, where ſhould Chriſt be born. Their apprehenſions, eſpecially, king Herod's, were, leſt the kingdom ſhould go from him, by the coming of the Meſſiah; but Herod's apprehenſions were chimerical and vain; for Chriſt came not to take poſſeſſion of a kingdom of this world, ſo that being in great perplexity, he aſſembled a councel of the chief prieſts and ſcribes, and demanded of them the place where Chriſt the promis'd Meſſiah was to be born, who anſwer'd him, immediately, out of Micah, that the place was Bethlehem. Theſe chief prieſts were deſcendants of the ſacerdotal families, which David divided into four and twenty claſſes or families of prieſts, each whereof had its prince or chief. The ſcribes were doctors of the law, as Luke calls them, who boaſted they had the key of knowledge, as the ſame Evangeliſt ſpeaks, chap. xi. v. 52. For theſe doctors or lawyers look'd upon a key formerly as a conſiderale ornament or badge of their faculty. Of perſons of this rank was the aſſembly, conven'd by Herod, compos'd, who, to ſatisfy his uneaſy curioſity, was acquainted, that Bethlehem was the place of Chriſt's nativity. We are to diſtinguiſh this Bethlehem from another of the ſame name, which was in Galilee in the tribe of Zabulon. There is a large diſagreement between the prophet Micah, and the Evangeliſt Matthew, in citing this teſtimony, And thou Bethlehem, &c. The prophet calls it Bethlehem Ephratah, and Little; the Evangeliſt names it the land of Juda; and not the leaſt among the princes. Now the way to get over this difficulty is, by ſaying that the Evangeliſt relates the words of the ſcribes, who recited the ſenſe of the prophet to the uneaſy and ignorant king, but not his words, in that obſcurity wherein they were couch'd, for the prophet ſays, And thou Bethlehem Ephratah, becauſe Bethlehem, as it is call'd, Gen. xlviii. v. 7. is, by another name, ſtiled Ephratah: The ſcribes, for the ſake of explanation, ſay, And thou Bethlehem the land of Juda, becauſe there was another Bethlehem in the tribe of Zabulon, as appears from Joſhua xix. v. 15. The prophet ſpeaks, Tho' thou be little? which phraſe is expreſs'd, by the ſcribes, in a plain ſtile, Thou art not the leaſt: The prophet again ſays, Among the thouſands, or chiliads, into which each tribe had been divided from the time Moſes flouriſh'd, as Jethro had adviſ'd him, Exod. xviii. The ſcribes ſay, among the princes, or Chiliarchates, who were heads over the thouſands, or chiliads; and by this metonimy the ſcribes touch the reaſon, why Bethlehem was not the leaſt, becauſe it was renowned for being the birth place of ſeveral of theſe Chiliarchates, to wit, Abeſan, Booz, Iſai, and David, but chiefly for the nativity of the Meſſiah; whence the prophet Micah, and the ſcribes, explaining this paſſage, add theſe words, out of thee ſhall come a governour, to wit, he that was expected, which the Chaldæan paraphraſt calls the Meſſiah, who ſhall rule, according to the Greek text, with meekneſs and clemency like a good ſhepherd; or, according to the Hebrew, with power, and dominion, like a prince, or ruler; the prophet adds, whoſe goings forth have been from of old, from everlaſting; in which words, the prophet Micah points out the nativity of Chriſt from eternity, for to go forth, is a phraſe ſometimes us'd by the Hebrews to denote, to be born, as may be ſeen, Gen. xvii. v. 6. 25. v. 26, &c. and this way of the prophets putting the words, Goings forth from everlaſting, in the plural number, is no more than what the Hebrews generally make uſe of, when they have a mind to amplify and exaggerate a thing.

Ver. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. Then Herod, when he had privily called the wiſemen, inquired of them diligently what time the ſtar appear'd. And he ſent them to Bethlehem, and ſaid, go, and ſearch diligently for the young child, and when ye have found him, bring me word again, that I may come and worſhip him alſo. When they had heard the king, they departed, and lo, the ſtar which they ſaw in the eaſt, went before them, till it came, and ſtood over where the young child was. When they ſaw the ſtar, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy. And when they were come in the houſe, they ſaw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worſhipped him: and when they had opened their treaſures, they preſented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincenſe, and myrrh.

Several learned men ſay, that if the words in the eaſt are referr'd to the magicians, as tho' the Evangeliſt had ſaid, that the magicians being plac'd in the eaſt, had ſeen the ſtar, they cannot comprehend what reaſon or foundation ſo many grave authors have to aſſert, that the ſtar went before the magicians all the way they travell'd. St. Auſtin, in his ſecond book againſt Fauſtus, enlarges pretty much upon the appearance of this ſtar, and, from the phraſe, till it came, tells us, that thoſe words plainly intimate, that the ſtar did not appear at this time with reſpect to Chriſt's being born according to the fleſh; but was made ſubſervient in order to teſtify of him. Whence it was no way the cauſe of Chriſt's miraculous life; but Chriſt was the cauſe of it's miraculous appearance. And when they were come into the houſe, that is, where Mary had brought forth Chriſt, according to Maldonatus in his remarks upon the ſecond chapter of Luke. That Chriſt was born out of Bethlehem, either in ſome field or cave, is againſt the teſtimony of ſcripture; for the words of Luke the Evangeliſt are theſe, And laid him in a manger, en te phatne, becauſe there was no room in the inn, en te katalumiti. They who underſtand Greek know, that either the addition or omiſſion of the article in the abovesaid words, make a great difference in the ſenſe of them. If the article be left out, the ſenſe will be, that Joſeph and Mary could get no inn at all, tho' there were ſeveral at Bethlehem; if the article be preſerv'd, the ſenſe, then, may be explain'd two ways, either that there was but one inn at Bethlehem, where they could get no lodging, which ſeems hardly probable, or that they went to ſome certain inn at Bethlehem, having been denied entertainment at the reſt, where all the rooms were taken up, ſo that they were oblig'd to put up into the ſtable, which, in all appearance, join'd, or, at leaſt, was near to the inn. Maldonatus, whom I have already cited, ſays, That 'tis not at all unlikely, that the ſtable where Joſeph and Mary took up their quarters, appertain'd to ſome public inn. Epiphanius aſſerts it was a place cut out in a rock, and Gregory Nyſs, in his diſcourſe of our Saviour's nativity, calls it a cave wherein he was laid; which need not be wondered at; for Strabo ſays, That all the country about Jeruſalem for threeſcore furlongs was rocky; now Bethlehem was only four miles diſtant from the city, according to James de Vitriaco's account, or ſix, according to an Arabian geographer, who, being a perſon of great learning, and an accurate writer, takes notice, that there were ſeveral houſes or walls in that tract of ground, which were cut out of rocks, where men, for the ſake of their religion, ſhut themſelves up. The ſame Arabian, reciting the place where Chriſt was born, calls it a cave, as do, for the moſt part, all the Greeks and Latins. It ſeems not inconſiſtent to ſay, that, after the inn was clear'd of its gueſts, Joſeph and Mary left the ſtable, and removed with the infant into the houſe, where the magicians or wiſemen found Chriſt, who fell down and worſhipp'd him, becauſe, ſetting aſide the appearance of the ſtar, their hearts were touch'd with a more refulgent beam of the truth. And when they had opened their treaſures, meaning, boxes wherein they brought their preſents; the word treaſure ſignifies any receptacle wherein any thing is put; it may imply a bag, a cheſt, a ſack, or a cabinet: Thus God is ſaid to bring the winds out of his treaſures, that is, out of his receptacles: God, by ſome authors, is call'd the treaſure of life. Cicero calls memory the treaſure of all things; and Virgil ſtiles thoſe things treaſures, where honey is preſerv'd.

Ver. 12. 13. 14. 15. And being warned of God in a dream, that they ſhould not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way. And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeareth to Joſeph in a dream, ſaying, ariſe, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Ægypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word; for Herod will ſeek the young child to deſtroy him. When he aroſe, he took the young child, and his mother by night, and departed into Ægypt. And was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfill'd, which was ſpoken of the Lord by the prophet ſaying, Out of Ægypt have I called my ſon.

The words, and when they were departed, ſeem ſufficiently to point out, that Joſeph's admonition, from the angel, to fly into Ægypt, happened not many days after the departure of the magicians. St. Auſtin aſſerts, that this occurrence fell out on the day of purification, when they perform'd, in the temple, the things about the child, that were according to the law. So that what the Evangeliſt Luke ſays about the parents of Chriſt returning into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth, after they had performed, in Jeruſalem, on the day of purification, all things according to the law, which were to be done about the infant, muſt not be underſtood to have been executed immediately. But after they were return'd out of Ægypt, as ſufficiently appears from the cauſe of their flight, from the fear of Joſeph, and from the admonition of the Angel in his dream: all which particulars are regularly deſcrib'd in this preſent chapter. and departed into Ægypt. This flight of Chriſt was not owing to any human fear; but to a diſpenſation of providence, fugit non neceſſitate, ſed poteſtate, ſays Fulgentius; or, according to another Antient, to ſubmit to time, not to Herod. Our Saviour, according to the words of another eminent writer, was carried into Ægypt, that That nation, which was devoted to antient ſuperſtitions, of which it had not yet deliver'd itſelf, might be mark'd out for the approaching ſalvation by the ſecret grace of the Almighty; and entertain the truth. That it might be fulfill'd. A prophecy is ſaid to be fulfill'd three ways, Firſt, When That is openly exhibited, which litterally was foretold to come. Secondly, When any thing typically or figurately preceding in other paſſages of ſcripture, juſtly and conſonantly refers to Chriſt, as Jerome ſays; for that, which is ſpoken of the type, is rationally ſaid to be fulfill'd, when the truth thereof is explain'd; ſeeing that is the uſe of the Type, that it be truly and faithfully accompliſh'd. Thirdly, When any prophecy may, with as much reaſon, be applied to any other, as the perſon of whom it was litterally foretold. The prediction here mention'd by Matthew is cited from Hoſea; and, according to Janſenius, is fulfill'd, not only as the third way above mentions, but as is hinted in the ſecond, which we ſhall preſently ſhew when we come to the 17th verſe. Out of Ægypt. Julian, a bitter enemy of the chriſtians, in his ſeventh book, which he wrote againſt them, ſays, by way of reflection; that what was written concerning Iſrael, the Evangeliſt Matthew transferred upon Chriſt, to play upon the ſimplicity of ſuch Gentiles as would believe it. Jerome gives this reproach the following ſhort anſwer, That Matthew, in the firſt place, publiſh'd his goſpel in Hebrew, which none of them could read, unleſs ſuch as were deſcended from the Hebrews, ſo that he cannot, therefore, be charged with doing ſuch a thing to play upon the Gentiles; for had he been minded to impoſe upon the Hebrews, he would have argued himſelf guilty of folly, or want of judgment, in ſhewing himſelf ignorant concerning whom this prophecy was meant; but his book clears him of folly, becauſe it is wiſely digeſted, and compoſed regularly; neither can we tax him with want of judgment, when, from other teſtimonies of the ſcriptures, we learn he was skill'd in the law. Out of Ægypt have I called my ſon: Theſe words may be ſpoken of the people of Iſrael; but they perfectly referr to Chriſt. So that what is typically ſaid of the typical ſon of God, that is, the people of Iſrael, which, Exod. 4. is called the firſt begotten ſon of God, is truly and verily fulfill'd, ſeeing that Chriſt the ſon of God was called out of Ægypt into the land of Iſrael.

Ver. 16. 17. 18. Then Herod, when he ſaw that he was mocked of the wiſemen, was exceeding wroth, and ſent forth, and ſlew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coaſts thereof, from two years old, and under, according to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wiſemen. Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremy the prophet, ſaying, In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted, becauſe they are not.

According to the time which he had diligently enquired of the wiſemen. That is, he put to death not only the children that were two years old, but all the males that were under that age, who were born until the time, when firſt, as the magicians had faithfully acquainted him, the ſtar appeared for a ſign of the Meſſiah already born, not who was to be born. So that Herod, to provide for and ſecure himſelf, thought fit to put the male children, under two years old, to death, tho' born a conſiderable time before the appearance of the ſtar; as he ſlew, for the very ſame reaſon, all the children born in all the places about Bethlehem. tho', when he made enquiry where Chriſt was to be born, he was anſwer'd, in Bethlehem of Judah, that is, in the city of Bethlehem, which was the city of David, as may be collected from the prophecy of Micah. Then was fulfilled. namely, after the ſecond and third way, mention'd above, ver. 15. as if the Evangeliſt had ſaid, Then the prophecy of Jeremiah, tho' it was ſpoken litterally of the carrying away of the ten tribes into captivity, could more juſtly be ſaid of the children ſlain by Herod, than of thoſe who were carried into captivity; the latter were men, the former infants; thoſe deſerv'd their condition; theſe were undeſerving, and innocent; the former are not, that is, are not found, becauſe carried away into captivity, the latter are not among the living, becauſe inhumanly butcher'd; ſo that Rachel, that is, Bethlehem had more reaſon to mourn over (them, which, by a metonimy, is called Rachel, becauſe ſhe was interr'd not far from Bethlehem, as appears from Gen. 36.) than Rachel, the grandmother of Ephraim, whom Jeremiah introduces lamenting over Ephraim, or, the ten tribes carried away into captivity, which are ſignified by Ephraim, becauſe their firſt king was Jeroboam, deſcended from that tribe. Matthew cites this prophecy of Jeremiah, neither according to the text of the Hebrew, nor of the Septuagint; whence, ſaith, Jerome, it is evident, that the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles did not tye themſelves up to this or that tranſlation, or interpretation; but, becauſe they read in Hebrew, expreſs'd themſelves as Hebrews in their writings. In Rama, that is, according to Jerome, on high. 'Tis familiar and cuſtomary with the Grecians, juſt as they find words written by the Hebrew, to expreſs them, in Greek, in the ſame letters. Yet others ſeem to think it more probable, that Rama was a city in the tribe of Benjamin, not far from Bethlehem on the weſt near Gabao, in the confines of the tribe of Judah and Benjamin. See Jud. 16. Take which ſenſe you will, the elegance of the metaphor will always deſcribe the greatneſs of this lamentation. Rachel, in Jeremiah, is underſtood for Rachel herſelf, but for Bethlehem in this place. By this beautiful Proſopopæia, which the prophets and poets frequently uſe, and which is the ſureſt way to move the paſſions, groves and cities, the ghoſts of the dead, and the ſhades of ruin'd cities, are introduced mourning and weeping.

Ver. 19. 20. But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joſeph in Ægypt, ſaying, Ariſe, and take the young child, and his mother, and go into the land of Iſrael: for they are dead which ſought the young child's life.

They are dead. The plural is here put for the ſingular number, for the Evangeliſt ſpeaks only of Herod. There is nothing occurs ſo often as this enallage in ſcripture. So Gen. xix. v. 29. He delivered Lot out of the overthrow of the cities, in which, that is, in one of which, he dwelt, Gen. xxi. v. 7. In the Hebrew text there, Sarah is ſaid to give ſuck to her ſons, when ſhe had only one ſon, who was Iſaac, Gen. xxviii. v. 11. he took up the ſtones, that is, one of the ſtones. Gen. xlvi. v. 7. Jacob is ſaid to carry his daughters into Egypt, that is, Dinah, which was Jacob's only daughter. Exod. iv. v. 19. It is ſaid to Moſes, they are dead that ſought after thy ſoul. Joſhua, vii. v. 1. the ſons of Iſrael are ſaid to prevaricate with God's command, meaning, one of the ſons of Iſrael nam'd Achan. Jud. xii. 7. Jepthah, in the Hebrew text, is ſaid to be bury'd in the cities of Galaad, that is, in one of the cities of Galaad. with ſeveral more of the like paſſages. Jerome, from theſe words of Matthew, gathers, that not only Herod, but the prieſts and ſcribes, at the ſame time conſulted together about means how to put our Saviour to death. Which opinion St. Auſtin, in his oration againſt the Jews, Pagans, and Arians, ſeems to embrace.

Ver. 21. 22. And he aroſe, and tock the young child, and his mother, and came into the land of Iſrael. But when he heard that Archilaus did reign in Judea, in the room of his father Herod, he was afraid to go thither; notwithſtanding, being warned of God in a dream, he turned aſide into the parts of Gallilee.

Heard that Archelaus did reign in Judea.] That is, that he preſided over Judea with regal power, tho' not with the name of a king; for Herod the great, or the Aſcalonite, left, by his will, the kingdom to Archelaus; but Auguſtus Cæſar, who ſuffer'd Herod to confirm it, refus'd Archelaus the title of king, and made him Ethnarch, or Prince over one half of his Father's kingdom, which comprehended Judea, Samaria, and Idumæa. The other half he divided between Herod's two other ſons, namely, Antipas, who was ſirnam'd Herod afterwards, creating him Tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa; and Philip, of Batanæa, Ituræa, and Trachonitis. Archelaus, if we may credit the Jews, was a Perſon of ſo much cruelty, that it was a common ſaying, It would be much better for us to be without a king, than to have Archelaus reign over us. At laſt, according to the teſtimony of Joſephus, Cæſar, on account of his barbarity, baniſh'd him into Gaul: and from the ſame Author we read, that Antipas was of a more merciful diſpoſition, but Philip the meekeſt of the three.

He was afraid to go thither.] Joſeph was afraid leſt Archelaus ſhould prove as inhuman as his father had done, and, therefore, to avoid the ſad conſequences that might attend upon his going back into Judea, he turn'd aſide into the parts of Galilee. The meaning of the words above import, that he was apprehenſive of returning into Judea to live there. St. Luke witneſſes, that he went up to Jeruſalem every year to celebrate the paſſover: If ſo, he had no cauſe to fear the death of Chriſt; for he could not but know that Archelaus's intentions were not to do him any injury; but it rather appears, that he was afraid to live under the heavy government of ſo cruel a tyrant. However, 'tis no way to be wonder'd, that Joſeph, after he was commanded to return out of Ægypt, into the land of Iſrael, ſhould think of making that part of the country, the place of his reſidence, where the Angels, Shepherds, Magicians, and Elders had told him of the nativity of our Lord, and where that important occurrence fell out. His fears, indeed, were well grounded, and, to ſecure the young Meſſiah, he withdrew into Galilee; a famous and celebrated country, lying North of all Judea, and comprehending four of the twelve tribes within it, Aſer, Nephtalim, Zabulon, and Iſſachar. The bounds of this region are thus deſcribed. Syria, with mount Libanus between, lyes to the North of it: on the South is Samaria, and mount Carmel: Jordan runs Eaſtward, and the Mediterranean Sea waſhes it on the Weſt. The name of Galilee is deriv'd from the Hebrew word Galil, to roll, becauſe it lyes contiguous to the ſea ſhore, upon which the ſurges roll; or the derivation may come from the waves, being daſh'd by the wind, or by a tempeſt, which roll upon the beach, and there break; or it may be ſo call'd from the vaſt heaps of ſand that roll together there. Not only the Talmudical writings, but alſo the ſacred volumes inform us, that the Jews deſpis'd the people of Galilee, eſpecially of the higher country, above all others. Eſaiah calls them ſitting in darkneſs, and in the region of the ſhadow of death The Phariſees, as we are told from St. John, ſay, Out of Galilee ariſeth no prophet. And Nathaniel, as the ſame Evangeliſt acquaints us, in his firſt chapter, ſpeaks to Philip, can there any good come out of Nazareth? Hence it came that Chriſt himſelf was called, by way of contempt, and reproach, the Galilæan, and Nazarene. Hence thoſe remarkable and famous words of Julian, Viciſti, Galilæe, Viciſti; and hence came the chriſtians to be call'd formerly Galilæans, and Nazarenes, which laſt word the Jews throw on them ſtill as a piece of laſting ſcandal.

Ver. 23. And he came and dwelt in a city called Nazareth: that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the Prophet, he ſhall be called a Nazarene.

We have not one word of Nazareth throughout the whole Bible, which ſufficiently makes it evident, that this city was not, as yet, of any great fame, or reputation. Opinions are various about its true derivation. Some pretend to bring it from the Hebrew word Netzar, which ſignifies a branch of a tree, according to ſome; or, to others, a flower. Hence Jerome, writing to Marcella, We will go, ſays he, to Nazareth, and, as the meaning of the name imports, ſee the flower of Galilee. The ſame Father, in his Epiſtle to Pammachus, about the beſt ſort of tranſlation, is of opinion, that the teſtimony of Matthew, becauſe he ſhall be called a Nazarene, is cited from theſe words of Eſaiah. And there ſhall come forth a rod out of the ſtem of Jeſſe, and a branch ſhall grow out of his roots. Lyranus, Abulenſis, and Janſenius embrace this opinion; but chuſe to have the paſſage thus render'd, a branch ſhall come forth out of the root of Jeſſe, and a Nazarene ſhall aſcend from his ſtem. Jerome admits this expoſition. Others are pleas'd to ſay, that the words above will ſuffer three ways of interpretation, firſt, he ſhall be called a Nazarite; ſecondly, he ſhall be called a Netzar; thirdly, he ſhall be called a Nazarene. The firſt of theſe conſtructions is falſe: for Chriſt, we are told, drank wine, and touch'd the dead; whereas the Nazarites, who were a religious and ſeperate rank of people amongſt the Jews, abſtain'd from both theſe articles The ſecond has abundance of more truth to back it; for Netzar, or a branch, as we have explain'd the word above, alludes to the teſtimony cited out of Eſaiah, where he is called a branch of the root of Jeſſe, ſo often prophetically ſpoken of by the inſpired penmen. And the laſt conſtruction, he ſhall be called a Nazarene, is fetch'd from his inhabiting at Nazareth, which gives his followers the name of Nazarenes. Chryſoſtom, on the words he ſhall be called a Nazarene, obſerves, in ſeveral places of his writings, that the Prophets may be ſaid, to write, or ſpeak any thing, two ways; the firſt is, when any thing is found couch'd in the ſame words, or ſuch, as do not much diſagree therewith: the other is, when the facts, tho' not the words, diſcover it. By this laſt way, it may be truly ſaid it was foretold of Chriſt he ſhould be called the Nazarite, or rather, the Nazarene.

CHAP. III.

The Evangeliſt ſlips over, in this chapter, all the actions perform'd by our Saviour in his minority, without recording any thing about him, till he arrives at thirty years of age, the time when he took upon him the publick miniſtry, having St. John for his forerunner.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, IN thoſe days came John the Baptiſt, preaching in the wilderneſs of Judea; and ſaying, repent ye: for the kingdom of Heaven is at hand. For this is he that was ſpoken of by the prophet Eſaias, ſaying, the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths ſtraight.

The words in thoſe days mean, during the time that Chriſt dwelt at Nazareth, not while Joſeph reſided in that city, but near five and twenty years afterwards; for Jeſus, at thirty years of age, was baptiz'd by St. John, ſo that they refer to Chriſt, when he inhabited there. In thoſe days, is a modus of ſpeech very common in ſcripture; neither is the phraſe us'd, at all times, to ſhew any certain, or definitive time. From St. John's preaching in the wilderneſs of Judea, and living there, Romaniſts would have us believe, that he was the firſt founder of the order of Hermits: but the conjecture ſtands on a precarious bottom; there being no ſure warrant in ſcripture to countenance ſuch an aſſertion. Theodore Beza is of opinion, that the deſart, where St. John preach'd, was the mountanous country, where his father Zacharias, and mother Elizabeth, dwelt: that Joab, mention'd in the books of kings, had a houſe of his here, and that ſix cities or towns were in it, as may be collected out of Joſhua. Caſaubon eſpouſes this conjecture. But another Gentleman ſays, that there is a material objection to be made againſt the ſentiments of the two laſt nam'd authors, which is, that the Evangeliſts concur in ſaying, that the deſart of Judea wherein John baptiz'd and preach'd repentance, was about the river Jordan, on the confines of Ennon, and Salim: whereas the hilly or mountanous country was at a conſiderable diſtance from Jordan. Jeremiah, in his xxxii. chapter, v. 44. has this expreſſion, In the cities of the mountains, and in the cities of the valley, whereby he ſets the mountanous, againſt the low country of Judea, which was about Jordan. John had the name of Baptiſt given him, from his office, (in which he was divinely commiſſion'd) of baptizing thoſe who repented. He ſpent his whole life, from his infancy, in the wilderneſs, without the want either of houſe, or bed, or table, or any other thing. On the other hand he liv'd a kind of angelic life in the fleſh, who could ſuſtain the extremities of cold and heat, when he was of a tender body, and immature age. For ſo Chryſoſtom, in his tenth homily upon Matthew, avers, to which opinion the whole ſtream of antiquity ſubſcribes. John's doctrine of repentance was to prepare the people for the coming of the Meſſiah, and the grace of the goſpel, for the kingdom of heaven was at hand; meaning the kingdom of Chriſt, which is called the kingdom of Heaven, becauſe, it is not of this world, according to the teſtimony of the ſame Evangeliſt. What, then, is his kingdom, ſays St.

but believers in him? to whom he ſays, John xv. You are not of this world; for every man that God hath created is of the world; but his kingdom is not of the world; for whatſoever is in Chriſt is regenerated. Now the repentance, here ſpoken of, to prepare us for this kingdom, is this, that we ſhould be mov'd with ſorrow for our actions, with a pure deſire to change and correct them for the future. Tertullian ſays, In Græco ſono penitentiæ nomen, non ex delecti confeſſione ſed ex animi demutatione compoſitum eſt, that is, the word, in Greek, for repentance, ſignifies not ſo much the confeſſion of an error, as the change or alteration of the mind. The Roman church labours under a groſs miſtake in this point. The paſtors thereof teach, that, to waſh away ſin, repentance barely will not do; there muſt be ſome penalaction or other annex'd to complete that good deſign. But ſcripture enjoins no ſuch thing. All there is ſilent on that head. St. Peter, in his firſt epiſtle, acquaints us, that Chriſt bore our ſins in his body upon the croſs, and that by his ſufferings we are healed; which made a learned gentleman break out in the following words: When I found, ſays he, this truth ſo many times inculcated in the ſcriptures, I learnt thence, that Chriſt, by ſubmitting himſelf to be puniſh'd without any cauſe, deliver'd mankind from ſin and error, and that although all our ſins were freely forgiven, yet if providence was pleas'd to ſend upon us any temporal puniſhments, this was not done purely to make attonement to the divine juſtice, but as St. Auſtin ſays, ad demonſtrationem debitæ miſeriæ, vel ad emendationem labilis vitæ, vel ad exercitationem neceſſariæ patentiæ, to ſhew us the miſery we deſerv'd, or to make us amend our frail life, or to try our patience.

The voice of one crying] Meaning, of the Word. For the Word, according to a certain commentator, cries in the Voice, that is, Chriſt cries in John, that ſuch as are at a diſtance may hear him, and perceive the immenſity of thoſe things which he ſpeaks. But God cries in others. For, as the ſame author ſays, he cry'd in all, who, divinely inſpir'd, prophecy'd from the beginning; and yet John is the only Voice, becauſe he has diſcover'd the Word, which others in times paſt foretold. Epiphanius ſays, that the voice is a preparative towards hearing: for perſons, who cry or ſhout, generally, at firſt, pronounce their words inarticulately. The reaſon is, ſays he, becauſe they call to thoſe at a diſtance, who are to hear what they have to ſay. Now when they hear nothing but a mixture of words they cannot comprehend, they prepare their ears to liſten with more attention; which he, who cries, no ſooner perceives, but he diſtinguiſhes the words he has a mind to ſpeak. In the very ſame manner may John, who was the voice, be ſaid to prepare the ears of mankind: for he was not himſelf the Word, but the Word came after him, becauſe his voice prepar'd the way for it.

Ver. 4. And the ſame John had his raiment of camels hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins, and his meat was locuſts, and wild honey.

Of camels hair.] The Jews call camels hair, the wool of camels. Ælian, in the xvii. book, chap. xxxiv, of his hiſtory, acquaints us, that the hair of camels formerly about the Caſpian ſea was the ſofteſt in the world, of which they made their fineſt cloaths The ſame thing is witneſſed by Apollonius, out of Cteſias's tenth book of his Perſian hiſtory. Paul Venetus informs us, that, in the empire of the great Cham of Tartary, in the city of Calacia, the metropolis of the province of Tanguth, there is a kind of cloth found there, which the inhabitants call Zambilotte, made of white wool, and camels hair, perfectly good, and as beautiful as any other cloth whatſoever. The ſame author, in the very next chapter to what we have juſt now cited, where he is ſpeaking of the land of Gog, and Magog, ſays, that the very beſt Zambilottes are made there of camels hair. The French word Camelot ſignifies nothing but this cloth, tho', at this time, it is taken in a more extenſive meaning. Anſelm, and ſeveral others, call the garment, which St. John wore, Cilicium Camelinum. And tho' the countries, about the Caſpian ſea, and in Tartary, were known to produce Camels with this fine and delicate hair, yet that the commoner ſort was rough and briſly, and ſuch as John wore, is a receiv'd opinion among many. We have a poem about this Evangeliſt, yet extant, written by Paulinus, wherein he elegantly deſcribes this garment.

Veſtis rat curvi ſetis conſerta cameli
Contra luxuriem molles duraret ut artus
Arceretque graves compuncto corpore Somnos.

The veſt he wore of camels hair was made,
Briſly, and rough, in pointed order laid,
To baniſh ſoftneſs, firm his limbs to keep,
And from his body drive the load of ſleep.

Beſides, this hairy veſt or garment ſeems to have been a habit, peculiar to the prophets; for it is ſaid of Elijah 2. Kings i. v. 8. That he was an hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. So Eſaiah xx. v. 2. Go and looſe the ſackcloth from off thy loins, and in Zachariah xiii. v. 4. Neither ſhall they were a rough garment to deceive.

Locuſts.] In the goſpel of the Ebionites we read theſe words about St. John: his meat was wild honey, of the taſte of Manna, like wafers made with oil. Epiphanius aſſerts, on this paſſage, that the deſign of theſe Ebionites was to make That, which was really true in itſelf, a meer falſehood, and, inſtead of locuſts, to impoſe, upon mankind, a ſort of wafers, or cakes made with honey. The opinion of this father is very probable. And 'tis not any way unlikely, that the occaſion of forging this, was taken from the near ſimilitude of the words Acrides, and Encrides; the firſt ſignifying Locuſts, the latter Cakes, made of flower and oil. And as the Evangeliſt joins locuſts and honey in the ſame ſentence; So it is ſaid of the manna Exod. xvi. 31. that its taſte was like wafers made with honey. Iſidore of Peluſium will have theſe Acrides to mean no other than the tops of herbs and leaves, which opinion he eſpouſes ſo warmly, that he terms thoſe ignorant who hold the contrary. Baronius, led by a number of Authors who ſeem'd to countenance Iſidore's opinion, ſays thus: It is not our buſineſs to define what were the ſentiments of thoſe great perſons; but we leave that point to be diſcuſt as the reader himſelf pleaſes; for it is plainly evident, that the greek word Acrides has two ſignifications, firſt, that it means a ſort of inſect call'd a Locuſt, aud, next, implies the tops of trees. But, with the pardon of ſo great a man as Baronius, it no where appears ſo; nay, the greek writers put us out of all doubt, that Acrides and Acrodrua differ much as to their ſignifications, and are never confounded together. Others are of opinion that theſe Acrides ſignify herbs, call'd Melagra, according to Theophylact, to allude to wild honey. Among this number is Euthymius. By this opinion the honey and locuſts are made the ſame thing; namely, a kind of herb, which no body ever heard of in any country, yet this was the only meat St. John fed upon. If I may be allow'd to give my ſentiments on this matter, nothing in the world can be more ridiculous than this notion; yet it had thoſe who embrac'd it; and amongſt them was Surianus. Probably Dionyſius Carthuſianus was another. This author writes, that ſome, by the word locuſts, will have the herbs of the deſart to be meant. We will produce his words. Cum non videatur probable, quod Joannes, qui nec pane veſcebatur, carnes animalium, aut aliquid coctum comederet. It does uot appear likely that John eat of the fleſh of avimals, or of any thing dreſt, ſince he abſtain'd from bread. Hermolaus, upon Dioſcorides, tells us, that the Arabian word ſignifying the leg of a locuſt, may be conſtru'd an herb. Chriſtian Druthmar, who liv'd in the ninth century, and wrote a commentary upon Matthew; in ſpeaking about theſe Locuſts, has theſe words, a certain man acquainted me that theſe locuſts were ſmall birds with red legs; which words plainly intimate, that real birds were underſtood; but the following query quite refutes the author of them: How comes St. John to be commended for his extraordinary abſtinence, if he fed upon birds, which the Jews wanted? The ſame reaſon holds equally as ſtrong againſt thoſe, who are pleas'd to think theſe locuſts were the fiſhes, which John had out of Jordan; ſince they were accounted great rarities. But theſe locuſts were not to be found in the rivers, but only in the ſea, without taking any notice that the Greeks call'd theſe ſea locuſts, not Acrides but Carabous. Some change the word Acrides into Caridas, which ſignifies a very rich kind of ſhell fiſh. But this notion is abſurd; becauſe John's abſtinence is very much prais'd in the goſpel. Others conjecture that the Evangeliſts Matthew, and Mark, wrote it Acrades, which means, wild pears, and ſo, by a ſmall alteration, it was turn'd into Acrides. But there is no occaſion to change any thing, ſince all editions agree in the firſt reading; neither can the word juſtly diſpleaſe the Reader. That eating locuſts was very common in the eaſtern and ſouthern parts of the world, is not to be queſtion'd. Jerome, in his ſecond book againſt Jovinian, atteſts it. And that there were Acrodophagi, ſo call'd from their eating locuſts, among the Æthiopians, not only Agatharcides, Diodorus Siculus, and Strabo, but alſo Solinus, and Pliny, confirm by their teſtimonies. Bochart, in his Hierozoicon, is very copious on this ſubject, and ſufficiently proves, that, beſides theſe Acrodophagi, which every body was acquainted with, the Naſamones, Leptitani, Greeks and Hebrews formerly us'd locuſts for their common food, as likewiſe did the Numidians and Mauritanians for many ages. The Levitical law of Moſes allows four ſorts of locuſts to be eaten, namely, the locuſt after his kind, the bald locuſt after his kind, and the beetle after his kind, and the graſhopper after his kind. So that John's eating locuſts, is no new, or unhear'd of, thing; tho', in one reſpect, it was extremely ſingular, I mean, his feeding upon locuſts and wild honey in the wilderneſs, which nature ſupply'd him with, to let the Jews know he was an extraordinary man, endow'd with a fine talent of preaching, and to make them more attentive to hear his doctrines. What theſe locuſts were is finely explain'd by venerable Bede in his diſcourſe about Palæſtine, wherein he acquaints us, that he was told by biſhop Arculph, who had travell'd into thoſe parts, that locuſts were very numerous in Palæſtine, having ſmall and ſhort bodies like the finger of a man's hand, which were taken with eaſe among the graſs, and, being fry'd in oil, the poorer ſort of people eat them: And Euthymius upon Matthew ſays, to this day, in thoſe parts they eat abundance of locuſts, dry'd in the chimney; which have a ſtrong ſmell, and a bad taſte. So that Iſidore of Pæluſium, whom we have before cited, was in the wrong to charge thoſe with ignorance, who underſtood them for wild honey and real locuſts.

Honey] There are two kinds of honey; one call'd tame, made by ſuch bees as we keep about our houſes; the other wild, by ſuch as haunt the fields and woods. The latter ſort is what both Matthew and Mark ſay John liv'd upon. Theophylact will have this wild honey not to be the true ſort, but aſſerts, after the opinions of ſome other authors, that the Acrides, ſo often mention'd above, were herbs, call'd Melagra, which ſignifies wild honey; but the Greek words meli agrion refute this entirely. What Bede, in his book of Palæſtine, or what Arculph, ſays, about there being trees in the wilderneſs, where John reſided, having broad and round leafs, of a milky colour, and honyiſh taſte, which were crumbled to pieces and eaten, and that theſe were the wild honey here ſpoken of, is equally as impertinent as the opinion of Theophylact above. Neither is that, which Chriſtian Druthman, alledges, of any better weight, in ſaying that the wild honey, mention'd in this place, is the very manna which the children of Iſrael liv'd upon for forty years. We are told from Exod. xvi. that this manna taſted like flower and honey blended together. Nevertheleſs, manna is one thing, and wild honey another; neither ſhould we coin a parcel of notions about words of ſcripture, when ſuch as are receiv'd will tally right, and admit of a juſt conſtruction: So that nothing elſe can be meant in the verſe now before us, but locuſts and wild honey. And that locuſts were numerous in thoſe places, and us'd for food, we are of opinion we have ſufficiently prov'd by this time. The ſame kind of teſtimony may eaſily be drawn out of ſcripture with relation to wild honey. That proverb of Solomon is very well known, which ſays, Haſt thou found honey? eat ſo much as is ſufficient for thee, leſt thou be filled therewith, and vomit it. This plainly refers to wild honey, which was found up and down in the fields. So we read in Judges xiv. v. 8. That Samſon, after he had fallen upon the lion, and ſlain him, found honey the next year, which the bees had made within his carcaſs, which was no other than That of the wild kind. We find, likewiſe, in 1. Sam. xiv. v. 25, and 26. theſe words; And all they of the land came to a wood, and there was honey upon the ground, and when the people was come into the wood, behold, the honey dropped. The next verſe remarks this of Jonathan, That (being in the ſame wood) he put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in a honeycomb. Hence a honeycomb is very often call'd, in ſcripture, by the Hebrew word Vair, which properly ſignifies a wood. Prophane writers ſay the ſame thing of Scythia, and Muſcovy; namely, how that the bees make honey there, in their woods and fields; And Maldonatus acquaints us with his ſeeing men in Bætica, whoſe employment was to gather honey out of the woods, who, by putting it to ſale, acquir'd a tolerable living thereby. For this we have the conſent of the antient poets, both Greek and Latin. Virgil, in his fourth Georgic, not to mention others, acquaints us, in a fine manner, how bees will hive together in the hollow trunks of trees, in reeds, or in caves. Judæa was ſo fam'd for the great plenty of honey in it, that, in ſeveral places, it is ſaid to flow with honey, to have rivers of honey, and to diſtill honeycombs. Iſidore of Pæluſium, and Euthymius, ſeem to be of opinion, that the wild honey, which John us'd for his diet, was bitter, and of an ungrateful taſte: but this is a random notion, and bears not ſufficient analogy to ſcripture. Beſides, a great many of the encomiums, which Judæa receiv'd, on account of its plenty of honey, would have been ſpar'd, had the honey, which was found in its fields and woods, been of a bitter and unpleaſant reliſh. Indeed, Dioſcorides, Galen, and Diodorus informs us, That ſome certain places produc'd bitter honey; and, for example, bring Sardis and Corſica to prove the aſſertion; but at the ſame time they acquaint us with the reaſon; ſometimes that it was owing to the Abſinthium, a kind of flower which the bees fed upon; ſometimes to the box trees, of which Corſica had a great many, ſometimes to the yews, according to Virgil's account; ſometimes, to their feeding upon hemloc, according to Ovid, and ſometimes to thyme, which prov'd of a bitter taſte, according to Martial. Moreover, Pliny, the above cited Dioſcordes, Ariſtotle, and ſeveral others make mention of poiſonous honey, which made ſuch, as eat of it, run mad; but Judæa was never, in this world, known to produce honey either of a bitter reliſh, or of any other unpleaſant taſte, or hurtful quality. In Geneſis we learn the vaſt commendations that was given to the land of Canaan for its honey; And the blaſphemous Rabſaces praiſes Aſſyria, for its being, like the land of Canaan, abounding with olives, and honey. Ezekiel informs us, that the honey of Judæa was carried to other countries, to Tyre, and Ægypt, and ſold in the public markets there, tho', we are told from the book of Numbers, that Ægypt was well ſupplied with honey, of its own production. Every body may be ſatisfied, that all theſe cited places refer to that kind, call'd the domeſtic. But the other, or wild ſort, is only applicable to That honey, the ſweetneſs of which is mention'd in that famous riddle of Samſon, mention'd in the book of Judges; and to That, which Jonathan had no ſooner taſted, but his eyes were enlightened. So that the tame, as well as the wild honey, was fit to be eaten, and pleaſant enough to the palate. But St. John's living in the wilderneſs, on nothing but locuſts and wild honey, was an inſtance of his prodigious abſtinence, becauſe locuſts and honey, taken and eaten ſingly, afford but ſmall nutriment: for, as Hippocrates, in his 50th chapter of the Affections, acquaints us, Honey, eaten with other things, not only nouriſhes, but gives a good colour; but, taken by itſelf, wears far more than it benefits. The abſtinence of Ariſtoxenus, the Cyrenæan philoſopher, is celebrated by the antients purely for his taking, every morning and evening, a lettice out of his garden, which he had ſprinkled, the night before, with wine and honey mixt, and then ſaying he had a golden meſs: That of Pythagoras, for the extraordinary frugality of his life; in contenting himſelf, ſeveral times, with nothing but honey. But both theſe heathens came far ſhort of the abſtemious Evangeliſt. Ariſtoxenus made a compound of wine, honey, and lettice together. John us'd nothing of this kind. And Pythagoras ſeveral times, but not always, eat honey by itſelf, and, as Laertius witneſſes, took his glaſs of wine at night, tho' not in the day time. Beſides, theſe philoſophers bought the proviſions they liv'd upon; John, on the contrary, eat ſuch as fortune threw in his way, placing his truſt ſo firmly in the providence of God, that he rely'd ſolely on That in the deſart for the neceſſaries of his life. Moreover, not only ſcripture, but the antient heathen writings informs us, that children were brought up with milk, and honey. So Didymus, out of the oldeſt hiſtories of Crete, tells us, That the king of that iſland had two daughters, Amalthæa and Meliſſa, who nurſt Jupiter, when he was a child, with milk and honey. But refer to Lactantius's firſt book de falſa religione, for a further account of this article.

Ver. 5, 6, 7. Then went out to him Jeruſalem, and all Judæa, and all the region round about Jordan. And were baptized of him in Jordan, confeſſing their ſins. But when he ſaw many of the phariſees, and ſadduces come to his baptiſm, he ſaid unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come.

And were baptiz'd] In the hiſtory of the council of Florence, compil'd by Silveſter Sgurophulus, we are told of a diſpute, concerning baptiſm, which happen'd, at that Synod, to be taken up, by two dignified Eccleſiaſtics of the Greek church, againſt the Latins, wherein the latter were warmly charg'd in a very material point, namely, That the font was far from initiating them rightly in the chriſtian religion, ſince the word Baptiſm did not ſignify, as the Latins underſtood it, to pour or ſprinkle water upon the head, but for a perſon to go down into the water, and come up dipt therein. 'Tis true, that the cuſtom of baptizing, by immerſion, or dipping, was deriv'd from the Apoſtles, as may be evinc'd from ſeveral paſſages of the Evangeliſts and Apoſtles. Two whereof we will ſet before the reader to illuſtrate this point. And John alſo was baptizing in Enon, near to Salim, becauſe there was much Water there: and they came, and were baptiz'd. John iii. v. 23. And he commanded the chariot to ſtand ſtill, and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he baptiz'd him. Acts viii. v. 38. But there are other places, that may be produc'd, which can never be referr'd to ſprinkling or pouring water on the head. St. Peter's baptizing, in one day, three thouſand perſons, by immerſion, which is the proper way to baptize, need not be wondred at, ſince we read, in the authentic life, of Gregory, the Apoſtle of the Armenians, That he baptiz'd twelve thouſand, together, by immerſion, in the river Euphrates, which Iſaac, the patriarch of that nation, confirms, in his firſt invective. Eucherius, in his ſermon upon St. Andrew's day has theſe words, vocat Dominus piſcatores ad Apoſtolatum, quoniam tales illi neceſſarij erant qui aquis aſſueti, & piſcandi & baptizandi eſſent periti. Ideoque non artem eis mutare præcepit, ſed longe melioris piſcationis. Our Lord calls fiſhermen to the Apoſtleſhip, becauſe ſuch were fit for him, who being accuſtom'd to the water, underſtood both fiſhing and baptizing. And, therefore, he did not bid them change their art, but taught them a much better way of fiſhing. I ſhall cite the words of Monſieur Boſſuet as they ſtand in the original, in his French treatiſe of the communion under two kinds, where, ſpeaking of the three thouſand baptiz'd by Peter, he thus proceeds. Le grand nombre de ces convertis n'eſt pas une preuve qu'on les ait baptiſez par aſperſion, comme quelqueſuns l'ont conjecture. Car outre que rien n'oblige a dire qu'on les ait baptiſez en meme jour, il eſt certain que ſaint Jean [illegible]ſte qui n'en baptiſoit pas moins, ne laiſſa pas de baptizer en plongeant, & ſon example nous a fait voir que pour baptiſir un grand nombre d'hommes, on ſcavoit choiſir les lieux ou il y avoit beaucoup d'eaux: joint encore que les bains & les purifications des anciens, principalement celles des Juifs, rendoient cette ceremonie facile & familiere en ce temps. Enfin nous ne liſons point dans l'Ecriture qu'on ait baytiſe autrement, & nous pouvons faire voir par les actes des conciles, & par les anciens rituels, que treize cens ans durant on a baptiſe de cette ſorte dans tout l'egliſe autant qu'il a ete poſſible, which is, ‘ That ſuch a great number of perſons being converted together to the Goſpel by Peter's preaching, it no way is evident that they were baptized by ſprinkling, as ſome conjecture. Beſides, there is no neceſſity to ſay that they were all baptized in one day, ſince it appears that St. John baptized as large a number, when all Judæa went out to him, and that his baptiſm was by immerſion. But the example of this Evangeliſt tells us, That when a large number of people was to be baptized, he commonly pitch'd upon ſuch places as were well ſupplied with water. Add to this, That the baths and places of purification of the ancients, eſpecially of the Jews, made this ceremony very eaſy and familiar at that time. In ſhort, we read no where in ſcripture of any one being baptized, but by immerſion; and we can prove from the acts of councels, and the ancient rituals, that the manner of immerſion continued, as much as poſſible, for thirteen hundred years, to be uſed througheut the whole church.” It appears, from the 11th ſynod held at Ravenna under Clement V. that the method of ſprinkling in baptiſm, when there was no neceſſity, or danger of death, began under that pontif. So that Michael Cerularius, patriarch of Cyprus, had little reaſon to attribute the rite of baptizing without immerſion to the Romans, ſince, in his time, no other cuſtom was received but that of immerſion out of a caſe of neceſſity, as appears from Peter Damiani's 25th Epiſtle, Book 6. who was Michael's cotemporary. And towards the cloſe of the twelfth century it was decreed in a ſynod, held at Caſſel in Ireland, by Pope Alexander III. as Roger Hoveden witneſſes; That children ſhould be brought to the church, and there be baptized by being dipt thrice in clear water. But what Cyprian, in his 76th Epiſtle to Magnus, ſays, is of excellent ſervice; for therein he acquaints us, That baptiſm is rather of the mind by faith, than of the body by immerſion of water, this being only a viſible ſign of an inviſible baptiſm, ſo that ſprinkling will anſwer the purpoſe.

But when he ſaw many of the Phariſees and Sadducees come to him.] Matthew and Luke ſeem to differ here. The latter, in his ſeventh chapter, ſays, But the Phariſees and Lawyers rejected the councel of God againſt themſelves, being not baptized of him, meaning John. Matthew ſpeaks otherwiſe Why many of them were baptized by John, was not in order to correct their lives for the better, (for they thought themſelves more upright than the reſt of mankind) but that they might let the people ſee their extraordinary deſire to be religious. How muſt the two Evangeliſts be reconciled? Muſt we ſay that Luke ſpoke not of all the Phariſees and Lawyers, but of many of them, and chiefly of thoſe who were preſent when Chriſt praiſed and commended John, as it is ſet down by this Evangeliſt? But there is no diſagreement between theſe two. For John baptized many of the Phariſees, and many of them were not baptized by John. But this paſſage of Luke may be thus explain'd; the Phariſees and Lawyers, who were not baptized by John, rejected the councel of God upon themſelves. Which expoſition doth not ſay whether their number was great or little, but only it ſignifies there were ſome.

Theſe Phariſees were one of the three ſects among the Jews. They appeared in the world about the time of the third punic war. They not only differed, from the reſt of their countrymen, in their morality and way of living, but in the choice of their garments, and dreſs This was the reaſon why they were called Phariſees, the name being taken from a Hebrew word, ſignifying ſeparated, becauſe they ſeemed to ſeparate themſelves from all others by their odd manner of life. It appears, from the thirteenth Book of Joſephus's Antiquities, chap. 9. and 18. that the ſects of the Phariſees and Sadducees had been exiſting from the days of the Maccabees: and we learn, from other paſſages of the ſame author, that a momentous difference reigned between them with reſpect to their principles. The Phariſees pretended to have a profounder knowledge in the rites and cuſtoms of their country, and to be extremely ſtrict in their obſervance; they firmly adhered to traditions, and acknowledged fate, but allowed the will to have an abſolute diſpoſal in abundance of caſes; they owned the ſoul was immortal, that the good removed into other bodies, and the bad was doomed to perpetual puniſhment. The Sadducees, on the other hand, called ſo from Zaduk, the prince of their ſect, excluded fate, and diſallowed of the rewards and puniſhments of ſouls: they denied the reſurrection of bodies, admitted of no ſouls, and traditions, and attributed all things to the will of man. The Sadducees were not very numerous, but being the wealthier of the two ſects, the rich gave into their opinions; whereas the people were firm in the intereſt of the Phariſees, and ſo linked to their notions, that if any of them happened to throw reflections either upon the high-prieſt or king, he was ſure to keep up his credit with them, and be believed: for every thing that regarded their ſolemn prayers and divine worſhip, was commonly done by the preſcription of the Phariſees; ſo that when the Sadducees took upon them any publick employment, though never ſo much againſt themſelves, yet they were obliged to obey the orders of the Phariſees, which had they offered to refuſe, dangerous conſequences would have followed, and the people been in an uproar. In one of the Talmudical books we are told, that there were ſeven ſects of Phariſees, to wit, the Sichemite Phariſee, the kicking Phariſee, the blood-ſhedding Phariſee, the veil'd Phariſee, the Phariſee call'd from the words What I ought to do, even that I will do, the Phariſee of love, and the Phariſee of fear. The Sichemite is ſo termed from embracing his religion on ſome worldly motive, as the Sichemites formerly did circumciſion to obtain the marriage of Dinah the daughter of Jacob. The kicking Phariſee from kicking his feet againſt the ſtones The blood-ſhedding, from often daſhing his head againſt walls and pillars, till he made the blood guſh out plentifully. The veil'd Phariſee, from having his head cover'd with a veil; a cuſtom much uſed by Jews in ſome certain places at this time of day, and in others by ſtudents in the publick ſchools or univerſities. The Phariſee, What I ought to do, even that I will do, has his name from pronouncing theſe words purely to acquire an empty name by them. The Phariſee of love is ſo called from being a proſelite to his religion for the ſake of ſome advantageous offer. But the Phariſee of fear, through an awe he has for the anger of God, falls into his ſuperſtition. The reader is deſired to conſider that paſſage of Paul, Acts 26. 5. where he ſays, that after the moſt ſtricteſt ſect of his religion he lived a Phariſee, whether he meant thereby, that the ſect of the Phariſees, in general, was moſt exquiſite, if compared to thoſe of the Sadducees and Eſſenes, or whether that particular one of the ſeven kinds, of which he was a member, ſeemed in his opinion to be the ſtricteſt? For it may very juſtly be conſtrued two ways.

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11. Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance. And think not to ſay within your ſelves. We have Abraham to our father, for I ſay unto you, that God is able of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children unto Abraham. And now alſo the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and caſt into the fire. I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance, but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to bear; he ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire.

Of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children unto Abraham.] John, while he is talking to the Phariſees, points to ſome ſtones with his finger that ſtood before him, and ſays, of theſe is God able to raiſe up children to Abraham. Jerome has theſe words, Ex lapidibus autem generari homines ſimile eſt ei, quod ex Sara ſterili proceſſit Iſaac, unde & Eſaiæ, c. 51. dicitur: aſpicite ad petram de qua exciſi eſtis: hujus igitur prophetica nos memores faciens monſtrat Joannes quod poſſibile eſt nunc etiam ſimile fieri. For men to be raiſed up of ſtones, reſembles Iſaac's being born of Sarah who was childleſs. Thus in Eſaiah 51. it is ſaid, look unto the rock whence ye are hewen. So that John, by putting us in mind of this prophecy, ſhews the poſſibility of the like being now performed. Theſe ſons unto, or, of Abraham, ſignify no more than ſuch as are freely elected, ſuch as walk in the footſteps of the faith of Abraham, and do his works. Non enim, inquit Hilarius, ſucceſſio carnis quæritur, ſed fidei hæreditas: dignitaſque originis in operum conſiſtit exemplis, & proſapiæ gloria fidei imitatione retinetur. 'Tis not the inheritance of the fleſh, but of faith, that is ſought for, ſays Hilary; and the dignity of the original conſiſts in copying his works, and the nobleneſs of the family in imitating his faith. From the words preceding this citation from Hilary, may be drawn a ſure hope of future happineſs. Si ſemen, inquit Auguſtinus, cujuſque non appellaretur, niſi quod ejus carne naſceretur, nec nos appellaret apoſtolus ſemen Abrahæ, qui certe originem carnis ab illo non ducimus, ſed imitatione fidei ſemen ejus facti ſumus, credentes in Chriſtum, cujus caro ex illius carne propagata eſt. If that was only to be called the ſeed of any thing, ſays Auſtin, which carnally proceeds from it, the Apoſtle, then, wou'd not call us the ſeed of Abraham, who certainly do not derive the original of our fleſh from him. But 'tis the imitation of his faith that makes us his ſeed, and our belief in Chriſt, who was deſcended from him according to the fleſh.

He ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt.] We read in Acts theſe words, John baptiz'd you with water, but ye ſhall be baptiz'd with the Holy Ghoſt, not many days hence. In this inſtance we have Chriſt himſelf oppoſing the baptiſm of John, which he perform'd by water, with his baptiſm by the Holy Ghoſt, which the Apoſtles were to receive from him in a ſhort time. The Evangeliſt, therefore, in reſpect of his baptiſm, ſpeaks in the future tenſe, He ſhall baptize; letting us underſtand, at the ſame time, that, as man, his baptiſm was no other than an external ceremony, which, by God's command, he adminiſter'd for the remiſſion of ſins, whereas the forgiveneſs of man's tranſgreſſions was not obtain'd by that outward rite, but by the power of the Holy Spirit, which, Chriſt, as God and Man, perform'd, as being the principal agent. The following is a fine remark, taken from a letter to Demetriades, found in Proſperus, in relation to this ſacrament. aliud eſt quod viſibiliter agitur, aliud quod inviſibilitur celebratur, Necidem eſt inſacramento forma quod virtis; cum forma adhibeatur per humani miniſterij obſequium, virtus antem per divini operis preſtetur effectum. A viſible action is one thing, and an inviſible performance, another: neither is the form in the ſacrament the ſame as is the virtue; ſince the firſt is owing to a human ſervice, the latter to a divine operation. Cyprian is more ſuccinct concerning baptiſm, when he ſays, ‘ 'Tis the ſpirit holy that operates in this ſacrament.’ Whitaker, in his eighth book of Paradoxes, has ſome beautiful paſſages, that help to ſet of this point. ‘ Not John, ſays he, nor Peter, nor any other Miniſter of the goſpel, can confer the Holy Spirit on thoſe he baptizes: men adminiſter an external ſacrament, but Chriſt cleanſeth the mind within by the Holy Spirit. What the ſentiments of the fathers were about the baptiſm of John, I am under no difficulty to comprehend, neither do I value them: for the ſcriptures diſplay this matter with perſpicuity enough, without lying under any neceſſity of enquiring into the different and precarious opinions of the fathers. Neither am I a ſtranger to that paſſage of Auſtin, in his fifth book againſt the Donatiſts concerning baptiſm, chap. x. where he openly declares, that, if any one ſhall offer to diſpute that ſins are remitted by the baptiſm of John, he will quit the liſts to his antagoniſt.” But Auſtin was not the only father, who embrac'd this notion, for Janſenius, in his book de concordia Evangelica, acquaints us, that Ambroſe was of the very ſame opinion. The words of this father in his firſt book de Spiritu Sancto, are to this effect. ‘ Thoſe perſons were baptiz'd afterwards, who ſaid, Acts, xix. that they did not know the Holy Ghoſt tho' they had receiv'd the baptiſm of John, becauſe that Evangeliſt baptiz'd for the remiſſion of ſins, not in his own, but in the name of Chriſt who was coming. And this was the reaſon why they did not know the ſpirit, becauſe they had not been baptiz'd in the name of Chriſt, as John was wont to baptize.’ The ſame thing is beautifully deſcrib'd by a certain commentator, upon the Epiſtle of Paul to the Galations, chap. iii. And Prudentius Cathenur, in his ſeventh Hymn, hath not only elegantly, but truly ſpoke of John. We ſhall oblige the readers with a tranſlation of the verſes.

'Twas he who firſt deſcrib'd the preaching way,
And taught new grace to thoſe who walkt aſtray.
Purging, within the ſacred ſtream, the ſtains
Of antient error which the ſoul contains.
Lo, when their limbs were waſh'd; ſurprizing ſight;
The ghoſt deſcending all divinely bright.
Thus they to ſin, and error bid adieu,
And new born veſſels of the goſpel grew.
So the refiner by his curious art
To gold and ſilver beauty can impart,
The bullion poliſh'd ſhall new light diſplay
And gleams of radiance all around convey.

John's baptiſm is ſaid to be by water, Chriſt's by the Holy Ghoſt, and by fire; this expreſſion is not unnatural. Auſtin ſays, ‘ 'tis not out of the way, for the Holy Ghoſt to be ſignified by fire; becauſe it is ſaid againſt his coming, Acts ii. that there appear'd unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire, and it ſat upon each of them. Hence Our Saviour himſelf ſays, Luke xii. I can come to ſend fire upon the earth. Hence that paſſage of the apoſtle, Romans xii. fervent inſpiritu.’ Theſe words, ſays another commentator, declare the excellency of Chriſt's perſon and miniſtry. John declares he was not worthy to carry his ſhoes after him, meaning to perform the meaneſt offices for him; this baptizing with fire, he acquaints us, is no more, than his plentifully pouring down the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit upon his proſelites, which, like fire, ſhould purifie, in their operation.

Ver. 12. Whoſe fan in his hand, and he will throughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner, but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

All this verſe is metaphorical, the fan is an inſtrument for winnowing corn, and ſeperating the chaff. And implies no more than our Saviour's diſcerning judgment in parting the good from the bad, who are typified by the chaff. But 'tis ſaid he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. Great conteſts have aroſe on theſe words, whether a real or figurative fire is to be underſtood in this place. As the whole paſſage is coucht in metaphors, it cannot be meant for material fire, as appears from the face of the whole verſe. If we allow it to be real fire, we muſt likewiſe ſay the fan, the flour, the wheat, and chaff, are real; but by ſaying, unquenchable fire, the Evangeliſt ſeems to point out an eternal puniſhment. For the ſatisfaction of the curious we ſhall add ſome fine remarks about this unquenchable fire. The antient fathers, for the moſt part, diſallow'd of material fire being in hell, tho' others, with a great deal of learning, have inſiſted on the contrary. The fire, to which ſinners are expos'd, ſays Victor of Antioch, is call'd everlaſting in other paſſages of ſcripture, but unquenchable in this place. There are ſome people, who, by this unquenchable fire, ſuppoſe the judgment of a poluted and bad conſcience, becauſe this judgment, on account of the worm that never dies, burns, in wicked men, like a raging fire, and continually preys upon their bowels. Jerome, upon the 66th of Eſaiah ſays, The worm that never dies, and the fire that never is extinguiſh'd, is, by abundance of perſons, taken for the conſcience of ſinners, who, being doom'd to puniſhment, are rack'd therewith; according to that paſſage of the pſalmiſt, my life is in miſery, while this thorn ſticks within me. St. Ambroſe, upon the 14th of Luke, defends the ſame opinion. They, ſays he, who bring not peace and charity to the altar of Chriſt, ſhall be taken away by the hands and feet and ſent into outer darkneſs, where ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. Pray, what doth this outer darkneſs ſignify? Muſt ſouls undergo any impriſonment there? not at all; this is the meaning. They who are depriv'd of the promiſes of heaven and the commands of God, are ſuch as are doom'd to his outer darkneſs; becauſe the commands of God are a light, and whoſoever is without Chriſt, the ſame is in darkneſs, becauſe Chriſt is a light in darkneſs. Therefore this gnaſhing of teeth is not of material teeth, nor this everlaſting fire a material fire, nor this worm a material worm. As diſeaſes and worms are the conſequences of the ill condition and bad ſtate of the human body, ſo is a man's being conſum'd with his own fire, and eaten with his own worm, the effect of not regulating his paſſions, and correcting his ſins, by ſobriety, and abſtinence; whereas adding one error to another, and ſin upon ſin, is the direct road to contract a certain crudity of vices within the ſoul, which throws him into this miſerable condition: Whence Eſaiah ſays, walk in the light of that flame and fire which you have kindled up. That is, the five which the heinouſneſs of ſin begets, and that is the worm, when ſin brings ſevere reflections to the mind, and racks the conſcience. Eſaiah ſays, and they ſhall ſee the members of men prevaricating againſt me, and their worm ſhall not dye, and their fire ſhall not be extinguiſh'd. St. Auſtin favours this, and ſays that we may term hell to be under the earth, two ways, firſt, That as the dead body has a place in the earth aſſign'd it, ſo have ſouls that are dead with the ſins of the fleſh; or as in coporal things, thoſe are inferior that are ſadder. But this father in another paſſage, ſeems to retract the foregoing. I think, ſays he, thae I ought much rather to aſſert of hell, that it is under the earth, than to give a reaſon why it may be ſaid or believed to be under the earth, as if it really was not ſo. Philo the Jew, in his book De congreſu quærendæ eruditionis, acquaints us, That God drives a wicked and flagitious ſoul and immenſe ſpace from him, into a place of concupiſcence and iniquity, which more aptly is called the place of the wicked, than the fabulous hell of ſome, for hell, in reality, is no other, than the life of an impious man. To this opinion of Philo aheres Gregory Nyſ. in his dialogue about the ſoul and the reſurrection, which Baronius calls the golden treatiſe. In this book he anſwers the objections, that are commonly brought out of ſcripture to prove there being ſubterraneous places for ſouls, which are called the infernal regions. John of Damaſcus ſays, That the Devil, bad ſpirits, wicked men, and ſinners are doom'd to an eternal, but not a material fire, ſuch as we uſe, but ſuch as is known to God only. Gregory the great's words are to this effect, A coporal fire, ſays he, certainly ſtands in want of corporal nouriſhment, in order to make it ſo. To preſerve it, it muſt have wood and other combuſtibles to feed upon, and is of no ſervice, unleſs it be thus kept up. Whereas the fire of hell being incorporeal, yet corporoally burning thoſe who are expos'd thereto, is neither kindled up by man's aſſiſtance, nor fed with wood or other materials; but created once continues for ever, neither wants it to be kindled up, or ſtands in need of any flame. Origen's words are theſe, The fire and torments of hell, which the ſacred ſcriptures denounce againſt ſinners; are not material puniſhments, but ſuch as rack the conſcience of offenders; for God brings and ſets, as it were, before their eyes, the remembrance of all their paſt errors; ſo that every baſe action of their lives, being thus ſo plainly repreſented before them, conſcience ſtrikes them in the face, and the pains of ſorrow for what they have done, extremely torment them. The ſame father, upon the 3d chap. of the Epheſians, goes on in this manner, Let no man deceive you with flouriſhes of words, becauſe there are ſeveral who ſay, that there are no puniſhments for ſinners, nor any external torments made uſe of to chaſtiſe offenders, but that conſcience is the only puniſhment of ſin, while the worm never dyes in the heart, and a fire is kindled in the mind like a fever, which burns the patient within. Theſe deceitful and flattering words are what Paul calls empty and vain, which ſeem to ſooth ſinners only the more into their wickedneſs, for while they put their confidence in them, they but expoſe themſelves the more to eternal puniſhment. Several of the ſchoolmen, were of opinion, that the fire of hell was corporeal, whoſe names are too many to recite in this place, nor would they be of any advantage to the reader. But there can nothing be drawn out of the ſcriptures, with any ſtrength of reaſon or certainty, to prove that the fire and worm here ſpoken of are material. The puniſhments of the wicked after this life are ſhadow'd out in metaphorical expreſſions, and particularly thoſe of hell are urg'd with extraordinary greatneſs. Let us conclude then with John of Damaſcus, that the fire of hell is only ſuch as is known to God, becauſe, as Auſtin ſays, in whatſoever part of the world or of nature this fire of hell is lodg'd, never did any man yet come to know, unleſs he perhaps to whom the divine Spirit has made the revelation. The above cited Gregory the Great dare not ſo much as deviſe where hell is, though every thing conſider'd leaves him at liberty to ſay, he believes it is under the earth. A very ingenious Engliſhman ſays, that the fire of hell cannot be corporeal for this very reaſon, becauſe whereſoever the devils take their journey, there they carry their own hell along with them. But a great many ſeem to make no doubt at all of this fire being corporeal. Perhaps there may not be much trouble in reconciling theſe jarring and different paſſages of the fathers with relation to this point, if that place of Auſtin upon the 57th pſalm be rightly minded, namely, that the puniſhments to be inflicted after death are of two ſorts. The firſt relates to hell where the rich man burn'd, who begged a drop of water to cool his tongue, from the finger of the poor man, whom he had deſpiſed before at his gate; The other to that diſmal doom which ſinners are to hear, who are to be placed at the left hand; Go ye into everlaſting fire prepared for the devil and his angels. From which words ſome think that the hell fire, to which ſouls, which are ſeparated, are doom'd, is incorporeal, and that the fire which is term'd everlaſting, and which torments the bodies of the damn'd, is of a corporeal nature; though they aſſert that immaterial ſpirits may be puniſhed with the torments of material fire, for which they aſſign this reaſon, That notwithſtanding an incorporeal ſoul dwels in the body of a living man, yet it ſympathizes and ſuffers with the different ailments and affections of that body.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Then cometh Jeſus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptiz'd of him. But John forbad him, ſaying, I have need to be baptiz'd of thee, and comeſt thou to me. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto him, ſuffer it to be ſo now: for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteouſneſs: Then he ſuffered him. And Jeſus when he was baptiz'd, went up ſtraightway out of the water: and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he ſaw the ſpirit of God deſcending like a Dove, and lighting upon him. And lo, a voice from heaven, ſaying, this is my beloved ſon, in whom I am well pleaſed.

And he forbad him.] Here ariſes a great difficulty, why John ſhould prohibit Chriſt from coming to his baptiſm, when he ſays of himſelf John i. v. 33. I knew him not; but he that ſent me to to baptize with water, the ſame ſaid unto me, upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirit deſcending, and remaining on him, the ſame is he which baptizeth with the Holy Ghoſt. Cryſoſtom ſolves it after this manner. He ſays that John, before Chriſt came to his baptiſm, knew that Our Saviour was come into the world, and was to baptize with the Holy Ghoſt; tho' he did not know who Chriſt was, having not hitherto ſeen his face; but when he came to his baptiſm, the ſpirit ſecretly inform'd him, that it was Chriſt who paid him the viſit; upon which he forbad him to come, and then it was he received thoſe remarkable words, upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirit, to enable the Evangeliſt, by that ſignal, to teſtifie of him to others. Auſtin's ſolution differs from the foregoing. He ſuppoſes that John was acquainted with the perſon of Chriſt, and that this ſignal was not given on that account, but did not know that the perſon who baptiz'd, only perform'd an office of ſervice, whereas it was Chriſt himſelf who gave the Holy Ghoſt in the miniſtry of his ſervants. So that Chriſt who ſent him to baptize with water, addreſt him in the words Upon whom thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirit deſcending, and remaining on him, the ſame is he which baptizes with the Holy Ghoſt. Much controverſy has been rais'd about baptiſm, and much ſtill continues to diſtract the opinions of mankind. But we have nothing to do with them, only to look a little into ſuch as ſquare with texts of ſcripture. It ſufficiently appears from the ſeveral accounts of the Evangeliſts, that Chriſt was naked, when John baptiz'd him, which is elegantly deſcrib'd, by Epiphanius in his Anchorate chap. xvii. and by John of Damaſcus, in his oration againſt the Emperor Conſtantius Caballinus. This cuſtom of baptizing perſons naked began with the Apoſtles, and remained ſo in the church for two hundred years, as appears from ſome of the writings of Hugh Victor; and the reaſon of it we learn from the fourth book of Facundus, dedicated to the emperor Juſtinina, where we find theſe words, ut non ſola voce, verum etiam totius habitu corporis profiteamur exuiſſe nos veterem hominem cum actibus ſuis, not only with the voice, but with the habit of the whole body, to profeſs our putting off the old man with his actions.

Like a Dove.] Some of the fathers are pleas'd to think that it was a real dove which deſcended upon Chriſt. Tertullian is one, among the reſt, who embraces this opinion, 'The dove, ſays he, was as really a dove, as the ſpirit was really a ſpirit'. Auſtin declares himſelf thus, 'We do not ſpeak thus, to aſſert that Chriſt had only a real body; but the Holy Ghoſt appear'd miſteriouſly to the eyes of men, yet both the bodies we believe to be real. As there was no neceſſity for the ſon of God to impoſe upon men, ſo there was no neceſſity for the Holy Ghoſt to do the ſame. Yet Almighty God, who made the whole world unto nothing, could eaſily figure out the real body of a dove, or any other bird, in the ſame manner as he form'd a real body in Mary's womb, without human ſeed.' Auſtin, Sixtus Senenſis, and almoſt all the ſchoolmen and divines give into this notion. But the four Evangeliſts ſeem to oppoſe all theſe learned men: they do not ſay that a dove deſcended upon Chriſt, but like a dove are the words. Luke, in his third chap. v. 22, ſays. And the Holy Ghoſt deſcended in a bodily ſhape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which ſaid, thou art my beloved ſon, in thee I am well pleaſed. Syrus ſays, juxta ſimilitudinem corporis columbæ, like the figure of the body of a dove; Æthiops, in corpore tanquam columbæ, in a body like that of a dove. Whence it may be concluded, according to the account of Æthiops, that it was a body, tho' not the real body of a dove that appear'd, which Maldonatus pretends was Auſtin's opinion, tho' the above cited words of his are againſt it. Juſtin, Iræneus, Origen, Hilary, Chryſoſtom, Iſidore of Pæluſium, Cyril, and Procopius Gazeus all concur in ſaying that the Holy Ghoſt deſcended upon our Lord in the ſhape of a dove. Auſtin aſſerts the ſame thing. Juvencus, in his hiſtory of the goſpel, has theſe verſes.

Corporeanque geren ſpeciem, deſcendit abalto
Spiritus, aeriam ſimulans ex nube columbam.

The Spirit, like a dove, embodied, flies
Wings down on earth, and leaves its native ſkies.

And Sedulius.

Confeſtim patuere poli, Sanctuſque Columbæ,
Spiritus in ſpecie Chriſtum veſtivit honore.

Sudden the gates of Heav'n wide open ſhow,
And Chriſt deſcendeth, like a dove, below.

We muſt remark this of the words of Tertullian, that he alledges ſuch things concerning the Holy Ghoſt, which cannot bear any analogy to truth, unleſs we ſuppoſe the ſacred ſpirit aſſumed the dove by an hypoſtatic union, as appears from what we have cited from him, whence another error will derive its birth, namely, that the Holy Ghoſt is by ſo much inferior to Chriſt, as Man is ſuperior to the dove, like Martial's comparing Stella's dove, with Catullus's ſparrow, inſiſting that Stella was by ſo much the better poet than Catullus, as the dove excelled his ſparrow, However Chryſoſtom refutes this erroneous opinion of Tertullian thus. ''Twas Chriſt, ſays he, that appear'd in our nature, and not the ſpirit who aſſum'd the reſemblance of a dove. Twas the ſon of God who took man's nature upon him, the ſpirit did not aſſume the nature of the dove. Wherefore the Evangeliſt does not ſay, that he deſcended in the nature of a dove, but that he came down in the likeneſs of a dove. Neither that he appear'd under that ſhape afterwards, but only ſo at this time.' Let us add this reflection of our own, that altho' the Holy Ghoſt aſſum'd the real nature of a dove, yet the concluſion thence will be none of the beſt, namely, that the perſon of the Holy Ghoſt, is not ſo perfect as that of the ſon, unleſs it be underſtood with regard to the nature it aſſum'd. St. Auſtin's argument, in his treatiſe of the paſſion of Chriſt, wherein he endeavours to prove, that it was a real dove under whoſe form the Holy Spirit appear'd in the baptiſm of John, ought to be refuted. 'We believe, ſays he, that the two bodies, namely, of Chriſt and the ſpirit, were actual and real bodies, for as it did not behove the ſon of God to impoſe upon man, ſo likewiſe it did not behove the ſon of God to impoſe upon man.' This argument is very weakly ſupported. For, pray tell me, who was impoſ'd upon by this form of the dove, when Matthew, Mark, and John, clearly acquaints us that none ſaw it beſides Chriſt, and John the baptiſt. Matthew's words are, 'He ſaw the ſpirit of 'God deſcending like a dove, and lighting upon him.' Mark ſays, 'He ſaw the heavens open'd, and the ſpirit like a dove de'ſcending upon him.' Luke informs us that Chriſt was baptiz'd in the midſt of a large concourſe of People, but not one of the Evangeliſts writes that the dove appear'd to them; nay, theſe words of John, 'And John bare record ſaying, I ſaw the ſpirit 'deſcending from heaven, like a dove, and it abode upon him,' evidently ſhew, that none but Chriſt and John ſaw the dove; what occaſion then was there for the teſtimony of ſo great a perſon to prove that, which others were eye witneſſes of; nay, which all the concourſe of people beheld, that ſtood then about Chriſt and John? beſides, this form of the dove did not impoſe upon Chriſt, who cou'd not be deceiv'd: neither upon John, who was preadmoniſh'd by God, that the ſpirit ſhould deſcend in a viſible ſhape, and remain upon his ſon; ſo that when he ſaw the ſpirit deſcending and ſitting upon him, he was aſſur'd that it was a viſion, as he had been foretold by God, which makes him ſay that he did not ſee a dove, but his words are, like a dove. But, for the ſake of argument, we will admit, but not entirely grant, that every one ſaw this phaſma of the dove, as Origen juſtly expreſſes it, and that ſeveral were perſuaded it was a real dove, yet in this caſe, the Holy Ghoſt cannot be charged with any impoſition. That can never be called an impoſture, which throws the appearance of a thing before the eyes, with no intent to deceive, but purely to inſtruct. Such was this appearance or viſion of the form of the dove before their eyes, not to the end it might be thought it was a real dove, but that the preſence of the Holy Ghoſt might be ſignified thereby, and what its vertues were. If any man think this a falſity, away with the uſe of all viſions, as well thoſe which are exhibited to the eyes, as thoſe to the mind: but the Holy Ghoſt neither impoſ'd in this viſion of the dove, nor in that of the fiery tongues; becauſe theſe tongues, were not real tongues, nor real fire. In ſhort, as the ſpirit is ſaid to deſcend like a dove, ſo Acts ii. v. 3. theſe tongues are ſaid to come down like fire, and a little before it is ſaid that the ſound, not of a wind, but as of a wind, was heard, or as the vulgate expreſſes it, as of a ruſhing mighty wind, all which, according to Chryſoſtom, are to let us know, that every circumſtance in theſe particulars was purely viſionary.

CHAP. IV.

In the former part of this chapter, we are acquainted with Chriſt's combat with, and conqueſt over Satan; the reſt contains a narrative of other incidents.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. THEN was Jeſus led up of the ſpirit into the wilderneſs, to be tempted of the devil. And when he had faſted forty days, and forty nights, he was afterwards an hungred. And when the tempter came to him, he ſaid, if thou be the ſon of God, command that theſe ſtones be made bread; but he anſwered and ſaid, it is written, man ſhall not live by bread alone, but by every word that procedeeth out of the mouth of God.

Tempted by the devil.] St. Matthew ſeems to follow the order wherein Chriſt was tempted. Mark has abridg'd the whole account, and given us but a conciſe narrative thereof. Luke handles it in the general firſt, and then explains it to us in parcels, tracing the two laſt temptations backwards. It is ſaid that the devil tempted him. It is evident that all creatures are ſubſervient to God, who employs them according to their qualities. Good Angels he makes of ſervice to promote good purpoſes, and bad angels to perform the contrary, and that always. This is the reaſon that when mankind are to be expoſ'd to ſome ſtrange, and uncommon calamity, that dæmons are employ'd. But the queſtion is, whether this ill or calamity be intended for a real hardſhip, or only a diſpoſition of providence for ſome good end, as in the caſe of Job. However, this does not hinder good Angels from being the miniſters of puniſhment and correction, ſo far as the chaſtiſement is good in itſelf, for God himſelf, by this way of reaſoning, and under this notion of ill, is the cauſe of affliction. Good Angels are in ſome places of ſcripture ſaid to do ill to mankind, as in the caſe of the peſtilence, brought upon Jeruſalem, and the ſlaughter of Senacharib's army, yet, in theſe, they had but a derivative authority; for the execution of theſe two ſingular events was reſerv'd for the hand of God.

The great humiliation of the ſon of God, was very apparent in thus ſubmitting to be tempted, and his faſting forty days and forty nights, was a further diſcovery of his extraordinary reſignation to the divine will of his father. The Evangeliſt adds nights as well as days, to remove the thought of having faſted after the manner of the Jews, who abſtain'd from eating and drinking in the day time, but took proviſions at night. The devil, who is called the tempter here, on coming to Chriſt, bade, him, if he was the ſon of God, make the ſtones before him to become bread. A Gentleman obſerves on this paſſage, that had Chriſt condeſcended to this, the action would have been unwarrantable, as Satan would have been obey'd therein. Our tranſlation renders it, if thou art the ſon of God, tho' 'tis much juſter to ſay, ſince thou art the ſon of God, becauſe the devil muſt certainly know of the occurrences that fell out upon Chriſt's being offer'd in the temple, namely, of the voice ſpeaking from heaven, and John the baptiſt's publick teſtimony of him.

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Then the devil taketh him up into the holy city, and ſetteth him on a pinacle of the temple. And ſaith unto him, if thou be the ſon of God, caſt thy ſelf down: for it is written, he ſhall give his angels charge concerning thee, and in their hands ſhall they bear thee up, leſt at any time thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone. Jeſus ſaid unto him, it is written again. Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God. Again the devil taketh him into an exceeding high mountain, and ſheweth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them. And ſaith unto him, all theſe things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worſhip me.

The devil, by God's permiſſion, took up his body, and carried it into the air, and ſet it upon one of the battlements of the temple, theſe are the words of Mr. Burkit, who proceeds by way of expoſtulation. Why is the holy city, and holy temple ſays he, choſen by Satan to be the ſcene of this temptation? I cannot tell he anſwers, unleſs he apprehended (as he might) that the holineſs of the place would aggravate the ſin.

Ver. 10, 11. Then ſaith Jeſus unto him, get thee hence, Satan, for it is written, thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve. Then the Devil leaving him, and behold, Angels came and miniſtred unto him.

If thou wilt fall down and worſhip me.] Jerome upon Daniel has theſe words, Omnem, inquit, ſcripturam ſanctam mente percurrens, niſi tamen me fallit oblivio, nunquam reperio quod ſanctorum quiſquam Deum cadens adoraverit, ſed quiſ ſam idola & dæmones, & rem illicitam adoraverit, cadens dicitur adorare. I have conſider'd all the ſacred ſcripture in my mind, ſays he, and if I am not miſtaken in my memory, I never yet found that any of the Saints worſhip'd God in a falling poſture, but that thoſe who paid adoration to idols, dæmons, and other unlawful things, uſ'd that method. Certainly Jerome had loſt his remembrance with a witneſs; for Gen. xvii. v. 13. it is ſaid, that Abraham fell on his face to adore the almighty. So in Joſhua v. v. 13. we read, that Joſhua fell proſtrate upon the ground, and worſhip'd: and in the ſecond chapter foregoing, the magicians or wiſemen, are ſaid, to fall down and worſhip Chriſt. The devil who ſpeaks to our Saviour in the words above, is called Satan in the original, that name ſignifying in hebrew an adverſary. The xxii. chapter of Numbers informs us, that the good Angel which ſtood in the way of Balaam, was an adverſary, or Satan. So the devil is called Satan antonomaſtically, becauſe he oppoſes himſelf to God, and the faithful. But Satan is properly ſo call'd, from oppoſing the execution of the divine will as much as poſſible: but very improperly ſo from thwarting any mean or fooliſh deſign. Thus the name of adverſary is very ridiculouſly applied, when ſuch an one oppoſes a madman, going to throw himſelf headlong down from ſome rock, or precipice. The Jews are beſides themſelves in aſſerting, that the devil, autonomaſtically call'd Satan, has no manner of influence over mankind, upon one certain propitiatory day, becauſe the numerical letters of one of their words make up the ſum of three hundred and ſixty four, which number they ſay excludes one of their propitiatory days, ſo that all the other days of the years he has only liberty to exerciſe his ſway over mankind.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Now when Jeſus had heard that John was caſt into priſon, he departed into Galilee. And leaving Nazareth, he came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the ſea coaſt. in the borders of Zabulon, and Nephthalim: that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Elias the Prophet, ſaying, the land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the ſea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles. The people which ſat in darkneſs ſaw great light, and to them which ſat in the region and ſhadow of death, light is ſprung up.

When he had heard] Theſe words do not imply immediately after the temptation, for St. John himſelf acquaints us that between that occurrence, and the impriſonment of John, was the call of Peter and Andrew, the diſcourſe of Chriſt with Nathaniel, the marriage, and miracle perform'd in Cana of Galilee, the firſt time of driving the ſellers out of the temple, the diſcourſe of Chriſt with Nicodemus, and the fourth teſtimony concerning Chriſt of John the baptiſt, when that queſtion was put, whether the baptiſm of the diſciples of Chriſt, was ſuperior to the baptiſm of John. It ſeems that John's impriſonment was owing to the hatred and malice of the Phariſees, who, as Matthew informs us 17. v. 12. alarm'd Herod's ears with ſtories againſt him, till they got him thrown into priſon. So that our Saviour, upon the news, withdrew out of the land of the tribe of Judah, where he had reſided ſome time, and his diſciples had baptiz'd, to get out of the way of the Phariſees, and avoid their detractive tongues. This is no more than what John witneſſes himſelf in his iv. chap. v 1. The place Chriſt choſe for his habitation, upon John's misfortune, was that part of Galilee on the ſea coaſt called Bethſaida, and Capernaum, which was not within Herod's dominions, but lay in Philip's Tetrarchate, as may be collected out of the 18. book chap. 3. of Joſephus's Antiquities. The text ſays, that leaving Nazareth, the place of his conception, and education, and where he had ſpent a conſiderable part of his life, becauſe a prophet has no honour in his own country, he came to Capernaum, a city of the tribe of Nephthalim, near the lake of Genneſareth, which bounded it on the ſouth, having on the eaſt the tribe of Zabulon; being the moſt beautiful and celebrated place of all Decapolis. However from collating the paſſages of Marc, Luke, and John, that relate to this removal of our Saviour, it appears that it ſucceeded ſeveral predictions of Chriſt, after he had reſtored to health the ſon of Regulus, who lay ſick at Capernaum, and after he had call'd Peter, Andrew, James, and John, to the Apoſtleſhip. We find alſo from the ſame Evangeliſt that his abode here was not of any continuance.

Ver. 17, 18. From that time Jeſus began to preach and to ſay, repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. And Jeſus walking by the ſea of Galilee, ſaw two brethren, Simon, called Peter, and Andrew his brother, caſting a net into the ſea, (for they were fiſhers.)

To preach.] Meaning, That he began now to publiſh his doctrines openly to the world with aſſiduity, and application. Tho' the law of Moſes, as appears from Joſephus againſt Apion, and from the ſacred ſcriptures themſelves, confin'd the faculty of teaching in public ſolely to the prieſts and Levites: Yet the learned Genebrard remarks at the year of the world 3983, that the ſcribes who were the doctors of the law, together with the Phariſees, ſeiz'd on the vacant chair of Moſes, while the prieſts by too much addicting themſelves to luxury and prodigality; relinquiſh'd and deſerted their office. Probably Chriſt alluded to this in Luke where he ſays, Woe unto you lawyers for ye have taken away the key of knowledge, which Tertullian interprets the expounding of the law or the office of teaching the ſcriptures. Our Saviour in this place, reproves the ſcribes for abuſing the authority which they had unjuſtly laid hold of, to the prejudice and deſtruction of themſelves, and other people, for it ſeems that the Scribes, and Phariſees were only aſſiſtants to the Prieſts and Levites, but were created upon any deficiency, ſo that any of them who had any tolerable knowledge in the Moſaic laws, were admitted to teach in the ſynagogues. This was of ſervice to Chriſt, who being of the ſeed of David, of the tribe of Judah, according to the fleſh, taught publickly in the ſynagogues. So did Paul of the tribe of Benjamin, as may be ſeen in the Acts of the Apoſtles.

The ſea of Galilee.] This is an Hebraiſm, meaning the gathering together of the waters of Galilee. This ſea is called the ſea of Tiberias, from its nearneſs to the city of that name which, at firſt, was called Cenereth, or Ceneroth, then Geneſar, or Geneſareth, but at laſt Herod Antipas amplified it, and called it Tiberias in honour of Tiberius Cæſar. The length of this ſea is ſaid to be fifteen or ſixteen miles, the breadth ſeven or eight. A great many pleaſant towns ſtand upon it; Capernaum and Corozaim lies on the north, Geraſa and Gadara on the eaſt, Bethſaida and Tiberias on the weſt, and Tarichæas on the ſouth.

Simon who was called Peter.] Mr. de Veil ſays, that theſe words mean, that Chriſt having ſeen this Apoſtle before, either gave him the name of Peter, or foretold that he ſhould be named ſo. In this call of Peter and Andrew, two obſervations are to be made; firſt, the preparation, which ſome term the call to the faith, and the call it ſelf, which obliged them to abandon all for Chriſt, and perpetually follow him. John, in his firſt chapter, informs us, that the preparation fell out thus: That Andrew being influenced by John, the forerunner of Chriſt, came to our Saviour, who receiving him very civilly, he returned, and brought his brother Simon along with him. That Chriſt ſhewed the ſame complaiſance to this brother, and moreover gave him a new name, or at leaſt acquainted him he was to have a new name. This was the firſt laying of hands, as it were, of Chriſt upon Simon and Andrew, whereby he made them his diſciples, though he called them not as yet to follow him, as both Eucherius and Auſtin alledge. From whence it appears, that they who ſay that Peter and Andrew were the firſt of the Apoſtles who were called, have that call in view which John the Evangeliſt mentions in his firſt chapter.

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22. And he ſaith unto them, Follow me, and I will make you fiſhers of men. And they ſtraightway left their nets, and followed him. And going on from thence, he ſaw other two brethren, James the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a ſhip with Zebedee their father, mending their nets: and he called them. And they immediately left the ſhip and their father, and followed him.

He ſaid unto them] It appears from Luke 5. that theſe words were ſpoken after he had ſeen Peter and Andrew fiſhing, and was on board their veſſel, and that proceeding a little further, and having ſeen the ſons of Zebedee, he performed the miracle of the ſurprizing draught of fiſhes.

Ver. 23, 24, 25. And Jeſus went about all Galilee, teaching in their ſynagogues, and preaching the goſpel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of ſickneſs, and all manner of diſeaſe among the people. And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all ſick people that were taken with divers diſeaſes, and torments, and thoſe which were poſſeſſed with devils, and thoſe which were lunatic, and thoſe that had the palſie; and he healed them. And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jeruſalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan.

And went about.] After Chriſt had called Peter and Andrew, James and John, to the apoſtleſhip, he came and dwelt at Capernaum in Galilee on the ſea coaſt, where he publicly taught for ſeveral ſabbaths. But as ſoon as he had caſt a devil out of a man in the ſynagogue, the people brought a prodigious number of dæmonias for him to cure, which he did in the houſe of Simon and Andrew. From this place he removed early one morning, and retired into the wilderneſs; where he was viſited by abundance of perſons who came and importuned him to reſide among them, and not leave their country; but he told them he was ſent to preach the goſpel to other cities. And after that went about, or began for the firſt time to go about all Galilee, as it is ſaid here. All this is evident from comparing it with Mark i. 21. and Luke iv. 31.

In the ſynagogues.] By ſynagogues are meant not ſuch places as the Jews made their ſacrifices in; they were places of public aſſembly, where orations generally were made, where the law was expounded, and the ſcriptures explained. At Jeruſalem above four hundred and eighty of theſe ſynagogues were frequented, and not only ſo, but the other cities had a greater or leſſer number of them according to the number and proportion of their inhabitants. That Chriſt was permitted to harangue in theſe places, need not be wondered at, ſince the heads of them commonly permitted thoſe to diſpute in them, who were men of learning and ſolidity.

Thoſe which were poſſeſſed with devils, and thoſe which were lunatick.] I ſhall give the opinions of two learned men upon this paſſage, the firſt is of Grotius. ‘ Perſons poſſeſs'd with devils are ‘ not ſuch, ſays he, as labour under any kind of madneſs, but who ‘ are rack'd and agitated by the influence of impure ſpirits within ‘ them. Thoſe who are ſubject to a falling diſtemper, the Greeks ‘ call Seleniaci, yet That pointed out in this place ſeems of a worſe ‘ nature, and farther removed from natural cauſes.’ The next is of Mr. de Veil. ‘ By lunaticks phyſicians underſtand, ſays he, ‘ ſuch as labour under a terrible diſtemper, which they ſuppoſe ‘ they catch ſub tempora dubiæ lunæ, as Sammonicus in Heinſius alledges, which is between the decline of the old and the appear‘ ance of the new moon, though Valeſius oppoſes this opinion.

CHAP. V.

This chapter, and the two next following, contain Chriſt's famous ſermon on the mount, which comprehends the ſubſtance both of the old and the new teſtament.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. AND ſeeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was ſet, his diſciples came unto him. And he opened his mouth, and taught them, ſaying, Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Bleſſed are they that mourn: for they ſhall be comforted. Bleſſed are the meek: for they ſhall inherit the earth. Bleſſed are they which do hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs: for they ſhall be filled. Bleſſed are the merciful: for they ſhall obtain mercy. Bleſſed are the pnre in heart: for they ſhall ſee God. Bleſſed are the peace-makers: for they ſhall be called the children of God. Bleſſed are they which are perſecuted for righteouſneſs ſake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall revile you, and perſecute you, and ſhall ſay all manner of evil againſt you falſly for my ſake.

He went up into a mountain.] Some are of opinion there is a miſtery couch'd in theſe words, that as the law at firſt was given on a mountain, ſo Chriſt would now explain it on a mountain. Others pretend that this hill, ſo famous for the ſermon preach'd there, was contiguous to Capernaum, Bethſaida, and the ſea of Galilee. For we read of three places to which Chriſt withdrew, namely, the wilderneſs, the ſhip and the mountain. It appears from the text, that the poſture of his preaching was ſitting, according to the cuſtom of the Jewiſh doctors, who ſat, to ſhew their authority. Mr. Veil's words upon this paſſage, are to this effect. Chriſt, ſays he, went up firſt to the top of the mountain, where he continued all night in diſcourſe: afterwards, as ſoon as day light appear'd, he call'd his diſciples to him, and choſe twelve out of the number, whom he diſtinguiſh'd by the character of Apoſtles, and conſtituted them miſſionaries to go and preach the goſpel, as appears from the 12th to the 17th verſe of St. Luke's vi. chapter. After this he came down with his diſciples from the top of the mountain, into a plain below, which was able to contain a large number of people, where he ſtood in the midſt, while he reſtored the ſick to their health, but at laſt ſitting down, according to the cuſtom of the Jewiſh doctors, he made his ſermon, the principal parts whereof related to his diſciples, tho' abundance of people were preſent the while he preach'd it, as Matthew acquaints us at the end of this ſermon, which is commonly called the ſermon of our Lord upon the mount: which begins with beatitudes, and bleſſings, and is accompanied with promiſes of rewards, not as the law was delivered on Mount Sinai, with threatnings and thunder, with fire and earthquake, but in a ſtill and ſoft voice.

The poor in ſpirit.] Grotius remarks on this paſſage, that Chriſt imitates David, or Thoſe who collected the antient pſalms together. He ſhews the end propoſed to man, that he ſhould enjoy felicity hereafter, and have a peaceful conſcience here on earth, with all the happy conſequences that flow from it. By this means he gains a greater attention of his audience, and acquaints them that thoſe are happy who are commonly called miſerable. The words the poor in ſpirit were interpreted two different ways by the antients, one implying poorneſs in a man's ſubſtance, the other the dejection of the mind, which latter ſeems to be the truer meaning; Baſil, ſays, Multi enim pauperes ſunt in ſubſtantijs, avariſſimi tamen ſecundum affectum, quos non ſalvat paupertas, ſed affectus damnat. Many are poor in ſubſtance, yet extremely covetous in mind; and 'tis not this poverty that ſaves them, for their deſire condemns them

They that mourn.] They who are expos'd to the miſeries and calamities of this world, or as Alcunius upon the xvi. of John expreſſes himſelf, qui per lacrymas, & preſſuras ad gaudia eterna contendunt, who ſtrive through tears and hardſhips to obtain thoſe joys that are everlaſting.

Bleſſed are the meek.] According to Auſtin, who ſubmit to diſhonour and ſcandal, who make no reſiſtance againſt misfortunes, but overcome evil in doing good. This meekneſs, according to a certain commentator either reſpects God or our neighbour. As it reſpects God, ſo it implies an entire reſignation to his commanding will, and a ſubmiſſion to his pleaſure. As it reſpects our neighbour, it conſiſts in forgiving injuries, bearing reproaches, and recompencing good for evil.

They which do hunger and thirſt.] Grotius ſays, that by the word hunger here, is meant a certain vehement deſire, according to that expreſſion auri ſacra fames the curſed hunger of gold. And that the word thirſt has the ſame ſignification. Eſaiah in his lv. chap. v. 1. ſays, every one that thirſteth come ye to the waters. So our Saviour ſays, John vii. v. 37. If any man thirſt, let him come to me and drink. The word righteouſneſs ſignifies the way of righteouſneſs, as Matthew expreſſes in his xxi. chap. v. 32. For John came to you in the way of righteouſneſs. In ſhort, under the figure of meat and drink, are all the benefits which God confers upon men commonly deſcribed. Doctor Hammond tells us, that by this righteouſneſs we are to underſtand firſt a righteouſneſs of juſtification; the righteouſneſs of the mediator imputed to us, by which we ſtand righteous in God's ſight, being freed from condemnation, ſecondly, a righteouſneſs of ſanctification wrought in us by the Holy Spirit, enabling us to act righteouſly. By the former there is a relative change in our condition; by the latter, a real change in our conſtitution.

Bleſſed are the merciful.] They who releive the poor, and miſerable, as much as in them lies, ſhall obtain mercy, that is, God ſhall aſſiſt them in their neceſſities, and free them out of their misfortunes. Now the reward which God promiſes for the performance of good works, the ſcriptures call mercy and grace. And our Saviour himſelf recommends to us here a compaſſionate regard towards the miſeries of others, and that both in ſoul and body, name and eſtate we be forward to pity and pardon, to relieve and help, to give and forgive. And as an encouragement for this he adds, that as we deal with others, God will deal with us. For as Fulgentius remarks, the rewards of the Almighty are ſo extenſive and vaſt, that nothing can compare with them, they not only being paſt utterance, but ſuperior to any thing that can be imagin'd.

The pure in heart.] The pſalmiſt calls theſe the righteous in heart, meaning, ſuch as worſhip God with a ſincere heart. God here requires of us a purity of heart and life; the firſt whereof is here expreſt, but the other included; for a clean heart will be accompanied with a clean life, and where there is a principle of grace within, there will be the real action of grace without.

Peace makers.] They who endeavour to promote peace. Such reſemble moſtly the dignity of the Almighty, for God is called a peace-maker, and the God of peace. Another gentleman defines the word peace-makers thus, qui a diſſentionis & diſcordiæ ſcandalo ſeperati dilectionem charitatis, & pacem Eccleſiæ ſub Catholicæ fidei unitate cuſtodiunt, & eos qui a pace diſſentiunt, ad Eccleſiæ caritatem, quantum in eis eſt, pacis ac fidei ſtudio revocare nituntur. They who, keeping away from diſſention and diſagreement, promote charity and love, and preſerve the peace of the church under the unity of the catholic faith, and they who endeavour as much as lies within their power to eſtabliſh peace, and the tranquility of the church. Theſe peace-makers are diſtinguiſh'd here by our Saviour, for, he ſays, they ſhall be called the children of God, that is, they ſhall be eſteemed the children of God, for their ſimilitude to him who is the God of peace, and they ſhall be dignified with the priviledges of ſuch as are reputed the children of God, namely, grace here, and glory hereafter.

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Rejoyce, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven: for ſo perſecuted they the prophets which were before you. Ye are the ſalt of the earth: but if the ſalt have loſt his ſavour, wherewith ſhall it be ſalted? it is thenceforth good for nothing, but to be caſt out, and to be trodden under foot of men. Ye are the light of the world. A city that is ſet on a hill, cannot be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a buſhel: but on a candleſtick, and it giveth light unto all that are in the houſe. Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good works, and glorifie your Father which is in heaven.

Great is your reward in heaven.] God rewards men according to their works. 'Tis not ſimply on account of their actions he rewards them, neither for any meritorious work of theirs; but the promiſes he has made to man are ſpontaneous, and gratuitous. Auſtin upon the xxxii. plaſm has the following remark, 'Let us 'preſerve the fairhfulleſt of debtors, becauſe we retain the moſt 'merciful promiſer; yet we neither lend or recommend any 'thing to be lent to him, thereby to make him our debtor, be'cauſe we have every thing from him, which we offer to him, 'and every good thing cometh from him, for they are from him, in 'him, and through him. What, do we give him nothing, and yet 'make him our debtor? whence comes this? becauſe he is our 'promiſer. We do not ſay to God, O Lord, reſtore what thou 'haſt received, but render what thou haſt promiſed. Chriſt ſays, 'that their reward is great, according as Luke expreſſes it in his 'vi. chapter. Their reward is great not by any compariſon of 'other things within our power. For as Damaſcenus in his xlix. 'chap. of Logic, ſays', That which, by a certain excellency, exceeds all meaſure and number, is indeterminately called great and much; for example, when we ſay that the mercy of God is great: and Eucherius aſſerts, 'that nothing is great in reality, 'which is little as to time; neither ought that to be ſtiled a 'lengthened pleaſure, which is of a ſhort continuance. So that 'the reward of the righteous is everlaſting.' But the text ſays, that this reward is in heaven, by which word we are to underſtand, that the rewarding of ſuch as are perſecuted for the ſake of righteouſneſs is not in a corporeal heaven, but in the contemplation of the ſupercceleſtial nature, namely, of God glorified, who is thought, nay, allow'd to be in heaven, not becauſe he is contain'd within a corporeal heaven, but this 'tis to diſcover the eminency of God above all other creatures, according to that of the Pſalmiſt, the Lord is exalted above all nations; and his glory above the heavens.

Ye are the ſalt of the Earth,] That is, you are elected by me, to the intent, that as ſalt is conducive to the preſerving of meat, ſo you may be inſtruments for the preſerving of the whole race of mankind by your wholeſome doctrines. A gentleman of good underſtanding ſays, that our Saviour's comparing Chriſtians in general, and his miniſters in particular, unto ſalt, is for a double reaſon. Firſt becauſe it is the nature of ſalt to preſerve things from corruption and putrefaction, and to render them ſavoury and pleaſant. Secondly, becauſe ſalt has a penetrating power in it, which ſubdues the whole lump, and turns it into its own nature. By the firſt of which the miniſters of the goſpel, are taught to labour by the purity of their doctrine, to ſweeten putrifying ſinners. By the ſecond is explain'd the penetrating power of the miniſtry of the word, which ſubdues the whole man to the obedience of itſelf.

A city that is ſet on a hill, cannot be hid.] The firſt part of this ſimilitude is wanting, for the ſenſe is this. Ye are a city ſet on a hill, or ye are like to a city ſet on a hill, which cannot be hid, becauſe the hill or mountain whereon it ſtands, diſcovers it. Our Saviour, after the cuſtom of the Syrians, makes uſe of ſeveral ſimilies like this, which the two following verſes explain more perfectly. Auſtin, in his book de unitate Ecleſie cap 16. excellently proves, that the true church cannot be hid. For though its being ſet on a mountain may ſometimes make it liable to be ſhaded with clouds and darkneſs, ſo as not to be ſeen, yet it cannot be hid from ſuch as ſearch for it in the ſcriptures, and not in a pompous ſhew of ſuperſtitious ceremonies.

Neither do men light a candle.] For fear the Apoſtles ſhould arrogate any thing to themſelves, which ſhould be ſolely meant of Chriſt, on his ſaying, ye are the light of the world, our Saviour immediately ſubjoins, neither do men light a candle, &c. let your light ſo ſhine, &c. that they may glorify not you, but your father who is the lighter of the candle. This means, let them own that your faith is a divine gift; for as God may be truly ſaid to be blaſphemed when another attributes to himſelf what is his pure right, ſo he may be ſaid to be glorified when we acknowledge that the Almighty is the fountain of all holy deſires, and righteous actions: By the foregoing words, Chriſt adviſes us to preach the goſpel, let whatſover difficulties lye in the way.

Ver. 17. Think not that I come to deſtroy the law of the prophets, I am not come to deſtroy, but to fulfill.

Think not.] Chriſt now begins to acquaint his Apoſtles what the doctrines were they ſhould preach. To form a right underſtanding of theſe words, it muſt firſt of all be remark'd that the law given by Moſes admits of two conſtructions; either it may be taken in common with other laws made by mankind, in order to reſtrain the commiſſion of offences with ſuitable puniſhments, or it may reſpect the divine inſtitutions of God, in order to require a purity of heart, and other actions, which may be omitted without incurring temporal puniſhment. The Scribes and Phariſees kept only to the former; the latter, which was the more eligible they rejected, and never taught the people; and that this was true, may be not only proved from our own books, but from Joſephus, and the Rabbins of the Hebrews, who are unanimous therein. So that Chriſt came not to overturn, deſtroy, or cut the law in pieces, neither to pervert it, either in making alterations as to the genuine ſenſe thereof, or to eradicate the ſcope or deſign thereof, or to make it uſeleſs, or to wreſt it any farther than was abſolutely neceſſary, but he came, as having a power, to explain and open the ſenſe of the law, to vindicate it from the wrong gloſſes of the Scribes and Phariſees, and to acquaint and teach the world that the better part of the law, which theſe Scribes and Phariſees rejected, was accompliſh'd. Mr. De Veil. To deſtroy in this place ſignifies to oppoſe the law, either in word or deed. Chriſt's ſaying that he came to fulfill the law, is acknowledged by Paul in his epiſtle to the Romans. chap. x. v. 4. In ſome paſſages of the apoſtolic writings, the law is called ſpiritual; in others, carnal. So that care ought to be taken to ſee how theſe words bear analogy to one another. In the firſt place it is a truth well known, that the law is of two kinds, natural and civil: the former being perpetual, and common to all mankind, the latter peculiar and changeable. The natural chiefly regards the mind, the civil the body. The civil law of the Jews hath This extraordinary above other human laws, namely, that it not only grants impunity, but alſo a long and proſperous life to ſuch as obey its precepts: whereas the law of Chriſt, as the threatnings it denounces are of a more terrible nature, namely, of eternal puniſhment; ſo the promiſes it is built on are nobler and much better, meaning, of an everlaſting kingdom. The ſcope of the law was to render man as perfect as poſſible; but becauſe the preſcriptions of the law, were not followed to the full by many, Chriſt rectified this deficiency in all who believed in him. So that it appears from hence how Chriſt not only deſtroyed, but alſo how he confirm'd and eſtabliſh'd that which was immutable in the law. And ſo much of the civil law as concerned divine worſhip, Chriſt oppoſed neither by his example or doctrine. Now the diſſolution of this law afterwards, was owing to the nature of the law itſelf. For it was not calculated to pleaſe God only by it, but ſuited to the genius of the people and the times. This law was given until the coming of the ſeed promiſed to Abraham. So that there was no occaſion to aboliſh a law which vaniſhed at the appointed time it was made for. Hence Chriſt fulfilled this law firſt, becauſe he not only paid obedience thereto himſelf, but commanded others to do ſo, as long as the Author thereof was pleaſed to have it in force; and next becauſe he drew mankind to a pure and holy worſhip of God, which was the Almighty's ſole deſign at firſt; for as Moſes Maimonides ingeniouſly owns, the rites of ſacrifices were only occaſionally conſtituted. Now as to the inſtitutions regarding civil ſociety: there is no Government in the whole world, but where the neceſſities of it require many things, which the Author of the Conſtitution diſſapproved, to be permitted, provided greater evils be not countenanced thereby. So that whoever refuſes to obey ſuch inſtitutions as neceſſity has added to thoſe, firſt eſtabliſh'd by the lawgiver himſelf, is not in ſuch caſe to be thought to act, either againſt the letter or meaning of the law, but is to be conſidered to act agreeably to the ſentiments of the lawgiver. For the deſign of all lawgivers is to form good and dutiful ſubjects However this be, Chriſt always paid a ſtrict deference to thoſe inſtitutions which ſeemed to regard real virtue; he never diſobeyed them, but taught his diſciples to live in obedience to the laws of every government, though of human invention. In ſhort, this law is quite aboliſhed, ſeeing that the univerſal plan of the Jewiſh government is extinguiſhed, as a puniſhment for their contumacious behaviour: becauſe the principle being once removed it is neceſſary that the additional part fall to deſtruction, for Chriſt has fulfilled the rites of the law, by exhibiting That for the ſake of which thoſe rites were found out, and which the rites themſelves ſhadowed out. [Grotius.] Our Saviour aſſigns two reaſons why he had no intention to abrogate or aboliſh the law, firſt, that he came to fulfill it, by yeilding a perſonal obedience thereto, and by giving a fuller and ſtricter interpretation of it, than the Phariſees were wont to give, for they taught that the law only reach'd the outward man, and reſtrained outward actions: ſecondly, becauſe of the unchangeableneſs and immutability of the law, for ſooner ſhould heaven and earth be aboliſhed, than the authority and obligation of the moral law be diſſolved. [Burkit.]

Ver. 18, 19, 20. For verily I ſay unto you, till heaven and earth paſs, not one jot or tittle ſhall in no wiſe paſs from the law, till it be fulfilled. Whoſoever therefore ſhall break one of theſe leaſt commandments, and ſhall teach men ſo, he ſhall be called the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven, but whoſoever ſhall do and teach them, the ſame ſhall be called ed great in the kingdom of heaven. For I ſay unto you, that except your righteouſneſs ſhall exceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, ye ſhall in no caſe enter into the kingdom of heaven.

Verily,] In the original Amen. The fathers will have an oath to be couch'd in this word. Origin, upon the 26th of Matthew, has theſe words, Jeſus dixit de Juda conſueto ſibi jurejurando. Jeſus ſpoke of Judas with his uſual oath, verily, I ſay unto you, that one among you ſhall betray me. Jerome upon Galatians ſpeaks to this effect. ‘ As God is known in ſeveral paſſages of ‘ the old teſtament to confirm his words with a certain cuſtomary ‘ oath, ſaying thus, As I live ſaith the Lord, ſo our Saviour in ‘ the goſpel, ſhews the veracity of what he ſpeaks by the word ‘ Amen, or as we render it, verily. But according to the Hebrew ‘ doctors Amen doth not eſſentially mean an oath,' but only a plain affirmation, and being added to the prayer of any perſon, only imports an affirmation of what he wiſhes for or deſires. So that the Septuagint juſtly tranſlate it into a word meaning no more than fiat, or be it ſo. In a hebrew book, ſaid to be wrote in the year of our Lord 1104. is a paſſage to be ſeen, which, when tranſlated, runs thus, ‘ If any perſon ſhall ſay amen to another's ‘ ſwearing, he is equally guilty as though himſelf had ſworn. So ‘ when a Judge adminiſters an oath to any one, and the perſon ſhall ‘ anſwer amen thereto, ſuch perſon takes the oath upon himſelf, ‘ as if he had ſwore with his own mouth'. One jot or one tittle ſhall in no wiſe paſs.] This adage derived its original from the manner of writing then in uſe: whence it follows that even then the letter Jod in the hebrew tongue took up leſs room than any of the other letters; and that the old books after Eſdras appear to have been commonly wrote without the vowel points. [Grotius] The ſenſe of this paſſage is more obvious as Luke xvi. v. 17. explains it. And it is eaſier for heaven and earth to paſs, than one tittle of the law to fail. or ſooner ſhall the univerſal machine of the world fail, than even the leaſt thing in the law ſhall be rendered fruitleſs, which is mark'd out by Jod, (with which Jota agrees), the ſmalleſt letter in the hebrew alphabet in uſe from the times of Eſdras, ſo that no proof can be drawn from this paſſage that heaven ſhall at any time fall to corruption. The Reader is deſired to take notice that the law of Moſes taken in its proper ſignification contains three parts or branches, firſt ſeveral commands annexed to the ſtricteſt performance of the moſt perfect obedience. Secondly, ſeveral promiſes not only of the temporal goods of this life, but of that to come. Thirdly, curſes or threatnings againſt ſuch as tranſgreſs the law in any particular. The decalogue, comprized in two tables, was the foundation of all the commands; the firſt of theſe tables comprehended the ceremonial, the ſecond the political law. Now every branch of the law had as it were its body and ſoul; by its body is meant all thoſe exterior actions which were either commanded or prohibited to be done; by its ſoul, a ſincere piety joined with a lively faith in God; ſincere charity to one's neighbour, mortification, and holineſs of life. The law of Moſes was abrogated by Chriſt in reſpect to the body, or the external part; ſo that it is wholly unlawful to do ſome certain things now, which were lawful then, for example, to circumciſe the fleſh of the prepuce, to immolate victims of brute animals, and the like, which ſhadowed out the coming of Chriſt; though ſome things are left at the church's liberty, to uſe, or not uſe, as it ſhall think beſt, and theſe are for edification. The ſame law of Moſes in regard of the ſoul being immutable and eternal, Chriſt was pleaſed it ſhould remain ſo, whence we are under an indiſpenſable obligation to circumciſe the heart at all times, to perform inward ablutions and the like. [Mr. de Veil.]

One of theſe leaſt commandments.] Our Saviour to evidence that the moral law was a perfect rule of life, tells his diſciples, that if any of them did either by their doctrine or practice make void any of the leaſt of God's commands, either by allowing themſelves in the omiſſion of any known duty, or in the commiſſion of any known ſin, they ſhould never enter into the kingdom of God. [Burkit.] Chriſt's argument is this. If 'tis unlawful for any one to infringe the law, the tranſgreſſion muſt certainly be of a much higher nature where the executors of the law fail in their duty. Chriſt acquaints his followers, that his ſermon contains not one commandment, but the leaſt voluntarily broken, involves the tranſgreſſor in eternal puniſhment, for he who preſumes to exceed the limits of the leaſt among them, ſhall be accounted the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven, that is, when the fulleſt of the celeſtial kingdom ſhall come. [Grotius.] Whoever therefore: As though he had ſaid, I am ſo far from diſſolving the law or the prophets either by my actions or my doctrine, that I can poſitively aſſert that whoſoever tranſgreſſes thoſe commandments, which the Scribes and Phariſees account as nothing, incurs the diſpleaſure of the Almighty; for ſuch a one ſhall be called the leaſt, or he ſhall have no place in the kingdom of heaven, that is, in my kingdom, which is not of this world. Now whereas in a kingdom, ſome for their valour, and others for their eloquence, acquire reputation and fame, Chriſt tells them that thoſe who teach ſuch things to be done, as he himſelf hath commanded to be done, who came to explain the meaning of the law, ſhall be commended in his kingdom for their doctrine, but, on the other hand, that thoſe teachers ſhall be defamed and ſet at nothing, who ſhall preſume to inſtruct perſons that his precepts in any wiſe may be lawfully broken. So likewiſe that ſuch as ſquare their actions and way of life to his commandments, ſhould obtain great advantages, whereas ſuch as liv'd in oppoſition thereto, ſhould receive none but contempt and diſhonour: [Mr. De Veil.]

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. Ye have heard that it was ſaid by them of old time, thou ſhalt not kill: and whoſoever ſhall kill, ſhall be in danger of the judgment. But I ſay unto you, that whoſoever is angry with his brother without a cauſe, ſhall be in danger of the judgment: and whoſoever ſhall ſay to his brother, Raca, ſhall be in danger of the councel: but whoſoever ſhall ſay, thou fool, ſhall be in danger of hell fire. Therefore if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there remembreſt that thy brother hath ought againſt thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way, firſt be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift. Agree with thine adverſary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him, leſt at any time thy adverſary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be caſt into priſon. Verily I ſay unto thee, thou ſhalt by no means come out thence, till thou haſt paid the uttermoſt farthing.

Of old time.] This refers to the days of Moſes. The meaning is, this was ſpoken of your progenitors, which, as they were of the fleſh, cannot be any otherwiſe underſtood than of the fleſh. But I who am determin'd to collect together a ſpiritual people, propoſe to you ſpiritual rewards, and denounce againſt ſuch as are contumacious and diſobey my commands, a puniſhment, which is not of this life. And moreover I will dictate thoſe precepts to your underſtandings from which you ſhall clearly ſee that their eſſentials conſiſt in the ſpirit. [G.]

Thou ſhalt not kill.] This appears not totidem verbis in the law, but the ſence is obvious how that the law required an homicide to be carried before the judges, who being condemned by their ſentence, was to ſuffer a capital puniſhment.[G.]

Shall be in danger of the judgment.] That is, he ſhall be carried before the judges; ſentenced and capitally puniſhed. for he that ſmiteth a man, ſo that he dye, ſhall be ſurely put to death Exod. xxi. 12. And he that killeth any man, ſhall be ſurely put to death. Levit. xxiv. 17 But to underſtand the whole of this paſſage, it muſt be premiſed that the Jews had two kinds of tribunal, where perſons guilty of capital crimes, were required to make their appearance. The firſt conſiſted of three and twenty ſenators in every town of Paleſtine, which comprehended at leaſt a hundred and twenty inhabitants within it: however in the city of Jeruſalem this ſort of ſenate was divided into two courts; one ſat at the gate which opened to the hill whereon the temple ſtood: the other, which was nobler and more dignified, at the court gate of the temple. The ſecond took cognizance of affairs in the ſtony apartment of the temple, called by St. John the pavement. This tribunal conſiſted of threeſcore and eleven judges, who were appointed originally by Moſes, men of the beſt families, and natives of Judæa, who were not only advanced in years, but whoſe experience in buſineſs rendred them capable of this high office. The magiſtrates of this ſupreme court were created by impoſition of hands, whereupon the Holy Ghoſt deſcended into their hearts, to enable them to determine of ſuch things as were above human underſtanding; as in the caſe of the woman charged with adultery, without witneſſes, by a cup. In this ſenate there was one who had ſuperior authority to all the reſt; his name was as much as princeps in omni loco; and the next in dignity to him was the pater Domus judicii: all the others were equal as to authority. Moreover the buſineſs of this Synedrin was to take routs throughout the ſeveral places of Judea, to muſter and view the people, to appoint magiſtrates in the ſeveral towns, to preſerve the traditions, to appoint in ſacred matters, to expound the law, or rather, to find out ways of explaining it, to pronounce death on ſuch as refuſed to pay obedience to their decrees; to determine the cauſes of prophets, who were charged with crimes of any conſequence, and the like, as may be ſeen in the Talmud, and Maimonides's treatiſe of the Synedrin. Now as almoſt all caſes of any importance were brought to be determin'd before this court, the uſe of which prevailed in our Saviour's time; ſo, all perſons, who were found guilty of any capital crime, were ſaid to be in danger of the judgment, that is, to be worthy of death, pronounced upon them by three and twenty of theſe ſenators or judges according to the law: in like manner thoſe perſons who were conſcious of any exceſſive crime, were ſaid to be in danger of the Sanhedrim; and thoſe to be in danger of Gehenna or hell, whoſe crimes appeared ſuch, as not to be expiated by any human puniſhments. (V.)

Without any cauſe] In ſeveral of the modern greek books the word eike, which is tranſlated, without any cauſe, is added. But Jerome is of opinion it ſhould be entirely razed out. He has the following words in his 2d book againſt the Pelagians, In pleriſque codicibus antiquis, ſine cauſa, additum non eſt, ut ſcilicet ne cum cauſa quidem debeamus iraſci. The words without a cauſe are not inſerted in ſeveral antient books, becauſe we ſhould not be angry even with a cauſe. Auſtin ſays likewiſe, codices græci non habent, ſine cauſa, ſicut hic poſitum eſt, without a cauſe, is not to be found in the greek books, as it is placed here. However that all ſorts of anger are not accounted mortal ſins, we learn from St. Thomas in his treatiſe of the ten commandments chap xxi ‘ That ‘ anger is threefold, ſays he firſt there is an anger that proceeds ſolely ‘ from the determination of our reaſon, without any commotion ‘ of the mind, which is more properly called judgment, than ‘ anger, in which ſenſe theſe words of Micah chap. vii v. 9. I ‘ will bear the indignation of the Lord, are to be taken. Secondly, ‘ there is an anger or paſſion in the ſenſitive appetite, but under the ‘ dominion of reaſon, this is no other than zeal, and is an action ‘ of virtue. Thirdly, there is an anger or paſſion in the ſenſitive ap‘petite, but out of reaſon's ſway; this is always ſinful, though ‘ not mortal, unleſs where the paſſion ruſhes to unlawful lengths, ‘ ſuppoſe, of homicide, or any other crime of the like nature.' To this account we may add the ills of anger, which Gregory the great acquaints us with. ‘ By anger, ſays he, the pleaſures of ‘ ſocial life are loſt; concord and unanimity is ſhaken; the light ‘ of truth is extinguiſh'd, the ſplendor of the Holy Spirit is put ‘ out; the heart that is moved up with anger palpitates and beats, ‘ the body trembles, the tongue bites itſelf, the countenance ‘ glows, the eyes ſparkle, and friendſhip is no more. [V.]

Raca,] This is a Syriac word, and properly ſignifies vain; but the abuſe which is expreſt by it, is not ſo much in the word itſelf as in the malicious heart that harbours it. 'Tis ſpoken by thoſe who are obliged to puniſh others on very momentous reaſons, and who have no private view in it with reſpect to themſelves, being done purely to rouze the offender out of his lethargy. (G). Raca is a word of reproach: at this time it was uſed for any word of ſcandal. Raca in Syria means vain, light, an empty fellow, void of ſenſe and underſtanding; a raſh and airy perſon. 'Tis frequently to be met with in the talmudic books; and in Jud. ix 4. they are called Rechim, who procured the ſeventy brothers of Abimelech to be ſlain; and ſo we may find it in other paſſages of ſcripture. [V.]

In danger of the council.] As twelve tribes were inſtituted to keep up the memory of Jacob's 12 ſons, ſo the Iſraelites, to preſerve the remembrance of thoſe people which Jacob conducted into Ægypt, appointed ſeventy perſons (or rather ſeventy two as we have remark'd upon Luke,) to govern over them, and take care of their affairs. In Numbers xi. 16. it is ſaid, gather unto me ſeventy men of the elders of Iſrael, whom thou knoweſt to be the elders of the peeple, and officers over them, which words are explained by that paſſage of Deut. xvii. 8. If there ariſe a matter too hard for thee in judgement, between blood and blood, between plea and plea, and between ſtroke and ſtroke, being matters of controverſy within thy gates, then ſhalt thou ariſe, and get the up into the place which the Lord thy God ſhall chuſe. Now as the prieſts enjoyed perfect eaſe and peace, they devoted themſelves to learn the ſeveral branches of ſcience with greater application than any others; ſo that it was neceſſary to chuſe a great many out of their number into this order of perſons. But others were added to theſe, out of the other tribes, who were remarkable for their learning and ſanctimony. When God at any time ſet any one over them, which he did by ſome heavenly ſign or other, as in the caſe of Joſhua, Gideon, Jephtha, Samſon, and Samuel; ſuch conſtituted perſon had a right of determining caſes out of the ſenate or councel. But provided God vouchſafed to give no ſuch perſon, the reſource was then to the councel, wherein the high prieſt preſided. On this right it was that Heli the high prieſt laid hold of the principle place in the common-wealth; and the ſame ~~was~~ obſerved in the times of the Aſmomeans. But the power of the Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem was much diminiſhed under the reign of Auguſtus; ſo that capital caſes were removed from that court forty years before the deſtruction of the city. (G.) It was an inſtitution of the Sanhedrim to have it conſiſt, as much as poſſible, only of prieſts and Levites; whence we find in the ſcriptures, and in Joſephus, the word Prieſt is underſtood for the Sanhedrim itſelf. According to Maimonides, if there could not be found among the Prieſts and Levites, a number of perſons ſufficient to fill up the determinate number of the ſenators, who compoſed it, then other Jews, without any regard being had to the tribes, were admitted members. However the princpal ſeat in this celebrated aſſembly was conferred on him who was remark'd for being the wiſeſt perſon; and this preſident had his vicar, or ſubſtitute, who was called Pater Domus Judicii. This aſſembly gave ſentence in all caſes of importance, took cognizance of the high-prieſts themſelves, but offered not to meddle with the kings, as is excellently ſet forth in the Talmud, in the Treatiſe concerning this Sanhedrim, where the rights of the kings, and of the hign prieſts, are accurately diſplayed. What Joſephus tells us of Herod's being commanded to ſtand and plead his cauſe before this councel, and give ſecurity for his behaviour, does not prove the contrary? For Herod had a day aſſigned him, when he was but a youth, and a private perſon, and when he had no hopes of coming to the crown, his father Antipater being then alive, and Hyrcanus in poſſeſſion of the kingdom. In ſhort, we are acquainted by the Rabbins, That the three and twenty ſenators (whom we have taken notice of before) and the Sanhedrim itſelf, was deprived of the privelege of giving final ſentence in capital caſes about forty years, before the deſtruction of the ſecond temple. (V.)

In danger of hell fire,] Gehenna in the original. Some of the Jews imitated the cruel ſuperſtition of the Phenicians, by miſerably putting to death their children at a place out of the city called Tophet, and the Valley of the children of Hinnom, which in after ages came to be called Gehenna. The torments of a future ſtate, were compared to the fire of this Gehenna; nay, the compariſon became cuſtomary, and the puniſhments of the next life were expreſs'd by the name Gehenna (G). Gehenna was a Valley near Jeruſalem, ſo named from the perſon who owned it. This place is frequently called in ſcripture the Valley of the ſon of Hinnom. In this place was Tophet, where the Iſraelites, who embraced the barbarous ſuperſtition of the neighbouring nations, offered up their ſons to the idol of Moloch. Whence the Chaldæans, Syrians, and ancient Hebrew writers, uſed the word Gehenna to ſignify the place appointed for ſinners to be eternally puniſh'd in (Junius). It appears from the text, that by the three words, judgment, councel, and hell (or Gehenna), different manſions in the place of eternal puniſhment are expreſs'd, according to the nature of the ſin. Gehenna was a valley near Jeruſalem, extremely pleaſant, and watered with the ſtreams of Cedron; its owner's name was Hinnom, or his ſon, whence it was called the valley of the ſon of Hinnom, and by the Greeks Gehenna. In this valley was the place called Tophet, where they offered their ſons and daughters to Moloch, as the Heathens did to Saturn. We are acquainted from the 23d chapter of the 2d of Kings, ver. 10. that king Joſias defiled Tophet, which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom, that no man might make his ſon or his daughter to paſs through the fire to Moloch. It ſeems there was a perpetual fire burning there, wherein the bowels and bones of bodies were burnt. Whence by a metaphor the Hebrews gave it the name of Gehinnam, to ſignify the manſion where the wicked were puniſhed after death. But it is called Gehenna in the New Teſtament. Chriſt, when he ſays, G*o into Hell-fire*, (or Gehenna) into the fire that never is extinguiſhed; alludes to theſe words; ſo likewiſe John, he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. We will ſubjoin ſome remarks concerning this Valley of Hinnom, as they are to be read in a myſtic commentary in Hebrew, upon the whole Old Teſtament. ‘ Although “ every idol had its temple within the city of Jeruſalem, yet that “ of Moloch ſtood in a ſeparate place without the city. After “ what Manner was Moloch made! Why, it was an image of “ braſs entirely hollow within; it had the face of a calf, and its “ arms were expanded like a man who wanted to receive ſomething “ from another. This image had ſeven ſmall chapels built in ho“nour of it, before which ſtood the image of Moloch. He that “ offered a pidgeon was admitted into the firſt chapel; a ſheep or “ lamb. into the ſecond; a ram, into the third; a calf, into the “ fourth; an heifer, into the fifth; a bullock, into the ſixth; “ whoever offered his own ſon, into the ſeventh, being indulged “ likewiſe, to kiſs the Statue of Moloch, according to that paſſage “ of Hoſea iii. 2. The ſacrificers of men kiſs the calf; but according “ to the Vulgate, Sacrifice men who pay adoration to calves. Now “ the offering of a ſon was after this manner: The ſon was laid “ before the ſtatue of Moloch, under which, fire was put, till the “ image was glowing hot, and ſhone like gold. Whereupon the “ ſacrificers took the child, and put it on the ſhining arms of Mo“loch, but for fear the father ſhould hear the cries of his ſon; “ a drum was kept beating all the while. Whence the place had “ the name of Tophet annext to it, from Tuphim which ſignifies “ drums. But it was called the valley of Hinnom, either from “ the miſerable voice of the child offered, or becauſe the ſacri“ficers, who ſtood by, ſaid to the father, This will be profitable “ and ſweet ſauce to thee. For the parents verily thought, as “ Rabbi Bechai upon Levit xviii. acquaints us, that the ſacri“ficing one child would make all the reſt happy, and that the “ reſt of their lives would be attended with nothing but proſperity “ and ſucceſs.” [V.]

Thy gift] This means a voluntary ſacrifice, for the duties of charity and benevolence are to take place before ceremonial duties. God is not to be pacified when the mind labours with anger. Notwithſtanding this, the Scribes and Phariſees were of opinion, that ſuch ſacrifices and gifts as were made in the temple, were ſufficient of themſelves to expiate all omiſſions and crimes, which came not under the cognizance of the judges. (G.)

'Till thou haſt paid the laſt farthing.] Luke ſays, 'till thou haſt paid the very laſt mite; Mark has theſe words, ſhe threw in two mites, which make a farthing. Our Saviour, by this metaphorical way of ſpeaking, intends only to ſhew that the leaſt tranſgreſſion will not go unpuniſhed. By the priſon, here mentioned, is figured out the manſion of hell; now as thoſe words of the Apoſtle, 2 Cor. xv. It behoveth him to reign, till he has put his enemies under his feet, are to be underſtood of the eternal kingdom of Chriſt, becauſe his enemies are always under his feet: ſo the words in this paſſage, Thou ſhalt by no means come out thence, 'till thou haſt paid the uttermoſt farthing, are to be conſtrued thus; while Chriſt inflicts a juſt puniſhment, which is eternal, upon our tranſgreſſions, he never has done ſatisfying them to their full extent. For as Bruno Signienſis ſpeaks upon this place, “ Magnum eſt hoc debitum, “ infinita eſt & innumerabilis pecunia, ad cujus noviſſimum quadrantem nunquam ſolvitur, qui ſemper ſolvitur, nunquam finitur. “ This is a vaſt debt; the ſum is infinite and innumerable, and “ there is never no coming to the laſt farthing; he that is perpe- “ tually paying, never finds a period of his debt (V).

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. Ye have heard that it was ſaid by them of old time. Thou ſhalt not commit adultery. But I ſay unto you, That whoſoever looketh on a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with her already in his heart. And if thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out, and caſt it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members ſhould periſh, and not that thy whole body ſhould be caſt into hell. And if thy right hand offend thee cut it off, and caſt it from thee, for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members ſhould periſh, and not that thy whole body ſhould be caſt into hell. It hath been ſaid, whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement. But I ſay unto you, that whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, ſaving for the cauſe of fornication, cauſeth her to commit adultery, and whoſoever ſhall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery.

Thou ſhalt not commit adultery]. The Hebrews underſtand theſe words of the lying with a woman. Abenezras makes them to take in all kinds of venery, except conjugal love; however, this is no excuſe for the Jews: for it may ſufficiently be proved from themſelves, that many things were diſpleaſing to God, which, notwithſtanding, were out of the cognizance of the law. For Paul acquaints us, that the ſlaughter mentioned in the 25th chapter of Numbers, was the conſequence of the crime of fornication (G). Such is the purity and ſpirituality of the law of God, that it condemns ſpeculative wantonneſs, no leſs than practical uncleanneſs, and forbids not only the outward action, but the ſecret purpoſe and intention, and firſt out-goings of the ſoul after unlawful objects (B). That perſon is eſteemed an adulterer before God, who luſts after a woman; ſo that not only the ſight of the eyes is to be reſtrained, and the other members to be kept within bounds, but alſo all opportunities are to be avoided that may influence us to this actions, as though they were attended with the worſt of conſequences. (Beza).

Whoſoever looketh on a woman to luſt after her]. The Roman laws adjudged that man an homicide who carried a dart about him, with an intent to kill another; which Philo refers to the laws of Moſes (G). Auſtin, againſt Fauſtus, ſays, “ That whereas the “ Jews ſuppoſed that only corporal lying with a woman, was un- “ lawful whoredom; our great maſter, on the other hand, hath “ ſhewn that ſuch kind of luſt is nothing elſe.” Now what Chriſt ſays of the eye, may as well be applied to the other ſenſes, becauſe the reaſon is the ſame in all of them; but the eye ſeems to be named rather to let us underſtand, that the mind is more frequently drawn by this optic to entertain unlawful deſires. St. Ambroſe has a very beautiful paſſage in relation to this paſſage. “ 'Tis not “ the eye, ſays he, that commits the error, ſo that our Saviour's “ words contain nothing but a very juſt ſentence; whoſoever look- “ eth on a woman to luſt after her, hath committed adultery with “ her already in his heart. He did not ſay, Whoſoever looketh “ on a woman, but whoſoever looketh to luſt after her, whereby “ the eye is cleared, but the mind laid under the charge. He did “ not ſay, He hath committed adultery in his eye, but in his heart: “ for the ſight is in the eye, but the tranſgreſſion in the heart (V.)

If thy right eye offend thee.] This is an elegant exaggeration, taken from chirurgeons, who, when they find one particular member to endanger the whole body, for fear ſuch body ſhould periſh, cut off that member, though never ſo dear. Chriſt, by this parabolical exaggeration, figures out to us, that we muſt throw away and reject every delightful, dear, and neceſſary thing, provided we can find no other expedient to deliver our ſelves from ſin and error. For the ſoundneſs of the members can never be thought the cauſe of ſin, but only the will of the members being ſubſervient to the actions; ſo that in this caſe it never is neceſſary to cut off any member to avoid ſin, neither is the cutting off to deliver us from ſin, at any time lawful (V). The main ſcope hereof is this, that we avoid giving encouragement to depraved deſires. 'Tis the deſire, or luſt, that breeds the action, and if this be ſtopp'd from ſprouting up in the mind, the reſt drops to the ground. Chryſoſtom ſays this command is one of the mildeſt in the world; but that it would have been a very hard one, if the precept had been to ſuffer us to keep company with women: gaze upon them, and yet refrain loving them (G). In theſe verſes Chriſt preſcribes a remedy for this eye-malady; if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out. Which is not to be underſtood literally, as if Chriſt commanded any man to maim his bodily members, but ſpiritually, to mortify the luſts of the fleſh, and the luſts of the eye, which otherwiſe will prove a dangerous ſnare to the ſoul. (B). Chriſt mentions the right eye, and the right hand, for this reaſon; becauſe the members on the right are not only better than thoſe on the left, but alſo are more quick in committing an error. (Beza).

Caſt into hell]. Matthew ſays no more than Gehenna or hell, as writing only to the inhabitants of Paleſtine, amongſt whom originally the word was ſo underſtood; as appears from the books of the ancient Hebrews. Mark, on the other hand, knowing them not to be ſo much accuſtomed to the word, annexes everlaſting fire thereto. However, throughout the courſe of theſe books 'tis meant of the puniſhments after the reſurrection, and not of that ſtate which is between death and the reſurrection (G).

Let him give her a writing of divorcement.] The following is the form of a jewiſh bill or writing of divorcement. “ I have “ determined of my own free pleaſure, and without the compul- “ ſion of any perſon, to put away from me thee who haſt hither- “ to been my wife, to forſake and divorce thee; and now I ſo far “ put thee away, forſake, divorce, and caſt thee off from me, that “ thou art at thy own free choice, power, and diſpoſal, to go “ away whitherſoever thou willeſt, without the let or impedi- “ ment at any time of any perſon whatſoever. And thus be thou “ diſmiſs'd with liberty to take any other man for thy husband.” Chriſt acquaints us, that the Jews, becauſe of the hardneſs of their hearts, were permitted to act thus, for fear they ſhould run into worſe extremes, either of cruel uſage or poiſoning; beſides, the law required no account from the husband in caſe of divorce. However, without ſaying any thing of the original inſtitution of God, the law of charity alone forbad husbands to put away their wives, on groundleſs or ſlight pretences. Whence it follows, that this permiſſion, though exempted from puniſhment in ſome caſes, was, however, attended with its degree of ſcandal. Among the Romans, who had no law prohibiting divorce, not ſo much as one example of this nature was to be found for the ſpace of five hundred and twenty years. And though Abraham entertain'd the pureſt wiſh that could be to have children, yet he abſolutely refuſed to ſatisfy his deſires, but with women of chaſte and religious inclinations. [G.] To give a bill of divorce was enjoin'd that perſon who wanted to put away his wife. The original of this permiſſion was owing to the hardneſs of the Jews hearts, who were not able to keep the law firſt made, with reſpect to matrimony. The woman who was put away by this bill of divorce, if ſhe married herſelf to another, became a pollution and abomination before the Lord, as it is ſaid Deut. xxiv 4. (V.) Almighty God tolerated the Jews in caſe of uncleanneſs to put away their wives, by a bill of divorce; hereupon the Phariſees maintain'd it lawful to put away the wife upon every ſlight occaſion. This abuſe Chriſt corrects, and ſhews, that divorce, except in caſe of adultery, is a certain breach of the ſeventh commandment. (B.)

Ver. 33, 34, 35, 36, 37. Again, ye have heard that it hath been ſaid by them of old time, thou ſhalt not forſwear thy ſelf, but ſhall perform unto the Lord thine oaths. But I ſay unto you, Swear not at all; neither by heaven, for it is Gods throne: nor by the earth, for it is his footſtool: neither by Jeruſalem, for it is the city of the great king. Neither ſhalt thou ſwear by thy head, becauſe thou canſt not make one hair white or black. But let your communication be, yea, yea, nay, nay, for whatſoever is more then theſe, cometh of evil.

Swear not at all]. Thoſe perſons are groſly miſtaken who ſuppoſe that Chriſt rejected the cuſtom of ſwearing by other things excluſive of God. The meaning of Chriſt is, not to ſwear, even by heaven, by the earth, by Jeruſalem, or by the head, but be your converſation, yea, yea, nay, nay. Our Saviour does not prohibit ſwearing in lawful caſes. Joſeph is ſaid Gen. xlii. 15. to ſwear by the words, as Pharaoh liveth, an oath common to the Ægyptians, tho' had ſuch a devout perſon thought there had been irreligion in it, he would not have done ſo. [G.] The underſtanding of the ſacred ſcripture is gathered from the actions of the holy perſons mentioned therein. Now we find that Paul took an oath, whence it appears that the word of God is not ſo to be underſtood, as if taking an oath was abſolutely unlawful, but 'tis the buſineſs of man not to make ſwearing an eligible good, and this for two reaſons, firſt, becauſe of the dangerous conſequences that follow frequent ſwearing; for fear any one expoſe himſelf to perjury, through the frailty of his tongue. Secondly, becauſe 'tis againſt the reverence and awe we ought to have of the majeſty of God, to ſwear in a caſe that is altogether needleſs and unneceſſary. Whence the Apoſtle is found to ſwear only in writing, when a man declares his ſentiments, with greater caution and deliberation. [V.] The Phariſees taught that perjury was the only breach of this commandment, and ſwearing was nothing if they did not forſwear themſelves, and that perſons were obliged to ſwear in publick courts of juſtice by the name of God, but in their ordinary and common converſation they might ſwear by any of the creatures. Now in oppoſition to theſe wicked principles and practices, Chriſt ſays, ſwear not at all, that is, ſwear not profanely in your ordinary diſcourſe, ſwear not unduely by any of the creatures, for that is to aſcribe a deity to them; ſwear not lightly, upon any trifling or frivolous occaſion, for oaths, upon ſmall occaſions, are great ſins. So that an oath is not here forbidden by our Saviour, but reſtrained. [B.]

Let your converſation be yea, yea, nay, nay.] The expreſſion here, and in James, namely, that we ought to ſay, yea, yea, nay, nay, has this meaning, that at all times we ſhould make our words and actions agree, or that at all times we ſhould pronounce the truth. The ſenſe is this, that we ſhould always preſerve inviolably our promiſes, as though we had taken an oath for the due performance thereof: and this ſenſe appears more open from James, who ſays, leſt ye be found deceitful, which character does not become chriſtians at all. [G.] Yea, yea, nay, nay; that is, whatſoever you go about to affirm, affirm it without prevarication, falſehood, or making uſe of a voluntary oath: ſo whatſoever you go about to deny, deny it without any mental reſervation, or winding about. Our Saviour in this place, not only commands us to refrain from voluntary ſwearing, but bids us always declare the truth; his precepts being to acquaint us that we neither uſe equivocations thereby to adulterate the truth, nor vent falſehoods to deſtroy the veracity of our minds. [V.] To avoid raſh ſwearing, our Lord bids us accuſtom ourſelves to a true ſimplicity, and conſtant plainneſs of ſpeech, either affirming or denying, according to the nature of the thing, letting oaths alone, 'till we are called to them upon great occaſions for ending ſtrife betwixt man, and man [B].

Cometh of evil.] Theſe words are underſtood of our not keeping to our promiſes. Man by his levity and inconſtancy gives riſe to diſtruſt and diffidence, to remedy which we have recourſe to oaths. Though Chriſt does not prohibit ſwearing, as a thing wicked in itſelf, but as a thing not to be made uſe of but in caſes of the greateſt importance. [G.]

Ver. 38, 39, 40, 41. Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid, an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. But I ſay unto you, that ye reſiſt not evil, but whoſoever ſhall ſmite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other alſo. And if any man will ſue thee at law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak alſo. And whoſoever ſhall compel thee to go a mile, go with him twain.

An eye for an eye.] The words here are defective, but will be very well ſupplied if we ſay, he ſhall reſtore who hath done the injury. This is a very antient law almoſt amongſt all nations. (G.) We ſee, ſays Auſtin, that ſome men for a ſlight injury, will require blood for it, nay, will ſcarce be ſatisfied at any rate. The law therefore, to limit this immoderate and unjuſt revenge, inſtituted the Talio, that is, that every perſon ſhould be repaid in the ſame manner wherein he had tranſgreſſed. [V.] God gave a law to the public magiſtrate, to require an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, when a perſon was wronged. Hereupon the Phariſees taught, that a private perſon wronged by another, might exact ſatisfaction from him to the ſame degree in which he had been wronged by him; if he had loſt an eye by another, he might revenge it by taking away the eye of another. But, ſays Chriſt, I ſay unto you, reſiſt not evil, that is, ſeek not private revenge, but leave the avenging of injuries to God, and the magiſtrate, and in trivial matters not to appeal at all, and when forced, not for revenging ſake. [B.]

I ſay unto you.] Chriſt addreſſes himſelf in theſe words to private perſons, who are any ways wronged; he does not direct his ſpeech to the magiſtrates. So that as the law enjoins majeſtrates to puniſh offenders; theſe magiſtrates would prove the offenders themſelves, before God, had Chriſt prohibited them from puniſhing offenders as they deſerved, which had been a command entirely repugnant to the law; and he would then have diſſolved the law, which he ſo plainly tells us he came not to diſſolve, but to fulfil. [V.]

Reſiſt not evil.] Their ſentiments ſeem to be well grounded, who underſtood the word evil of man (G.), this means not only not to repay an evil which we have received, with evil, but alſo not to reſiſt evil. (V.) Chriſtians ought rather to ſuffer a double wrong, than to ſeek a private revenge; chriſtianity obliges us to bear many injuries patiently, rather than to revenge one privately. Religion, indeed, doth not bid us invite injuries, but it teaches us to bid them welcome: we are not to return evil for evil, but are rather to endure a greater evil than revenge a leſs. (B.)

If any man will ſue thee at law.] There is no difference between a righteous judge and an arbitrator, but the former being conſtituted a miniſter of the law after a publick manner; ſo that if cauſes be brought before the judge, which take up abundance of time in determining; for example, ſuppoſing the defence of a widow or of an orphan, a family concern, or a truſteeſhip, be brought into queſtion, where the proſecutor brings his ſuit without any malice, but with a reſolution to ſtand to the judge's ſentence, be it what it will; in this caſe I am at a loſs to know, whether or no a man may juſtly be ſaid to offend againſt the rules of charity. But there is another queſtion of a much more different nature that ariſes from this paſſage; and that is this, whether 'tis for the intereſt of the chriſtian religion, that the law ſuffers force to be repelled with force. For my part, neither that ridiculous word honour, which is not honour, but only a fooliſh maggot in the brains of light-headed men, nor all the valuable things a man can give us, are, in my opinion, to ſtand in competition with the life of the vileſt man breathing; however, what is ſaid with relation to the defence of a man's life with arms, in caſes of neceſſity, I dare not blend with that ſort of repelling force, which has a ſanction from publick authority. For this is not authorized by the law, and if it was, the government would feel dangerous conſequences from it. Thus when Peter was for having recourſe to this method, in a cauſe that ſeemed the moſt juſt and reaſonable in the world, we find our Saviour reprehending him; nay, this ſame Apoſtle keeping this precept of his maſter in mind, preſcribes patience to perſons who happen to be under the ſame circumſtances; as may be evinced from his firſt epiſtle chap. iv. v. 15, 16. which is no more than what chriſtians have inviolably obſerved. But enough with relation to this queſtion of ſelf-preſervation, let us ſpeak a little of that which regards public trials, eſpecially ſuch as are capital; for there are not wanting ſome who imagine that Chriſt has prohibited theſe under theſe words. Not ſo, with their leave; for certainly Chriſt, without doing prejudice to the law, could command the injured, not to demand the talio, becauſe the law did not enjoin them this, but only allowed it; ſo that a perſon cannot be ſaid to act contrary to the law, who does not follow that which it only grants. But to prohibit a judge from determining caſes as the law required, cou'd not be done without detriment to the law. Paul ſays, that publick authority is ordained from God, and is his miniſter to execute his indignation againſt offenders; (that is, to puniſh them) and what is ſtill more, he ſays, that he bears not the ſword in vain. So that from hence it is evident that Chriſt's words make not againſt the uſe of ſuch arms as are taken up by public authority for the neceſſary defence of the whole community. (G.)

Whoſoever ſhall compel thee to go a mile.] In the original, expreſs'd by the word angareuo, which ſignifies to run, Chriſt here oppoſes three ſorts of iujuries; firſt, that which is committed upon the body; ſecondly, that which is acted in oppoſition to the laws of the government; thirdly, that which ſtrikes at the fundamentals of liberty. The Hebrews, from the firſt riſing of the Perſian empire in the eaſt, were forced, among other ſervices impoſed upon them, to undergo theAngaria, from which Demetrius granted them an immunity. Hence it came to paſs, that a word which was extremely hateful to them, became common among them to ſignify any troubles of a private nature (G).

Go with him twain]. Chriſt would admoniſh us by theſe words, to preſerve an immutable love and eſteem for one another, ſo firm and laſting, that not all the ignominious uſage we receive even from our brothers, nor the diſparity of conditions we labour uuder, with reſpect to riches, nor all the hardſhips that tyrants can impoſe upon us, may be able to diſſolve or ſeparate it. Our Saviour deſires us to be always prepared to ſuffer worſe injuries than thoſe we receive, not purely for fear we break that band of friendſhip that ought to ſubſiſt between brothers; but becauſe, as Auſtin ſays, it is of little credit to refrain from doing an injury, unleſs we perform a kindneſs at the ſame time.

Ver. 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, Give to him that asketh of thee, and from him that would borrow of thee, turn thou not away. Ye have heard that it hath been ſaid, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour, and hate thine enemy. But I ſay unto you, love your enemies, bleſs them that curſe you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that deſpitefully uſe you, and perſecute you: That ye may be children of your father which is in heaven, for he maketh his ſun to riſe on the evil and the good, and ſendeth rain on the juſt and on the unjuſt. For if ye love them which love you, what reward have ye? Do not even the Publicans the ſame? And if ye ſalute your brethren only, what do you more than others? Do not even the Publicans ſo? Be ye therefore perfect, even as your father which is in heaven is perfect.

Give to him that asketh of thee]. The moſt neceſſary ſervice or kindneſs we can confer upon our fellow creatures, is, to relieve thoſe who are in want, who are of two kinds; either ſuch as have no ability to reſtore back what they receive, or ſuch as require ſums of money to be lent them without uſury, though not to be given them (G). According to Luke vi. 30. “Give to every one that asketh of thee. He does not ſay, anſwers Auſtin, give every thing to him that asketh of thee, but give that which thou canſt honeſtly and juſtly ſpare to every one that asketh of thee. Suppoſe he asks for money of thee, will thou make this a plea to ruin an innocent man? Suppoſe he ask for ſomething that is diſhonourable? What then? Thou art indiſpenſibly obliged to give that which can ptove neither of prejudice to thy ſelf or others (V).” Our Saviour here preſſes the law of charity upon his diſciples, which is two-fold; charity in giving to them who beg, and charity in lending to them who deſire to borrow (B).

Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour]. The Jews, in refuſing to extend their liberality to ſtrangers, have fallen into an abominable error, which received its original from this, namely, from believing they ſufficiently executed all the ſeveral branches of their duty, provided they obeyed thoſe precepts wherein their civil ſociety was contained. But it cannot be that the Jewiſh law abrogated natural ſociety, nor that this civil ſociety took away the more ancient ſociety of mankind. From hence Chriſt ſhews that the word neighbour denotes all mankind, as may be likewiſe evinced from the apology of the Samaritan that relieved the wounded Jew, whom the Prieſt and Levite paſs'd by (G). Eucherius, in his epiſtle to Valerian, ſays, “Si amas te, proximum dilige, qui anihil magis commodis tuis dabis, quam quod contuleris alienis. If thou loveſt thy ſelf, love thy neighbour, for nothing can be more for thy intereſt, than to confer benefits upon ſtrangers (V).” Another corrupt gloſs which the Phariſees had put upon the law of God our Saviour here takes notice of. The law ſaid, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour. This they interpreted to relate only to their countrymen the Jews, concluding they might hate all the uncircumciſed nations as enemies, but, ſaith our Saviour, I require you to love all men, for if enemies muſt not be ſhut out of your love, none muſt (B).

And hate thine enemy] Many perſons ſuppoſe here they have got a ſubſtantial argument on their ſide to prove, that all the paſſages, which Chriſt ſays were ſpoken of old, do not refer to the law of Moſes, but belong to the interpretations of perſons skilled in the law. But we are of opinion, the words of Moſes bear analogy to very many of theſe paſſages or ſayings of old, and are under no fear to prove the ſenſe of theſe words out of the law of Moſes. Compare Exod. xxiii. 4. with Deut. xxii 1. ſee Exod. xvii. 16. concerning the Amalekites, and Deut. xxv. 19. with relation to the ſame circumſtance. Read concerning the Ammonites and Moabites, Deut. i. 19. xxiii. 6. Jud. xi. 14. 2 Sam. x. From theſe places of Scripture 'twill be ſeen how great a length the Hebrews carried their hatred to theſe nations; and how far they were able to abominate them. Beſides, the precept laid down here is not repugnant to the law of nature; for ſince the guilty are commonly puniſhed juſtly, I take it this is vaſtly agreeable thereto. Moreover, as all public governments are veſted with this right over their ſubjects, ſo 'tis but reaſonable to think that God, the high king over all, has equal authority over kings and nations, who choſe out the Hebrews, after a long trial of patience, to perform the execution of this puniſhment, when he could have done it himſelf. However this right of puniſhment did not extend to other foreigners: and the Jews falſly carried this decree of God elſewhere, when the execution of it was ſolely deſigned to fall upon theſe nations. Beſides, 'tis worth taking notice, that all the precepts of the divine law were not given for all times and ſeaſons, ſo that take but away theſe exceptions, which God ordained for certain reaſons, and the law of nature will remain entire and perfect, which recommends union amongſt all mankind. (G.) meaning, thou ſhalt hate him that is a ſtranger to thee: for we find in Exod. xxiii. 4. the Jews expreſly bid to love the Jews who were their enemies. However, 'tis not verbally read in the old teſtament, Thou ſhalt hate thine enemy, or him that is a ſtranger to thee, 'tho' the ſenſe of theſe words as to ſtrangers is collected from that command which God gave the Iſraelites, never to be at friendſhip with the nations of the land he had promiſed them. Exod. xxxiv. And from that command of his, Deut. xx. to the ſame Iſraelites, utterly to deſtroy thoſe nations without ſo much as ſparing one amongſt them: from his bidding them blot out the Amalekites from under heaven: from his taking Saul's kingdom from him in his wrath, for only ſparing their king, and reſerving their cattle: 1 Kings, xv. from his ordering the Iſraelites never to live at peace with the Ammonites and Moabites; from his commandiug the ſame Iſraelites to carry their arms againſt the Madianites, ſo that the Jews implicitly giving into the phraſe ſpoken of old, which was not in expreſs words, Thou ſhalt hate thine enemy, they exerciſed their hatred againſt mankind, when their duty was to hate nothing but their vices. Whereupon our Saviour reprehends them, by putting this conſtruction on the law, Love your enemies. (V.)

Love your enemies.] Chriſt teaches us that the tranſgreſſion of another does not remove natural affection, and therefore benevolence ought to be excluded from no man's heart, neither can there be a nobler victory than for us to confer a benefit, where we have received an injury. (G.) This precept ſeems to be oppoſed by thoſe words mentioned Proverbs xxv. If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat, and if he be thirſty give him water to drink, for thou ſhalt heap coals of fire upon his head. Now how ſhall a perſon be ſaid to love, that heaps coals of fire? But the ſeeming oppoſition here vaniſhes, if it be only conſidered that Solomon ſpeaks of thoſe deſtructive coals, which are given a perſon againſt a flattering tongue: when any one confers a kindneſs upon an enemy, it commonly brings the receiver to reflect upon himſelf, he is angry at what he has done, eſpecially for ill uſing a man that is ſo much his friend. This burning or heaping of coals is no other than repentance, which like coals of fire conſume his hatred and malice. (V.)

Pray for them that deſpitefully uſe you.] The Hebrews acquaints us that the Haſidæans among their commands had this prayer to God, remitte and condona omnibus qui vexant nos. forgive and pardon all thoſe who are our enemies. The Haſidæans were no other than the Eſſeni, the principal branch of chriſtians in Judæa. (G.) We are exhorted here to pray for our enemies, tho' they refuſe to live devoutly. To pray is from the neceſſity of a precept, as is to love our enemies. Charity excludes no man from love, and therefore we ought to pray for them in common. We ought to pray for all mankind not excluding our enemies, and to wiſh them ſpiritual advantages in common with ourſelves; but if we pray for any ſpiritual ill to attend them, that debars them of the life eternal, we commit a mortal ſin. (V.) Chriſtianity obliges us to bear a ſincere affection towards our moſt malicious enemies, to be ready upon all occaſions to do good to them, and to pray for them. (B.)

Do not even the publicans the ſame.] I am of opinion that the Roman equites or knights were the tax-gathers in Judæa, as in the other provinces; but becauſe they could not execute this employment themſelves, they deputed Jews to manage it. However the Jews mortally hated it, becauſe they conceived it was very diſhonourable for a Jew to be the tool of a foreigner. This made ſeveral, under a pretext of religion, refuſe both the tax and the tribute (G). Publicans were they who were employed by the Romans, from the time Pompey had maſtered Judæa and made it tributary, to gather in the tolls and taxes which the Jews were annually to diſcharge. They were a ſet of perſons much hated, and reckoned amongſt the worſt of ſinners, as is evident from ſeveral places of the Evangeliſts. (V.)

Be ye therefore perfect. The word rendred here perfect, by St. Matthew, is elſewhere by St. Luke rendred merciful; thoſe perſons are indeed miſtaken who think they gather from hence, that what Chriſt mentions in this ſermon, are not precepts, but ſpeeches of advice, or if they are precepts, they are of a peculiar kind, tending to perfect man. But the words are too plain to admit of any doubt of their being precepts, eſpecially by all who deſire to be partakers of the kingdom of heaven. (G.) Perfect in mercy, whence Luke vi. v. 38. ſays. Be ye merciful, even as your father is merciful, namely, towards the good, and the bad, for no man is ſo bad, but who, at one time or other, feels the effects of divine mercy. Auſtin expounds the above cited place of Lukes thus, as God is perfect in mercy, both in forgiving and pardoning, and in conferring his benefits; ſo be you perfect, both in forgiving the wrongs and injuries you receive, and in conferring your favours and benefits on ſuch as need them (V). Aim at perfection in all Chriſtian virtues, and divine graces, but particularly in this of love; in imitation of your heavenly father, who is the perfect pattern of all deſireable goodneſs, and adorable perfections (B).

CHAP. VI.

Our Saviour's ſermon on the mount is continued in this chapter, wherein he warns his diſciples againſt the hypocriſy and vain-glory of the Phariſees, both in their almſgiving and prayers.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. TAKE heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be ſeen of them: otherwiſe ye have no reward of your father which is in heaven. Therefore when thou doſt thine alms, do not ſound a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do, in the ſynagogues, and in the ſtreets, that they may have glory of men. Verily, I ſay unto you, they have their reward. But when thou doſt alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth; that thine alms may be in ſecret: and thy father which ſeeth in ſecret, himſelf ſhall reward thee openly.

Your alms]. Several copies read it, do not your righteouſneſs before men, becauſe almſgiving is a conſiderable part of that righteouſneſs and juſtice which we owe to our neighbour (B). 'Tis common with the Hebrews to uſe the words almſgiving, and righteouſneſs, indifferently. Thus when the Jews at this time ſend alms to the boxes of the poor, which are to be found in all their ſynagogues, they uſe theſe words, In juſtitia videbo faciem tuam; I will ſee thy face in righteouſneſs or almſgiving (V).

Sound not a trumpet]. This is a proverbial ſpeech. Chriſt alludes to a cuſtom in uſe amongſt the Hebrews, which was, to ſound a trumpet in the villages or ſtreets, when any public affair was to be tranſacted, and which required the attention of the people. Thus we find the prophets command the people to ſound a trumpet at all ſuch times as any matter of importance was to be brought on the carpet, which required deep conſultation and advice (V).

Hypocrites]. Diſſemblers. The proper ſignification of the words alludes to ſtage-players in another perſon's habit. But 'tis frequently taken for ſuch as would fain ſeem what they really are not, according to that paſſage of St. Thomas, Qui ea intentione opera perfectionis aſſumant, ut malitiam ſuam occultius exerceant & magis nocere poſſint; who under the cloak of religion may the better conceal and execute their malice, and commit more miſchief (V).

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8. And when thou prayeſt, thou ſhalt not be as the hypocrites are: for they love to pray ſtanding in the ſynagogues, and in the corners of the ſtreets, that they may be ſeen of men. Verily, I ſay unto you, they have their reward. But thou, when thou prayeſt, enter into thy cloſet, and when thou haſt ſhut thy door, pray to thy father which is in ſecret, and thy father which ſeeth in ſecret, ſhall reward thee openly. But when ye pray, uſe not vain repetitions, as the heathen do: for they think that they ſhall be heard for their much ſpeaking. Be not ye therefore like unto them; for your father knoweth what things ye have need of, before ye aſk him.

They love to pray ſtanding]. The Jews prayed ſtanding, except in times of mourning and tribulation, when they uſed kneeling, or a proſtrate poſture. The Chriſtians imitated this. So that ſtanding among the ancients was a received way of praying amongſt them. Abraham is ſaid to ſtand before God, ſo expreſs'd in the Hebrew. The Chaldee has it prayed (G). As the hypocrites, doth not refer to place, neither to the exterior poſture of the body; for it was a commendable thing to pray in a congregation; praiſe the Lord in the churches, Pſal. lxvii. Azarias prayed ſtanding, Dan. iii 25. The Publican prayed ſtanding, Luke xviii. 13. and God was pleaſed with the prayers of both. Beſides, the ancients almoſt at all times prayed ſtanding. What Chriſt prohibits is, that we do not reſemble the hypocrites, that is, that we do not ſtrive to be ſeen of men, or pleaſe men. Our Saviour warns his diſciples againſt the ſame phariſaical hypocriſy in praying, which he had before reproved in almſgiving. It was lawful to pray in the ſynagogues, and to pray ſtanding, and that before men; but to do this upon deſign to be applauded by men, is condemned by Chriſt. Our buſineſs in prayer lies with God; we are not to concern our ſelves how men like our performances; it is ſufficient if God doth approve and accept them (B).

Enter into thy cloſet]. As though he had ſaid, Let him alone be made privy to thy ſupplications, who alone knows the ſecrets of all hearts: whether thou pray in the ſynagogue, or in the ſtreet, let thy prayers be in ſecret; for if thou doſt thus, thy deſire is not to be ſeen of man, but of God; on the other hand, he that prays in ſecret, with a deſire to be ſeen, and to acquire a name and reputation there-from, doth not really pray in ſecret, but really acts in publick. But God, who ſeeth in ſecret, and from whom nothing is hid, who ſearches the heart, and ſeeth our very thoughts, will render to every man according to his deſerts (V).

Uſe not vain repetitions]. We are not forbid ſometimes to lengthen out our prayers, which Chriſt himſelf and the apoſtles did, neither to make repetitions when we are ſollicitous in prayer; for even this too Chriſt practiſed. But what we are forbid is, not to multiply words, as though God would be pleaſed much better with the length and prolixity of our prayers, than with the inward affections of our minds. The Jews were very little guilty of this error, rather watching that prayers ought to be conciſe and ſhort (G). Shun battology, or take care that your lips and tongue do not pray without the mind, which vice the Hebrews called the blabbing of the lips (V). A vain-glorious multiplication of words, by idle tautologies and impertinent repetitions, is condemned here. But 'tis not all repetition of the ſame words in prayer, which Chriſt here condemns; for he himſelf prayed thrice, uſing the ſame words, that the cup might paſs from him; nor are we to apprehend that prayers continued to a conſiderable length, are forbidden by Chriſt; for Solomon's prayer was ſuch, 1 Kings viii. Nehemiah's ſuch, chap. ix. 'Tis ſaid, the people confeſſed and worſhipped for three hours; Chriſt continued in prayer all night, and the church, Acts xii. made prayers without ceaſing, for St. Peter's enlargement: and we read of St. Paul's praying night and day, 1 Theſſ. iii 10. and of his commanding the churches to be inſtant in prayer, and to continue in prayer. But Chriſt here condemns prayers lengthened out upon an apprehenſion that we ſhall be heard for our much ſpeaking, or can move God by arguments while we continue in our ſins (Whitby).

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. After this manner therefore pray ye: Our father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done, in earth as it is in heaven, give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors, and lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: for thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen.

The ſenſe and ſignification of this beſt of prayers, is this. "O thou our father in Jeſus Chriſt, who remaineſt in thy throne in heaven, and art there perpetually praiſed, and perfectly obeyed by glorious angels, and glorified ſaints, grant that thy name may be glorified, thy throne acknowledged, and thy holy will obeyed here on earth below, by us thy ſons and ſervants, moſt ſincerely and readily, and in ſome proportion to what is done in heaven. And becauſe by the reaſon of the frailty of our nature we cannot ſubſiſt without the comforts and ſupports of life, we crave, that ſuch a proportion of the good things of this life may be given unto us, as may be ſufficient for us, and that we may be content with our allowance. And knowing that thy holineſs and juſtice obliges thee to puniſh ſin and ſinners, we plead with thee, for the ſake of thy ſon's ſatisfaction, to pardon to us our daily treſpaſſes, which we are guilty of in this ſtate of imperfection, as we do freely and heartily forgive others that have offended and wronged us. And ſeeing that by the reaſon of the frailty of our natures, we are prone to ruſh upon, and run into temptation, we crave, that by the power of thy omnipotent grace we may be kept from Satan's temptation, from the world's allurements, from our own evil inclinations, and be preſerved unblameable to thine everlaſting kingdom, which is exalted over all perſons, over all places, over all things, in all times paſt, preſent, and to come And accordingly in teſtimony of our deſires, and in aſſurance to be heard and anſwered, we ſay AMEN, ſo be it, ſo let it be, even ſo, O Lord, let it be for ever (B)."

After this manner]. Chriſt gave no command to recite the words of this prayer (which we do not read as the apoſtles did, though it may be done with advantage to us) but to make them the pattern of our prayers we made. And indeed nothing can be found worthy to be prayed for but what may juſtly be referred to ſome of the forms couch'd in this prayer of our Lord (G). As for ſtated liturgies, or certain forms of prayer publickly performed in the ſacred worſhip of Chriſt, ſo they be not contradictory to ſcripture may be proved from what Luke ſays, chap xi. 2, and from the form of prayer which Chriſt dictated to his Diſciples, and which Juſtin Martyn teſtifies was uſed by the Apoſtles in their places of worſhip. But, ſetting this aſide, there is not one portion of this prayer of our Lord's, which may not be traced in ſeveral paſſages of the pſalms. The two firſt petitions are to be found in all thoſe pſalms, wherein all nations are invited to own the name of the Lord. The third petition may be ſeen in the 8th pſalm, wherein David frequently prays for God to turn his mind or heart to his ſtatutes; which is nothing elſe, but what is ſaid in this petition, thy will be done. The fourth petition is to be met with in pſalm ciii. The fifth petition may be referred to pſalm xxxi. The ſixth and ſeventh petitions are very often mentioned in the Pſalms, where prayers are offered up for the removal of temptations, diſeaſes, troubles, and death. (V.) The learned obſerve that this prayer is taken out of the Jewiſh liturgies, in which it is entirely found, excepting theſe words, as we forgive them that treſpaſs againſt us; from whence Grotius notes, how far Chriſt the Lord of his church was from affecting novelties, or deſpiſing any thing becauſe it was a form, a piece of piteous weakneſs among ſome at this day. (B.)

Our Father] We are the ſons of God, ſays Auſtin, made ſo by the will of the Almighty, not his ſons according to natural generation; he begat us, but how can an adopting ſon be ſaid to be begotten by an adopting father, by kindneſs, not by nature? (V.)

Hallowed be thy name.] Hoc non ſic petitur, inquit Auguſtinus, quaſi non ſit ſanctum nomen Dei, ſed ut ſanctum habeatur ab hominibus, id eſt, ita illis innoteſcat, ut non exiſtiment aliquid ſanctum, quod magis oſtendere timeant. This petition is not made thus, as tho' the name of God was not hallowed, but in order for mankind to hallow it.

Thy kingdom come.] I cannot think that to be the ſenſe of this petition, which ſome ſuppoſe, namely, that we are commanded here to pray for the ſpeedy coming of the glorious ſtate of the next life. So that I chuſe rather to be of opinion that this paſſage points to the eſtabliſhment of the goſpel over the whole world.(G.)

Thy kingdom come.] Meaning, that which God made a general Promiſe of to all believers, to whom he ſays, Come ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the beginning of the world. (V.) We are not to underſtand by theſe words his general and providential kingdom, by which he ruleth over the world, that being always come, and capable of no farther amplification, but principally the kingdom of grace, promoted in the hearts of his people by the preaching of the goſpel, we pray that God would dethrone ſin and Satan in our own and others ſouls, and increaſe ſanctification both in us and them, and that the kingdom of glory may be haſtened, and we may be preſerved blameleſs to the coming of Chriſt in his kingdom.(B.)

Thy will be done.] St. Luke, chap xi. ſlips over this petition, becauſe, as Auſtin ſays in his Enchiriſdion, chap. 116. this third petition is but a repetition of the two foregoing ones. The ſenſe of this third petition, according to St Hilary, is this: “ See, O Lord, that “ as the unwearied and celeſtial virtues obey thy will in heaven, “ ſo may we likewiſe pay ſubmiſſion to thy commands upon earth, “ for fear our bodily infirmities turn us from doing ſo. In heaven “ is a continual voice heard, Holy, holy, holy Lord God of ſabbath, the heavens and earth are full of thy glory. Make us to “ ſanctify and hallow thy name; give us an hope for thy king-“ dom; and endue us with a will to ſing perpetually thy praiſes.” (V.) By the words thy will be done, the preceptive rather than the providential will of God is to be underſtood, we are to obey the former univerſally, and to ſubmit to the latter very chearfully. It intimates, that it ought to be the care and prayer, the ſtudy and endeavour of every chriſtian, that the commanding will of God may be ſo done by men upon earth, as it is by the glorified ſaints and glorious angels done in heaven, namely, with that alacrity and chearfulneſs, with that ſpeed and readineſs, with that conſtancy and diligence, that the imperfection of human nature will admit of, imitating the bleſſed angels, who execute the divine commands without reluctancy or regret. (B.)

Give us our daily bread.] The word daily ſignifies here, all that ſpace of time which we have ſtill to meaſure out, entirely to us unknown, but known to God. Daily comprehends ſo much as is ſufficient for that ſpace. Our Saviour commands us to pray for things only neceſſary, not to direct our petitions for what has been paſt, but for what is ſufficient for the time preſent. Whereas the Phariſees, on the other hand, taught the Jews that they were at liberty to pray for an opulent and wealthy condition. (G.) We are to note by theſe words, the mercy prayed for, bread, which comprehends all the comforts and conveniencies of life, and whatever is neceſſary for the ſupporting human nature. Alſo the qualification; it muſt be our own bread, not another's, what we have a civil right to as men, and a covenant right to as chriſtians; beſides, we are to remark further, that the kind of bread we aſk and deſire, it is our daily bread, whereby we are put in mind of our continual dependance upon God for our lives, and for all the ſupports of life which we enjoy, and alſo put in mind of our mortality. (B.) Give us ſuperſubſtantial bread, that is, ſuperadded to the ſubſtance, which is aptly ſignified by the Greek word epiouſion, and by the Latin ſuperſubſtantialem. Suidas renders it, that which is fit for our own nature. This etymology may be found in Baſil Magnus, and Theophilact; the former ſays, which conduces to our ſubſtance, to the daily ſupport of life; the latter, which is agreeable to our ſubſtance and nature. But ſome pretend to derive the word epiouſion from epiouſa, found in Acts, chap. vii. v. 26. which is put there for daily bread, or to-morrow's bread; for we read in the Hebrew goſpel of the Nazarenes, the phraſe, bread of to-morrow; tho' epiouſion is of a larger extenſion, and takes in every day to come; whence the Vulgate, Luke xi. tranſlates it daily, to make the ſenſe: Give us to-day bread, which we every day ſtand in need of. (V.)

And forgive us our debts.] See Jeremiah xxxi. v. 34. and Micah vii. v. 19. Thoſe perſons are in an error to ſuppoſe that this petition is confined to a few only, or that all mankind in general, are at liberty to make uſe of it. (G.) per hanc petitionem, inquit Auguſtinus, voluit nobis Salvator oſtendere, quantum libet juſte in hujus vitæ caligine, atque infirmitate vivamus, non nobis deeſſe peccata pro quibus dimittendis debeamus orare, & eis qui in nos peccant, ut & nobis ignoſcatur, ignoſcere. Our Saviour's intention by this petition, ſays Auſtin, was to ſhew that tho' our lives were expoſed to darkneſs and infirmity, yet there were not wanting ſins in us, which we ought to pray for to be pardoned, and alſo to forgive our Debtors, as they forgive us. (V.)

As we forgive our debtors.] Chriſt forbids us to judge either raſhly or unmercifully, leſt we our ſelves be judged, adding, that with the meaſure we meet with, it ſhall be meaſured to us again. (V.) We are to note from theſe words, that we are all ſinners, and as ſuch, ſtand in need of pardon, and forgiveneſs. That we are obliged to pray every day for daily pardon, as we do for daily bread, for our ſins are daily and many. That our minds be full of charity, free from rancour and ill-will, and all deſires of revenge, and a ſecret grudge againſt one another. That we ſtand ready to help them, and do any office of love and ſervice for them that have offended us. That we admit our offending brother into friendſhip and familiarity, which is called a forgiving him from the heart. (B.)

And lead us not into temptation.] The meaning of this petition is, that God would not ſuffer us to be expoſed to temptations, which is the common lot of all chriſtians, eſpecially of ſuch as have made any proficiency in the doctrine of Chriſt; but that he would not ſuffer us to ſtoop under our infirmities, and afflictions. (G.) That is, and ſuffer us not to be lead: for God is frequently ſaid to do that, which he ſuffers to be done. But we are ſaid to be lead into temptation, when temptation has the ſuperiority over us, which happens, when we have not penetration ſufficient to diſtinguiſh between ſin and the fallacy of temptation, or when we want the love of juſtice, thereby to make head againſt the allurements and torments of ſin. Although St. Auſtin, in ſeveral paſſages of his writings, puts this conſtruction on the ſixth petition of our Lord's prayer, yet in his treatiſe of the advantages of perſeverance he ſuppoſes we ought ſimply to pray, that we be not any ways tempted; chiefly by that kind of temptation, which incites us to ſinful actions; becauſe the remembrance of our infirmities, and the diffidence we have of ourſelves, makes us wiſh much rather to be delivered from the power of temptation, and the dangers that follow thereupon, than be expoſed thereto. For, tho' in ſome caſes temptation may be of ſervice to us, yet 'tis always attended with hazardous conſequences, and therefore the humility of chriſtians perſwades us to decline it. What the ſcriptures ſay with reſpect to our valiantly and chearfully undergoing temptation is no objection; they command us, indeed, to ſuffer, but not to love temptation. For as Auſtin remarks, nemo quod tolerat amat, etſi tolerare amet. Quamvis enim gaudeat ſe tolerare, tamen mavult non eſſe, quod toleret. No body is in love with his ſufferings, tho' he loves to ſuſtain them. And tho' he is pleaſed to bear under his difficulties, yet he had rather chuſe they were not at all, than be expoſed to ſuffer them. (V.)

But deliver us from evil.] God either adapts our prayers to the ſtrength he has given us, or increaſes that ſtrength by his ſecret and unſpeakable providence; though many perſons are tempted by their own deſires, many by the enemies of our religion; yet both theſe kinds are commonly aſcribed to the devil. What follows; namely, for thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory, for ever and ever, is not extant in the ancient Greek copies; and Amen does not appear to have been added by the Chriſtians, but to have been added by the ancient church as an approval of the publick prayers offered up in their congregations. (G.) That is, from the devil, who is called the tempter, chap. iv. But the devil in ſeveral places is called evil, without any addition, becauſe as he is placed in the fartheſt degree of malice, he cannot be recalled from it. However, as Chryſoſtom ſays, “ Satis de ſe humiliter ſentit, nec ſalvari per ſe præſumit, qui “ ut a malo per Deum liberetur implorat; i. e. That perſon has a ſuf-“ ficiently low opinion of himſelf, neither preſumes he to work his

“ ſalvation by himſelf, who prays that God would deliver him from evil.” What follows, namely, for thine is the kingdom, the power and the glory, for ever and ever, is to be met with in the Syriac and Hebrew goſpel, and in Chryſoſtom, Theophilact, and Euthymius, but in none of the Latins, nay, 'tis wanting in ſome of the ancient Greek books, and copies, according to Beza. However, as this ſolemn and magnificent doxology appears in Timothy, chap. xv. and xvi. and in other paſſages of the ſcripture, there is no doubt but that it is canonical. (V.) By theſe words may be underſtood Satan the evil one, but eſpecially the evil of ſin. We pray here, that God would graciouſly preſerve us from thoſe vicious inclinations of our minds, and evil diſpoſitions of our hearts, which render us ſo prone to yield to the temptations of Satan. (B.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. For, if ye forgive men their treſpaſſes, your heavenly father will alſo forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their treſpaſſes, neither will your father forgive your treſpaſſes. Moreover, when ye faſt, be not as the hypocrites, of a ſad countenance, for they disfigure their faces, that they may appear unto men to faſt. Verily, I ſay unto you, they have their reward. But thou, when thou faſteſt, anoint thine head, and waſh thy face: that thou appear not unto men to faſt, but unto thy father which is in ſecret: and thy father which ſeeth in ſecret, ſhall reward thee openly. Lay not up for your ſelves treaſures upon earth, where moth and ruſt doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and ſteal; but lay up for your ſelves treaſures in heaven. where neither moth nor ruſt doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor ſteal. For where your treaſure is, there will your heart be alſo.

For if ye forgive men.] Let us do good to thoſe who have injured us; 'tis a kindneſs to aſſiſt ſuch with our prayers to God. But this ſervice, as ſome think, is not to be confined to thoſe only who diſcover their repentance by their actions; but even they have a right thereto who are our enemies: witneſs the example of Chriſt, Luke xxiii. 34. But thoſe indeed are to be left to God, who ſin againſt us with a malignant and inexcuſable purpoſe of mind. (G.) Chriſt's words are not; “ Travel into the eaſt, and ſeek righteouſneſs there; ſail to the weſt, in order to procure indulgence there. Forgive thy enemy, and thou thy ſelf ſhall be forgiven; indulge, and thou thy ſelf ſhall be indulged; give, and to thee it ſhall be given. God requires nothing from thee that is without thee; he directs thee to thy ſelf and thy conſcience: what he demands is within thy ſelf. Thou haſt no occaſion to go a great way off to ſee for medicines to heal thy wounds; for, if thou haſt a mind, thou mayeſt find an indulgence for thy ſins within the chamber of thy heart.” (V.) There being no duty to which our corrupt natures are more backward, than this of forgiving injuries, our Saviour repeats that duty over and over, and frequently inculcates it in the holy goſpels; aſſuring us, that forgiving others is the indiſpenſible condition upon which we are to expect forgiveneſs from God. (B.)

When ye faſt.] Our Saviour's words do not point to the common faſts of the people; one of which was enjoined, by the expreſs command of God, to be obſerved about the ſolemn day of propitiation, and three others about the time of the captivity or baniſhment; but his words direct to that private way of faſting which every perſon impoſed upon himſelf, whether it was for a continuation of ſeveral days together in ſome extraordinary caſe, or whether done in purſuance to a continued cuſtom upon ſome certain ſtated days, as Monday and Thurſday, which the major part of the Phariſees uſed; ſome of whom, who had a mind to appear more religious than the reſt of their brethren, took in Tueſday, and Friday. Theſe ſort eat nothing till after Sunſet, and then their fare conſiſted of onions and eggs. But they were far more auſtere in their manner of repoſing themſelves. Chriſt, however, does not reprehend people for faſting; he points out, in this paſſage, thoſe who endeavoured to acquire a name by their faſting; I mean, a name of being thought extremely religious, which exactly hits the Phariſees, who derived their name from thence, becauſe being not ſatisfied to fulfil the precepts which the law enjoined, they impoſed upon themſelves penances of a harder nature, in order to diſtinguiſh them from the reſt of the people. (G.) The ancients very ſtrictly obſerved the ſolemn cuſtom of faſting, as may be ſeen both in the Old and New Teſtament, to which, in times of adverſity, they had recourſe, as to an anchoring place. So Moſes, on receiving the law, we find to be the firſt who faſted, and that for forty days: which ſpace of time he faſted again, while he prayed for the ſins of the people of Iſrael. So Joſaphat, when he was hemmed in with his enemies, appointed a faſt: So Judith, ſo Heſter, ſo the Apoſtles are ſaid to have faſted. From whence it appears, that faſting was beneficial and conducive to the immediate preſervation of a perſon, and upon this reaſon Chriſt aſſerts that God will reward it, provided it be not done after the manner of the hypocrites, that is, in order to purchaſe glory of man, but with a deſign to mortify the body, to hinder ſloth and luxury from ſpurring it on to ſin, to teſtify outwardly the inward repentance of the ſoul, and to invoke God with an ardent mind. For, as Tertullian ſays againſt the Pſychici: “ Our minds and hearts are more lively and vigorous to perform theſe ſpirituals when we are faſting, than when that chamber of the inward man is crammed with meat, and loaded with wine.” (V.) Our Saviour inſtructs his diſciples in the duty of religious faſting, which is a devoting of the whole man, ſoul and body, to a ſolemn and extraordinary attendance on God, in a particular time, ſet apart for that purpoſe, in order to the deprecating of his diſpleaſure, and for the ſupplicating of his favour, accompany'd with an abſtinence from bodily food, and ſenſual delights, and from all ſecular affairs and worldly buſineſs; herein warning us from the way of the hypocrites, who, by their dejected countenances, and mortified habits, ſought to gain an extraordinary reputation for piety and devotion; whereas the ſincere chriſtian is to be abundantly ſatisfied with God's approbation of his ſervices, and with the ſilent applauſe of his own conſcience. (B.)

Anoint thine head.] The Jews and their neighbours were uſed to anoint and waſh themſelves at ſuch times as they had a more than ordinary gladneſs upon their ſpirits. Nor did the ancient Chriſtians abſtain altogether from the uſe of ointments. Juſtus, or whoſoever elſe was the ancient writer to Diogenetus, ſays, “ That Chriſtians, all over the world, follow the cuſtoms of the places they reſide in, not only in their way of eating and cloathing, but in other particulars. (G.) Chriſt ſpeaks here with reſpect to the cuſtom of the province of Paleſtine, where they were wont to anoint their heads on ſolemn days. Upon which he commands us, when we faſt, to put on an air of feſtivity and alacrity. (Jerome.) Chriſt's deſign, in theſe words, was not to enjoin us to fill the hair of our heads with ointment, or to make our faces ſhine with waſhing, but by faſting he means the habit of one in mirth, and not of one in ſadneſs and dejection. (Chryſologus's 7th ſermon.) This ſignifies, to look as at other times, uſing our ordinary garb and attire, and not to affect any thing that may make us look like mourners, when really we are not. (B.)

Lay up to your ſelves treaſures in heaven.] Meaning, with God, as the baptiſm of John is ſaid to have been, Luke xx. 4. What Chriſt commands us to lay up are good works, 1 Tim. vi. 17, 18. under which denomination are our charities to the poor, which properly are called treaſures in heaven, Luke xviii. 22. (G.) That is, with God, in the ſpiritual firmament which remains for ever, and of which it is ſaid, Cœlum cœlo domino. (Auſtin's ſecond book concerning our Lord's ſermon on the mount.) So that he commands us to keep in remembrance the treaſures of heaven, for fear we ſet our hearts on thoſe of the earth. However, that we may be able to form a judgment, whether the right love of riches has the aſcendant over our minds, we muſt conſider whether or no all our hopes, fears, and the thoughts of our hearts be fixed thereto; for whereſoever the treaſure of any perſon is, that is, whereſoever that is, wherein any one places his whole felicity and happineſs, there will be his heart alſo. Wherefore, ſo long as a man is not attached to the charms of riches, nor puts his truſt in them, but places his whole hope in the living God, ſuch an one may be ſaid to be rich in good works; and tho' he may have large poſſeſſions and treaſures on earth, yet he cannot juſtly be ſaid to lay up treaſures in the earth, but in heaven, where the affection of his heart is fixed. To the end we may lay up treaſures in heaven, let us love heavenly things. Have you a mind to know where you lay up treaſures? remark what you love. Have you a mind to know what you love? remark what you think; ſo ſhall you come to know that your treaſure proceeds from your love; ſo ſhall you learn that your love is owing to the diſcovery of your thoughts. (V.) Treaſure up thoſe habits of grace, which will bring you to an inheritance in glory; be fruitful in good works, laying up for your ſelves a good foundation in ſtore, againſt the time to come, that ye may lay hold of eternal life. The reaſon why we ſhould not lay up our treaſure in earth is, becauſe all earthly treaſures are of a periſhing and uncertain nature, they are ſubject to moth and reſt, to robbery and theft; whereas our treaſures in heaven are ſubject to no ſuch accidents and caſualties as earthly treaſures are, but are durable and laſting. (B.)

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be ſingle, thy whole body ſhall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body ſhall be full of darkneſs. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkneſs, how great is that darkneſs! No man can ſerve two maſters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other? or elſe he will hold to the one, and deſpiſe the other. Yet cannot ſerve God and mammon. Therefore I ſay unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink; nor yet for your body what ye ſhall put on: Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment? Behold the fowls of the air: for they ſow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?

The light of the body is the eye.] Chriſt compares the judgment to the eye; the mind to the body, a very common ſimile of the philoſophers. (G.) As tho' he had ſaid, as the eye is the light of the body, ſo the intention is the light of the ſoul. The Greek pronoun thine and thy, are neither in this paſſage, nor in that of Luke xi. v. 34. (V.) In the foregoing verſe our Saviour acquainted us what in our affections and judgments we ſhould eſteem as our chief treaſure. Now this judgment concerning our chief treaſure, is by our Saviour compared to the eye, as the eye is the candle of the body, that enlightens and directs it, ſo our underſtanding and judgment of the excellency of heaven, and the things above, will draw our affections towards them, and quicken our endeavour after them. (B.)

How great is that darkneſs.] As if he had ſaid, how great is the darkneſs of ſuch members of the body, as are different from the eye, and which are by nature dark, having no light at all within them? What is here ſaid of the eye with reſpect to the body, the ſame may be aſſerted of the intention with regard to the ſoul. For if the intention of the heart, which is the light of the ſoul, be not involved in the darkneſs of ſin, whatſoever the ſoul then does, is truly the work of light: whereas if the intention run contrary to this, all then which the ſoul does, is diſhoneſt and baſe. But conſult venerable Bede for more hereof. (V.)

No man can ſerve two maſters.] Chriſt, as his cuſtom is, oppoſes here a tacit objection. For it is very eaſy for a lover of money to ſpeak thus in defence of his covetouſneſs. I own that my mind is devoted to the acquiſition of riches; but then I am far from neglecting ſuch duties as the worſhip of my religion require of me. To this Chriſt anſwers, No man can ſerve two maſters: which proverb is to be underſtood of maſters in ſolidum, in the ſame manner as lawyers ſay that two maſters cannot own one and the ſame thing. The maſters here ſpoken of, are piety and the love of riches, each whereof demands the whole man to enjoy their different privileges. (G.) Chriſt by a proverbial ſaying gives us another reaſon, why the heart is not to be fix'd on earthly riches, namely, becauſe they take us off from the ſervice of God. The two maſters pointed at here are ſuch as are not ſubordinate, which makes the difficulty of ſerving them the greater, for either he muſt hate the one, or love the other, that is, according to the text, he will hold to the one, meaning with his love, and deſpiſe the other, meaning with his hatred: for he cannot ſerve God and mammon: which laſt word in Syriac ſignifies riches; ye cannot ſerve God and mammon. "Let " the covetous man hear this; let him who is but a chriſtian in
" name hear it; how that he cannot ſerve riches and Chriſt at
" the ſame time. And yet he did not ſay, he who has riches,
" but he who ſerved or was a ſlave to riches, for he who is a
" ſervant to riches, guards them as a ſervant, whereas he who " has thrown off the yoke of his ſervitude, diſtributes them as
" a maſter." (V.) A two-fold maſter is here ſpoken of, to wit God and the world, God is our maſter by creation, preſervation, and redemption: the world is our maſter by intruſion, uſurpation, and general eſtimation. So that no man can ſerve theſe two maſters, who are of contrary intereſts, and iſſue out contrary commands, when two maſters are ſubordinate, and their commands ſubſervient each to other, the difficulty of ſerving both is not great; but where commands interfere, and intereſts claſh, it is impoſſible. (B.)

Take no thought,] Sollicitude, or taking thought, implies a certain deſire made uſe of to attain any thing; whence it comes that this taking thought is the greater, by how much the loſing what we ſeek to enjoy is the greater; and on the contrary 'tis the leſs, by how much the certainty of our acquiring what we aim at is the greater. So that a ſollicitude, or taking thought for temporal things, may be three ways unlawful: firſt, if we make the temporal things we ſtrive to obtain, the ultimate end of our deſires; ſecondly, if we uſe a needleſs and ſuperfluous deſire to procure temporal things, whereby the mind is taken from the duty incumbent upon it to mind ſpiritual things: thirdly, if we are too anxious or ſollicitous, leſt we loſe the neceſſaries of life by doing ſuch things as we are enjoined: and this is that ſollicitude which Chriſt prohibits: Firſt, becauſe of the greater benefits which God confers upon us far ſuperior to all the ſollicitude we harbour; ſecondly, becauſe of the aſſiſtance which God lends to animals and, plants abundantly below the dignity of man's nature; for Minutius Fælix ſays,
" Aves ſine patrimonio vivunt, & in diem pecua paſcuntur,
" & hæc nobis tamen nata ſunt: quæ omnia, ſi non concupiſcimus,
" poſſidemus". Thirdly, becauſe of the providence of God, the ignorance of which made the Gentiles place their principal care in the acquiſition of temporal advantages. And thereupon he concludes that our taking thought ought chiefly to be about ſpiritual goods, with hopes that our neceſſities will be ſupplied with temporal things, provided we do that which we ought. (Dr. Thomas) Our Saviour cautions his diſciples here againſt an immoderate care for the things of this life; ſuch a ſollicitous and vexatious care for food and raiment, as is accompanied with diffidence and diſtruſt of God's fatherly providence over us, and proviſion for us, and the arguments which our Saviour uſes to diſſuade from this ſin, are many and cogent. (B.)

Is not the life more than meat.] As if he had ſaid, is not the life preferable to the meat that ſuſtains it? The argument Chriſt here uſes is from the major to the minor, as if he had ſaid, God hath given you things of greater value, namely, life, and body, therefore he will beſtow upon you leſs, namely, food to ſuſtain life with, and raiment to cover the body. " He that gives to the " poor, ſays Gregory paſt 3 p. admon. 21, food and raiment, and
" yet is infected either in body or ſoul, ſhows himſelf juſt in the " minor, but erroneous in the major, he gives his goods to God,
" but himſelf to the devil." (V.)

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his ſtature? And why take ye thought for raiment? conſider the lilies of the field how they grow; they toil not, neither do they ſpin. And yet I ſay unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arayed like one of theſe. Wherefore if God ſo cloath the graſs of the field, which to day is, and to morrow is caſt into the oven, ſhall he not much more cloath you, O ye of little faith? Therefore take no thought, ſaying, what ſhall we eat? or what ſhall we drink? or wherewithal ſhall we be cloathed? (For after all theſe things do the Gentiles ſeek) for your heavenly father knoweth that ye have need of all theſe things.

One cubit to his ſtature.] That is, the leaſt part; for a definite meaſure is put in this place for any meaſure, according to the vulgar way of ſpeaking. Luke xii. 26 carries the argument thus, If ye then be not able to do that thing which is leaſt, why take ye thought for the reſt? As if he had ſaid, Since you are not able to add the leaſt thing, namely, one cubit to your ſtature, much leſs will your ſollicitude, or taking thought, be a ſufficient guard againſt all the caſualties of your lives (V.) Four arguments are uſed in theſe five verſes, by our Saviour, to diſſuade us from the ſin of anxious care; 'tis needleſs, 'tis fruitleſs, 'tis heatheniſh, 'tis brutiſh: Needleſs, becauſe God knoweth our wants; fruitleſs, becauſe all the thought we can take, cannot add one cubit to our ſtature; heatheniſh, becauſe the Gentiles ſeek all ſuch things; brutiſh, becauſe God provides for the fowls of the air. (B.)

Conſider the lilies of the field.] In Judæa and Syria lilies were not planted in gardens, as they are with us; there they grew up and down in the fields. The compariſon which our Saviour makes between lilies and Solomon's glory, implies, that Solomon, in all the richneſs of his attire and ſplendid garb, was inferior to one of theſe. So Pſal. xliv. All the glory of the king's daughter, that is, all her attire and glorious dreſs. So Eſther xv. 4. She is ſurrounded with her glory, meaning her beautiful and fine attire.

Ver. 33, 34. But ſeek ye firſt the kingdom of God, and his righteouſneſs, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you. Take therefore no thought for the morrow, for the morrow ſhall take thought for the things of itſelf: ſufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

All theſe things ſhall be added unto you.] Meaning temporal things, if it be found for your advantage. The firſt care of Chriſtians ought to be to promote the kingdom of grace in this world, and to ſecure the kingdom of glory in the next; and in order unto both, ſeek after an univerſal holineſs, and righteouſneſs, both of heart and life (B.)

Take no thought for the morrow.] To-morrow, ſays Jerome, ſignifies in the holy ſcriptures the time that is to come, according to that ſaying of Jacob in Geneſis, Thy righteouſneſs ſhall bear me to-morrow. So that he who prohibits us from thinking of things to come, leaves us at liberty, becauſe of the frailty of human life, to be ſollicitous about the preſent. (V.)

The morrow ſhall take thought for the things of itſelf.] That is, it ſhall have its own ſollicitude, ſufficient to afflict the mind. The apoſtle, in his epiſtle to the Hebrews, produces the ſenſe of this verſe, in other words, Let your manners be without covetouſneſs; be contented with the preſent: for he ſaid, I will not leave nor forſake thee. (Idem.)

Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.] "'Tis enough for us, ſays Jerome, to think on the preſent troubles of this life. What occaſion have we to extend our thoughts to things uncertain and to come, which we can neither lay hold of, nor keep, if we had them in our power. The word kakia, which is render'd malice or evil in the latin, has two ſignifications in the greek, viz. evil and affliction, which the Greeks call kakoſis; ſo that affliction ought by much to be preferr'd to evil. However, if there is any one that has a mind to diſpute this conſtruction, being againſt kakia's ſignifying affliction and trouble, but malice or evil, it muſt be conſtrued in that ſenſe, wherein the world is ſaid to be laid in evil, and as we ſay in the Lord's prayer, Deliver us from evil, that we may have ſufficient power to ſtand againſt the malice or evil of this life." (Idem.) Our Saviour reinforces his dehortation from ſolicitous care for worldly things; aſſuring us, that every day will bring with it a ſufficient burden of trouble, and therefore we ought not to torment our ſelves, by antedating our own ſorrows, and foretelling what may or may not come to paſs. Whence we are to learn, 'tis a needleſs evil to perplex our ſelves with fears of what may come upon us, ſince every day has its own duty and difficulty; and tho' ſufferings muſt be expected, yet we muſt not torment our ſelves with the fears of what may be tomorrow. (B,)

CHAP. VII.

Chriſt having begun his ſermon on the mount in the foregoing chapter, ends it in this, with an exhortation to ſeveral duties, the firſt whereof is, to abſtain from giving a raſh judgment of others.

Ver. 1, 2. JUdge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye ſhall be judged, and with what meaſure ye mete, it ſhall be meaſured to you again.

Judge not.] raſhly, or unmercifully. Auſtin, in his ſecond book of our Lord's ſermon on the mount, ſpeaks to this effect: "'Tis my opinion, that nothing more is commanded us by theſe words, than to put a mild conſtruction upon thoſe actions, the intention whereof we do not underſtand: That ſaying, You ſhall diſtinguiſh them by their fruits, evidently refers to ſuch actions as cannot flow from a good deſign. Indeed there are ſome mediate actions, the intention whereof we do not comprehend, becauſe they may be the conſequence as well of a good as an evil deſign; yet to give a raſh judgment of them, we ſhould utterly condemn. However, there are two caſes, wherein it behoves us to be upon our guard how we judge raſhly; the firſt is, when we are not certain of the deſign a thing was done with; the other, when we are at a loſs to know what ſuch a perſon will prove for the time to come, who diſcovers himſelf to us at preſent for a good or an evil man. We do not blame, indeed, thoſe things which we do not know, we mean, with reſpect to the deſign with which they were done; neither are we ſo ſcrupulous about ſuch as are evident, as to deſpair of their goodneſs" "Take care, ſays Bernard, in his ſermon upon Cant. "that you neither ſhow your ſelf to be a buſy examiner, or a raſh judge of another man's converſation; tho' poſſibly you may find ſomething worthy of reprehenſion therein, yet make no raſh determination upon your neighbour; rather excuſe him the more. Excuſe the intention at leaſt, if you cannot the action itſelf: Think it a piece of ignorance, think it done by influence, think it a fortuitous caſe. But if all theſe things fail, and the certainty of the thing be above excuſe, perſuade your ſelf to think the contrary nevertheleſs, and ſay within your own breaſt, the temptation was too vehement and ſtrong; what would this man have done with me, had he the like authority over me." (V.) The prohibition of judging not, is not meant of our ſelves, but of our neighbour, meaning, that we ſhould not judge of our neighbour's ſtate or perſon, raſhly, or uncharitably, eſpecially unrighteouſly and unjuſtly. Tho' Chriſt does not here forbid judicial judging by the civil magiſtrate, nor eccleſiaſtical judging by the church governors, whoſe office gives them authority ſo to do. Nor does he forbid one chriſtian to paſs a judgment on the notorious actions of another, ſeeing the duty of reproof cannot be perform'd without it; but it is ſuch a raſh and cenſorious judging our brother, as is void of charity towards him, as is accompanied with contempt of him, eſpecially if we have been guilty of the ſame or greater ſins before him. (B.)

Ver. 3, 4, 5. And why beholdeſt thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but conſidereſt not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou ſay to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, firſt caſt out the beam out of thine own eye; and then ſhalt thou ſee clearly to caſt out the mote out of thy brother's eye.

Why beholdeſt thou the mote.] Theſe words properly refer to ſuch failings as we have in common with the reſt of mankind, and which we look upon with ſeverity in others, tho' with compaſſion in our ſelves. Yet there are ſome whoſe ill nature puſhes them on to a greater length of malignity, looking on ſuch actions as will admit of the beſt conſtruction, with the moſt injurious aſpect. (G.) Chriſt by a proverbial ſpeech, here reproves thoſe perſons who, according to Jerome, being involved in mortal crimes themſelves, will not forgive their brothers faults, which are conſiderably leſs in their natures. Horace, in his third ſatire, points at this claſs of men in the following verſes.

> When thou art blind and ſenſeleſs to thine own,
> How doſt thou ſee thy friend's diſeaſe ſo ſoon,
> That ſcarce a ſerpent can ſo quickly ſpy,
> Nor any eagle hath ſo good an eye? Creech.

By the mote in our brothers eye is to be underſtood ſmall and little ſins, or ſome ſuppoſed ſins; by the beam in our own eye, is meant ſome notorious ſin of our own; whence we learn that thoſe who cenſure others for their trifling infirmities, are guilty of crimes of a greater nature themſelves, and that thoſe who deſire others ſhould look upon their infirmities with a compaſſionate eye, muſt not look upon the failings of others with a cenſorious eye. (B.)

Ver. 6. Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither caſt ye your pearls before ſwine, leſt they trample them under their feet, and turn again, and rent you.

Give not that which is holy unto the dogs,] The antient Chaldeans Hebrews, and Ægyptians, who were the profeſſors of learning, deliver'd their precepts in hieroglyphicks. This cuſtom was introduced into Greece by Pythagoras. The meaning of this paſſage is, that prudence ought to conduct our actions, yet that this is not to be inculcated to thoſe who have been admoniſhed of their open crimes, and yet perſiſt to follow their old ſinful inclinations. For Chriſt was willing that the preaching of repentance ſhould go before the preaching of the kingdom of heaven. We read of dogs, Exod. xxii. 31. And ſwine were prohibited by the law of Moſes. Peter in his 2d. Epiſtle xi. 22. has joined theſe different animals together Now if we may be at liberty to make a nice diſtinction between theſe dogs and ſwine, by the former pleaſe to underſtand ſuch as impudently bark againſt admonition, ſuch as thoſe mentioned Acts xiii. 45. Phil. iii. 2. Apoc. xxii. 15. By the latter ſuch as do not altogether contradict admonition, but diſcover by the impurity of their lives the contempt they have for inſtruction. The words in the ſequel evidently require this diſtinction, for 'tis one thing to trample upon a thing given, which is the nature of ſwine, and another to ſnap at a thing offered, which is the nature of dogs. (G.) Chriſt teaches us here by a two-fold adage, that the divine miſteries are not to be delivered to their opponents and diſpiſers. Whereupon he calls theſe miſteries, holy, becauſe they are divine, and ought not to be corrupted, pearls, becauſe they are pretious, and ought not to be contemned or deſpiſed. The word trampling is more applicable to wild boars, than tame ſwine. Yet we find in the writings of the antients, of men being torn in pieces by ſwine, witneſs that paſſage out of Pliny's 10th book chap. 67. "They ſay that ſows grow ſo furiouſly mad, as to tear men in pieces, eſpecially if cloathed in white." And Strabo ſpeaks thus of the ſwine in Belgia. "Their ſwine are noted for their height, ſtrength, and ſwiftneſs, they inhabit in the fields; no body dare approach them without danger to their perſons." (V.) By the word holy here underſtand the word and ordinances in general, but admonition and reproof in particular: By dogs and ſwine incorrigible and unreclaimable ſinners, hardned ſcorners of holy things: This is a proverbial ſpeech expreſſing how ſure charitable reprehenſions are to be caſt away upon incorrigible ſinners. (B.)

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. Ask, and it ſhall be given you, ſeek, and ye ſhall find, knock, and it ſhall be opened unto you. For every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that ſeeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it ſhall be opened. Or what man is there of you, who, if his ſon asketh for bread, will give him a ſtone? Or if he ask for a fiſh, will give him a ſerpent? If ye then being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more ſhall your father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him.

Ask and it ſhall be given you.] Several ways are commonly made uſe of to connect theſe words with the foregoing. For my part, I am of opinion, that certain general precepts are ſubjoined to ſeveral ſpecial ones, and that here we have a method ſhewn how we may be able to obtain thoſe gifts which are conſtantly neceſſary to purſue this journey which Chriſt diſcovers to us: for this paſſage points at obtaining the Holy Spirit. See James i. 5. Ephes. i. 17, 18. (G.) " Ask, ſeek, knock, ſays Auſtin, book 1. retract. chap. 16. " I have determined ſometimes to explain the difference between them, but all of them are much better referred to an inſtaneous prayer. Whence our Lord concludes with ſaying, he will give good things to thoſe that ask him, without adding, to thoſe that ſeek and knock." (V.) Here is a precept and a promiſe; the precept or duty commanded, is importunity and conſtancy in prayer, we muſt ask, ſeek, and knock; the promiſe, or mercy inſured, is audience and acceptation with God. (B.)

Every one that asketh, receiveth.] Namely, if he asketh for ſpiritual goods without any heſitation; yea, and temporal too, provided the want of them be not more conducive to our ſalvation. So that, according to our Saviour's words, they who ask, ſeek, and knock, have an indulgence given them here. (V.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Therefore all things whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye even ſo to them, for this is the law and the prophets. Enter ye in at the ſtrait gate, for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to deſtruction, and many there be which go in thereat. Becauſe ſtrait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it. Beware of falſe prophets, which come to you in ſheeps cloathing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. Ye ſhall know them by their fruits. Do men gather grapes off thorns, or figs off thiſtles? Even ſo every good tree bringeth forth good fruit, but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. A good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, neither can a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and caſt into the fire. Wherefore by their fruits ye ſhall know them.

Whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do to you.] Chriſt having ſpoken concerning the manner of our prayers, he proceeds now in this place to add thoſe precepts which are to excite our endeavours. 'Tis ſaid of Severus, the emperor, that he had this famous ſentence commonly in his mouth, which he received either from the chriſtians or Jews, " What you will not have " done to yourſelf, do not do it to others." So that to form a right judgment, we muſt turn the tables here, and perform the ſame thing to others as we would have done to ourſelves. (G.) meaning, whatſoever you deſire with the will, and not with the luſt, which is aptly ſignified by the word Vultis, you will; for, according to Cicero 4. Tuſcul. there is this difference between the will and the deſire. " The will, ſays he, follows reaſon when " it deſires, but that which moves contrary to reaſon, is aboundleſs luſt or deſire. So that the deſire in a good man is called " the will, but the deſire in a bad perſon is called luſt." Jerome in his 14th epiſtle to Celantas, ſays, " That ſentenee of the goſpel " ſhould be laid up as a trite piece of advice, nay, ſuperſcribed " upon the heart, which comprehends the ſum of all righteouſneſs, all things whatſoever ye would that men ſhould do to " you, do ye even ſo to them; and then to explain the force " of the precept, theſe words are added, for this is the law " and the prophets. This fine paſſage takes in both action, word, " and thought, and preſents a mirror always before us, which " diſplays the qualifications of our wills, which tells us when " we act unjuſtly, and acquaints us when we perform juſtice " to mankind." To do to others as we would have done to ourſelves, comprehends both the law and the prophets, q. d. The love of our neighbour is the ſum of every thing which we find enjoined, as in the law of Moſes and the prophets. For he that loves his neighbour for the ſake of God, loves God the more, and is endued with charity, which is the end of every precept. Now all precepts are either moral, ceremonial, or judicial; ceremonial, to induce us to the love of God; judicial, to the love of our neighbour; moral, one way reſpecting the love of God, as the three firſt precepts of the decalogue; another, the love of our neighbour, as the precepts of the ſecond table, or the ſeven laſt commandments of the decalogue. Seeing then that the two precepts of charity, namely, that which refers to the love of God, and that to the love of our neighbour, are ſuch, as not to be fulfilled without following both, becauſe our Lord ſays in the ſequel, That in theſe two commandments hangs the whole law and the prophets, it may indiſcriminately be underſtood, either of both comprehended together, or of each taken by itſelf. (V.) The great rule of righteouſneſs and equity in all our dealings with men, is this, to do as we would be done unto; it is a ſhort, full, and clear rule, and what both the light of nature, and of Chriſt binds upon us; 'tis the ſum of the old teſtament, ſo far as concerns our duty to our neighbour, and the ſubſtance of the ſecond table. (B.)

Strait is the gate.] I am of opinion that the gate of piety is called narrow or ſtrait, becauſe it naturally oppoſes the ways of the fleſh; and rocky, becauſe 'tis beſet with a great many external impediments, all which cuſtom, and the aſſiſtance of God's ſpirit will overcome (G.) By the gate and the way is underſtood the manner of conducting our lives, which if it be agreeable to the maxims of the goſpel, is called ſtrait and narrow, becauſe, being circumſcribed ſo much with the rules of charity, we are forbid to turn the leaſt either to the right or the left, to indulge our deſires, whence this way is difficult to travel through, becauſe of the frailties of our corrupt nature; on the contrary they who live after the dictates of their lawleſs deſires, are ſaid to enter in at the broad gate, becauſe of our proneneſs to give way to the different vicious inclinations that infect the human mind. (V.) The metaphor of the gate denotes our firſt entrance into a religious courſe of life, and its being ſtrait denotes the difficulty that attends religion firſt: Evil habits to be put off, old companions in ſin to be parted with, but when faith and patience have once ſmoothed the way, love will make our works delightful to us. (B.)

Falſe prophets.] That is, falſe teachers, according to the interpretation of St. Peter, 2 Epiſ. xi. 1. For the Jews called thoſe not only prophets, who foretold events to come, but alſo thoſe who inſtructed the people, eſpecially if they pretended to divine inſpiration, or boaſted of having received their commiſſion from above: ſuch as was Simon and Barjeſus, Acts xiii. 6. But Chriſt calls theſe by the name of falſe prophets, to diſtinguiſh them from the falſe chriſts; ſuch was Barchochebas. However, he ſtiles them falſe, not on account of their miſſion, but for their falſe and prejudicial doctrine. (G.) That is, from ſeducers, " who, " according to Jerome in the preface of his works, refute the truth " by a jingle of falſe words and doctrine, conſtruing thoſe things " in a wicked ſenſe, which are well meant, and agreeing with " us in our converſation, tho' diſagreeing in their ſentiments." (V.) There were two ſorts of deceivers which our Saviour gave his diſciples a ſpecial warning of, namely, falſe chriſts, and falſe prophets: falſe chriſts were ſuch as pretended to be the true Meſſiah: falſe prophets were ſuch as pretended to own chriſtianity, but drew people away from the ſimplicity of the goſpel. (B.)

In ſheeps cloathing.] See Hebrews xi. 37. This was, for the moſt part, the clothing of the prophets. But Chriſt, as appears from the oppoſite words in the ſequel, would have us underſtand by this metaphor of ſheeps cloathing, all the exterior appearance of innocence, both in the countenance, words and actions of man. (G.) The prophets were commonly clothed in this dreſs, witneſs Elias, 1 Kings xix. 13. and Eliſæus, in the greek text, 1 Kings ii. 13. where the Vulgate has the word, palium. So that theſe words of Chriſt have a double alluſion; one to the garments of the prophets, which the falſe doctors or teachers imitated, to make them ſeem true; the other to the appearance of ſheep, which they endeavoured outwardly to mimic, when inwardly they were more rapacious than wolves; for as the wolf lays in wait for the whole flock, ſo a falſe teacher may be ſaid to lay in wait for the whole church. (V.) Theſe falſe prophets, or falſe teachers, make fair pretences to ſtrictneſs in religion, and to greater meaſures and degrees of mortification and ſelf-denial than others, ſo that ſuch as go about to ſeduce others, uſually pretend to extraordinary meaſures of ſanctity themſelves, in order to raiſe an admiration amongſt thoſe who judge of ſaints more by their looks, than by their lives; more by their expreſſions than by their actions. (B.)

Ye ſhall know them by their fruits.] By their works of iniquity, as it is ſaid below, v. 23. Tho' they may make pretences to religion and pity, yet counterfeits will not be long in diſcovering their natures, 2 Tim. iii. 5, 9. And theſe commonly are their fruits, flying away from ſufferings, alluring thoſe who have abandoned themſelves to a vicious courſe of life, eſpecially the more opulent ſort, putting captious queſtions that no way tend to the furtherance of religion; caſting reflections at others, chiefly ſuch as are in authority, thereby to obtain applauſe among the people through that ſhew of liberty, and accommodating their doctrines to thoſe things which we read in both epiſtles to Timothy, in that of Jude, and in the ſecond of Peter; which are to be underſtood of Cerinthus, Nicolaus, Gnoſticks, and Carpocratians, and other adulterators of primitive Chriſtianity. (G.) Ye ſhall know them infallibly. If it happens from the doctrine of any perſon, that thoſe who aſſent to him, ſtrive to eſpouſe the faith once delivered to the ſaints, and, in ſpite of all innovators, cleave to the precepts laid down in the ſcriptures; ſuch doctrine is virtually good; but if, on the other hand, the plenitude of the ſcripture be oppoſed, or any doctrine impoſed as neceſſary to ſalvation, which is not to be found in the ſcriptures, 'tis evident, that thoſe who teach them are not guided by a divine [inſtinct, but prophecy, or teach as their own inclinations direct them; the Spirit of God is not within them; they follow the dictates of their own ſpirits, and by their fraudulent and deceitful behaviour, reſemble foxes, in order to impoſe upon the ſimple and unwary; which is not all, for they lay waſte the Lord's vineyard, who is the God of Sabaoth, which is the holy church of God. "The fruits of man, ſays the author of the imperfect work in Chryſoſtom, hom. 19. in Mat. 7. "are the confeſſion of his faith, "and the actions of his life and converſation. If you then ſee a "chriſtian man, immediately conſider if his confeſſion agrees with "the ſcriptures; for then he is a true Chriſtian. But if it oppoſes "the precepts which Chriſt laid down, he is then a counterfeit." (V.) The beſt courſe we can take to judge of teachers pretending to be ſent from God, is to examine the deſign and tendency of their doctrines, and the courſe and tenour of their converſations. Good teachers, like good trees, will bring forth the good fruits of truth and holineſs; but evil men and ſeducers, like corrupt trees, will bring forth error and wickedneſs, in their life and doctrine. (B.)

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. Not every one that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord, ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will ſay to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy name? and in thy name have caſt out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profeſs unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity. Therefore whoſoever heareth theſe ſayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wiſe man which built his houſe upon a rock: And the rain deſcended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that houſe: and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock. And every one that heareth theſe ſayings of mine, and doth them not, ſhall be likened unto a fooliſh man which built his houſe upon the ſand: And the rain deſcended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that houſe: and it fell, and great was the fall of it.

Not every one that ſaith unto me, Lord, Lord.] Chriſt having acquainted us, that ſome were not to be admitted, becauſe of the wickedneſs of their doctrine, adds now, that neither integrity of faith was ſufficient unto ſalvation, unleſs what the tongue ſpoke was alſo confeſſed in our manners. Q. d. Not all whoſe hearts are moved by the ſacred Spirit to the confeſſion of my name; not all who are moved by the Holy Spirit and prophecy, and do miracles by the invocation of my name; not all theſe, I ſay, ſhall obtain happineſs hereafter, but only thoſe in whom the Holy Ghoſt inhabits. So that no man confeſſes the name of Jeſus, but he that is influenced by the ſacred Spirit: and thoſe are influenced by the Holy Ghoſt, who execute the will of God, who keep his commandments, who do not deny him in their actions, who confeſs him with their tongues, and revere him with their hearts. So holy Thomas upon 1 Cor. xii. "None, but who is influenced by the "Holy Spirit, can ſay, Lord Jeſus. (V.) A bare name and profeſſion of Chriſtianity, without the practice of it, is a very inſufficient ground to build our hopes of heaven and ſalvation upon. A profeſſion of faith, and purpoſes of obedience, without actual obedience to the commands of God, will avail no perſon to ſalvation. (B)

In thy name.] That is, by owning our ſelves to do ſo, in order to teſtify of thy power. The phraſes to thy name, in thy name, and by thy name, which frequently occur in theſe books, bear this conſtruction; the right explanation of which is to be drawn from Acts xvi. 18. xix. 13. When miracles were performed to bear teſtimony of the truth, 'twas no wonder they were done by perſons who made an open confeſſion of the truth, tho' their minds were not fixed to Chriſt's obedience. Sometimes theſe miracles were executed not ſo much to recommend thoſe who performed them, as to convince the ſpectators; altho' that promiſe of Chriſt, in Mark xvi. 17. according to the teſtimony of Peter, chiefly regards believers. (G.)

I never knew you.] That is, I never approved of you, no, not at ſuch time as you propheſied, caſt out devils, and performed ſeveral miracles in my name. So Cicero, in his firſt book of laws, "I am afraid leſt no body knows that diſpute;" that is, approves of it. "To know, with reſpect of God, ſays Gregory, 11 Moral. c. 7. "ſignifies to underſtand, ſometimes to approve, he knows "him to be a wicked man, becauſe he judges ſo in his underſtand-"ing; he does not know him to be a wicked man, becauſe he does "not approve of his actions." Auſtin, in his 47th epiſtle to Valentinus, is ſomewhat different: "I do not know you, becauſe I "did not make you ſuch. Agreeably to that ſaying of our Lord "Jeſus Chriſt, He knew not ſin, becauſe he did not commit ſin. "The Lord knows the paths which are to the right; how muſt "this be underſtood, unleſs becauſe he made theſe paths to the "right, that is, the paths of the juſt, which conſiſt in good "works, which God, as the apoſtle ſpeaks, hath prepared for us "to walk in. But he knows not the paths to the left, that is, the "ways of the wicked, becauſe he made them not in man, but man "form'd them for himſelf; which made him ſay, I have hated the "crooked paths of the wicked; they are to the left." (V.)

Whoſoever heareth.] Q. d. Since there is ſo great and indiſpenſible a neceſſity to obey the will of my Father, you may very well conclude ſuch a man's labour is in vain, who ſtrives to hear my words, and neglects to follow them. If your converſation is bad, not an everlaſting hearing of me will turn to any advantage; whereas he that hears my words, and fulfils them in his actions, ſhall have reaſon to rejoice at his labour. (V.)

Ver. 28, 29. And it came to paſs, when Jeſus had ended theſe ſayings, the people were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine. For he taught them as one having authority, and not as the Scribes.

As one having authority.] 'Tis evident from what comes after, in the ſequel, that Chriſt is not compared to the ancient prophets, whom the common people never heard ſpeaking, but to the ſcribes or lawyers, who were every day expounding the law to them. The Jews commonly fix this remark at the time Eſdras flouriſhed: "Thus far the prophets, afterwards come the learned men." (G.) Q. d All were rapt up into admiration, at Chriſt's expounding the law on the mountain; for our Saviour, in promulgating his doctrine, diſcovered ſo much majeſty, as plainly ſhewed his exouſia, that is, his authority of a king to command, and of a teacher to perſuade. For his ſermon, tho' the moſt artleſs and unadorned in the world, was full of royal, nay, of divine majeſty. It penetrated into the inmoſt receſſes of the ſoul, thereby to convert the elected, and confute the wicked. But the doctrine of the Scribes and Phariſees was not ſo; the matter moſtly concerning frivolous and unſerviceable points; the quality, being compoſed in a looſer ſtyle, and more to diſcover pomp and flattery. (V.) Our Lord's teaching, was with authority; that is, it was grave and ſerious, pious and ardent, plain and profitable: and the majeſty he ſhewed in this ſermon, made it evidently appear, that he was a teacher ſent of God, and cloathed with his authority. (B.)

CHAP. VIII.

St. Ambroſe calls this chapter the miraculous ſcripture, becauſe of the ſeveral extraordinary miracles recorded therein, as the cleanſing of the leper, the curing of the Centurion's ſervant, the ſtilling of the winds, &c.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. WHen he was come down from the mountain, great multitudes followed him. And behold, there came a leper, and worſhipped him, ſaying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean. And Jeſus put forth his hand and touched him, ſaying, I will, be thou clean. And immediately his leproſy was cleanſed. And Jeſus ſaith unto him, See thou tell no man, but go thy way, ſhew thy ſelf to the prieſt, and offer the gift that Moſes commanded, for a teſtimony unto them.

And behold, there came a leper, and worſhipped him.] “After having preach'd his ſermon, and diſcover'd his doctrine, ſays Jerome, an opportunity preſented itſelf of diſplaying miracles, thereby to confirm the audience in the things he had deliver'd.” The hiſtory of this miraculous cure perform'd on the leper, is given us by Mark, chap. i. 40. and by Luke, chap. v. 12. yet Matthew is the only evangeliſt that acquaints us with the time and order of this miracle, ſpeaking in theſe words, When he came down from the mountain, &c. And behold there came, &c. Meaning, when Jeſus was in one of the cities, as Luke acquaints us, that is, near one of the cities, for in Levit. xiii. lepers are prohibited to enter cities. And we gather from the 5th verſe of this chapter, that the leper was cleanſed near Capernaum. For Chriſt is ſaid to ſuffer in the city of Jeruſalem, when he ſuffered near it. We read alſo, that urns of gold, filled with manna, and Aaron's rod, were in the ark, that is, near the ark; for the ark had nothing within it but the law. We find, beſides, that they encamped in Cariathiarim, that is, near Cariathiarim; where preſently follow theſe words, Whereſore they called the place, from that time, Dan, which is behind Cariathiarim, that is, from the weſtward of it. (V.)

And worſhipped him.] Namely, he fell proſtrate upon his face, or bowed the knee, according to Mark i. and Luke v. “For worſhipping, or adoration, ſays St. Thomas, principally conſiſts in our inward reverence for God; but ſecondarily in certain bodily ſigns of humility, ſuch as bending the knee, and the like; whereby we diſcover our infirmity in compariſon to God, and proſtrate our ſelves as if we owned that we were nothing of our ſelves.” Now the word adoration, or for adoring, is not formed of ador, a certain kind of grain, according to the opinion of moſt grammarians, but from a cuſtom of the ancients, wherein, upon offering up their prayers to the Gods, they put their right hands to their mouths; by leaning the foremoſt finger upon the thumb, which they kept erect, as Apuleius expreſſes it in his 5th book of Milet. Whence Job xxxi. v. 26, 27. If I beheld the ſun when it ſhined, or the moon walking in brightneſs, and my heart has been ſecretly enticed, or my mouth has kiſs'd my hand: that is, If I have worſhipped or adored the moon or ſun. (Idem.) The Jews paid civil adoration to their kings, and to their prophets. Thus Saul ſtooped with his face to the ground to Samuel; Nebuchadnezzar fell on his face before Daniel; and Obadiah before Elijah. From whence we may gather, that the adorations given to Chriſt by them that knew nothing of his Divinity, were paid him as a prophet ſent from God.

And touched him.] The Greek commentators pretend to draw an argument from this hiſtory, and two others wherein our Saviour is ſaid to touch dead bodies, in order to perſuade people that Chriſt was not ſubject to the law. But Paul expreſly informs us that Chriſt was born for the law. Galat. iv. 4. And Chriſt himſelf tells us that he came not into the world to do any thing againſt the law, or to be the author of any oppoſition thereto. So that from hence he cannot properly be charged with ſinning againſt the law (for otherwiſe it had been unlawful for him either to touch dead bodies, or to heal lepers), whereas it is certain that all actions performed by a divine virtue, were always exempted from the ritual law. (G.) Tho' Chriſt may be thought to act here in oppoſition to the law, which enjoined the not touching a leper, yet, in fact, he did not: the law indeed, forbade any one to touch a leper, not with intent that lepers ſhould not be cleanſed, but that thoſe, who touched them might not be infected thereby; though Chriſt could not be infected, which made him touch him, thereby to remove his diſtemper, and at the ſame time to ſhow that it was not the leproſy of the body, but of the ſoul, that was to be avoided. He touched, to convince the Manichees of the reality of his human nature; he touch'd and ſpoke, to the end all about him might ſee 'twas he who cleanſed the leper. (V.) Our Saviour, by touching the leper, ſhewed himſelf to be above the law, as God, though ſubject to the law, as man, for by the ceremonial law the leper was forbidden to be touched; yet it was a received rule among the Jews, that a prophet might vary from the punctilioes of the ceremonial law, or change a ritual law; ſo did Elijah ſtretch himſelf on the dead child, and Eliſha on the Shunamite's ſon, notwithſtanding the prohibition of coming near the dead. But Chriſt's curing the leper by the word of his mouth, and the touch of his hand, ſhewed his divine power, and proved himſelf to be truly and really ſent of God. (B.)

Be thou clean.] 'Tis cuſtomary for men to command actions to be done, but to effect things by the ſole power of the mouth, argues great divinity in the operator. So that Chriſt, in executing miracles, frequently uſes words of the imperative mood paſſive. (G.) Be thou clean, is the imparative mood, as appears from the Greek text. “Chriſt commands, ſays Ambroſe l. 5. upon Luke, in order to prove againſt Arrius, the equality of power he has with the father.” (V.)

See thou tell no man.] Several reaſons are brought for the ſilence here enjoined. I do not deny that, in another place, Chriſt gives us an example of his modeſty. But my opinion of this paſſage is this, that Chriſt enjoined ſilence no longer than 'till he had been examined by the prieſt, for fear if the prieſts had come to have known that Jeſus had performed the cure, they would have proved malicious, and pronounced the man unclean, though actually cleanſed of his leproſy. (G.) Herein the modeſty, humility, and piety of Chriſt is diſcovered, together with the care of his own ſafety; his modeſty, in not deſiring his good deeds to be proclaimed; his humility in ſhunning applauſe and commendation; his piety, in deſiring all the honour of the action to redound to the glory of God: and his care of his own ſafety, leſt the publiſhing of this miracle ſhould create him untimely danger from the Phariſees. (B.)

To the prieſt.] To any of the number of prieſts, to whom the reſt had delegated this office. All the prieſts ſtudied the ſeveral ſciences; and in particular the nature and properties of human bodies; in which branch, he, who was found to have the greateſt knowledge, had the inſpection of diſtempers committed to his management. (G.) To the prince of the prieſts, according to Mark. i. 44. That is, to that prieſt whom you ſhall firſt meet. For Mark himſelf in the Greek text ſays, to the prieſt; ſo does Luke v. 44. and the vulgate. Beſides, it appears from Levit. xiii. that any prieſt had authority to examine a leper, to give his judgment whether he was clean, or unclean. (V.)

Offer the gift.] A perſon cleanſed of his leproſy, was obliged by the law to offer two gifts, firſt, two ſparrows, or if he was a poor man, a lamb, with a pair of turtle doves or pidgeons, with flower and oil. (G.) Chriſt commands this upon the account that he had not as yet offer'd up the holy ſacrifice of the ſaints on the croſs, which was his body; for there was no occaſion to abdicate the ceremonial law, except the exhibition of thoſe things had been performed, which were promiſed by the ceremonial law to come to paſs. (V.)

For a teſtimony unto them.] That after they have received this gift, they may confeſs thou art cleanſed. (G.) Q. d. That this may be a teſtimony to them, becauſe I came not to diſſolve but to fulfil the law. (V.) That it may be a teſtimony to the Jews, that he was the Meſſias, and that he did not oppoſe the ceremonial law given by Moſes. (B.)

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. And when Jeſus was entred into Capernaum, there came unto him a centurion, beſeeching him, And ſaying, Lord, my ſervant lieth at home ſick of the palſy, grievouſly tormented. And Jeſus ſaith unto him, I will come and heal him. The centurion anſwered and ſaid, Lord, I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt come under my roof: but ſpeak the word only, and my ſervant ſhall be healed. For I am a man under authority, having ſoldiers under me: and I ſay to this man, Go, and he goeth: and to another, Come, and he cometh: and to my ſervant, Do this, and he doeth it. When Jeſus heard it, he marvelled, and ſaid to them that followed, Verily I ſay unto you, I have not found ſo great faith, no not in Iſrael.

A centurion.] The Romans kept in Judea, and in the other parts of the empire, theſe officers, to reſtrain the motions that might ariſe in the provinces. (G.) A centurion was ſo called, from having the command over a century, which comprehended one hundred foot ſoldiers; whereas the turma, or troop, contained but thirty, and thoſe horſemen, the commanders whereof were Decurions. This centurion was a Gentile, as appears from the ſequel, and from Luke vii.

Ver. 11, 12, 13. And I ſay unto you, that many ſhall come from the eaſt and weſt, and ſhall ſit down with Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom ſhall be caſt out into outer darkneſs: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. And Jeſus ſaid unto the centution, Go thy way, and as thou haſt believed, ſo be it done unto thee. And his ſervant was healed in the ſelf-ſame hour.

Many ſhall come from the eaſt.] The meaning whereof is this: As this ſtranger has done, ſo ſhall many of the Gentiles come to me with the like faith, and obtain eternal life. Chriſt clearly refers here to the promiſe made to Jacob, Gen xxviii. 14 (G.)

Sit down.] The kingdom of heaven is compared to a banquet, where Abraham, the father of the faithful, enjoys the foremoſt place, and the other gueſts ſit down together with him. This made the learned Camero be of opinion, that as thoſe were very much-honoured who reclined themſelves in the boſoms of the gueſts; ſo thoſe were perfectly, nay, happier than the reſt, who were ſaid to be in that of Abraham. However, Capel laughs at this notion, and aſſerts that Abraham's boſom was not called ſo from the poſture of the gueſts at table, but from little children, beloved by their parents, who ſometimes took them into their boſoms, ſometimes let them ſleep there, for the pious are ſaid to ſleep and reſt from their labours, when they have paid the laſt debt to nature: but where can they be ſaid to enjoy this reſt and ſleep better, than in the boſom of the father of the faithful (V.)

The children of the kingdom.] Are they who were promiſed the kingdom by the covenant above the reſt of mankind, had not they, by their own ways, deprived themſelves thereof. (G.)

Into utter darkneſs.] Chriſt makes uſe of this form of ſpeech, becauſe he treats here of the kingdom of heaven under the ſimilitude of a ſupper, which being performed in the night, a great many lights were ſet up to adorn it: That they who were gueſts at it, were in great light, and they who were abſent, in great darkneſs. The compariſon refers to the kingdom of heaven; for they who enjoy the beatitude of that manſion, need not the light of the ſun, nor the light of a candle, becauſe God, the Lord, illuminates them; when, on the other hand, thoſe who are deprived of heaven, (becauſe God, the Lord, doth not illuminate them, in reſpect of whoſe light, every other light, tho' never ſo radiant and bright, is but dim,) are ſaid to be in utter darkneſs; which is oppoſed to the light of the Houſe from which they are excluded.

Villalpandus, in his Apparatus of the city and temple of Jeruſalem, book 2. chap 8. obſerves, in the firſt place, that the ſcriptures pretty frequently mention a priſon under the name of darkneſs; to prove which, the cvith Pſalm, v. 10. is produced, which has theſe words: Sitting in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death, bound with want and iron; all which are hardſhips which perſons, doomed to a priſon, are forced to ſuſtain. In which ſenſe David Kimchi the Rabbin, and, before him, Chaldæus, underſtood this paſſage. And, moreover, that place of Iſaiah, chap. xlix. 9. You that are priſoners, go forth, and you that are in darkneſs, reveal, or ſhew your ſelves, is but a repetition of ſetting priſoners at liberty, and delivering them from darkneſs. Yet a priſon is not called by the appellation of darkneſs only; but there is ſo near a ſimilitude between the one and the other, that in the book of Wiſdom, chap. xvii. v. 2. the former is called darkneſs itſelf: The wicked, preſuming to domineer over the ſacred nation, were bound in the fetters of darkneſs and night.

The next obſervation made by Villalpandus, is, that there were in Jeruſalem, as in ſome other large cities, many priſons for the confining offenders in ſmaller crimes; but that there was one more horrid and dreadful than the reſt, without the Pomerium, purpoſely deſigned for capital offenders, where the priſoners were expoſed to all the hardſhips imaginable, as darkneſs, cold, nakedneſs, hunger, thirſt, and the like. That this priſon was called Betiſo, q. d. the place of filth; becauſe malefactors, who are called the filth of cities, were caſt in here. So a great many are of opinion, that the gate adjoining to mount Calvary, was called the porta ſtercoris, or gate of filth, becauſe criminals were ſeverally puniſhed upon it.

Hence Chriſt, being willing to point out the infernal puniſhments to ſuch as continued obſtinate in their impieties, marks them out by the name of a priſon, which, at that time of day, was received with the greateſt horror; which, for its prodigious darkneſs, was called darkneſs; for its ſituation, outer darkneſs; and for the hardſhips, to which thoſe within were expoſed, had theſe additional words pronounced by Chriſt, There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. The perpetual darkneſs of this priſon, Luke ſeems to point out in theſe words, Acts xii. Behold the angel of the Lord came upon him, and a light ſhined in the priſon; as if a light ſhining in this priſon was ſome ſtrange and unheard-of accident. (V.)

There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.] That is, there ſhall be the greateſt affliction, and diſtraction, which are typified here by weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. "Si fletus oculorum, "inquit Hieronimus, eſt, & Stridor dentium oſſa demonſtrat, "vera eſt ergo corporum & eorundem membrorum, quæ ceciderant, reſurrectio." Several commentators from this place of ſcripture being compared with that paſſage of Job xiv. 19. pretend to gather that hell or gehenna is two-fold, namely, one of extreme heat, the other of immoderate cold. Though Gregory the Great, expounds that ſaying of Job, Let him paſs from the ſnow-waters to extreme heat, and his ſin to hell, of the immoderate conduct of wicked men in all their actions, who paſs from the cold of infidelity very often to the heat of hereſy. Others ſuppoſe Job's meaning to be, that ſinners paſs from the immoderate cold of this life to the exceſſive heat in hell, or as Emanuel ſays, they paſs from one calamity into another. As to the opinion of Eliphaſus, who aſſerted that God always puniſhed the wicked in this life, Job refutes it by the teſtimony of his own experience how that the pious were doomed to hardſhips; and the wicked, did not dye, as if they had any feeling of their laſt moments, but went off the ſtage of the world as it were in a ſlumber. Much of the ſame language Job uſes where he ſpeaks of the death of ſinners. (V.)

Ver. 14, 15. And when Jeſus was come into Peter's houſe, he ſaw his wiſes mother laid, and ſick of a fever. And he touched her hand, and the fever left her: and ſhe aroſe and miniſtred unto them.

Was come into Peter's houſe.] Into the houſe where Peter and Andrew uſually took up their quarters when they were at Capernaum. 'Tis probable the houſe belonged to their father-in-law, ſince they had one of their own at Bethſaida, before they followed Chriſt. (G. Meaning, the houſe of Simon and Andrew. So this houſe is named, either becauſe it was theirs, before they had abandoned all, or becauſe it was their fathers, and where they commonly lodged. (V.)

Ver. 16, 17. When the even was come, they brought unto him many that were poſſeſſed with devils: and he caſt out the ſpirits with his word, and healed all that were ſick: That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the prophet, ſaying, himſelf took our infirmities, and bare our ſickneſſes.

That it might be fulfilled.] There's no queſtion to be made but that the healing of diſeaſes performed by our Saviour figured out the remiſſion and forgiveneſs of ſins. So that Chriſt may be ſaid twice to have fulfilled the prophecy of Eſaias; once by the curing of diſeaſes, not without moleſtation to himſelf, and again by his death more perfectly which took away the diſtempers in the ſoul; (G.) The infirmities mentioned in this prophecy are to be underſtood both of the ſoul and body, according to the general way wherein Eſaias expreſſes himſelf. Though Matthew applies this prophecy only to the diſeaſes or infirmities of the body, yet it preſuppoſes thoſe of the ſoul likewiſe. (V.)

Ver. 18, 19, 20. Now when Jeſus ſaw great multitudes about him, he gave commandment to depart unto the other ſide. And a certain ſcribe came, and ſaid unto him, Maſter, I will follow thee whitherſoever thou goeſt. And Jeſus ſaith unto him, the foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have neſts; but the ſon of man hath not where to lay his head.

And a certain ſcribe came.] What Matthew inſinuates here to have happened to Jeſus and his diſciples, as they were going to the ſea ſide, Luke mentions as happening on their going up to Jeruſalem. However it be, either Matthew or Luke hath not preſerved a juſt order of the time, though both of them annex this account to the things they had been juſt mentioning before; to make it appear as if nothing had intervened or happened between the facts. (V.)

I will follow thee whitherſoever thou goeſt.] The perſon ſpeaking thus was a lawyer, as moſt were of that age, entirely devoted to the acquiſition of money and honour; he fancied that Chriſt, who performed ſuch miracles, would arrive, in a ſhort time, to a great degree of worldly grandeur and power; and this made him acknowledge himſelf a follower of our Saviour. But Chriſt acquainting him with his poverty and low condition, it touch'd the Scribe to the heart. (G.)

The foxes have holes.] Q. d. I will put one queſtion to thee, which if thou anſwereſt me, I will then tell thee, whether or no any intention is to follow me. Can thou make an open abdication of all the riches and gaiety of this life, as I do? Now the fox is a ſolitary animal, taking his name from walking and wandering about in ſolitary places. So Ezekiel ſays, chap. xiii. 4. O Iſrael, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deſerts. So Lamentations, v. 18. Becauſe of the mountain of Zion, which is deſolate, the foxes walk upon it. But, to conceal themſelves the more, they make holes into the very bowels of the earth; to which Chriſt alludes in this preſent verſe. (V.)

The ſon of man.] The pagans and ſectarians objected this name to Chriſt, as contrary and repugnant to the birth of the virgin, which Juſtin, among others, endeavours to clear up thus: "Scimus fœminarum genitores dici parentes eorum qui ex iis fœminis "nati ſunt;" but becauſe Chriſt never uſes this expreſſion but when he ſpeaks of himſelf, we muſt find out another reaſon for this phraſe. In ſhort, Adam, man, and Ben Adam, ſon of man, very frequently ſignify a perſon of mean condition. Adam, in Judges xiv. 7. plainly has that ſignification. (G.)

Ver. 21, 22. And another of his diſciples ſaid unto him, Lord, ſuffer me firſt to go and bury my father. But Jeſus ſaid unto him, Follow me, and let the dead bury their dead.

Another of his diſciples.] Clemens of Alexandria acquaints us, from an ancient tradition, that this was Philip.

Suffer me firſt to go and bury.] He ſuppoſed 'twas time enough for him to be a follower of Chriſt after he had buried his father. But Chriſt tells him, that every thing is to be poſtponed to the hearing of his doctrine, and that the opportunity of learning his precepts is to be graſped at with both hands. For an affair of the laſt importance was at ſtake, namely, either the obtaining or loſing the comforts of eternal life (G.) " This diſciple, ſays Cyril, did " not requeſt our Lord to bury his deceaſed brother, but to give " him leave to ſupport him in his old age, till he ſhould die and " be buried by him; which deſire was rejected by Chriſt, becauſe " there were others in a capacity to take care of him." (V.)

Follow me.] " Our Saviour, ſays Ambroſe, prohibits him from " paying funeral honours to his father, to let him know, that human " things were to give place to divine. The deſire of this diſciple " was laudable in itſelf, but the obſtacle ariſing from it was " of greater conſequence; for he that ſeparates his deſire, loſes his " affection; and he that divides his care, ſtops the progreſs he " ſhould make. So that things of the greateſt conſequence are to " be firſt undertaken. (V.)

Let the dead.] When Chriſt had called this diſciple, and excuſed him from the office of burying his father, he put him and others in memory of the ſpiritual meaning of the law, which at that time enjoined the high prieſt and a Nazarene from paying any funeral duties to their friends. For, it ſeems, that Chriſtians were diſtinguiſhed by the appellation of Prieſts and Nazarenes. So that this precept was directed purely to theſe, and mark'd out to them to be taken in a ſpiritual ſenſe. The word dead, properly means bodies that are actually dead, tho' we are to include in it every thing that does not appertain to the ſoul; yet it ſignifies, but improperly, thoſe perſons who are ſtrangers to the true doctrine, which is the life of the ſoul, (G.) meaning, ſo far as regards the ſoul. The ſcripture, in ſeveral places, calls thoſe dead in their ſins, who are ſlaves to their appetites. So that the civil law ſays, that " A ſervant, ſo " long as he lives, is reputed for dead." Why may not the divine law repute a ſervant of ſin to be ſpiritually dead, when he has loſt God, who is the life of his ſoul? To bury the dead, ſignifies here no more than to take care of their fellows; for, according to Ambroſe, " a ſon is not deprived of the office or duty he owes his father, " but a faithful man is ſeparated from the communion of a " perfidious perſon." (V.)

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. And when he was entred into a ſhip, his diſciples followed him. And behold, there aroſe a great tempeſt in the ſea, inſomuch that the ſhip was covered with the waves: but he was aſleep. And his diſciples came to him, and awoke him, ſaying, Lord, ſave us: we periſh. And he ſaith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he aroſe and rebuked the winds and the ſea, and there was a great calm. But the men marvelled, ſaying, What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the ſea obey him! And when he was come to the other ſide, into the country of the Gergeſenes, there met him two poſſeſſed with devils, coming out of the tombs, exceeding fierce, ſo that no man might paſs by that way.

Into the country of the Gergeſenes.] All the time the Jewiſh common wealth flouriſhed, no ſwine were to be found in their country. We read, that David had his officers over his oxen, over his camels, over his ſheep and goats; but of ſwine not a word is mentioned. And, it ſeems, that the wealth of the patriarchs conſiſted in camels, aſſes, oxen, and goats, according to the account given us by Moſes, who ſays not a ſyllable of their having any ſwine. Beſides, we do not read that Job, who lived in Arabia, ſo near them, had one ſwine, among the ſeveral thouſands of oxen and ſheep which he poſſeſs'd. And when the Iſraelites frequently drove away large herds and flocks from the neighbouring nations, we have no account of ſwine being a part of the plunder. Moreover, Porphyry, in his treatiſe De abſtinentia accede animalium, puts the negative upon Judæa's producing ſwine; Not a ſingle hog is produced, ſays he, in theſe places. Whence, in the parable mentioned, Luke xv. v. 11. we read of the prodigal ſon feeding ſwine not in Judæa, but in a diſtant country.

Now the Gergeſenes, as they are called, as well in the paſſage of Matthew now before us, as in the Arabic and Æthiopic verſions of this goſpel, and in Mark v. and Luke viii. or Gadarenes, as they are named in the Greek text by Mark and Luke, and by Syrus in his commentary on three of the evangeliſts, and by Epiphanius againſt the Manichees, or Gergaſenes, according to the Vulgate, were either Greeks or Syrians; and therefore no wonder they made it a part of their employment to bring up ſwine in contradiction to the cuſtom of the Jews. Joſephus in book 17. chap. 13. of his antiquities, ſays that Gadara and Hippos, are Grecian cities; and among the foreign cities held by the Jews under king Alexander, he acquaints us that the ſaid king ſeized upon Gadara after a ten months ſeige. That afterwards the Jews demoliſhed it, but that Pompey rebuilt it in honour of his freedman Demetrius of Gadara. That Auguſtus, upon Herod's death, annexed it to Syria, then a Roman province. Though the ſame author in his 2d. book of the Jewiſh war, chap. 19, and 20. diſtinguiſhes Geraſa from Gadara. But as theſe cities were near one another, the ſame country might poſſibly be called at one time the country of the Geraſenes, and the country of the Gadarenes. And probably the antient inhabitants, who were deſcendants of the Canaanites, called it the country of the Gergaſeans, or Gergeſenes. Jerome in locis ſays, " Gergeſa was the place " where our Saviour healed thoſe who were vexed with devils. " And to this day is the village to be ſeen upon a mountain " near the lake of Tiberias, into which the ſwine tumbled down." And Eugeſippus in his treatiſe of the diſtances of the places in the holy land has theſe words: " Sixteen miles from Nazareth " eaſtward lies the village of Gergaſa, upon the ſea of Galilee." Now if any body think this unlikely, namely, for Chriſt to go out of the limits of Judæa to the country of the Gadarenes, Geraſenes, or Gergaſenes, which was within the juriſdiction of the Greeks or Syrians, when he himſelf ſays below, chap. xv. v. 24. that he was not ſent, but to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; an anſwer may be eaſily given, that Chriſt having ſpoke thoſe very words out of Judæa in the confines of Tyre and Sidon, as appears below, chap. 15. v. 21. and Mark vii. v. xv. and 31. It was no hard matter for him to go to the Gergaſenes, or Geraſenes, eſpecially ſeeing his ſtay among them was of ſo ſhort continuance, and after the performance of the miracle, which he did to diſcover his extraordinary virtue and power, upon which being deſired by the natives to leave their coaſts, he departed immediately and returned back to his own. (V.)

Two poſſeſt with devils.] Mark and Luke take notice but of one, either becauſe one was fiercer than the other, as Chryſoſtom alledges in his 29th homily upon Matthew, or becauſe, according to the words of Auſtin, in his ſecond book de conſenſu Evang. chap. xxiv. one was more famous than the other. (V.)

Coming out of the tombs.] Theophilact is of opinion, that a Doctrine was eſpouſed, at this time, of the ſouls of men being converted into dæmons or devils. But I am rather inclined to adhere to the notion, which a great many embrace, namely, that the ſouls of the dead hover about their bodies, and are ſome ways within the power of theſe dæmons, or devils. For this opinion is what the Jews themſelves advance at this time of day, which has alſo diffuſed itſelf among the Chriſtians. (G.)

Ver. 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34. And behold, they cried out, ſaying, What have we to do with thee, Jeſus thou Son of God? art thou come hither to torment us before the time? And there was a good way off from them an herd of many ſwine, feeding. So the devils beſought him, ſaying, If thou caſt us out, ſuffer us to go away into the herd of ſwine. And he ſaid unto them, Go. And when they were come out, they went into the herd of ſwine: and behold, the whole herd of ſwine ran violently down a ſteep place into the ſea, and periſhed in the waters. And they that kept them fled, and went their ways into the city, and told every thing: and what was befallen to the poſſeſſed of the devils. And behold, the whole city came out to meet Jeſus, and when they ſaw him, they beſought him that he would depart out of their coaſts.

Suffer us to go.] The caſting the devil out of the man, was an action peculiar to Chriſt; whereas, to force them into the ſwine, our Saviour had no occaſion for any action; for the devils themſelves begged for this, and were able, of their own ſtrength, to perform it, provided no ſuperior power gave them obſtruction. This made Chriſt reſtrain a power, which he had in himſelf, to hinder them, probably for weighty reaſons. In the place where this ſcene was exhibited, great numbers of Jews and Greeks promiſcuouſly inhabited. Theſe latter had an eſtabliſhed cuſtom to ridicule the Jewiſh rites, eſpecially their abſtaining from ſwine's fleſh, which they look'd upon as a fooliſh device of human ſuperſtition. So that Chriſt's permitting the devils to enter the ſwine, evidently ſhewed the Greeks, that the Jewiſh religion was agreeable to the expreſs command of God; and, at the ſame time, acquainted thoſe Jews, who were too curious in imitating the Grecian cuſtoms, with the myſtic ſenſe of the law, namely, that ſuch amongſt them as abandon'd themſelves to the purſuit of filthy and unlawful pleaſures, were not pleaſing to God, but were the ſlaves of the devil. (G.) St. Athanaſius, in the life of S. Antonius, has words to this effect: “ The greateſt malice that devils can create “ in themſelves, has no influence over ſwine, much more is their “ authority over man, who is formed after God's own image, re-“ ſtrained; ſo that 'tis our duty to ſtand in awe of God only, and “ and not to be fearful of them.” The word go is not the word of one commanding, but permitting, as appears from the Greek text in this place, and alſo from the Vulgate, Mark v. ver. 13. and Luke viii. ver. 32. And this permiſſion Chriſt gave to the devils, to diſcover the height of their malice and infirmity, with a view to ſpread the fame of the miracle he did to a greater diſtance, and ſhew the devils themſelves the largeneſs of the kindneſs he had conferred upon them with regard to their liberty. (V.)

They beſought him.] Meaning the Gadarenes, or Geraſenes, or Gergaſenes, becauſe, as it is ſaid, Luke viii. ver. 37. they were in a prodigious panic, for fear of being expoſed again to ſome bad conſequences, the like whereof they had ſuffer'd in the drowning of the ſwine. (V.)

CHAP. IX.

This chapter contains a narrative of ſeveral other miracles performed by our Saviour, amongſt which a Paralytic is cured; the ruler's daughter is raiſed to life; a woman is healed of a bloody flux; two blind, by faith, are reſtored to their ſight; a perſon dumb and a dæmoniac, are deliver'd from their maladies: interſperſed with the remiſſion of ſins, the call of Matthew, and other incidents.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. AND he entred into a ſhip, and paſſed over, and came into his own city. And behold, they brought to him a man ſick of the palſy, lying on a bed: and Jeſus, ſeeing their faith, ſaid unto the ſick of the palſy, Son, be of good cheer, thy ſins be forgiven thee. And behold, certain of the Scribes ſaid within themſelves, This man blaſphemeth. And Jeſus knowing their thoughts, ſaid, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? For whether is eaſier to ſay, Thy ſins be forgiven thee? or to ſay, Ariſe and walk.

Paſſed over.] Meaning, the lake of Genneſareth, and returned back to the oppoſite ſhore, from whence he came to the country of the Gergaſenes, &c.

Into his own city.] Our city in the Roman law means that place where we fix our habitation. Chriſt, we are told already, from Matthew, removed to Capernaum. See Mark xi. 1. (G.) That is into Capernaum, where the following miracle happened, as Mark xi. 1. evidently acquaints us. For Chriſt had three countries; viz. Bethlehem, where he was born; Nazareth, where he was educated; and Capernaum where he uſually reſided, after he had left Nazareth. (V.)

They brought to him a man ſick of the palſy.] Add, let down from the houſe, becauſe of the vaſt crowd of people gather'd about it, which made it impoſſible for the paralytic to be brought any other way, as Mark ii. and Luke v. plainly demonſtrate. (V.)

And Jeſus ſeeing him.] As the Centurion's faith was advantageous to his ſervant, ſo the faith of this paralytic's friends, was of the laſt ſervice to himſelf; though 'tis probable to ſuppoſe that he himſelf wanted not faith. (G.) St. Ambroſe upon Luke v. very juſtly infers, (from the compaſſion of Chriſt to the faith of thoſe who brought the paralytic, namely, to cure, upon the teſtimony of the faith of ſtrangers, firſt the ſoul, and then the body of the paralytic,) that the ſuffrage of the church, cujus contemplatione quod illi dominus negare poſſet, ignoſcat, is to be confined. The Romaniſts pretend to aſſert, that human merit is two-fold, de congruo, and de condigno, though very improperly. “ For, according to Durandus, “ the merit, de condigno, ſtrictly and “ properly taken, is a voluntary action, the performance whereof “ entitles any one to a reward from righteouſneſs: ſo that he “ who does not comply with it, acts unjuſtly, and is ſimply and “ properly an unjuſt man: and this merit de condigno, is to be “ found between man and man, but not between man and God. “ The reaſon of this is, both that which we are, and that which “ we have, whether they be good actions or good habits; for what “ we are and what we have is entirely the free and gratuitous “ gift of divine Providence. And becauſe he that freely and vo-“ luntary gives, is under no obligation to give more, but the “ receiver rather is obliged more to the giver, it follows, that our “ good actions, or good habits, which God beſtows upon us, lay “ the Almighty under no obligation to give more, as if they were “ a debt of righteouſneſs to demand it, and the non-compliance “ therewith brought the imputation of injuſtice along with it; “ but rather we are obliged to God. And whoever has ſen-“ timents, or ſpeaks to the contrary, involves himſelf in a ve-“ ry unadviſed, nay, blaſphemous error.” The words merere and mereri are frequently made uſe of by the fathers for impetrare and adipiſci. Whence that paſſage of Fulgentius, in his treatiſe of the incarnation and grave of Chriſt, chap vii. “ Ipſium Deum hominem factum & concipere & purire Maria, “ non humanus meritis, ſed concepti, naſcentiſque ex ea ſummi Dei “ dignatione merunt.” And that celebrated paſſage of Zoſimus, “ O felix culpa quæ talem & tantem meruit habere redentorem.” No men preſuppoſes a promiſe of God, which the Romaniſts call de congruo, for 'tis an abſurd notion to think ſo, and ſuccours of impiety. Therefore as the Almighty never repays man with any reward on the ſcore of an action performed, but is only known to promiſe out of his mere free will, 'tis evident that, whatſoever preſuppoſes, no promiſe of God has no relation to a reward, and conſequently cannot come under the notion of merit. But as the ſcripture, by a Catacreſis, calls thoſe gifts which God promiſes to ſuch as perform good works, in order to obtain their juſtification in Chriſt by the name of meries, or a reward, ſo the fathers, by the ſame Catacreſis, put the name of merits on thoſe good works, which are the fruit of faith. But the fathers were more experienced in the peruſal of the ſcripture, and more religious than to admit ſuch a blaſphemy into their heads, as to believe that they properly merited with reſpect to God: when all the righteouſneſs they had was like the linnen of a woman with her menſes upon her, “ quorum omnes juſtitia tanquam pannus menſtruatæ “ mulieris;” and all their merit moved the Lord's compaſſion, “ omne menſtrum miſeratio domino.” What man of us, “ ſays “ Ambroſe with an emotion, can ſubſiſt without the divine mercy “ and pity? What are we able to do that can merit the rewards “ which heaven beſtows? 'Tis not according to our merits, but “ according to the mercy and compaſſion of God that the de-“ crees of heaven are formed.” Neither, ſays Bernard, “ are “ the merits of man ſuch, as to entitle him to life eternal by a “ ſort of right; or is God to be thought to do us an injury, if he “ does not judge it proper to confer it upon us; for not to ſay, “ that all our merits are the gifts of God, and conſequently man “ on that account, is more indebted to God, than he to man, what “ are all our merits to ſo great glory? In ſhort, who will pretend “ to be better than the prophet, to whom God himſelf makes “ ſuch a famous teſtimony, ſaying, I have found the man accord-“ ing to my heart? Yet the prophet thought it neceſſary to ſay, “ Lord enter not into judgement with thy ſervant; therefore let “ no man impoſe upon himſelf.” Caſſiodorus, in his treatiſe of the ſoul, addreſſes himſelf to God in a beautiful manner.” “ My merit is thy indulgence: the gift which I offer, and what “ thou requires from the keeper, be pleaſed to bleſs. Lord there “ is nothing in me worthy to be requited, but thou art always “ prepared to beſtow. The defence of thy mercy riſes up a-“ gainſt my tranſgreſſions. I aſk, becauſe thou commands, O “ thou height of piety! O thou incomprehenſible depth of cle-“ mency pardon my offences! (V.)

Son, be of good cheer, thy ſins be forgiven thee.] All offences committed againſt the law were not brought before the cognizance of the judges; ſo that God ratified the law with menaces of untimely death and diſeaſes. See Deuteronomy xxviii. 22, 27. Moreover there are ſometimes natural cauſes of diſeaſes or ailments of the body, which come by permiſſion of God. See John ix. But the diſeaſe in this place very probably was owing to the fault of the man himſelf; which we are told from John v. 14. 1. Cor. xi. 30. frequently happens. Wherefore Chriſt, to put him in hope of being reſtored to his health, acquaints him, that his ſins are forgiven. The word ſon is a friendly and compaſſionate word of addreſs, as in Mark x. 24.

This man blaſphemeth.] To blaſpheme, in this place, ſignifies not to ſpeak evil againſt God, but to arrogate ſomething that belongs to God. (G.)

Eaſier to ſay.] 'Tis more to pardon ſin, than to cure a diſtemper; but the perſon that promiſes a thing out of ſight, is not ſo eaſily convinced of vanity, as he who promiſes to execute that which is within ſight. (G.) Meaning, with leſs hazard to his character. Chriſt, in this place, ſpeaks three things to the peralytic, thy ſins be forgiven thee, which he could ſay, without any danger of being convinced of falſhood, ſince God only knows whoſe ſins are forgiven; therefore he addreſſes himſelf to the Scribes and Phariſees thus, Wherefore think ye evil in your hearts? Which he could not have ſaid, had not God been the ſearcher of hearts, and the trier of the reins. But the ſame Scribes and Phariſees charging him with falſhood, he ſpeaks again to the paralytic, Ariſe, take up thy bed, and go unto thine houſe; the effect of which words, as it was neceſſary it ſhould be made evident to all, ſo Chriſt had certainly been brought under the name of an impoſtor, if, in the ſight of all preſent, the paralytic, in obedience to the command of Chriſt, had not immediately taken up his bed, and departed to his own houſe. So that Chriſt proves to us, that we are to put our truſt in an affair, which cannot be proved by a palpable effect. (V.)

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. But that ye may know that the ſon of man hath power on earth to forgive ſins (then ſaith he to the ſick of the palſy) Ariſe, take up thy bed, and go unto thine houſe. And he aroſe, and departed to his houſe. But when the multitude ſaw it, they marvelled, and glorified God, which had given ſuch power unto men. And as Jeſus paſſed forth from thence, he ſaw a man named Matthew, ſitting at the receit of cuſtom: and he ſaith unto him, Follow me. And he aroſe, and followed him. And it came to paſs, as Jeſus ſat at meat in the houſe, behold, many publicans and ſinners came and ſat down with him and his diſciples. And when the Phariſees ſaw it, they ſaid unto his diſciples, Why eateth your maſter with publicans and ſinners? But when Jeſus heard that, he ſaid unto them, They that be whole need not a phyſician, but they that are ſick. But go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy and not ſacrifice: for I am not come to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance.

He ſaw a man named Matthew.] To wit, him who was made an apoſtle afterwards. See hereafter, chap. x. ver. 3. The general opinion is, that this is the ſame perſon whom Mark and Luke call Levi; and indeed, the circumſtances of the narratives agree right herein. But neither Matthew any where calls himſelf Levi, neither do they name Matthew Levi; neither in the recital of the apoſtles is Matthew named any other than barely Matthew. (G.) St. Jerome ſays, that "The other evangeliſts would not call Matthew by a vulgar name, but ſtiled him Levi, for the veneration "and honour they had for him. He was called Matthew, and the "Publican, to ſhew his readers, that there was no occaſion to deſpair of ſalvation, ſince he was from a publican changed to be "an apoſtle. (V.)

Why eateth your maſter with publicans and ſinners.] Luke, in his 5th chapter, ſeems to relate this point ſomewhat different to Matthew, Why do you eat and drink with publicans and ſinners? inſinuating, as it were, an objection not only to Chriſt, but to himſelf and his diſciples, for eating with ſinners. (V.)

They that be whole, need not a phyſician.] Chriſt ſpeaks thus from a ſuppoſition, that if ye are ſuch men as you ſeem to be, truly you have no need of my aſſiſtance. The Phariſees were ſuch groſs deceivers, that they not only impoſed upon others, but upon themſelves. See Luke xviii. 11. and Mark, chap. xi. (G.) Q. d. I am a phyſician of ſouls, take away the wounds of the ſoul, remove the diſeaſes, and there will be no need for my aſſiſtance or aid. Thus Ovid, 3 de pont. Eleg. 4

> Firma valens per ſe nullumque Machaona quierit,
> Ad medicam dubius confugit æger opem.
> The firm and healthful want no doctor's aid,
> Phyſick and pills are for the ſickly made.

I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice.] The prophet Hoſea teaches us, in the expreſs name of God, that piety, which is fixed in the ſoul, and the offices of humanity, are of greater moment with God, than the ſtricteſt obſervation of rites and ceremonies. (G.) That is, I had much rather have mercy than ſacrifice; or, I prefer the inward ſacrifice of mercy, to the outward ſacrifice of religion; for God, according to the apoſtle, Hebrews xiii. 16. is delighted with ſuch ſacrifices. 'Tis a common thing in ſcripture, when any thing is preferred to another, flatly to affirm the thing preferred, and flatly to deny the thing to which it is preferred. Thus John vii. 16. ſays, My doctrine is not mine, but his that ſent me; that is, my doctrine is not ſo much mine as my father's. (V.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. Then came to him the diſciples of John, ſaying, Why do we and the Phariſees faſt oft, but thy diſciples faſt not? And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber mourn, as long as the bridegroom is with them? but the days will come, when the bridegroom ſhall be taken from them, and then ſhall they faſt. No man putteth a piece of new cloth unto an old garment: for that which is put in to fill it up, taketh from the garment, and the rent is made worſe. Neither do men put new wine into old bottles: elſe the bottles break, and the wine runneth out, and the bottles periſh: but they put new wine into new bottles, and both are preſerved. While he ſpake theſe things unto them, behold, there came a certain ruler, and worſhipped him, ſaying, My daughter is even now dead: but come and lay thy hand upon her, and ſhe ſhall live. And Jeſus aroſe, and followed him, and ſo did his diſciples. (And behold, a woman which was diſeaſed with an iſſue of blood twelve years, came behind him, and touched the hem of his garment. For ſhe ſaid within her ſelf, If I may but touch his garment, I ſhall be whole. But Jeſus turned him about, and when he ſaw her, he ſaid, Daughter, be of good comfort; thy faith hath made thee whole. And the woman was made whole from that hour.)

Then came to him.] Tho' the evangeliſts, in their enquiry concerning faſting, introduce John's diſciples putting queſtions to Chriſt, according to Matthew; the Phariſees by themſelves, according to Luke; and both, according to Mark; yet there is no diſagreement. For 'tis evident from the context, that the Phariſees, through envy, ſet John's diſciples upon Chriſt, and that both parties put queſtions to him, tho' with a different view. (V.)

Faſt oft.] This refers to private faſts, ſuch as the Phariſees performed to acquire reputation, and ſuch as the diſciples of the Baptiſt uſed for the captivity of their maſter, for whom they poured out their prayers to God. (G.)

The children of the bride-chamber.] This is an Hebraiſm, ſignifying thoſe who were admitted into the bride-chamber. Chriſt ſhewed the reaſon for which they faſted did not then become his diſciples; but that the time would come, when they, being deprived of their maſter, ſhould not undergo faſtings only, which were but the ſymbols of ſorrow, but mortifications of a more ſearching nature. Therefore, that it was reaſonable for them, who had afflictions to come, to partake of ſome ſmall interval of comfort in the mean time. Thus John's diſciples received a ſlight touch of their maſter's ſaying, who ſhadowed out Jeſus under the appellation of a bridegroom. (G.) Mark ii. 19. the ſons of the marriage, filii nuptiarum. 'Tis an Hebraiſm, whereby are ſignified thoſe who are called the friends and familiars of the bridegroom, who being invited to the marriage, endeavour to celebrate it with different ways of mirth and rejoicing. Thus, by uſing the like Hebraiſm, are theſe expreſſions ſubſtituted, the children of light, of the kingdom, of darkneſs, of pride, and of iniquity, &c. (V.)

Mourn.] See 1 Macc. iii. 17, 47. 2. Macc. xiii. 12. 1. Sam. xiv. 24 Whence to faſt on the ſabbath was held religious among the Jews, becauſe the ſabbath was dedicated to mirth. Chriſtians, after the example of the Jews, refrained from faſting on the Lord's days, and all the time of pentecoſt, becauſe the fifty days within that ſpace were as well as the Lord's day conſecrated to the memory of Chriſt's reſurrection. (G.) That is, to faſt, as appears from Mark ii. 19. and Luke v. 34. Therefore ſorrow is called faſting, either becauſe faſting makes men ſorrowful, or becauſe people full of ſorrow were wont to abſtain from meat, as is evident from Judges xx. 26. 1. Kings vii. 6. xxxi. 13. (V.)

There came a certain ruler.] Namely, of the ſynagogue, which Luke adds, viii. 41. It muſt be remark'd, that perſons of experienced probity were ſet over the Jewiſh ſynagogue. The Greeks called theſe officers Archyſynagogi as we learn from Acts xiii. 15. where mention is made of ſeveral rulers of the ſynagogue. However, there was one amongſt them who had the ſuperiority over the reſt, being a perſon of learning and good ſenſe, whoſe buſineſs was to expound the law, and make prayers. Though theſe archiſynagogi were not prieſts; for the duties of the prieſts were properly confined to the temple, whereas theſe reſided conſtantly within their cities. And when the temple was demoliſhed the difference of theſe orders ſtill ſubſiſted. (G.) Supply from Luke viii. v. 41. of the ſynagogue, whoſe name was Jair. This hiſtory is given us both by Mark and Luke, but we learn the preciſe time when it happened from the words of Matthew only, while he ſpake theſe things unto them, behold there came, &c. (V.)

My daughter is even now dead.] Becauſe Jair loved this daughter of his with a ſtrong affection, and had left her exceedingly bad and even at the point of death at home, 'tis probable he ſaid both to Chriſt, namely, my daughter is at the point of death, and is even now dead; or Matthew's words may be conſtrued thus, q. d. ſhe is a dead woman unleſs you come to her immediately, or rather, what ſeems more likely, Matthew willing to uſe brevity, put the laſt petition, acquainting him that his daughter was dead. (V.)

Lay thy hand upon her.] It was no new thing to the Jews how God was wont to ſhow this honour to the prophets in order for them to confer their gifts upon others, upon their interceſſions and prayers, which were figured out by the impoſition of hands. See Numbers xxvii 18, 20. 2 Kings v. 11. Impoſition of hands, properly means the efficacy of the divine power; for in that ſenſe it is to be underſtood, Acts iv. 30. Conſequently, becauſe the divine power was invoked by prayers for another, the impoſition of hands came to be accuſtomed with prayers. See below, xix. 13. However, Jair does not appear to have had ſuch elevated ſentiments concerning Chriſt, as the others who were in hopes, ſo they but touched him, to be healed of their diſtempers: Jair, 'tis to be believed, ſuppoſed that Chriſt was unable any other way, but by prayer, to cure his daughter. (G.)

Touched the hem of his garment.] This ſeems to allude to Malachy. iv. 2. where 'tis ſaid, healing in his wings, to Deut. xxii. 12. and to Zach. viii. 23. This was a particular mark of the Iſraelitiſh ſanctimony. (G.) The fimbria were the fringes or threads that hung down at the borders of the ſurcoat, the Jews being commanded to wear by the expreſs order of the Almighty, as a badge for diſtinguiſhing them from other nations, and as a mark of their holineſs and purity. See Numbers xv. 38. and Zach. viii. 23. The Romaniſts pretend to draw an invincible argument from this place, for the worſhipping of relicks, from the woman with the flux's touching the fringe of our Saviour's garment, when he had it on him. They infer, that veneration ought neceſſarily to be paid to that garment when it was put off him, and on this build the tenet of worſhipping the relicks of ſaints. Theſe ridiculous conſequences they admit not only as probable, but as abſolutely neceſſary, and irrefragable. The ſcripture, indeed, ſays, that holy men ſhould be praiſed and honoured juſtly, for the ſake of their pious and exemplary lives; but that we are not to make the worſhipping of ſaints any eſſential part of our religion. To pay handſome funeral honours to the bodies of devout men, as Stephen was honoured, and as John's diſciples buried the Baptiſt, every orthodox perſon will allow. But to dig up ſuch bodies when once buried, in order to preſerve their remains in cabinets, and to carry them about in proceſſions, embrace, fall proſtrate, offer vows, gifts and prayers to them, we not only diſallow, but likewiſe ſay, that 'tis a changing of worſhip from the Creator to the creature. The primitive church ſtood in awe of this, being warned by the apoſtle of the ſevere judgments of God upon thoſe who worſhipped and ſerved the creature more than the Creator, who ſays, Eſaiah xlii. 8. I am the Lord, that is my name, and my glory will I not give to another, neither my praiſe to graven images. (V.)

If I may but touch his garment, I ſhall be whole.] This woman ſeems to have had, in one reſpect, a juſt idea of Chriſt, but not ſo in another: her idea was juſt, in believing, that every part about Chriſt, as much as could be, was full of divine virtue: and as the oil, which was poured upon the head of the high-prieſt ran from the top to the borders of his garment, ſo ſhe ſuppoſed that a miraculous power lodged in, and diffuſed itſelf from every part about him. Her idea was not juſt, in thinking that this virtual emanation was owing more to nature, than to the will and diſpenſation of Chriſt himſelf. This opinion gave her ſome hope of drawing away ſecretly from him the cure of her flux. (G.)

Daughter, be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole.] 'Tis cuſtomary for ſuch as tranſact things in privacy to tremble during the performance, fearing to be found out, as this woman, who was apprehenſive that Chriſt would draw away from her touch as impure. But Chriſt made her ſenſible of her miſtake, ſignifying to her, that 'twas not the touch, but a ſtrong belief of the power of God that had conduced to make her whole. (G.)

And the woman was made whole from that hour.] From the hour, namely, wherein ſhe had touched the fringe or hem of his garment: Or the ſenſe of theſe words of Matthew is this: She was convinced of her being healed, which ſhe obtained by touching the fringe of his garment, from the moment wherein, Chriſt ſaid to her, thy faith hath made thee whole. See Mark v. where the account of this matter is told ſomewhat more copiouſly, and explained with greater accuracy. (V.)

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26. And when Jeſus came into the rulers houſe, and ſaw the minſtrels and the people making a noiſe, He ſaid unto them, give place, for the maid is not dead, but ſleepeth. And they laughed him to ſcorn. But when the people were put forth, he went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid aroſe. And the fame hereof went abroad into all that land.

Saw the minſtrels.] The Jews, in time of mourning, made uſe of minſtrels, who played full ſeven days, as appears from Gen. l. 10. 'Tis probable, that funeral rites, eſpecially the cuſtom of interring bodies (which, amongſt all other nations, is more ancient than burning them) derives it's original from the times immediately ſucceeding the deluge, to make mankind abhor eating one another, which was one cruel cuſtom, amongſt ſeveral others, that had diffuſed itſelf over the old world. (G.) Minſtrels, in Syriac zemâre, from zamar, he played upon a pipe. The evangeliſt here, and below, chap xi. 17. makes uſe of this word. Moreover, it was a very ancient cuſtom among the Jews, to have minſtrels, or theſe pipe-players, at mourning for the dead, called by the Talmudiſts, chalilin, from chalil, a pipe. We read very often of this cuſtom in the Talmudic books, and in the rabbinical writings, eſpecially in the Jeruſalem Talmud, in the treatiſe of benedictions, chap. 3. and in that of the Sabbath, chap. 23. in Baba Mezia, chap. 6. and in Rabbi Solomon's commentary on Ezekiel, chap. 25. where he ſays; "They are perſons uſually at the ſolemnization of the rites for the dead; at places of ſorrow and gladneſs; but the method they keep at a wedding, and a burial, is very different. (Trem. and Jun.) This cuſtom of having minſtrels or pipe-players at funerals, ſeems to have come among the Jews from the practice of other nations. See Jeremy ix. 17, 18. Lucian, in his dialogue of Sorrow, Ovid in his 4th book De faſtis, and St. Ambroſe in his 8th book upon Luke. (V.)

The maid is not dead, but ſleepeth.] Theſe ſpeeches carry the air of old tradition, being repugnant to the Sadducees, whoſe opinion Jair's family ſeem to favour. (G.) That is, ſhe is not dead, as not to riſe again, but in the laſt day, but ſhe ſhall riſe again immediately; whence her death, which is to continue for ſo ſhort a ſpace, is not to be called ſo much death, as a ſleep, or the image of death. (V.)

They laughed him to ſcorn.] Namely, becauſe they did not comprehend the meaning of his words. Beſides, Chriſt makes uſe of this ambiguity of expreſſion, according to the teſtimony of Mark, on the ſame account, as when he commanded the parents of the maid, and thoſe with them, not to ſpeak a word of it to any one, as appears from Luke viii. Peter, James, and John. (V.)

He took her by the hand.] Juſt as we are uſed to do, when we rouze any one out of his ſleep. By which Chriſt ſhewed them, that God was as ready to recall the dead to life, as to rouze the ſleepy; which is of great ſervice to confirm our faith. (G.)

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. And when Jeſus departed thence, two blind men followed him, crying, and ſaying, Thou ſon of David, have mercy on us. And when he was come into the houſe, the blind men came to him: and Jeſus ſaith unto them, Believe ye that I am able to do this? They ſaid unto him, Yea, Lord. Then touched he their eyes, ſaying, According to your faith, be it unto you. And their eyes were opened, and Jeſus ſtraitway charged them, ſaying, See that no man know it. But they, when they were departed, ſpread abroad his fame in all that country.

Believe ye that I am able to do this ?] He who could reſtore ſight to the blind, was not ignorant whether they believed or no; but his reaſon for putting this queſtion to them, was, that they ſhould confeſs that faith with their mouths, which they retained in their hearts. (V.)

According to your faith.] "The performance of miracles, (ſays St. Thomas) "is attributed to faith, on two accounts; firſt, "becauſe miracles are appointed for the confirmation of faith; ſecondly, becauſe they proceed from the omnipotence of God, "upon which faith relies." (V.)

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38. As they went out, behold, they brought to him a dumb man poſſeſſed with a devil. And when the devil was caſt out, the dumb ſpake: and the multitudes marvelled, ſaying, It was never ſo ſeen in Iſrael. But the Phariſees ſaid, He caſteth out the devils through the prince of the devils. And Jeſus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their ſynagogues, and preaching the goſpel of the kingdom, and healing every ſickneſs, and every diſeaſe among the people. But when he ſaw the multitudes, he was moved with compaſſion on them, becauſe they fainted, and were ſcattered abroad, as ſheep having no ſhepherd. Then ſaith he unto his diſciples, The harveſt truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harveſt, that he will ſend forth labourers into his harveſt.

And villages, teaching in their ſynagogues.] The ſynagogues were confined, for the moſt part, to the cities only, to which all reſorted who were within the juriſdiction and territories of ſuch cities. But we find, from this place, that there were ſynagogues erected in the larger and more frequented villages. So was it with the ancient Chriſtians, when Chriſtianity firſt began to flouriſh. (G.)

And healing every ſickneſs.] That is, ſickneſs of all kinds. So Gen. ii. 16. Of every tree of the garden thou mayeſt freely eat, that is, of every ſpecies of fruit; where the word tree or wood is put for the fruit. Exod. ix. 6. And all the cattle of Ægypt died, that is, there died of every ſpecies of cattle; and below, in the ſame chapter, ver. 25. And the hail ſmote throughout all the land of Ægypt, all that was in the field, both man and beaſt. After the ſame manner the apoſtle ſpeaks, in his epiſtle to Philip, chap. ii. Every one ſeek for what is their own, that is, almoſt all, or a great many, or many, a large multitude, &c. (V.)

Becauſe they fainted, and were ſcattered abroad.] Chriſt was convinced of the miſerable condition of the Jews, who were divided into different opinions by the Phariſees and Sadducees, not juſtly knowing what they were to embrace, or what to avoid. So that the word fainted, will properly enough ſignify hard, or ill uſage; and ſcattered abroad, a deſire to embrace novel opinions. Compare Jeremy l. 6. (G.)

As ſheep havig no ſhepherd.] He who looks after his flock with a paſtoral mind, conſults not his own, but the advantage of his flock. (G.) Nothing can be more miſerable than for ſheep to want a ſhepherd; which the ſcripture ſo frequently repeats both in the Old and New Teſtament; for ſheep, by reaſon of their want of cunning, of ſtrength, and velocity of foot, are expoſed to the injuries of all other beaſts, when they have no ſhepherd. (V.)

The harveſt truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few.] This is what John iv. 35. ſays, Look on the fields, for they are white already to harveſt; that is, the inclinations of many are ſufficiently grounded with the expectation of a more wholeſome doctrine. The type of this hiſtory is in the 11th chapter of Ruth. (G.) This is a proverbial ſpeech of Chriſt's, to ſignify that the people were numerous; but the paſtors, fit to govern them, few.

CHAP. X.

In this chapter, the apoſtles are impowered to cure diſeaſes. They are ſent to preach the goſpel. Peace affliction, perſeverance, flight, fear, love of parents and the like.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. AND when he had called unto him his twelve diſciples, he gave them power againſt unclean ſpirits to caſt them out, and to heal all manner of ſickneſs, and all manner of diſeaſe. Now the names of the twelve apoſtles are theſe; The firſt, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother, James the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother, Philip, and Bartholomew, Thomas, and Matthew the publican, James the ſon of Alpheus, and Lebbeus, whoſe ſirname was Thaddeus, Simon the Canaanite, and Judas Iſcariot, who alſo betrayed him.

And when he had called unto him his twelve diſciples.] Supply thoſe diſciples, whom, before he began to preach his famous ſermon on the mount, he had choſen to be apoſtles out of the reſt of his diſciples, or had ordained not to remain in one certain place, but to be ſent immediately throughout the world to preach the goſpel to mankind, and found his church by degrees. So much is evident from comparing what is here ſaid v. 1. and 2. with the paſſages of Mark iii. v. 13, 14, 15, and xvi. v. 7. Luke vi. 12, and 13. (V.)

He gave them power.] The divinity of Chriſt appears here more evident than in any part of the foregoing; 'tis true that the prophets wrought miracles, but had not power of themſelves to give the virtue of executing miracles to others, no, not Moſes to Joſhua, nor Elias to Elijah. (G.) Chriſt did not beſtow on or communicate to the apoſtles that power of his, by virtue whereof, as he was true God, he performed miracles: on the contrary, he endued them with a perſwaſive faculty of ſpeech, and gave them power of exhibiting external ſigns, to which Chriſt, as the author of miracles, added his efficacious virtue. So that the words of the apoſtles, as alſo of the prophets at which miracles are ſaid to be performed, were only moral inſtruments, ſhewing what God would execute in their preſence, according to the promiſe which Chriſt made them concerning miracles to be performed by them. (V.)

Apoſtles.] This name was current among the Jews after the deſtruction of their city; for the aſſeſſors of the patriarchs were called apoſtles. In the firſt ages of chriſtianity thoſe who were ſent by the churches to execute their orders and functions were, after this example, ſtiled apoſtles by ſuch as ſent them. This appears from 2 Cor. viii. 23. Phil. xi. 27. Though the word Apoſtle has a very extenſive conſtruction in itſelf. (For Chriſt himſelf is diſtinguiſhed by that name Heb. iii. 1.) Yet 'tis very probable that Chriſt by this name alluding to the cuſtom of the Hebrews, and, at the ſame time, to the hiſtory of Moſes who ſent twelve ſpies into Canaan, where we read the Hebrew word to ſend, and, in the ſeptuagint, the Greek word Apoſtellein, was pleaſed to ſignify that he had meſſengers, or Apoſtles, with orders, but of a far different nature, to go and bring back the fruits which he deſired. See Acts i. 21. After Chriſt's reſurrection the ſame honour was conferred upon Matthew, Paul, and Barnabas; and probably upon other founders of Churches. (G.) Baronius in his annals will have the Greek word Apoſtolos to mean ſuch perſons as were conſtantly with the high-prieſt to give him their advice. This is a precarious conjecture. Neither, as the ſame cardinal ſuppoſes, do the words of Epiphanius evince it, who aſſerts, that ſome part of the Jews in his days dwelt at Tiberias, and other places of Paleſtine, who acknowledged one amongſt them to be the head of their diſperſed countrymen, whom they called a patriarch; who had certain aſſeſſors or councellors joined to him, who were called apoſtles. But this paſſage of Epiphanius does not evince the intent of Baronius, becauſe Epiphanius ſpeaks of the councellors of the patriarchs of his time, not of the councellors of the high-prieſt in the days of Chriſt, which high-prieſt is no where to be found called a patriarch, nay, that name is not read of till after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, when the Jew-Greeks conferred it upon the Archiſynagogi or rulers of the ſynagogue. Beſides, Epiphanius does not ſay that the Jews of his time, ſo long as they ſpoke Hebrew, ever uſed the words, patriarch, apoſtles, which, indeed, is not likely, ſeeing we meet with no traces of theſe appellations in the writings of the antient Rabbins. Conſequently Epiphanius meant that the ruler of the ſynagogue, and his aſſeſſors were uſually called in Hebrew by names which anſwered to the Greek words, patriarch, and apoſtle. And in this ſenſe Luke ſaid chap. vi. 13. whom alſo he called apoſtles. (V.)

The firſt.] Peter is called the firſt on account of the primacy of his apoſtleſhip, as Auſtin alledges in Tract. 124. upon John, wherein he confers this perſonal priviledge upon him, as being the firſt who, after the deſcent of the holy ghoſt, preach'd the goſpel not only to the Jews, as appears from Acts ii. and iii. but alſo to the Gentiles, as is evident from Acts x, xi, and xv. to the end that both being united in Chriſt, the catholic church might flouriſh. Eraſmus tells us that in ſeveral Greek manuſcripts Peter is called the firſt by Mark chap. iii 16. which books the celebrated Beza, the diſciple of Calvin, has followed in his latin tranſlation. (V.)

Simon, who is called Peter.] The ſirname is put here to diſtinguiſh him from the other Simon, who is, called the Canaanite, from Cana a village of Galilee, where our Lord converted the water into wine. Cana ſignifies a zealous perſon, whence Simon the Canaanite, is called Zelotes Luke vi Though Scaliger will have this Simon the Canaanite, to be named, ſo as being of the ſect of the Zelots, mentioned by Joſephus, from which he turned to follow Chriſt. Hegeſippus, and Euſebius, againſt the received opinion, pretend that this Simon Zelotes, was Simon the ſucceſſor of James the brother of our Lord, in the ſee of Jeruſalem, who, at 120 years of age, ſuffered martyrdom under the emperor Trajan. (V.)

Lebbeus, whoſe ſirname was Thaddeus.] I am of opinion that this name is the ſame as Judas mentioned by Luke, and that the Jews refrained pronouncing it becauſe of the claſhing of the letters. (G.) St. Jerome ſays, that the hiſtory of the church acquaints us that the apoſtle Thaddeus was ſent to Edeſſa to Abaragus king of Choſdroena; being called, by the evangeliſt Luke, Judas the ſon of James, and in other places Lebbeus, and that 'tis to be believed he was called by three names, as Simon Peter. (V.)

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. Theſe twelve Jeſus ſent forth, and commanded them, ſaying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not. But go rather to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael. And as ye go, preach, ſaying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the ſick, cleanſe the lepers, raiſe the dead, caſt out devils, freely ye have received, freely give. Provide neither gold, nor ſilver, nor braſs in your purſes: Nor ſcrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither ſhoes, nor yet ſtaves: (for the workman is worthy of his meat.)

Into the way of the Gentiles.] That is, towards the Gentiles, Jer. xi. 8. Chriſt gives his Ambaſſadors a prohibition to go out of the territories of Paleſtine; but leaves them at liberty to paſs through the country of the Samaritans (for thoſe who travelled up to Jeruſalem had an eaſy paſſage out of Galilee,) though not to enter their towns. The Jews are here preferred. See Acts xi. 39. (G.) An Hebraiſm, meaning, to the Gentiles. So our Lord enjoined his diſciples before his reſurrection, becauſe, agreeably to the wiſdom of God, it became them to preach the word firſt to the Jews, who proving contumacious, and they thinking them unworthy of eternal life, then was their buſineſs, after his reſurrection, to turn unto the Gentiles, as it is ſad Acts iii. 46. and Rom. xv. 8. (V.)

Samaritans.] The Samaritans are called Gentiles, who were removed by the Aſſyrian king out of places adjoining to the perſian gulph (which is a part of the red ſea) and planted in the cities of Samaria in the room of the ten tribes of Iſrael, who were carried thence into Aſſyria by his predeceſſor Salmanazar. Theſe nations or Gentiles were diſtinguiſhed from the reſt for their worſhipping the true God in ſome part, and for their waiting the coming of the Meſſias. Their country was ſituated in an exceeding pleaſant and fruitful part of the world, though no way to be compared for largeneſs either to Judæa, or Galilee. The name of the country had its original from the regal city within it, and the city derived its appellation from Semer the prince of the country, which Omri king of Iſrael purchaſed for two talents of ſilver, to build this large, beautiful, and ſtrong city, among the other cities of the ten tribes. (V.)

To the loſt ſheep.] See below, xv. 24. Rom. xv. 18. Luke i. 54, 55. Chriſt was not copious in his favours to the Gentiles, waiting, with the utmoſt impatience, the converſion of the Jews to his doctrine, to the end other nations might follow their example, and be converted to him. (G.)

Freely ye have received, freely give.] Chriſt ſhews, that his commanding them to diſpenſe the qualifications and powers conferred upon them freely, is neither an heavy or an unjuſt injunction. For to require or obtain a reward for ſuch an action as is directly ordered for the honour of God, is, without doubt, a diminution of his glory. "For, according to Ulpian, tho' ſome things are received "with honour, yet the asking for them is attended with diſ-"honour." Beſides, as Jerome remarks upon the prophet Micah, thoſe who wanted advice of the prophets, uſually made preſents to them; examples of which, we find in 1 Sam. ix. 7, 8. and 1 Kings xiii. 9. Yet the prophets did not always receive ſuch gifts, but conſider'd maturely before-hand, both the circumſtances of the time and perſons, before they did any thing of that kind. See 2 Kings v. 26. Daniel v. 17. Gen xiv. 22. Chriſt, who ſaw the doctrine of the Goſpel likely to ſuffer a great deal, and his diſciples to be expoſed to infamy and detraction, if they were influenced to take preſents for ſuch actions as were neceſſarily calculated to bear witneſs of the truth only, forbade them not only to refrain making mercenary bargains, but to avoid every thing that tended thereto, or to make advantage of their doctrine: which was what the true apoſtles and their ſucceſſors obſerved with the greateſt ſacredneſs. Tho' both Chriſt and his apoſtles, not only in their doctrine, but by their example, have taught us, that 'tis reaſonable that thoſe who have abandoned all things for the ſalvation of others, ſhould receive an honeſt maintenance from them in return. (G.) That perſon executes his charge freely, who governs and feeds his flock freely; who, neither through deſire of gain, or making advantage, takes the office upon him, tho' he receives a competent maintenance from his flock, that is, from the Church, as we are taught by Chriſt in the 10th verſe below, and by Paul, 1 Cor. ix. 2 Cor. xi. (V.)

Provide neither gold, &c.] Our Saviour having laid an injunction on his apoſtles, not to take any rewards for the cures they performed, did not doubt but that it would ſoon come into their minds. We ought then, before we pretend to begin this journey, to have every thing well provided for it: Chriſt making this reflection to himſelf, affirmed to them, that God, whoſe affairs they managed, would take care to provide them with things neceſſary. But, to make them underſtand his precept the better, he commands them to go without taking any proviſions or neceſſaries along with them. The word here, to provide, ſignifies, to gather up together beforehand. (G.) That is, do not be ſollicitous to poſſeſs, or, as Beza tranſlates it, to acquire gold, and other things, requiſite to make your journey eaſy and pleaſant to your ſelves; but, without making any delay, or thinking upon any of theſe things, juſt as you are, contenting your ſelves with the ſtaffs which you have in your hands, and ſoles which you wear in your ſhoes, put forward immediately into the road. This command, which our Lord enjoined his diſciples to follow in the journey they were going to take, he likewiſe laid upon the other ſeventy-two diſciples, mentioned Luke xvi. 1. In ſhort, neither Matthew, Mark, nor Luke, prohibit the uſe of ſtaffs or ſhoes; but Chriſt's injunction is againſt ſeeking to acquire more convenient ſtaffs, or ſhoes, than thoſe they have already, for fear the time ſhould be delayed, and their journey obſtructed. Whence Port Royal tranſlates elegantly in this place: "Ne vous mettes point en peine d'avoir de l'or." From which words 'tis plainly evident, that the poſſeſſion of gold is not prohibited, or of any of the other things that follow, but they are commanded not to be over ſollicitous about their acquiſition, leſt the journey enjoined them to perform be any way retarded or hinder'd. (V.)

In your purſes.] So in our tranſlation, but expreſs'd by the word zonas, or girdles, in the Greek: The ancients carried money hidden in their girdles. Thus the young men, in Plautus's play called the Mercator, or Merchant, ſays, "I am juſt for going, I have loſt "my girdle;" and in the Tyrant, "Looſe your girdles." Hence the proverb, Zonam perdidit, "He has loſt his girdle;" pointing to thoſe who have no money. (V.)

For the workman is worthy of his meat.] Luke x. 7. of his hire. Q. d. I command you not to be ſollicitous about obtaining ſuch proviſions as are neceſſary to ſuſtain life in your journey; but I give you power, who are appointed miniſters of the goſpel, to live in obedience to the precepts contained in the Goſpel. Gregory, in his 17th homily on the Goſpel, ſays, "One labour of ours is re-"warded with a double hire; one in our journey, one in our "country, one which ſupports us in our labour, one which rewards "us in the reſurrection. We ought to make the preſent hire ſub-"ſervient to that which is future, in order to puſh us on with "ardor to obtain the ſame.: "A true preacher of the word ought "then not to publiſh his doctrine for the ſake of a reward, but "only to receive ſuch ſubſiſtence as may enable him to preach. "For what man ſoever preaches, with a view to acquire either "praiſe or money in this life, without doubt deprives himſelf of the "reward he ſhould receive in heaven; and what man ſoever con-"ſults the praiſe of God more by his preaching, than his own "intereſt in this world, or ſtrives only to gain ſuch a livelihood "by his preaching, as may deliver him from want, and enable him "to go on in his courſe, certainly nothing can hinder ſuch a man "from obtaining his reward in his country, becauſe he took his "proviſion in the road." (V.)

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. And into whatſoever city or town ye ſhall enter, enquire who in it is worthy, and there abide till ye go thence. And when ye come into an houſe, ſalute it. And if the houſe be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you. And whoſoever ſhall not receive you, nor hear your words: when ye depart out of that houſe, or city, ſhake off the duſt of your feet. Verily I ſay unto you, It ſhall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrha, in the day of judgment, than for that city.

If the houſe be worthy.] The houſe here is put for the family, John iv. 53. 1 Cor. xvi. 15. Phil. iv. 22. But theſe paſſages make a diſtinction between the family and the head thereof. In this place the maſter of the family is to be underſtood. The word worthy here, means a family that is affable, and not averſe to religious duties. Pothinus, biſhop of Lyons, being ask'd by the governor, Who was the God of the Chriſtians? made anſwer, "If “ you are worthy, you ſhall know.” (G.) Luke x. 6. If the ſon of peace be there, that is, if any who is worthy of peace be there, let your peace reſt upon him. Auſtin ſays, “ That any one is a “ ſon of peace to us, from the moment he pays obedience to God, “ and puts his truſt in him. 'Tis not ſaid, Upon whomſoever your “ peace ſhall reſt, he ſhall be the ſon of peace; but the apoſtle ſays, “ Where the ſon of peace ſhall be, there let your peace reſt upon “ him. So that before this peace is told, the ſon of peace is there, “ who is known before-hand by the Lord, tho' not by the evangeliſt. We, therefore, who are ignorant, who, or who is not, “ a ſon of peace, ſhould not make any exceptions, but ſtrive to “ ſalute all unto whom we preach this peace. We need be un“ der no apprehenſions of loſing it, ſo he be not a ſon of peace “ unto whom we preach, and we are ſtrangers to the affair: But “ it will revert upon us, that is, this preaching will do us good, “ and not him; yet if the peace we preach ſhall reſt upon him, “ 'twill do the ſame on us and him.” (V.)

Shake off the duſt of your feet.] This cuſtom does not ſeem to me directly to contain a denouncing of God's judgment, ſuch as Nehemiah's ſhaking the arm, or what the Romans would have us underſtand by throwing the ſtone; I am rather induced to believe that it means no more, than if the apoſtle ſhould ſay, We come hither, not for our advantage, but purely to be of ſervice to you: But becauſe you refuſe now to take the advice we would give you, look to your own ſelves, we have no farther buſineſs with you, neither do we deſire the leaſt thing from you. See Luke ix. 5, 10, 11. (G.) Mark, in his 6th chapter, adds, as a teſtimony to them. This was, according to Origen, hom. 18. in gen. to let them ſee, that the very duſt which they had collected in their journey, which they had undertaken for them, would prove a teſtimony againſt them in the day of judgment, who would neither receive you, or liſten to your preaching. (V.)

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Behold, I ſend you forth a ſheep in the midſt of wolves; be ye therefore wiſe as ſerpents, and harmleſs as doves. But beware of men, for they will deliver you up to the councels, and they will ſcourge you in their ſynagogues. And ye ſhall be brought before governors and kings for my ſake, for a teſtimony againſt them and the Gentiles. But when they deliver you up, take no thought how or what ye ſhall ſpeak, for it ſhall be given you in that ſame hour what you ſhall ſpeak. For it is not ye that ſpeak, but the Spirit of your Father which ſpeaketh in you.

I ſend you forth as ſheep.] That is, weak and unarmed, and deſtitute of all human aſſiſtance, not to be expoſed to one ravenous wolf, but to many. The firſt preachers of the Goſpel had as many enemies to encounter with, as there were perſons ignorant of the truth amongſt both the Jews and Gentiles, and yet had nothing more to defend them againſt their oppoſition, than the promiſe which Chriſt had made them: “ Upon this rock will I “ build my church, and the gates of hell ſhall nor prevail againſt “ it, behold I am with you at all times till the end of the world.” Now if one wolf is enough to make havock among a large flock, how muſt the poor flock of Chriſt have eſcap'd in the midſt of ſo many wolves, had not the ſame hand preſerved it which did Daniel among the lions? (V.)

In the midſt of wolves.] Under this name, in this and other paſſages of ſcripture, are figured out perſons of a tyranical temper, and ſuch as perſecute good men through a native fierceneſs and cruelty which they poſſeſs; whence it follows, that, like wolves, they thirſt after the blood of the people, and are ſeldom ſatisfied therewith. The fear of theſe wolves makes mercenary ſhepherds run away, that is, ſuch as are led away by avaricious views, not by any zeal for the glory of God; whence the ſheep, upon their revolt, are miſerably harraſſed and ſcattered. Yet ſometimes it happens, that theſe very wolves are metamorphos'd into ſheep, or ſhepherds, by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, as appears from Paul's example; and then that prophecy of Iſaiah is accompliſh'd, namely, “ The wolf and the lamb ſhall live, and feed together,” that is, in the ſame church. (V.)

Wiſe as ſerpents.] I do not know whether Chriſt alluded, by this ſaying, to that which not only a great number of prophane writers, but what David himſelf hath advanced, namely, that ſerpents are vaſtly careful to ſtop their ears againſt magic incantations, Pſal. lviii. 5. They have obſerved, that ſerpents are very cautious to avoid being trod upon by men's feet: However, 'tis natural enough to ſuppoſe, that quick-ſightedneſs is pointed out here, which is peculiar to ſerpents. (G.) Four arguments are produced for the wiſdom or prudence of the ſerpent. The firſt is, that when it perceives old age coming on, it ſeeks the rock; “ It creeps into a hole, ſtrives to paſs through it flat, and puts off “ old age.” This is an unanimous opinion. The ſecond is, that avoiding a man cloathed or armed, it will boldly attack him naked and defenceleſs. Yet we are told the contrary from Euſtathius, from the author of the epiſtle Ad præſidium, under Jerome's name, from Iſidore Hiſpalenſis, and from Olaus Magnns, who writes, that he had ſeveral times made the experiment, whether ſerpents would hurt a man naked and defenceleſs, and found they would not. The third is, that upon a man's ſtriking it, it ſhall only endeavour to ſecure its head, but expoſe all the reſt of its body. The fourth is, that when it creeps to a fountain to drink, it ſhall emit its poiſon before-hand, and then drink the water, “ for fear the “ poyſon mixing among the water ſhould give it its own death,” as the author of the epiſtle above advances. Pliny has ſeveral obſervations on this head. (V.)

And harmleſs as doves.] In the Greek expreſſed by the word akeræoi, which ſome tranſlate mild, becauſe, according to grammarians, akeræon, which refers to a beaſt, ſignifies unhorned, mild, and harmleſs, which epithet is excellently adapted to a dove, which, as Cyril of Alexandria ſays, in his 15 book, De adoratione, is the mildeſt and tameſt creature living. This has made ſeveral who have conſider'd the tameneſs of this creature, and found no gall veſſel near its liver, aſſert, that it had no gall at all, when, in fact, the gall lies in the back, and joined to the inwards. This is witneſſed by Horus Hierogl. book 2. chap. 45. Pliny, book 11. chap. 37. and Galen in his treatiſe of Melancholy. But tho' it be true, that the dove is of a quiet and peaceable diſpoſition, as Ovid alledges in the 7th book of his Metam. fable 13. yet in this place of the evangeliſt the word akeræon, ſhould not be explained of the mildneſs of a dove, againſt the ſenſe of the fathers, and the Mahometan doctors themſelves, eſpecially ſeeing there is not one paſſage of the prophets where the dove is called mild; but we have a paſſage in Hoſea, vii. 11. where the dove is called ſimple, as the ſerpent is called wiſe, Gen. iii. 5. It muſt principally be noted, that Chriſt does not commend the ſimplicity of the dove, or the prudence of the ſerpent, ſingly, or parted from one another: but his commendation ariſes from their being joined together, ſo that what is wanting in one may be ſupplied by the other, or what the one exceeds too much in, the other may take from the exuberance: in imitation of two ſorts of phyſic, which, divided, are hurtful and prejudicial, but upon a third kind's being made up, which is uſeful and healthful, the temperature becomes juſt, and the mixture takes off the hurtful qualities of each. Gregory Nazianzen, having this before his eyes, ſpeaks to the following effect, in his 19th. oration made concerning his father: “ He mixed the prudence of the ſerpent, and the ſim“ plicity of the dove in ſo juſt a medium, that he never let “ the former degenerate into a crafty over-reaching of others, “ nor the latter into a blockiſh ſtupidity, but formed out of “ both, as much as in him lay, a ſpecies of virtue the moſt “ perfect and abſolute that could be.” Jerome in his letter to Paulinus, De inſtitutione monachi, ſays, “ Harbour within you the “ ſimplicity of a dove, for fear you learn to circumvent others; “ and the wiſdom of a ſerpent, leſt others be too cunning for “ you.” St. Paul ſpeaks, Romans xvi. 19. in this ſenſe; “ I “ would have you wiſe unto that which is good, and ſimple “ concerning evil.” So Fauſtus Rhegien. De liber arb. book 2. laſt chap. ſays, “ Let us make man harmleſs, let us make him “ wiſe; harmleſs, for fear his cunning ſhould be detrimental to “ others; wiſe, leſt his want of foreſight expoſe him to miſtakes.” So Martial book 10th. Epig. 47.

Prudens ſimplicitas, pares amici,

Prudence and ſimplicity are fellow-friends.

The Arabians ſay, that the ſimplicity of the dove appears in nothing more, than in her not flying away when her young ones are taken away, but continuing about her neſt. St. Jerome acquaints us, in his remarks upon Hoſea, chap. vii. 11. “ That other “ birds are ready to protect their young with the hazard of their “ lives; and, on ſeeing a hawk, ſerpent, raven, or crow coming “ near them, flutter about, fall down upon, bite, and claw their “ opponents, teſtifying their concern by their ſhrieking voice; “ whereas the dove alone neither ſeems to complain for, nor to “ want again her young, when once deprived of them.” Tho' this aſſertion holds true in ſeveral ſpecies of doves, yet 'tis not ſo with regard to all kinds. For Damir the Arabian informs us, that there is a certain ſpecies of doves ſo extremely fond of their young, that very often, upon ſeeing them in the hand of the faulconer, they will kill themſelves. Beſides, the moſt part of writers commend the dove for her affection towards her young, as may be ſeen In Pliny, l. 10. c. 34. Ariſt. hiſt. l. 9. c. 7. Ælian, hiſt. l. 3. c. 43. Athenæus, l. 9. c. 11. Hence others aſſert, that the ſimplicity of the dove evidently diſcovers itſelf, in her not taking care to avoid the nets and ſnares laid for her, when ſhe ſtoops to get meat. (V.)

Beware of men; they will ſcourge you in their ſynagogues.] The apoſtles are commanded here to beware of men, that is, not to create any diſputes with other people about the advantages and honours of this life, but to avoid all offences, as much as poſſible, by the incorruptneſs of the truth, and not to laviſh away the doctrines of the truth upon ſuch as are in a deplorable ſtate of improbity and contumacy. The phraſe, in their ſynagogues, carries ſo much obſcurity along with it, in the opinion of the moſt learned men, that the beſt and moſt faithful reading cannot eſcape their ſuſpicion. But they are in the wrong to ſuppoſe, that theſe ſynagogues are to be taken for the Jewiſh oratories. However, 'tis certain that ſynagogues are called civil and juridical aſſemblies. See Macc. vii. 12. The words then in this paſſage climb from the ſynedria to the ſynagogues. The great ſynagogue, hinted in 2 Chron. xxx. 2. and 1 Macc. xiv. 28. was ſuch an aſſembly. The event, which anſwers, in every tittle, to the words of Chriſt, will prove what I ſay to be true, Acts iv. 15. and v. 16, 21. Beſides, it appears from Acts, that the apoſtles were ſcourged before ſuch extraordinary aſſemblies. Theſe ſynagogues may be alſo taken, in the common acceptation, for thoſe places of aſſembly which were out of the juriſdiction of the Romans. See Acts xxii. 19. and xxvi. 11. (G.)

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. And the brother ſhall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child: and the children ſhall riſe up againſt their parents, and cauſe them to be put to death. And ye ſhall be hated of all men for my name's ſake: but he that endureth to the end, ſhall be ſaved. But when they perſecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I ſay unto you, Ye ſhall not have gone over the cities of Iſrael, till the Son of man be come. The diſciple is not above his maſter, nor the ſervant above his lord. It is enough for the diſciple that he be as his maſter, and the ſervant as his lord: if they have called the maſter of the houſe Beelzebub, how much more ſhall they call them of his houſhold?

And ye ſhall be hated of all men.] Q. d. You ſhall be hated of the Jews and Gentiles, men and women, noble and ignoble, friends and foes: "The grace of God our Saviour, ſays the apoſtle, Titus ii. 11. "hath appeared to all men, and yet the ſervants of grace "are hated of all men." John ſays, "If any man ſin, we have "an advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the juſt, who is the "propitiation for ſin, not for us only, but for all the world." Fulgentius, in his book of Incarnation and Grace, ſays thus; "The prophet ſaid, All nations whatſoever, which thou haſt made, "ſhall come and adore before thee, and glorify thy name for ever- "more. But the Lord ſpeaks to the faithful, Ye ſhall be hated "of all men for my name." Does this make any difference or repugnance in ſcripture? God forbid. (V.)

When they perſecute you in this, flee into another.] The ſenſe of which is this: though you are conſtrained by force to depart out of one city; ceaſe not, nevertheleſs, to perform that which you are commanded. Therefore withdraw not into any obſcure place where you may flatter yourſelves with ſafety, but enter into ſome other city, and there make trial of the fruits of your miſſion. (G.) Hillary upon Matthew puts a conſtruction upon this paſſage regarding the ſecond miſſion of the apoſtles, after the reſurrection of Chriſt, to make the ſenſe run thus; withdraw from the city of the Jews, to the city of the Gentiles; for I foretell you that neither you nor your ſucceſſors are to complete the bringing over the cities of Iſrael to the perfection of the goſpel, before the ſon of man comes, namely, to judge the world, or before the conſummation of the world. He that flies from perſecution and yet continues to act in the neceſſary miniſtry of the church, acts up to the commandment of God; but he that flies away, ſo that the flock of Chriſt is deprived of that nouriſhment which it lives upon in a ſpiritual ſenſe, is a mercenary wretch, who ſees the wolf coming and flies, and leaves the ſheep to ſhift for themſelves. Thus Auſtin, in his 180th epiſtle to Honoratus, where he argues with great copiouſneſs, learning, and art, when 'tis the duty of the paſtors of the church to fly from or ſtand againſt a perſecution. (V.)

Ye ſhall not have gone over the cities, before, &c.] What coming is to be underſtood here, is not agreed on by interpreters. It appears to me, that the coming of Chriſt is pointed out in theſe books by different ways, and that not only the preſence of his body, but his miraculous power is couched in them. See John xiv. 18. where I think 'tis very evident, that by the coming of Chriſt is ſignified the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt. Add to this Acts xi. 33. Luke xxiv. 49. Acts i. 4, 5, 8. So that what follows will be excellently connected together: For if Chriſt could not arrive at that glory, but through ſuch a train of vaſt difficulties, the followers of Chriſt, ought to ſuſtain the ſame hard condition. (G.) That is, you ſhall not run through all the cities of Iſrael, by flying from one, and then entering into another, till the ſon of man ſhall come, that is, to judgment, or till the conſummation of the world; q. d. my followers ſhall have cities enough in ſtore to take refuge in, when perſecution threatens them. (V.)

Beelzebub.] I am extremely pleaſed with the remark that ſome perſons make, who have acquired a fine character by their expoſitions of ſcripture, namely, that the Hebrews commonly change the names of the heathen gods, into others of a diſhonourable ſtamp; for example, Bethlehem, i. e. the houſe of God, they called Bethaven, the houſe of vanity. Juſt ſo the God which the Accaronite, and other Phœnicians, called Beelſame, i. e. Dia Ouranion, the Jews called Beelzebub, that is, Jupiter Muſcarius. But it may be demanded, whence the original of this contumelious name came? I will acquaint you with what I know of it. The ancient Jews are unanimous in telling us how, among other privileges which God gave the temple at Jeruſalem, it had this likewiſe; namely, that notwithſtanding the prodigious number of victims which were ſacrificed every day, not a fly was to be ſeen in the temple; which the famous Jupiter Olympius, among the Gentiles, being unable to perform, and his temple ſwarming with millions of flies, the Jews, for that reaſon, called him Beelzebub, or Jupiter Muſcarius. Beſides, the Jews, being taught from the prophets, that the heathen gods were dæmons, and that the oracles which were given out of the ſtatues of ſuch like gods, were not by virtue of the operation of the ſun and moon, which the Gentiles ſuppoſed, but of unclean ſpirits, to whom, in effect, all the worſhip and honour redounded which they paid to Jupiter, called the prince of bad dæmons by that name, whereby they named the prince of the falſe gods, in whom they believed. (G.) That is, the prince of devils; for chap. ix. above, our Saviour is charged with caſting out devils in the name of Beelzebub. "Beelzebub, ſays Jerome, "was as an idol of the Accaronites, which the book of "Kings calls the idol of flies; Beel, or Bel, or Baal; zebub ſigni- "fies a fly: ſo that they called the prince of devils by the name "the dirtieſt idol in the world, having the name of fly annexed "to it for its uncleanneſs." Yet 'tis more probable to think that this God of the Accaronites was called Beelzebub from driving away the flies from his temples; which thing is attributed to Hercules by Pliny and Solinus. And likely, in this reſpect, the devil aped the true God, in whoſe temple, if we may credit the Talmudiſts not a fly was to be ſeen. (V.)

Ver. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. Fear them not therefore: for there is nothing covered, that ſhall not be revealed; and hid, that ſhall not be known. What I tell you in darkneſs, that ſpeak ye in light: and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the houſe-tops. And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoul: but rather fear him which is able to deſtroy both ſoul and body in hell. Are not two ſparrows ſold for a farthing? and one of them ſhall not fall on the ground without your father. But the very hairs of your head are all numbred. Fear ye not therefore, ye are of more value than many ſparrows.

Fear them not therefore.] That is, be not diſhearten'd at all at what perſecutors can do againſt you; for the very utmoſt they can perform, is only depriving the body of life; and this they are unable of themſelves to execute, was not your heavenly father pleaſed to give them the power, "qui, ut loquitur Auguſtinus, nec exigui "& contemptibilis aminantis viſcera, nec avis pennulam, nec herbe "floſculum, nec arboris folium ſive ſuarum partum convenientia, "dereliquit;" who hath not left the inward part of the ſmalleſt living creature on earth, nor the feather of a bird, nor a blade of graſs, nor the leaf of a tree, without parts ſuitable to each. Let perſecutors extend their malice as they will, the Goſpel, which I have taught you in ſecret, you ſhall preach every where, in ſpite of all their oppoſition. (V.)

There is nothing covered, that ſhall not be revealed.] This is no more than what has happen'd; for time has brought to light the reproaches of the Jews, who charged our Saviour and his apoſtles with uſing magical incantations, and impoſtures; and the moſt falſe calumnies of the Pagans, in aſſerting, that they had inceſtuous meetings together, and quaff'd off human blood. (G.)

Are not two ſparrows.] Chriſt diſcovers God's providence to things of a ſuperior nature, from the care he takes to preſerve thoſe of an inferior kind. When the apoſtle ſays, 1 Cor. ix. 9. that God taketh no care of oxen, he does not ſimply deny that God taketh care of oxen, but only has a mind to ſhew us, that the law, about not muzzling the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn, was not only made for oxen, but alſo for man, and that the principal deſign herein was to acquaint us, That every one ought to live by his labour, as evidently appears from the ſame apoſtle, 1 Tim. v. 17, and 18. 'Tis uſual with the Hebrews, when one thing is preferred to another, ſimply to affirm the thing preferred, and ſimply to deny that to which ſuch thing is preferred; as we have already remark'd upon that ſaying of the prophet, I will have mercy and not ſacrifice. Thus Philo Judæus, who was cotemporary with Paul, in diſcourſing about the law, which commands the ſacrifices that are offered up to God, to be pure, and free from any blemiſh, ſays, That the law is more careful about the ſacrificers, that they be void of ſin, than about the ſacrifices themſelves. (V.)

Without your father.] That is, without the appointment, decree, and will of your father. That paſſage makes for theſe words which we read of in the Jeruſalem Talmud; "Rabbi "Simeon Ben Jochai concealed himſelf in a certain cave. As "he was ſitting one day at the mouth of the cave, and happening "to eſpy a faulconer catching birds, and ſpreading his net, he "he heard the ſon of the voice (that is, the Oracle,) ſay, Deli- "verance, and immediately the bird eſcaped. But when he ſaid "Death, the bird was taken that moment." Thereupon the Oracle ſaid, "a bird without heaven (that is, without God's will "and providence) doth not periſh. How much leſs man? (V.) That is, without the knowledge or permiſſion of God; Epicurus denied providence altogether; Ariſtotle confined it to heaven; ſome of the Arabian doctors were pleaſed to have it buſied about univerſals, but not individuals; which opinion is, by Juſtin, taken notice of in the Greek philoſophers, and reprehended as impious, in the beginning of his dialogue with Trypho. Some of the Hebrews aſſert that providence employs itſelf about men only, and not about beaſts, which Pythagoras ſeems to have learned from the Jews, and the Grecians from him. 'Tis true, indeed, that providence takes not one courſe with all things; but this is the greateſt and principal part of providence. So that what is ſaid of God's having no care over beaſts, is to be taken in a comparative ſenſe. However, there are certain degrees of providence about mankind; he knoweth the ways of the Juſt, ſays the Pſalmiſt of God; that is, he particularly cheriſhes and takes care of him. So providence has an eye to kings and kingdoms one way, and to private men and things another. (G)

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38. Whoſoever therefore ſhall confeſs me before men, him will I confeſs alſo before my father which is in heaven. But whoſoever ſhall deny me before men, him will I alſo deny before my father which is in heaven. Think not that I am come to ſend peace on earth: I came not to ſend peace but a ſword. For I am come to ſet a man at variance againſt his father, and the daughter againſt her mother, and the daughter in law againſt her mother in law. And a mans foes ſhall be they of his own houſhold. He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me: and he that loveth ſon or daughter more than me, is not worthy of me. And he that taketh not his croſs, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me.

Whoſoever therefore ſhall confeſs me.] That is, he that believes on me and my words in his heart and deſire, will not be aſhamed to confeſs me in his words and actions. From this place we learn that thoſe profeſſions of faith, which are not ſealed with death, are called Confeſſions, and thoſe who perform them Confeſſors. And likewiſe we are commanded here, not only to teſtify our faith before good and devout men, but alſo before the very profeſs'd enemies of the true and unſpotted religion of Chriſt. (V.)

I am come to ſet a man at variance.] "This paſſage contains "almoſt the very words of the prophet Micah, chap vii. and it "muſt be noted, that in what place ſoever of the Old Teſtament "any teſtimony is ſet down, it does not ſignify whether the ſenſe "or the words agree." (Jerome.) The meaning of Chriſt is, as tho' he had ſaid, parents and children ſhall diſagree amongſt themſelves on account of my goſpel. As it was in the days of the prophet Micah amongſt the Jews, ſo ſhall it be now; wicked men ſhall riſe up and conſpire the ruin and deſtruction of the Juſt; infidels ſhall endeavour to ruin the faithful, without any regard to conſanguinity or nearneſs of alliance, being led thereto by an hatred to, and animoſity againſt their virtue, and a deſire to deprive them of their wealth and ſubſtance. (V.)

He that taketh not his croſs.] Luke xiv. 27. Whoſoever doth not bear his croſs. The croſs is taken up two ways, when either we mortify the body with abſtinence, or afflict the mind thro' a compaſſion for our neighbour. He that puts off the old man with his works, denies himſelf, ſaying, I live, not I, but Chriſt lives within me; he takes up his croſs and is crucified to the world, and he that is crucified to the world follows Chriſt who was crucified. (V.) This form of ſpeech is to be found amongſt the Rabbins. The croſs was a terrible puniſhment, and attended with the worſt ignominy, being uſed by the Romans, among whom it was taken for all manner of hardſhips. But Chriſt takes the general ſignification of the word in ſuch a latitude, that he points out at the ſame time the proper meaning of it, ſignifying, that tho' it be a terrible and infamous way of puniſhment, yet that it ought not be avoided when his religion is in the way. (G.)

Ver. 39, 40, 41, 42. He that findeth his life ſhall loſe it: and he that loſeth his life for my ſake, ſhall find it. He that receiveth you, receiveth me; and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that ſent me. He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet, ſhall receive a prophets reward; and he that receiveth a righteous man in the name of a righteous man, ſhall receive a righteous mans reward. And whoſoever ſhall give to drink unto one of theſe little ones, a cup of cold water only, in the name of a diſciple, verily I ſay unto you, he ſhall in no wiſe loſe his reward.

He that findeth his life.] Supply, from John xii. 25. in this world; that is, in this life; now a man is ſaid to find himſelf in this world, or, to uſe the Hebrew phraſe, to love his life, who ſeeks to obtain no other advantages than what are of this world; whereas he is ſaid to loſe and hate his life, who, for the ſake of Chriſt, ſuſtains with bravery, the moſt heavy afflictions of this world; compare this paſſage with the above cited place of John. (V.)

Shall find it.] Supply, in eternal life, as appears from the above cited paſſage of John; beſides, in this, and ſeveral other paſſages the life is put for the whole man by a ſynechdoche, a phraſe which is very common with the Jews, and in the Old Teſtament. Hence what Matthew xvi. 26. ſays, and loſe his own ſoul; Luke, on the other hand, explains the propriety of the Hebrew, and loſe himſelf and be caſt away. (V.)

He that receiveth a prophet in the name of a prophet.] Any perſon, on deliberation, will find there are three degrees amongſt Chriſt's diſciples. The firſt is of thoſe who are called the leaſt, John i. 11, 12, 13. and are converſant only in the firſt rudiments of chriſtianity; the ſecond degree is of thoſe who are called the juſt in ſome paſſages, and young in others, 1 John ii, 13. The third and laſt is of thoſe who have received the perfect gifts of the ſpirit, being called here and in other paſſages, prophets, perfect men and fathers. (G.)

Shall receive a prophets reward.] That is, he that entertains a a perſon, for no other cauſe than becauſe he is ſaid and thought to be a prophet, tho', in fact, ſuch entertained perſon be no prophet, yet he ſhall receive the reward of his hoſpitality, as much as if he had been a real prophet. (V.)

CHAP. XI.

John Baptiſt is detained in priſon; he ſends his diſciples to Jeſus; the teſtimony of Chriſt concerning John. Our Saviour gives them his inſtructions. He reprehendeth the unthankfulneſs and unrepentance of Chorazin, Bethſaida, and Capernaum, and praiſeth his fathers wiſdom in revealing the goſpel to the ſimple.

Ver. 1, 2, 3. AND it came to paſs, when Jeſus had made an end of commanding his twelve diſciples, he departed thence to teach and to preach in their cities. Now when John had heard in the priſon the works of Chriſt, he ſent two of his diſciples, And ſaid unto him, Art thou he that ſhould come, or do we look for another?

He that ſhould come.] The prophecies of Chriſt (as the Meſſiah of the Jews, who expected him in that capacity, and of the Gentiles, who had not ſo much diſcernment of his coming as the former) were very plain in the Old Teſtament, under the title of Shilo coming. Yet for all this, the perſon or name of this Meſſiah, who was ſo much unknown, was uſually expreſſed by them by ſeveral circumlocutions, particularly by this, "he that cometh, the "coming king:" So Chriſtianity is called "the coming king- "dom, the age to come," which diſtinctly mean the Meſſiah's entering on thoſe great offices to which he was deſigned by God. (Hammond.) Hillary, Can. 11. in Matth. ſays, “ John “ conſulted not his own, but his diſciples ignorance: he preached “ that he came for the remiſſion of ſins; but with a view to let “ them underſtand that he preach'd no other than him, he ſent his “ diſciples to be eye-witneſſes of his actions, and to compare his mi-“ racles with his ſayings; and that there was no other Chriſt to be “ expected, than him, whoſe ſurpriſing actions, were convincing “ proofs of his miſſion.” (V.) John the Baptiſt being in ſome doubt about Chriſt, ſent his diſciples to ſee him, in order for a more explicit conviction and aſſurance of the truth, to the end, that what calamity ſoever ſhould befall him, they might put their confidence in Chriſt. (B.)

Ver. 4, 5, 6. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Go and ſhew John again thoſe things which ye do hear and ſee: The blind receive their ſight, and the lame walk; the lepers are cleanſed, and the deaf hear; the dead are raiſed up, and the poor have the goſpel preached to them. And bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me.

The poor have the goſpel, &c.] That proverb of the Jews holds true: “ God is not ſatisfied in performing the kindneſſes which he “ promiſes, but he always ſuperadds ſomething to them.” Iſaiah and the Pſalmiſt propheſied about healing the blind, dumb, and lame; but God adds to theſe the reſurrection of the dead. Chriſt, by the words, The poor have the Goſpel preach'd to them, ſhews us the difference between his way of teaching, and that of the doctors of his time. For the Scribes never taught any but for extraordinary fees; they deſpiſed the common people, whom they called the people of the earth Beſides which, they made a very fooliſh and ridiculous proverb which was, that The Spirit reſted upon none but the rich man. Indeed, the prophets, in the days of old, were ſent to none but kings, whereas Chriſt made himſelf known firſt to fiſhermen. (G.) 'Tis an idiom very common in the books of the Old and New Teſtament, for paſſive verbs (by a metonimy of the effect) to ſignify the reality of the effect of the paſſion; that is, for the patient not only to receive influxes from the agent, but to be effectually changed by the paſſion. So Iſaiah lxv. 1. “ I am “ ſought of them that asked not for me;” where 'tis clear that ſeeking and asking for are all one: “ Ask and ye ſhall have, ſeek “ and ye ſhall find,” ſaith our Saviour directly in the ſame ſenſe; and therefore it cannot be imagined how any perſon, not having asked for God, God may yet be affirmed with truth to be ſought by him. It remains, therefore, that to be ſought, muſt here be underſtood cum effectu, ſo as to have the effect of finding attend it; and therefore 'tis diſtinctly interpreted by that which follows, “ I “ am found by them which ſought me not;” where, as ſought me not, is equivalent to asked not for me; ſo I am found is evidently the ſame with I am ſought, in the beginning of the verſe. And accordingly, Romans x. 20. where theſe words of the prophet are cited, inſtead of “ I am ſought of them,” the apoſtle reads, “ I “ was made manifeſt unto them.” So “ turned out of the way,” Titus iii. 11. means not only being perſuaded and perverted by another, but being effectually corrupted by ſeducers. So “ to be tempted,” Gal. vi. 11. is to be influenced by temptation, or elſe the poſſibility of it would not be uſed as an argument to enforce ſo much chriſtian care towards him who is overtaken in a fault. So to be ſcandalized, is to be wrought on by the ſcandal laid in a perſon's way; and ſo to be evangelized, is to be wrought on by the preaching of the Goſpel, which is peculiarly obſerved of the poor humble-minded man, of whom 'tis therefore ſaid, under the emblem of the little children, that “ of ſuch is the kingdom of “ heaven.” The fourth and fifth verſes here are Chriſt's way of anſwering John, and aſſuring him that he is the Meſſiah, by giving him the characteriſtical marks of the Meſſiah in the prophets, and ſhewing him how viſibly they belong to him. (H.) The poor in ſpirit, or the poor in purſe, that the rich and poor might alike be entitled to the preaching of the Goſpel. This diſcovers the veracity of our Saviour, ſince he puts all on a level who have a deſire to procure ſalvation. Chriſt alludes in this place to that paſſage in Iſaiah, lxi. 1. “ He hath ſent me to preach good tidings unto the “ meek;” for poor men commonly are not addicted to the pride and high looks of the rich, but are more flexible and devoted to the meekneſs of the Goſpel. (B.)

Shall not be offended in me.] Shall not be offended at my humble and poor condition, and at the calamities that hover over my head. (G.) The word ſcandalon, ſcandal, hath a natural ſignification commonly annexed to it in the Old, but a metaphorical one in the New Teſtament. In its natural ſenſe 'tis taken three ways; firſt, a trap, or ſnare to take any thing, vide Pſalm lxix. 22. 1 Macc. v. 4. Wiſdom xiv. 11. Secondly, it means any obſtacle laid in a man's way, whereby he is detained or ſtopped, particularly a ſharp ſtake, which, in war time, was commonly ſtuck up in the fields, to wound the feet of the enemy, vide Sam. xvii. 6. Thirdly, it ſignifies a ſtone, or block in the way, upon which men are apt to ſtumble or fall, if they take not care to look before them. In Judith xii. 2. it is taken for ſin, or the fall of the ſoul. But beſides theſe three interpretations, there is one more, and that is in Pſal. l. 20. where it means ſlander, calumny, or defamation. Now for the uſe of the word in the New Teſtament. The firſt finding it, is in Matt. xiii. 41. where 'tis ſaid, the angels ſhall gather out all ſcandals, in a ſenſe borrowed from the ſignification of the ſharp ſtake, which happening to gall any one, is pulled or gathered up, and thrown into the fire, as the angels ſhould do for us, ver. 42. which St. Paul ſeems to allude to, in putting ſcandalizing and burning together: and denotes ſimply any thing that may wound or gall us in our chriſtian courſe, and by that means cauſe us to give over in the ſervice of Chriſt. So our Saviour paid tribute, that he might not offend the Jews, that is, that they might not think him a contemner of the temple, to which the tribute was due; ſo the Phariſees hearing a doctrine that galled them, were offended and forſook him: ſo, he that ſhall offend any of theſe little ones, that is, he who ſhall cauſe them to fall into any ſin, or, by contemning them, diſcourage them from the ſtudy of piety. Chriſt crucified is called a ſcandal to the Jews, that is, they who ſaw him crucified, were quite diſheartned, and fell away, reſolving that he was not the Meſſias, to which belongs this paſſage here, Bleſſed is he that ſhall not be offended in me, that is, that ſhall not be diſcouraged at the ſufferings that befall me, and await my diſciples. In Matt. xiii. 57. 'tis ſaid, that the meanneſs of his birth occaſioned their being offended at him, that is, their not believing in him; ſo when Chriſt talks of eating the fleſh of the ſon of man, John vi. 61. they were offended, that is, that ſpeech carnally underſtood, either that Chriſt was to die, which the eating his fleſh preſuppoſed, or that they were to turn cannibals and eat man's fleſh, diſcouraged them from following him, or, at leaſt, from taking him to be the Meſſiah. So perſecution is called the ſcandal of the croſs, or the diſcouragement from profeſſing the crucified Saviour: according to that of the parable in the ſower; “ Man, “ upon the coming of perſecution, preſently is offended.” The Æthiopic interpreter of the New Teſtament, inſtead of ſcandal, puts a word that ſignifies temptation; in which ſenſe is that of the eyes and foot offending us, that is, when a man's eye, or any other member of his body, proves a ſnare to him, or an inlet to temptation. By this brief view will appear the ſeveral acceptations and notions of this word, in all the places of the New Teſtament. (H.) By the word bleſſed, in this verſe, is made a ſilent remark upon John's diſciples, who could not but entertain a piece of ill-nature and ſpleen againſt Chriſt, as appears from Matt. ix. 14. and John iii. 26. where they ſay to John, to whom thou beareſt witneſs, behold, the ſame baptizeth, and all men come to him: q. d we are abandoned, few come to us; vaſt multitudes reſort to him. The word ſcandal properly ſignifies a ſlipping or ſtumbling of the foot. In the ſacred ſcripture 'tis frequently carried from the body to the ſoul, and is underſtood for any word or action that is bad in itſelf, or that has the appearance of evil, ſo as to occaſion the ſpiritual ruin of any one, and then it is called active ſcandal: But if it be taken for ruin itſelf, whereby any one ſuffers ſpiritual deſtruction for the words or actions of another, then it is called paſſive ſcandal; beſides, it has the name of phariſaical, becauſe the Phariſees ſuffered ſuch ſcandal in the true doctrines and exemplary life of Chriſt. (V.)

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. And as they departed, Jeſus began to ſay unto the multitudes concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderneſs to ſee? A reed ſhaken with the wind? But what went ye out for to ſee? A man clothed in ſoft raiment? behold, they that wear ſoft clothing are in kings houſes. But what went ye out for to ſee? A prophet? yea, I ſay unto you, and more than a prophet. For this is he of whom it is written, Behold, I ſend my meſſenger before thy face, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee. Verily I ſay unto you, among them that are born of women, there hath not riſen a greater than John the Baptiſt: notwithſtanding, he that is leaſt in the kingdom of heaven, is greater than he. And from the days of John the Baptiſt, until now, the kingdom of heaven ſuffereth violence, and the violent take it by force. For all the prophets, and the law, propheſied until John. And if ye will receive it, this is Elias which was for to come.

A reed ſhaken with the wind.] Meaning, I ſuppoſe, you had ſome reaſon that made you ſo haſtily run into the wilderneſs. For it is not to be believed that you met together there to ſee the reeds ſhaken with the wind; becauſe thoſe abandoned places afforded nothing of entertainment, unleſs John. (G.) Q. d. Was the reaſon of your going ſo often into the deſart to John, purely to ſee a fantaſtical and lightheaded man, in the midſt of dainty proviſions and clothed in delicate and ſoft raiment. (V.)

More than a prophet.] According to Maimonides there were, among the Jews, eleven degrees of prophecy, of which only nine were of the genuine kind, or what were properly ſo called, the other two being ſublime tranſcendant ſorts, ſomewhat more excellent than ordinary prophecy. Maimonides defines one of theſe to be that which comes on man without either dream or ecſtacy, and is the ſpeaking by the Holy Ghoſt: of which kind was John the baptiſt, who is ſaid to ſpeak only as a witneſs, not as a prophet. In which reſpect it comes that he has ſo many other appellations given him, as the voice of one crying, a proclaimer, a herald, a meſſenger of God's, a great, illuſtrious perſon, one filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and by way of excellence the prophet of the moſt high, but he is never ſimply called a prophet unleſs it be in Luke vii. 28. where the words may, notwithſtanding, be render'd better thus, No prophet born of a woman is greater than John the Baptiſt, where baptiſt, not prophet, is his only title. (H.) According to Iſidore of Peluſium in his 33d letter to Prunichius, “ He propheſied from “ his mother's womb, and though placed in darkneſs, he was no “ ſtranger to the light, that was already come.” More than a prophet means, that John was ſo much eſteemed amongſt the prophets, that they propheſied of him as of the moſt famous of prophets; this is he of whom it is written. (V.)

My meſſenger before thy face.] The word Angeloi, or meſſengers was not confined to any prophet, but to ſuch only as were conſtituted God's ambaſſadors to the people on important affairs. See Num. xx. 16. Hagg. i. 13. Malachi, from whom this prophecy is taken, has the word angelos, or meſſenger, couch'd in his name, which made the antient chriſtians call him in Greek angelos, as by his proper name. So the preſident of a chriſtian council was called Angelos, becauſe his office was to harangue the people in the name of God, as enjoying the ſame place in the church, which the high-prieſt held in the temple, who likewiſe was called angelos, or meſſenger. (G.) That which is here before thy face, is in Malachi iii. 1. before my face, whereby it appears that Chriſt (referred hereto in the word thy) is the ſame there with God the father; or the face of God, which often ſignifies his coming, or his preſence, and the ſending before his face; ſending an harbinger or forerunner in a journey, may mean the coming of God himſelf, and the preſence of Chriſt on earth, the preſence of God himſelf. (H.) An Hebraiſm, meaning, before thee; for John was born ſix months before Chriſt, and began about the ſame number of months to preach before Chriſt. (B. and V.)

Suffereth violence.] The Greek word Biazeſthai ſignifies a thing being taken away by one who hath no legal right thereto. Thus when the people of Iſrael were forbidden to go up to Sinai, their going up thither is expreſſed by the above mentioned word. Exod. xix. 24. Thus in the Talmud, Joma, chap. iv. fol. 30. “ Two men had an inheritance equally divided betwixt them, “ and one of them carried his own part away and his fellow's too; “ therefore they called him the ſon of violence.” Thus, becauſe the Jews of Chorazin, Bethſaida, Capernaum, and Jeruſalem, were not ſo careful to look after the goſpel of Chriſt, eſpecially their high-prieſts and doctors, but continued to oppoſe it, whereupon the meaner ſort amongſt them, that is, the people, thoſe who dwelt in Idumæa, Tyre, and Sidon, and thoſe of Galilee, embraced it, they are ſaid to carry all away, and proportionably are here called Biaſtai or violent perſons, and to encloſe and engroſs the goſpel, which primarily and legally did not belong to them. That this is the meaning of the verſe will appear by what follows. For Luke in his 7th chap. ſays, “ And all the people “ (that is, the common ſort) and the publicans juſtified God, having “ been baptized with the baptiſm of John, but the Phariſees and “ the lawyers, that is, the chief men, thoſe of the Sanhedrim or “ conſiſtories, rejected the council of God towards themſelves, “ having not been baptized of him.” If it be objected that many of the Sadducees and Phariſees came to his baptiſm, the anſwer is clear, that by Phariſees, &c. are meant ſome of the people that were of thoſe ſects, and by the baptiſt's wondering and aſking who had foretold them to fly, &c. 'tis evident that the reſt of them, the greateſt, and moſt conſiderable, for number or quality, did not come, and 'tis as plain that thoſe were the perſons who ſaid of the baptiſt, he had a devil, v. 18. of this chap. becauſe they were thoſe perſons who called Chriſt, glutton, and wine drinker, a friend of publicans and ſinners, and therefore when St. Luke repeats the words of this verſe chap. xvi. 16, “ every one forceth into it,” that is, the meaneſt, and not the chief of the Jews, and not only Jews, but publicans, force into it, which words are ſaid there to be uſed by Chriſt directly in reply to the Phariſees, who mock'd and rejected his doctrine. (H.)

For all the prophets and the law propheſied until John.] Theſe words are not deſigned to ſay, that John's coming annull'd or made the law dead; for it was juſt it ſhould continue 'till the ſolemn miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, or that no prophecies were extended beyond John: no, there were ſome that appertained to the very laſt ruin of the city of Jeruſalem. However, the prophets foretold that the Meſſiah ſhould be the prince of the new kingdom, who was ſhadowed out ſo under the ceremonial law, and that John ſhould begin to preach a more perfect doctrine. (G.) The law is ſaid to continue until John, becauſe he began to preach a doctrine much more famous than either the law or the prophets; for the beginning of the goſpel is deduced from John, Mark i. 1. and Luke i. 77. So that under this title John is greater than the prophets, being ſent to inform the people of God of their approaching ſalvation, as it is ſaid Luke iii. 18. Now the goſpel, or the new law, is called a kingdom, becauſe 'tis a cuſtomary thing with the Hebrews to give the law the appellation of kingdom. And likewiſe it is called the kingdom of heaven, or the kingdom of God, becauſe, by the preaching of the goſpel, God reigneth in his church, and the faithful deſpiſe all worldly things. This doctrine commenced from the preaching of John, and was conſummated in our Saviour Chriſt who implanted charity in the hearts of the faithful, by the Holy Spirit, which he conferred upon them. (V. and B.)

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. But whereunto ſhall I liken this generation? It is like unto children ſitting in the markets, and calling unto their fellows, And ſaying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced: we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented. For John came neither eating nor drinking, and they ſay, He hath a devil. The Son of man came eating and drinking, and they ſay, Behold, a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and ſinners: but wiſdom is juſtified of her children.

He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.] The word ears is put in this place to ſignify the intellectual faculty. (G.) Chriſt generally makes uſe of this phraſe, on ſerious occaſions, and when he wants to influence his auditors by his words, in order to raiſe up their attention: He points out at the ſame time by it, that all have not ears to hear, that is, the gift of God, to comprehend what is ſaid, and pay obedience to what is told them. (V.)

Like unto children, &c.] It was the cuſtom of children among the Jews, in their ſports, to imitate what they ſaw done by others upon greater occaſions, and particularly to mimic the cuſtoms in their feſtivities, wherein the muſician beginning a tune on his inſtrument, the company danced to his pipe; and ſo likewiſe the cuſtoms in their funerals, wherein ſome old woman beginning the mournful ſong (as the Preficæ among the Latins) the reſt followed lamenting and beating their breaſts, Alas, my brother! and the like. And theſe were what the children perſonated and acted in the ſtreets in their play; and when one had begun to perform the part of a muſician, or another that of the old woman, and the reſt did not follow him in theirs, then came this ſpeech, We have piped, &c. to be mentioned. (H.) Q. d. Something like this appears in this ſpecies of men; they are like children playing in the market, and calling out to their pettiſh companions. We can neither move you to dance with our muſic, nor to mourn with our lamentation: And, indeed, neither Chriſt's extraordinary condeſcention, nor John's auſterity could work the leaſt either upon the lawyers, or the Phariſees. (B.) The cuſtoms of the Jews, in this particular came nearer to the Greeks than the Romans. For they thought it no diſhonour to uſe dancing and ſinging either in their public or private acts of feſtivity. Though gravity was a thing that became chriſtians, yet it may not be amiſs to remark what the antient councils decreed in this particular, namely, not only dancing but the mimicking or imitating the geſtures of others. (G.)

Wiſdom is juſtified.] Wiſdom here ſignifies the will of God, which endeavours, by the auſterity of John, and the humility of Chriſt, to call the Jews to his obedience; to juſtify here, as in Rom. iii. 4. and Luke vii. 29. is to approve, or to commend. And thoſe are wiſdom's ſons, who retain within them a certain awe or reverence for the will of God, concerning whom, refer to Luke vii. 29, 30. In like manner, Luke x. 6. ſays, Son of peace. This is an addition made by Chriſt, to acquaint us, that neither John's nor his endeavours had hitherto been vain (G.) The Phariſees and Jewiſh doctors, “ which reject the councel of God to- “ wards them,” that is, God's wiſe and various methods of reducing them, do complain and except againſt every thing that is done either by Chriſt or John, whereby they bear teſtimony that this is the true wiſdom of the Father, which, as the prophets foretold, told, was to be rejected by all the great ones, and approved and entertained only by the meaner ſort, the publicans and the people, which, in this part of the hiſtory, are ſaid by St. Luke to have juſtified God: "The people that heard, and the publicans juſti- "fied God." Whereupon the children of wiſdom are thoſe that receive it, who, pretending leaſt to the wiſdom of the world, have yet humility enough to receive this true wiſdom which comes from above, when 'tis offered to them: All theſe, according to Luke, do approve or juſtify this wiſdom, that is, the gracious and wiſe proceedings of God towards them. This conſtruction is moſt agreeable to ſcripture; yet if the uſe of the word juſtified among the ancient Greek authors be conſider'd, another conſtruction will appear not incompatible with the context Phavorinus and Suidas, two learned grammarians, render the word here to juſtify to condemn, which Thucydides likewiſe doth. So Heſychius and Harpocratian tranſlate it, ſo Julius Pollux, and Syneſius. In like manner the people of North Britain uſe the phraſe to be juſtified for to be hanged, and our common law forms of commiſſion to the Judges are, "Præci- "pimus tibi quod tu juſtities;" "We command you that you "ſhall juſtify, in condemning as well as abſolving.." So that ſhould this notion of the word be thought applicable, the ſenſe would then be this: When Chriſt came to preach this wiſdom from above to the Jews, thoſe of the Sanhedrim, (who, by an Hebraiſm, may be called the children of wiſdom) rejected Chriſt, and all the methods taken to preach the Goſpel to them; and this, according to Luke, they did univerſally. Now tho' theſe perſons ſhould have acknowledged Chriſt before all others, who was wiſdom itſelf, and they the great pretenders to divine wiſdom, yet they proved the greateſt enemies to it; and which way ſoever the addreſs was made to them, they had ſtill exceptions againſt it; ſo that at length (in the Greek ſenſe of the word juſtified) they cauſed him to be condemned and put to death; they executed Chriſt himſelf, who was the wiſdom of the Father. But the firſt interpretation, by comparing it with Luke, appears to be the true ſenſe of this paſſage. (H.)

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. Then began he to upbraid the cities, wherein moſt of his mighty works were done, becauſe they repented not. Wo unto thee Chorazin, wo unto thee Bethſaida: for if the mighty works which were done in you had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in ſackcloth and aſhes. But I ſay unto you, It ſhall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment than for you. And thou Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, ſhalt be brought down to hell: for if the mighty works which have been done in thee had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day. But I ſay unto you, that it ſhall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom, in the day of judgment, than for thee.

If the mighty works----had been done in Tyre and Sydon.] Without doubt, miracles have a prodigious force upon mens minds, to ſtrike them with a reverential awe for the divine being, and to imprint on their hearts the promiſes and menaces given and denounced to them. Had not miracles, joined with thoſe aſſiſtances, which commonly attend them, been thought ſufficient to correct their minds, Chriſt would not have mentioned the contempt of ſuch extraordinary benefits. See John xv. 24. Neither do Abraham's words raiſe any obſtacle, Luke xvi. 31. For Chriſt's words relate to thoſe who, being well acquainted with the ſurpriſing miracles that confirmed the law of Moſes, yet purſued ſuch a courſe of life as they knew was diametrically oppoſite thereto. This claſs of men diſcovered ſo ſtrong an inclination to the purſuit of their pleaſures, that not all the miracles that were performed could work in them ſo much awe as to diveſt themſelves of them. The reaſon is greatly different, with regard both to thoſe who were no ways under the law of Moſes, and to thoſe who had other things preach'd to them, which they knew not certainly that they were comprehended in the law of Moſes. But of both theſe kinds Chriſt ſpeaks in this place (G.) Tyre, and Sidon, were frontier Cities to Galilee, tho' never in poſſeſſion of the Jews: they were cities where the greateſt marts were kept then in the world. Sidon was about two hundred furlongs diſtant from Tyre, according to the teſtimony of Strabo. Homer, in ſeveral places, mentions Sidon and the Sidonians, without once taking notice of Tyre; whence 'tis conjectured, that Sidon was the older place of the two. Trogus writes, that Sidon took its name from the plenty of fiſhes found near it; which is not an improbable opinion, ſeeing we are acquainted from the Hebrews, that the ſea about Sidon was vaſtly ſtock'd with fiſh. For Zaid, which ſignifies fiſhing, is to this day given as the name to this city. (V)

They would have repented long ago in ſackcloth and aſhes.] 'Tis my opinion, that thoſe times are pointed out here, wherein Ezekiel lived, who gravely admoniſhed the Tyrians and Sidonians of their tranſgreſſions, and of the divine wrath that threatened them. Tho' the Tyrians and Sidonians were not arrived to ſuch a pitch of impenitency when Ezekiel lived, as the major part of the Galileans were in the days of Chriſt; yet this is no excuſe for the Tyrians: for the law which was inſcribed on their minds, requiring juſtice of them in their merchandiſing and dealings, and compaſſion towards the afflicted, ſufficiently condemned them. Add to this, the neighbourhood of the Jews, the language common to both, their daily trafficking together, and the prophets ſent to both from the ſame God. In Iſaiah lviii. 5. Jer. vi. 26. we find ſackcloth and aſhes joined together. And in Tertullian we read, that "Prayers were made in ſackcloth and aſhes," for the drought of the year. (G.) Sackcloth and aſhes are the weapons of thoſe who repent, to exerciſe a ſort of revenge upon themſelves by the roughneſs of the ſackcloth, and by the roughneſs of the aſhes to recal into their minds the ſentence of death, which obliges them to return unto duſt or aſhes. "If the reader ſhould ſay here, ſays Jerome, "If Tyre, Sidon, "and Sodom, would have repented on Chriſt's preaching, and "ſhewing them his miracles, they are no way to blame, becauſe "they did not believe; but he is to have the fault laid on him, "who would not preach to them, when they were ready to re- "pent." To this charge the anſwer is very eaſy and open: "That God's determinations are remote from our ken, and his "diſpenſations far above our underſtanding" (V.) God points out here the hard-heartedneſs and impenitency of the Jews in not believing him, after all the miracles he had performed to convince them that he was the Meſſiah ſo often foretold by the prophets, had Tyre and Sidon been eye witneſſes thereof they would have repented in ſackcloth and aſhes. This ſhould teach us to receive with a ſacred reverence the ſurprizing things performed by the ſon of God, and to imprint on our hearts an aweful adoration of his ſtupendious miracles. (B.)

Exalted unto heaven, ſhall be brought down to hell.] I am under no ſcruple to think that this refers to the affairs of this life. Chriſt, finding that Capernaum perſevered in the moſt hardened disbelief, denounces upon it moſt terrible calamities, which I ſuppoſe, happened during the war of Veſpaſian, and the commotions in Galilee. "To be lifted up to the ſtars," or "to ſtrike the "ſtars with a ſublime head," are proverbial forms of ſpeech, cuſtomary amongſt both Greeks and Romans, to ſignify a "flou- "riſhing condition," or "to be in an illuſtrious poſt. The oppoſite to this is the eis adou, to be brought down to hell, that is, to be ſunk down to the lowermoſt places, which ſignifies the deſtruction of the great. See Iſaiah xiv. 15. and lvii. 9. 1 Sam. ii. 6. However we muſt remark that the providence of God has thought fit to direct ſuch forms of ſpeech to appear in the writings of the prophets, thereby figurately to ſignify to us the deliverance from calamities, though the right propriety of the words figures out the hidden miſtery of the reſurrection. (G.) The Greek word Hades or hell, doth not ſignify here the place of hell, but a ſtate of periſhing or diſſolution. And becauſe this is the firſt place wherein the word is uſed in this book, it will not be amiſs to clear the notion of it. Among prophane writers it is evident that the word ſignifies not the place of the damned, no, nor any kind of place that is proper either to bliſs or woe, but only the ſtate of the dead. That phraſe in Cornutus, to dwell in Hades, is tranſlated, to dwell no body knows where, according to the difinition of death in Job xiv. 10. "Man giveth up the Ghoſt, and "where is he? and agreeable to the etymology of the word Hades, as though Haides, inviſible, by which laſt word 'tis called by Severus Sophiſta, and other rhetoricians; whence we are taught, that the fable of Hades ſtealing the daughter of Ceres, means no more than the periſhing of corn in the earth, "the "diſappearing of the ſeeds in the earth for ſome time;" which word diſappearing, directly the ſame with Hades, is taken abſolutely for death in the Maccabees, and is the periphraſis of death in the Pſalmiſt; "Before I go hence, and be no more ſeen;" and ſo Heb. viii. 13. "That which grows old, is near to diſappearing, "or death." The above Cornutus calls Hades, Plouton, the rich man, becauſe there is nothing that does not at laſt come to it, and become its poſſeſſion. The ſame meaning he puts, where he defines Hades to be the laſt air that receives ſouls, not referring to any particular place, but that ſtate of the dead which the atheiſt, Wiſd. ii. 3. calls, "the vaniſhing away of the ſoft air. So Heraclitus, ſpeaking of the helmet of Hades, which makes men inviſible, ſays, "It is the end or death of every man, to which he that comes be- "comes inviſible. And in the Sybylline Oracles we have this Account of Hades:

Hades the place is nam'd where Adam came,
Adam the firſt, when death diſſolv'd his frame,

Beneath the ground his corpſe ſecurely lay
From glimpſe of morn, or evening's radiant ray;
Thus all mankind are born to die, and ſaid
To be to Hades' darkſome realms convey'd.

Where 'tis clear that Hades is the common ſtate of the dead, when their bodies are laid in the grave, the condition not only of the wicked, and of the godly, but of all mortal men. So in Philemon's Iambicks,

Two paths in Hade's ſilent manſion's known
One of the righteous, of the wicked, one.

In the ſame ſenſe is the word uſed in the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament. Jacob, Gen. xxxvii. 35. ſays, "I will go to Hades," that is, out of this life, "to my ſon mourning." So 3 Macc. "They that are near Hades," or, the ſtate of the dead. So Apoc. xx. 14. "Death and Hades are caſt into the lake of fire," and ver. 13 "gave up thoſe that were in it," which ſurely cannot be ſaid of hell, from whence there is no releaſe. So Eccleſ. xlviii. 5. "He that raiſes the dead from death and Hades," cannot certainly be ſaid to raiſe out of hell. Many more places might be produced, but Hades every where ſignifies a ſtate of death, deſtruction (denoting no place either of ſouls, heaven or hell, or of bodies, the grave, but) the Aphaniſmos or inviſible ſtate. That the writers of the church had this notion of the phraſe in the Creed may be diſcerned (among many) by this place in Theophylact upon Rom. iv. 25. "Seeing he died, having no ſin, it was reaſon he ſhould riſe again; for how ſhould he that was ſinleſs be detained by Hades?" where being detained by Hades, is no more than continuing in the ſtate of the dead. The ſame father calls the lower parts of the earth Hades, in the ſame ſenſe as when Jacob ſaith, "You will bring my old age with ſorrow to Hades," not to hell certainly. Thus the Arabians uſe Al-Barzach for that ſpace or ſtate which is betwixt this life and the next, the time of death and the reſurrection, and every one that dies is ſaid to go to Al-Barzach. And as in other places it is peculiarly the ſtate of ſeparation of ſoul and body, belonging to particular men, ſo in this place, being ſpoken of a city, 'tis a ſtate of deſtruction and deſolation, to which that may as properly be ſaid to deſcend, as if it were a place to which a local motion belonged. (H.) Chriſtian countries that have the light of the goſpel ſhining upon them, ſhould, with the greateſt humiliation return, their thanks to God for his ineffable condeſcention and tranſcendant goodneſs, in vouchſafing the author of our redemption to come on earth, and diſplay the doctrines of his unſpotted religion to the eyes of mankind. We are taught that, having the great miſteries of chriſtianity before us, we ſhould diſcover a great deal more of application in the ſtudy of piety than thoſe who have not heard, leſt it be more tolerable for them in the day of judgment than us; for though we may fancy our ſelves lifted up to heaven, we may be caſt down to hell. (B.)

Ver. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. At that time Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, becauſe thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt revealed them unto babes. Even ſo Father, for ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight. All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son but the Father: neither knoweth any man the Father, ſave the Son, and he to whomſoever the Son will reveal him. Come unto me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will give you reſt. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye ſhall find reſt unto your ſouls. For my yoke is eaſy and my burden is light.

For ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight.] "Let no man preſume to make enquiry, ſays Greg l. 25. Moral. chap. 18. why, when the Jews flouriſh'd, the Gentiles continued ſo long in their infidelity; and why, when the Gentiles began to embrace the faith, the Jews proved disbelievers. Let no man, I ſay, offer to enquire into theſe points that differ thus. The council of the Almighty is ſuperior to our ſhallow comprehenſions. Our Lord himſelf, when he ſpeaks of this in the goſpel, ſays, I confeſs to thee my father, or even ſo father, &c. and then adding as it were a reaſon for his hiding and revealing, ſays, For ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight; in which words we have an example of Chriſt's humility ſet before us to teach us not raſhly to judge of the decrees of heaven why ſome are called, and others repulſed. For Chriſt having mentioned both, does not pretend to give a reaſon directly why 'tis ſo, but confines himſelf in ſaying, ſo it pleaſed God, ſhewing us this, becauſe that cannot be an unjuſt thing, which pleaſeth him that is juſt. Thus when he pays the labourers in the vineyard, when ſome who had endured more fatigue than the reſt, received but the ſame wages with them, he ſays, Did'ſt not thou agree with me for a penny; I will give unto this man that came laſt as I have done to thee; am not I at my own liberty to do as I pleaſe? So that in the diſpoſition of all external things God's hidden pleaſure is his juſtice." (V.)

All things are delivered unto me.] The phraſe all things here, though it may poſſibly ſignify all power given to Chriſt, or all things belonging to his office, yet by the context it rather ſeems to belong to perſons than things, for of thoſe he peculiarly ſpeaks under the title of Babes v. 25. thoſe ſingle hearted plain perſons who believed in him, for whom he there thanks God, as he ſays here they are delivered unto him. (H.)

No man knoweth the Son but the Father.] Supply, and to whom the Father ſhall think fit to reveal him. Thus Peter knew who the Son was; yet fleſh and blood did not reveal the ſecret to him, but the Father of the Son who is in heaven, as it is ſaid below, ch. xvi. 17. The particle excluſive, but, is no impediment, in this place, at all, to the knowing the Holy Spirit of the Father and the Son, and only excludes all creatures, that is, whatſoever is not of the ſame eſſence with the Father and the Son: for the Holy Ghoſt is of the ſame eſſence with the Father and the Son; whence the apoſtle, 1 Cor. ii. 11. attributes to the Holy Ghoſt a perfect knowledge of God the Father, becauſe the Holy Ghoſt is in the Father. So that our ignorance of the frame of ſpeech, and phraſe of ſcripture here, would involve us in a fallacy, ſhould we pretend to raiſe an argument from the particles excluſive in this paſſage, and the celebrated place of Paul to the perſons of the moſt bleſſed Trinity; for then we ſhould make Paul to exclude the Son from the knowledge of the Father; becauſe he ſays, "No body knows the things that are God's, but the Spirit of God." So likewiſe here, and in Luke, the Son and the Father would be excluded from the knowledge of themſelves, becauſe 'tis ſaid, "No body knows who the Son is, but the Father, and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Father ſhall reveal him." So that the deſign of ſcripture by theſe particles excluſive, is not ſimply to exclude all things, but only thoſe quorum cauſa inſtituta eſt oratio, & quæ cum altera parte comparantur. Thus Paul, in behalf of all mankind, diſcourſes of the wiſdom of the Goſpel hidden in miſtery, namely, ſo far hidden from the diſcernment of all men, that unleſs the Holy Ghoſt make it known, no body can perceive it, becauſe the Spirit only knows the things that are God's. An man may ſee, that by the word nemo, or no body, in this paſſage the Son is not excluded, who is not compared with the Spirit, ſeeing there is no mention of God, but only of men, who are there compared with the Spirit of God. Thus, when Chriſt is properly ſpeaking of men, for whoſe ſake he came into the world, in order to make known to them his Father, and his will, he ſays, that this was abſolutely neceſſary, becauſe none of them knows the Father, but by the revelation of the Son. He came not to give inſtruction to the Holy Ghoſt, but to mankind; conſequently the Holy Ghoſt is not in the leaſt excluded from the knowledge of God. (V.)

Learn of me.] That is, undergo my diſcipline, becauſe I am not a tyrant, but a merciful and affectionate perſon to thoſe who come to me. Thus the author of the imperfect work in Chryſoſtom. Yet, of me, is more commonly render'd, by my example. Of me, whom the prophets and apoſtles, and John the forerunner between them, exhibit under the type of the lamb. Of me, to whom all power both in heaven and on earth is delivered, and under whoſe obedience are more than twelve legions of angels; of whom, even one can ſubdue and diſſipate my enemies, yet I came not to be miniſtred to, but to miniſter, and yield up my ſoul as a ranſom for many. Of me, who am the lion of the tribe of Judah, but by a wonderful metamorphoſis, changed from a lion to a lamb, through my innocence, lenity, humility, and patience. Of me, in whom Sampſon's riddle is fulfilled, Out of the eater went forth meat, and out of the ſtrong went forth ſweetneſs. I will feed you with my fleſh, I will waſh and redeem you with my blood, I will cloath you with my wool, nay, I will cover you with my ſelf (V. and B.)

My yoke is eaſy.] The word tranſlated here eaſy ſignifies good, and ſomething more, good in the higheſt degree, and is render'd gracious, 1 Pet. ii. 3. The Lord is gracious; the Septuagint tranſlate it, Pſal. xxxiv. 8. O taſte and ſee, that the Lord is gracious; and ſo Rom. ii. 4. The bounty of the Lord. So that the yoke of Chriſt, or the precepts which he lays on his diſciples, are ſaid by him here to be not only a good, but a gracious and bounteous yoke. which he who takes up, is conſiderably the better for; and if he conſider'd it well, he would put it on voluntarily, prefer it to liberty, or any other conſideration or ſervice. (H.) A yoke is that inſtrument, to which oxen are faſten'd to draw the plow: 'Tis metaphorically uſed here to point out the evangelical law of Chriſt, which is render'd the moſt eaſy and ſweet to Chriſtians; becauſe it is written on the heart, and the Holy Ghoſt infuſes ſtrength into believers to fulfil it; and to thoſe who do ſo, certain and ample rewards are beſtowed. (V.) Our bleſſed Saviour calls ſuch as are willing to embrace his precepts, and live agreeably to the Goſpel, by this pathetic ſpeech, My yoke is eaſy, and my burden is light; thereby acquainting us, that there is nothing of that difficulty or ſeverity in any of the commands he has laid down, that ought to deter us from acceding thereto; but that, to minds devoted to piety and religion, all his injunctions are natural and eaſy, and calculated for the benefit and advantage of thoſe whom he came to redeem. (B.)

CHAP. XII.

The diſciples pluck the ears of corn on the ſabbath. The wither'd hand is reſtored. A dæmoniac, blind, and dumb, is healed. Many want miracles. The mother and brothers of our Lord.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. AT that time Jeſus went on the ſabbath-day through the corn, and his diſciples were an hungred, and began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat. But when the Phariſees ſaw it, they ſaid unto him, Behold, thy diſciples do that which is not lawful to do on the ſabbath-day. But he ſaid unto them, Have ye not read what David did when he was an hungred, and they that were with him, How he entred into the houſe of God, and did eat the ſhew-bread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the prieſts? Or have ye not read in the law, how that on the ſabbath-days the prieſts in the temple profane the ſabbath, and are blameleſs? But I ſay unto you, that in this place is one greater than the temple. But if ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy and not ſacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltleſs. For the ſon of man is Lord even of the ſabbath-day.

Sabbath-day.] Properly ſo called, or the ſeventh day of the week; for we read, Exod. xxxv. and Levit. xxiii. that the Jews were prohibited doing any manner of work, neither ſervile offices, or even duties of neceſſity; ſuch as dreſſing meat, or the like, on that and the day of expiation. This ſabbath, taken notice of in this hiſtory, is by Luke called, the ſecond ſabbath after the firſt; becauſe, as we are acquainted by Joſeph Scaliger, l. 6. de emend. temp. cap. 6. it immediately followed the ſecond day of the paſſover, from which ſecond day were reckoned ſeven weeks unto the feaſt of Pentecoſt. So that the firſt week was called the ſecond after the firſt, and its ſabbath the ſecond ſabbath after the firſt; the ſecond week was called the ſecond after the ſecond, and its ſabbath; the ſecond after the ſecond, and ſo onwards. 'Tis certain and indiſputable, that Scaliger builds his authority for this upon the words of Moſes, Levit. xxiii. 15. (V.)

Have ye not read what David did.] 'Tis a ſaying amongſt the lawyers themſelves, Scire leges, non eſt verba earum tenere, ſed vim ac poteſtatem, quia prior atque potentior eſt quam vox mens dicentis: "Right knowledge of laws, conſiſts not in keeping up to the bare "letter of them, but to their intention and ſpirit, becauſe the "mind of the ſpeaker is preferable to his voice." So that whenſoever the mind of the lawgiver can be found out by ſure ſigns, the intention ought to have place before the bare letter. Which is granted, not only in human but divine laws, and eſpecially in ſuch as are not bad in their nature, but conſtitution. When God vouchſafes to ſpeak after the manner of men, he would be underſtood ſo, as tho' a real man had been ſpeaking. And amongſt all the exceptions that may ſecretly be found in any laws, none are more received or juſt than ſuch as flow from neceſſity. Chriſt, from the ſacred ſcriptures, takes a very ſtrong argument from a ſimilar caſe, which is, that in a like caſe there ſhould be done like juſtice. The law of the ſabbath, and the law of not eating the ſhew-bread, but by the prieſts, are both ritual: And David and his companions being involved in the ſame caſe, as my diſciples are now, have acted againſt the letter of the law about bread, but cannot be thought to have acted againſt the intention. It conſequently then follows, that my diſciples have committed nothing in this action againſt the intention and true meaning of the law. (G.)

Enter'd into the houſe of God.] Meaning, into the court of the tabernacle. Lay-perſons, ſuch as David was, were prohibited to enter the Sanctum, into which only the prieſts were ſuffer'd to go; and the high prieſt only once a year into the Sanctum Sanctorum, or holy of holies. The tabernacle was then at Nob, a city of the prieſts, as appears from 1 Sam. xxi. Tho' the ark, according to Maldonatus, was not then in Silo, but in Abiathar's houſe at Cariathiarim, as is alſo clear from 1 Sam. xxi. Why Mark. ii. 16. ſays, that David went into the houſe of God in the days of Abiathar the high-prieſt, when 1 Sam. it is ſaid to happen under Achimelech, who was Abiathar's father, the reaſon is, becauſe both father and Son had each two names, as is evident from 2 Sam. viii. 17. 1 Chron. xviii. 16. and xxiv. 6. where the ſon is called Achimelech, or Abimelech, and the father Abiathar. The learned biſhop Janſenius writes, that when this occurrence happened, the ark was in Gabao. But John Tarnovius, in his Exercit. Bibliis, denies, on juſt grounds, that the ark was ever in Gabao. For Aminadab, into whoſe houſe the ark was removed from Bethſames, a town of the prieſts, dwelt not in Gabao, which was a city in the tribe of Benjamin, as we read in Judges xix. and 1 Sam. xxii. but in Cariathiarim, as is clear from 1 Sam. vi. 21. vii. 1, 2. and 1 Chron. xiii. 6. Now Cariathiarim, which in Joſhua xv. 60. and xviii. 14. is called Cariathbaal, ſtood in the tribe of Judah. (V.)

The ſhew-bread.] Called thus, not for being put on the table, but for being placed before the Lord. What the ſeptuagint render "the bread of ſhewing," the Hebrews call "the "bread of faces," that is, bread ſet before the faces, or ſight of the ark, which ſignified the preſence of the Lord. In the epiſtle to the Hebrews ix. 2. propoſitio panis, is called by an Hypallage panis propoſitionis. The reaſon, which I have mentioned above, God himſelf aſſigns to Moſes when he commands him Exod. xxvi. "And thou ſhalt ſet upon the table ſhew bread before me alway." Some pretend to think that they were called the bread of faces, becauſe they were pleced in two rows, and every way faced one another. We will ſubjoin here four arguments that ſerve Chriſt to clear his diſciples from infringing the law of the ſabbath. The firſt is, that he who violates a poſitive law through an act of neceſſity that cannot be avoided, is excuſed from the imputation of ſinning, as is clear from the example of David. Neceſſity, ſays "Seneca, is a great friend to human weakneſs; whatſoever it "forces, it excuſes." Now my diſciples being too weak againſt the force of hunger, having infringed a poſitive law concerning the ſabbath; therefore they are excuſed from ſinning. The ſecond is, that he who violates a common poſitive law, in order to obſerve a more particular law made by the ſame law-giver, is excuſed from ſinning. Thus the prieſts innocently infringe the ſabbath in the temple, that they may juſtly obſerve the duties preſcrib'd them, Numb. xxviii. 9. Now my diſciples have broken the ſabbath by plucking the ears of corn, to eat, and ſatisfy their hunger, and to enable them to execute the command I have given them, who am worthier and holier than the temple, to preach the kingdom of God: therefore, they are excuſed from ſinning. The third is, that he who acts againſt the precept of a poſitive law, when his obſervance thereof would be contrary to humanity, is excuſed from ſinning: For God is infinitely more pleaſed with mercy than ſacrifice, that is, with any external worſhip. Now the obſervance of the ſabbath would have been contrary to humanity, had my diſciples, when they walk'd through the corn on the ſabbath, been prohibited plucking the ears to ſatisfy their hunger: therefore, in this particular, they are excuſed from ſinning. The fourth and laſt argument is, that he who infringes a poſitive law, to preſerve his life, for whoſe ſake the law was made, is excuſed from ſinning. The law for keeping holy the ſabbath is made for man, or, as Mark ſpeaks, ch. ii. 27. The ſabbath was made for man, and not man for the ſabbath; therefore the ſon of man is Lord alſo of the ſabbath: Q. d. Therefore man, who, by an Hebraiſm, is called Ben Adam, or ſon of man, hath the ſabbath in his power, and may, to preſerve his own life, infringe it, preferring, as is but reaſonable, the intention to the letter of the law: therefore my diſciples, being oppreſſed with hunger, trangreſſed againſt the ſabbath, to preſerve their lives. (V. and B.)

In this place is one greater than the temple.] Every prophet was greater than the temple; whence the prophets had liberty to ſacrifice out of the temple, as Elias. And Jeſus was more than a prophet, as is clear from ver. 41. below. But ſome-body, perhaps, will ſay, there was no ſuch thing as obſerving the rites of the temple, without ſpending ſome pains on the ſabbath; and what connection is there between the office of Chriſt and his apoſtles, and the plucking the ears of corn? Why this, Chriſt and his apoſtles were ſo much taken up in performing their office, as to have no time to ſpare to prepare themſelves victuals to live on upon the ſabbath. Therefore, it was neceſſary, that either the prophetic office ſhould be hindered, or that they ſhould act againſt the letter of the law concerning the ſabbath. But this law concerning the ſabbath was no impediment to the ſacerdotal office; therefore neither could the prophetic function, which was greater, be intermitted under that notion. (G.)

The ſon of man is Lord even of the ſabbath day.] 'Tis more than probable that in this place by the phraſe "Son of man," is not meant man in common, according to the opinions of ſome very learned men, but Chriſt in particular; eſpecially by theſe words "a greater than the temple is here. Though the words as they are in Mark ii. 27. make the contrary ſeem not improbable, where the foundation of Chriſt's affirming that "the Son of "man is Lord of the ſabbath," is becauſe the "ſabbath is made "for man," as if the ſabbath's being made for man, did conclude him lord of it, and conſequently that he was lord for whom it was made, that is, man in common, and not Chriſt. An eaſy anſwer may be returned to this. That the caſe, of which Chriſt in Matthew and Mark ſpeaks, being for the neceſſary ſervice and benefit of man; plucking and eating for neceſſity and preſervation of life, theſe words "the ſabbath is made for man;" may very juſtly be referred to by Chriſt; ſo that the phraſe "for man," ſhall ſignify "for the good of man," and import that the ſabbath, being deſigned for the good of man, could not reaſonably be conceived to oblige him to any thing ſo contrary to humanity, as ſtarving, or debilitating his nature, ſo as to render him unable to diſcharge the duty of his calling. So that from hence the firſt concluſion of "man's being lord of the ſabbath will not follow," becauſe man is not lord or abſolute diſpoſer of all thoſe things that are for his good. In fine, the only proper concluſion, from the notion of "the ſabbath's being made for man," will be this, that he who made a poſitive law did not oblige men to the obſervance of it in ſuch caſes as are for the good of man, as works of mercy; ſo that the law of the ſabbath, at the very making of it, was not deſigned to bind men to ſtrict reſt in ſome caſes, as thoſe v. 5. of the neceſſary ſervices of the temple, and what was done here, was for the ſervice of Chriſt, "who is greater then the temple." Thus Chriſt is Lord of the ſabbath in every reſpect, and may uſe it which way he will for the ſervice and benefit of man And thus God did always appoint it to be uſed, ſo as the reſt might be broken, when any moral good required it. The Jews ſtrictly obſerved upon their ſabbaths, at leaſt upon their great days, abſtaining from eating 'till the ſixth hour, or 'till their ſolemn ſervice was performed. And this ſeems to be the quarrel which the Jews had here with Chriſt's diſciples, namely, that they had eaten before the time on the ſabbath day. Our Saviour anſwers that ſuppoſing what they alledged as an infringemant was never ſo much a part of the law, yet in caſe of neceſſity, which implied charity, it was of no force. The Jews underſtood the words of Chriſt in this ſenſe, as appears by the queſtion that next follows, whether "'twas lawful to heal "on the ſabbath day, that is, whether in this caſe of curing God had permitted working or doing any thing on the ſabbath; which Chriſt anſwers diſtinctly, that the life or ſafety of one ſheep, according to their own doctrines, much more of man, is to be preferred before the obſervation of the ſabbath. Another ſenſe is put to theſe words, as tho' by the phraſe of the "ſon of man's "being lord of the ſabbath," Chriſt's power of aboliſhing the ſabbath was here aſſerted. But I conceive this paſſage is foreign to this acceptation. For though there is little reaſon to doubt of Chriſt's having this power, yet if he had ſpoken of his power to aboliſh the ſabbath: then he would not have defended his action, by that which was already a common practice among them "which of you having, &c." And if he had once aſſerted the abolition of the ſabbath, the Phariſees would have wanted no other argument, nor conſequently have asked the queſtion, to procure ground of accuſation againſt him. To which his anſwer is the ſame as the former, for he ſays to both, that God prefers acts of charity before the outward ſtrictneſs of ſabbatick reſt. As for any diſtinct text in the goſpels, for Chriſt's abrogating the judicial ſabbath, there is no more reaſon to expect it, than for exterminating ſacrifices or circumciſion, or the Judaical prieſthood; for the temple and that people are deſtroyed, and the ceremonies, as far as they were ſuch, ceaſed of themſelves, having never been obligatory to any but the Jews themſelves. (H.)

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. And when he was departed thence, he went into their ſynagogue. And behold, there was a man which had his hand withered: and they asked him, ſaying, Is it lawful to heal on the ſabbath-days? that they might accuſe him. And he ſaid unto them, What man ſhall there be among you, that ſhall have one ſheep, and if it fall into a pit on the ſabbath-day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out? How much then is a man better than a ſheep? wherefore it is lawful to do well on the ſabbath-days. Then ſaith he to the man, Stretch forth thine hand: and he ſtretched it forth; and it was reſtored whole like as the other. Then the Phariſees went out, and held a councel againſt him, how they might deſtroy him. But when Jeſus knew it, he withdrew himſelf from thence: and great multitudes followed him, and he healed them all, And charged them that they ſhould not make him known: That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by Eſaias the prophet, ſaying, Behold, my ſervant whom I have choſen, my beloved, in whom my ſoul is well pleaſed: I will put my ſpirit upon him, and he ſhall ſhew judgment to the Gentiles. He ſhall not ſtrive, nor cry, neither ſhall any man hear his voice in the ſtreets. A bruiſed reed ſhall he not break, and ſmoking flax ſhall he not quench, till he ſend forth judgment unto victory. And in his name ſhall the Gentiles truſt.

What man ſhall there be among you.] The Eſſenes differed from the other Jews in their expounding the law of the ſabbath. They ſeldom or never admitted of any exceptions; tho' they were allowed by common interpreters. 'Tis clear, that in Chriſt's time the opinion prevailed, that the ſolemnity of the ſabbath did not hinder the life of a ſheep to be preſerved. (G.) The Phariſees were not againſt the doing of ſome particular good works on the ſabbath-day, as to pray, to ſacrifice; but denied ſuch as were done to ſerve their neighbour, tho' they were offices of beneficence. But Chriſt acquaints them, that even theſe may be done on the ſabbath, by producing the caſe of the ſheep being fallen into a ditch; which they ſcruple not to take out on the ſabbath. (V. and B.)

Then ſaith he to the man.] Chriſt, by explaining the true doctrine of the ſabbath, removed every handle that might be turned againſt him. For he cured the man without touching him, which took away all appearance of infringing the ſabbath. (G.) Supply, from Mark iii. 5. And when he had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardneſs of their hearts. This anger of Chriſt was a true one; and 'tis to be noted, that anger in man, in Chriſt, and in God, is different. Anger in man, is a perturbation of the ſoul, which frequently miſguides his reaſon, and diſturbs the peace of his mind. Anger in Chriſt is an affection of the iraſcible appetite, yet ſubject to reaſon, and obedient to her dictates, and riſes at the tranſgreſſion of man, as worthy of puniſhment and correction. Anger in God is put figuratively: for he is ſaid to be angry, when he does that, which men in anger are wont to do, that is, when he puniſhes, and takes revenge. In like manner, he is ſaid to repent, when be deſtroys the work he has made, which men are wont to do, when they repent of what they have done. (V.) He ſaid to the man; q. d. "I do not touch you, to "prevent the Jews from having any thing to object againſt me; "to hinder them from ſaying, that my touching you is the ſame "as doing ſome human work: but by curing you with a word of "my mouth, that they may ſtand in admiration at me, who only "ſays, Stretch forth thine hand." (Athanaſius.) In the goſpel of the Nazarenes and Ebionites, which we lately tranſlated into Greek out of Hebrew, and which ſome pretend to think is Matthew's authentick Goſpel, the man with the withered hand is ſaid to be a lapidary, and to uſe theſe words when he beſought Chriſt to heal him: "I was a lapidary, and by that employment got my living; "I beſeech thee, Jeſus, to reſtore my hand, that I may not be "brought to the ſcandalous condition of begging." (Jerome.)

Behold my ſervant, whom I have choſen.] I am very well ſatisfied that the Septuagint underſtood this paſſage of the prophet, as reſpecting the Jews, eſpecially for that which goes before, in chap. xli. 8. and what follows, xliii. 1. Tho' they ſhould have obſerved from other places of Iſaiah, eſpecially from chap. xliv. 6. that the prophet ſpoke of him who was to bring light both to Jews and Gentiles, which the Chaldean paraphraſt rightly perceived, who, purſuing a more ſublime conſtruction, added the name of Meſſiah. (G.) Jerome, in his 151ſt epiſtle to Algaſia, Q. 2. ſays: "We muſt not only in this place, but in all others where the "evangeliſts and apoſtles produce teſtimonies out of the Old Teſtament, diligently obſerve, that they did not ſo much follow "the words, as the ſenſe of ſuch teſtimonies; and that where the "Septuagint differ from the Hebrew, they expreſs the ſenſe of the "Hebrew in their tranſlation. The child of God, according to "the diſpenſation of the fleſh which he aſſumed, wherewith he "was ſent to mankind, is called a Saviour; to whom, in another "place, the Father ſays, 'Tis great for thee to be called my Son, "that thou mayeſt gather together the tribe of Jacob. This is the "beſt beloved ſon, in whom the ſoul of God is well pleaſed; not "that God hath a ſoul, but that in the ſoul all the affection of "God is ſhewn; and no wonder if a ſoul be ſaid to be in God, "ſince all the members of a man's body, according to the laws of "Tropology, are ſaid to have different intelligences." (V.)

Neither ſhall any man hear his voice in the ſtreets.] 'Tis a plain diſcovery of a man's being in anger, when we hear his voice roaring out of doors. Without doubt, this proverbial expreſſion ſhews, that Chriſt was endued with ſo much ſweetneſs and complacency, that he would not lay open the miſtakes of thoſe in whom the leaſt ſhadow of hope was ſtill remaining. (G.) Theſe words are not contradictory to what Luke aſſerts, xiii. 26. that ſome ſaid to our Lord, Thou haſt taught in our ſtreets. Iſaiah does not deny, that Chriſt was to teach in the ſtreets, who, as opportunity ſerved, taught up and down, either in the temple, or in the ſynagogue, or in the ſtreets, or in the deſart, or in a ſhip, or in the road. But the prediction points at Chriſt's humility and complacency, and at the moderation and ſerenity of his temper, who was not to prove contentious or noiſy; for ſuch, tho' they ſpeak in the houſe, are commonly heard out of doors, and in the ſtreets. (V.) What a fine pourtrait is here given of our Saviour; He ſhall not ſtrive, nor cry, neither ſhall any man hear his voice in the ſtreets; meaning, he ſhall not make loud pretences to the doctrines he is come to preach, but all ſhall be carried on with gentleneſs and moderation; he ſhall ſtrive to inform by mild words and perſuaſion, without having recourſe to magiſterial airs, without bawling and contention; neither ſhall he break a reed that is bruiſed, that is, neither ſhall he expoſe to the world the ſins and tranſgreſſions of thoſe, who have involved themſelves in error, if he perceive only the ſmalleſt hope for amendment. This ſhou'd teach chriſtian paſtors to purſue their courſe with gentleneſs, and not by the loudneſs of their words, ſo as to be heard out of doors, and in the ſtreets, run againſt the prediction of the prophet here. (B.)

A bruiſed reed ſhall he not break.] 'Tis very common with all writers, very frequent in the ſacred dialect, to make uſe of phraſes by which they underſtand much more than they do expreſs. An example of this, we have in this verſe out of the prophet, where Chriſt's not breaking the bruiſed reed, ſignifies his great mercy and kindneſs, in reſtoring and curing the bruiſed, weak perſon; and his not quenching the ſmoking flax, his enlivening that ſpark of grace or goodneſs, which was almoſt quench'd. The reed here, is the infirm perſon; the bruiſing of the reed, is his falling into ſin; and the flax on fire that is burning in the lamp, is the perſon again; the ſmoking flax, is when the flame is out, or burns darkly for want of oil. Now anſwerable to this, is the perſon in whom grace is decayed; but yet not ſo, as to be irrecoverably gone out, ſome ſparks of good ſtill remaining in him And this is the perſon, in this condition, whom Chriſt is ſo far from deſtroying, or triumphing over, that, in the moſt tender manner, he labours to reſtore ſuch an one in the ſpirit of meekneſs, to a firm habit of chriſtian practice again. This is Chriſt's practice of his coming into the world, deſigning to plant the ſincere evangelical righteouſneſs through the world, which is the meaning of the phraſe that follows; Until he bring forth judgment into victory. (H.)

And in his name ſhall the Gentiles truſt.] In the Hebrew 'tis read, ((ſays Jerome) The iſlands ſhall put their hope in his law; but Matthew, following the ſenſe more than the words, hath, in the room of law and iſlands, put the Gentiles This prophecy of Iſaiah, both the Chaldean paraphraſt, and the Jews, underſtood of Chriſt, or the Meſſiah; the Septuagint alone explained it of Jacob. (V.)

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. Then was brought unto him one poſſeſſed with a devil, blind and dumb: and he healed him, inſomuch that the blind and dumb both ſpake and ſaw. And all the people were amazed, and ſaid, Is not this the ſon of David? But when the Phariſees heard it, they ſaid, 'This fellow doth not caſt out devils, but by Beelzebub the prince of the devils. And Jeſus knew their thoughts, and ſaid unto them, Every kingdom divided againſt it ſelf, is brought to deſolation: and every city or houſe divided againſt it ſelf, ſhall not ſtand. And if Satan caſt out Satan, he is divided againſt himſelf; how ſhall then his kingdom ſtand? And if I by Beelzebub caſt out devils, by whom do your children caſt them out? therefore they ſhall be your judges. But if I caſt out devils by the Spirit of God, then the kingdom of God is come unto you. Or elſe, how can one enter into a ſtrong man's houſe, and ſpoil his goods, except he firſt bind the ſtrong man? and then he will ſpoil his houſe. He that is not with me, is againſt me: and he that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth abroad.

Your children.] Not the apoſtles, who were, together with Chriſt, accuſed by the Jews, but the Phariſees and their diſciples; and yet not thoſe among them who made uſe of herbs, incenſe, and chains againſt devils, which was not an inſtitution originally Jewiſh, or fetched from Solomon, but received from the Gentiles; but thoſe who caſt out devils, not in the name of Jeſus, becauſe no body was granted that privilege, except ſuch as followed Chriſt, but by invoking the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob. For I do not pretend to deny, but that theſe were ſolemn forms of incantation, which came from Solomon, as both Jewiſh and Chriſtian writers frequently inform us. The invocation of theſe names was frequently attended with exorciſms, not that there was any virtue in the pronuntiation of the ſyllables but becauſe the true God choſe to be known by ſuch names. (G.) Your children, here ſignifies either your diſciples, that is, ſpiritual children, or your countrymen, that is, children of your nation naturally. And ſo he means the Jews, who pretended to exorciſe and caſt out devils in the name of the God of Abraham, the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob, which was their ordinary form of exorciſm: and which it ſeems the children of Scheva were willing to change into the name of the Lord Jeſus, in imitation of the Apoſtles. Acts xix. 13. Thus Juſtin againſt Trypho the Jew, " If, ſays " he, you invoke the name of any of your kings, or juſt men, or " prophets, or patriarchs, the devil will not obey you; but if " you call upon the God of Abraham, &c. and ſo exorciſe, " perhaps he will obey." Thus Irenæus. " By the invoking of " the moſt High and Almighty, even before the coming of Chriſt, " men were delivered from the wicked ſpirits, and from all kinds " of devils." Thus Tertullian againſt Marcion expounds this paſſage in St. Luke, that Chriſt affirms himſelf to caſt out devils by the ſame power whereby their children did, " by virtue of " the Creator." That there was this cuſtom among the Jews of charms and incantations may farther appear by the remainders, which we find in the forms of renouncing Judaiſm in the liturgies of the Greek Church, where, after the mention of the ſeveral feaſts and ſabbaths, is added, " I renounce all charms, in- " cantations, and defenſatives, &c." The Phylacteries there renounced, being not thoſe worn about them as remembrances of a part of the divine law, but ſuch antidotes we now ſpeak of, which they carried about them, to defend themſelves from witchcraft and faſcinations, whether they were ſome written characters, or the names of God, as the, God of Abraham, the Lord of Sabbaoth, &c. Origen ſays, That the Ægyptians borrowed their magical practices from the Jews. The names of Abraham, &c. joined with " the name of God is not only of force in the Jews prayers and " exorciſms, but almoſt all others that deal in conjurations uſe " them." And from thence the ignorant ſort came to take Abraham for the name of God, ſays Chryſoſtom, becauſe of the form Theos Abraham ſo eaſily miſtaken by them. The ſame incantations were uſed in curing diſeaſes; Trallian mentions a famous one for curing the gout. Pauſanias, in his deſcription of the Pyrætheia (mentioned by Strabo l. 15.) ſays, That in Lydia the magician having laid wood on the altar, firſt puts a mitre on his head, and then, " calls upon ſome kind of god, in a barbarous " form, not underſtood by the Grecians; he reads his charm out " of a book, and preſently the wood is ſet on fire." 'Tis not improbable that God was ſometimes pleaſed to admit of ſuch forms, particularly when he was called on as the one true God, as he had revealed himſelf to his own people, and not as one of the falſe Gentile gods, when 'twas certain that the power of the true God, and not any virtue in the words, performed it. Chriſt makes this an argument ad homines, that they who caſt out devils by the God of Abraham, had no reaſon to ſay, that he did ſo by the prince of devils. (H.)

Ver. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37. Wherefore I ſay unto you, All manner of ſin and blaſphemy ſhall be forgiven unto men: but the blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, ſhall not be forgiven unto men. And whoſoever ſpeaketh a word againſt the Son of man, it ſhall be forgiven him: but whoſoever ſpeaketh againſt the Holy Ghoſt, it ſhall not be forgiven him, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. Either make the tree good, and his fruit good; or elſe make the tree corrupt, and his fruit corrupt: for the tree is known by his fruit. O generation of vipers, how can ye, being evil, ſpeak good things? for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh. A good man out of the good treaſure of the heart, bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treaſure, bringeth forth evil things.

But I ſay unto you, That every idle word that men ſhall ſpeak, they ſhall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned.

All manner of ſin.] The ſenſe hereof is this: 'Tis much eaſier for any ſin that can be thought on, or committed, and conſequenty for tranſgreſſions of the higheſt nature, to be pardoned, than to expect the ſin againſt the Spirit of God to be forgiven. (G.) The blaſphemy of the Holy Ghoſt, mentioned in this verſe, is when, like the hardened Phariſees, we impiouſly aſſert that to be the work of the devil, which we are perſuaded in our conſciences is the work of the Holy Spirit, (to which the ſacred ſcripture attributes this phraſe, to teach all manner of truth, as its peculiar employment, that is, the work of goodneſs, which is appropriated to the Holy Ghoſt.) That this is the proper meaning of this paſſage, is evident from Mark iii. 30. (V.)

Whoſoever ſpeaketh a word.] It is common, in the Hebrew dialect, for ſpeaking to ſignify doing, and word to ſignify thing. Thus, in this place, to blaſpheme, or to ſpeak a word againſt the ſon of man, or, againſt the Holy Ghoſt, is to oppoſe and reſiſt them, The phraſe ſon of man here belongs to Chriſt, as he appeared in the weakneſs of human ſtate, abſtracted from the light ſhining in him, to convince all men that he was the Meſſiah: that is, Chriſt, conſider'd without the great power of his doctrine and miracles; which, on their appearance, convinced thoſe who heard him, that never man ſpake as he ſpake, and thoſe who beheld him, ver. 23. that ſure he was the Meſſiah. This power of his doctrine, and particularly here of his miracles, is called the finger of God by St. Luke, xi. 20. and in the 28th verſe here, the Spirit of God: which two phraſes appear, by comparing them together, to be the ſame; and conſequently, to oppoſe, or ſpeak againſt the Holy Spirit, or the Spirit of God, is, in this place, to oppoſe the power and convincing light of thoſe miracles; which plainly made it appear, that he acted by the power of God. This ſhews the ground of difference between theſe two ſins, ſpeaking againſt the ſon of man, and ſpeaking againſt the Holy Ghoſt. The firſt was, the not believing him to be the Meſſiah, when there was not that convincing light and evidence of his being ſo, tho' he himſelf poſitively declared that he was: The ſecond was, oppoſing the light that brightly ſhone in him, and manifeſted the miracles which he did; but rather than they would acknowledge them to be done by the power of God, rhey affirmed them to be executed by the operation of the devil; which being the only poſſible evaſion they could make, Chriſt tells them, that this, if they continue in it, muſt be a wilful blindneſs, and, therefore, not capable of that excuſe of ignorance, or blind zeal, which the former ſin would admit of. Having thus ſet down the difference of theſe ſins, it follows, that the former had room for ſacrifice under the law of the Jews, and conſequently, for forgiveneſs, upon a general confeſſion of all unknown ſins, and asking pardon for them of God; not incurring the ſanction of death, or being cut off from the people. In ſhort, 'twas a ſin that was pardonable by a general repentance: But the ſecond was of a far higher nature; no ignorance was admitted here; juſt vengeance and puniſhment called for execution; and death, without mercy, was to be inflicted on the impenitent oppoſers. They who ſin thus, are the ſoul that doth ought preſumptuouſly, or, with a high hand, Numb. xv. 30. a hand againſt God's finger, Luke xi. 20. or, againſt the Holy Spirit, Heb. x. 29. Such a ſin as this, under the Goſpel, ſhall not be forgiven. (H.)

Neither in this world, neither in that to come.] Chryſoſtom's explanation is very plain, Punieter graviter, & in hoc, & in futuro ſeculo, "Terrible ſhall be his puniſhment, both in this, and the "world to come." This is confirm'd by the cuſtomary way of the Jews ſpeaking after this manner. See 2 Macc. vi. 26. Notwithſtanding, Chriſt ſeems to have purpoſely nam'd both worlds, to remove out of the minds of the Jews a perſuaſion wherewith they flatter'd themſelves againſt the worſt of puniſhments. For they were of opinion, that ſuch as perſever'd in the Jewiſh religion could, by meer repentance, obtain pardon of their tranſgreſſions, as having only acted againſt certain poſitive precepts: or in the ſolemn day of expiation, as having infring'd certain negative laws; or by temporary puniſhments, ſuch as death, or baniſhment; as having liv'd in contempt of the divine being. In oppoſition to theſe notions, Chriſt acquaints them, that thoſe ſins, which contain a contempt of God, will be puniſhed not only in this, but in the world to come, for ever. (G.) In this world, is a phraſe which ſeems to refer to a perſwaſion of the Jews, that ſome ſins, which could not be forgiven on their ſacrifices (whether their daily ſacrifices, or that on the great day of expiation;) and, therefore, were irremiſſible in this world, might be pardoned, in that to come: which the Jews underſtood ſometimes for the age or world of the Meſſiah, ſometimes for the ſtate after death. But Chriſt acquaints them, that they muſt expect no favour in a ſin thus unrepented of. For the opinion of theirs, that every jew hath his ſhare in the age to come of the Meſſiah (there being no farther Meſſiah to be expected) ſhould ſtand them in no ſtead, if they continued impenitent againſt all the light and evidence of divine power, then plainly demonſtrating him to be the Meſſiah. And for the ſtate after death, there would be ſmall hope of relief for them when that was once come, and their ſentence pronounced. (H.)

Either make the tree good, &c.] Chriſt reprehends the Phariſees, in this place, for their deceitfulneſs and hypocriſy, becauſe, when they would have the tree to appear good, they yet brought forth bad fruit, or when the tree was bad, they would pretend to produce good fruit; wherefore he commands them either to ſhew themſelves openly bad, or openly good. Q. d. luke-warmneſs in the affair of religion is of no ſignification; either you muſt deal ſeriouſly with God, or deal not with him at all; he has no occaſion for hypocriſy; he hates ſouls that are only luke-warm; either be throughly warm, or effectually cold. In ſhort I put this choice to you. Either be ſincerely and openly good; or, if that diſpleaſes you, be openly bad. What need of this halting? 'Tis like what Elias ſaid to Iſrael. 1. Kings xviii. 21. How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him; and what the Angel wrote to the church of Laodicea, Rev. iii. 15, 16. I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then becauſe thou art luke-warm, and neither cold nor hot, I will ſpue thee out of my mouth. (V. and B.)

Every idle word.] Vain word, as it is read Eph. v. 6. I am of opinion that ſuch words, as are every way unprofitable, are not pointed out here, but only ſuch as want the ſolidity of truth. A tacit argument is drawn from the major, If every lye ſhall be called to account at the day of judgment; how much ſhall calumny? (G.) The word render'd Idle here, may be tranſlated vain, or falſe, becauſe that which is falſe wants the ſolidity and ſubſtance of truth. So Proverbs xxx. 8. Vanity and lies are put together. So Epheſ. v. 6. we read vain ſpeech. The advice of Pythagoras was, "Chuſe rather to throw a ſtone at random, than an idle word." Where 'tis evident that idle word is at leaſt a raſh ſpeech, and from which a man may as probably receive ſome conſiderable hurt, as from a ſtone thrown at random. However, from the next verſe it appears, that ſome grand crime is underſtood here, not every word that tends not to ſome ſpecial end of chriſtian edification. (H.)

Ver. 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45. Then certain of the Scribes and of the Phariſees anſwered, ſaying, Maſter, we would ſee a ſign from thee. But he anſwered and ſaid to them, An evil and adulterous generation ſeeketh after a ſign, and there ſhall no ſign be given to it, but the ſign of the prophet Jonas. For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whales belly: ſo ſhall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. The men of Nineveh ſhall riſe in judgment with this generation, and ſhall condemn it, becauſe they repented at the preaching of Jonas, and behold, a greater than Jonas is here. The queen of the ſouth ſhall riſe up in the judgment with this generation, and ſhall condemn it: for ſhe came from the uttermoſt parts of the earth to hear the wiſdom of Solomon, and behold, a greater than Solomon is here. When the unclean ſpirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, ſeeking reſt, and findeth none. Then he ſaith, I will return into my houſe from whence I came out; and when he is come, he findeth it empty, ſwept, and garniſhed. Then goeth he, and taketh with himſelf ſeven other ſpirits more wicked than himſelf, and they enter in and dwell there: and the laſt ſtate of that man is worſe than the firſt. Even ſo ſhall it be alſo unto this wicked generation.

Seeketh after a ſign.] Supply, from Luke ii. 16. tempting him. God is ſaid to be tempted two ways, firſt, when we find our faith give ground, upon which we have recourſe to Miracles to confirm and ſtrengthen us in it. Secondly, God is tempted by an innate ſtubborneſs of our minds, when we are entirely incredulous; when, without demanding miracles or ſigns, we give no credit at all; becauſe we look upon God's power and providence amongſt the number of idle fictions, and fables; when we acquieſce not in his word, but laugh at it as a piece of abſurd and romantic ſtuff. Some will have Gideon to be an example of the firſt. The Scribes and Phariſees of the laſt, who ſought for a ſign of Chriſt, whom they utterly rejected: they were not ſatisfied with the many great and illuſtrious miracles, which he perform'd on earth, but they demanded others to be ſhewn from heaven, which they would infallibly have rediculed as they had done the former. For they came to him with no other deſign than to tempt him, that is, they came to him through an hope of finding ſomething that might turn againſt and accuſe him. (V.)

In the whale's belly.] Oppian ſays that the Hebrews us'd to call a whale by the ſame name as they did a dragon; either for the ſimilitude of his ſhape, or on account of his vaſt bulk, or becauſe the whale excell'd other fiſhes of the deep as much, as the Dragon other creeping things of the earth. A whale may properly, or improperly be call'd ſo, properly, when we call him viviparous, not oviparous, as a fiſh. The whale has a very tough skin, his fleſh is firm, his bones are of the moſt ſolid kind: he has lungs and a wind pipe, and a real voice; the males have a yard, and the females dugs and milk, all which fiſhes have not. The nipples, according to the obſervation of Scaliger, lye very much hid in the dugs, which they draw out to give ſuck to their young. So that without doubt Jeremiah had this in view, when according to the Hebrew, he ſpeaks Lament. iv. 3. "The whales draw out "the dug, to ſuckle their young," which the vulgate reads thus, "The ſea monſters or (Lamie) draw out the breaſt, they give "ſuck to their young ones;" where Lamiæ is very ill put for whales; ſeeing the Lamia has no breaſts, and to ſay there is either a wild, or a ſhe Lamia, is ridiculous, and altogether fabulous Notwithſtanding, Whales differ very much: Of the ſmaller ſort is the ſea calf, (which, though it be four footed, is ſaid by Homer in his Odyſs. 4. to be without feet, becauſe of their exceeding littleneſs: So Cypſelus's birds are called apodes, or without feet, becauſe of the ſhortneſs of their legs) the ſea-horſe, (which the learned Bochart proves that Job xl, and xli. deſcribes under the name of Behemoth) and the dolphin. Of the larger kind are the Priſtis, Orca, and Balæna. The ſea-calf, and ſea-horſe are hairy, have feet, and a neck; but the Balæna and dolphin have a ſmooth and ſhining skin, fins in the room of feet, and in the place of a neck, a hole in the forehead, through which they draw breath. Moreover, as the whale is of a monſtruos ſize, ſo thoſe fiſhes, which are more bulky than others, are called Cetacei or of the whale-kind; nay, thoſe of the very largeſt ſort as the Lamia, Maltha, Zygæna, Thynnus, and others, are, by authors of great veracity, called, though improperly, by the name of whale without any addition. Thus Jonas, in this place, is ſaid to have been in the belly of a whale, when he was not in the belly of a whale properly nam'd ſo; for though the whale is a vaſt creature, yet its gullet is too narrow to receive an entire man down it; becauſe all creatures that have lungs, have neceſſarily a narrow gullet, to the end they may force up their breath through that narrowneſs with the greater vehemence. Therefore the whale, in whoſe belly Jonas is ſaid to have been, is called a vaſt fiſh. That it was a real fiſh is beyond doubt; but ſo large, as for its prodigious ſize to be called a whale. The learned Bochart proves it to be of that ſpecies of ſea dogs, which by ſome writers, is called Carcharia, from the ſharpneſs of its teeth; and, by others, Lamia, or Lemna, from the vaſtneſs of it's gullet. (W. and V.)

So ſhall the ſon of man be three days and three nights, &c.] 'Tis evident that Chriſt was not in the earth three nights, and, therefore, the way of interpreting this place muſt be taken from a figure, which expreſſes one entire thing by two parts of it. Thus the heavens and the earth, in St. Peter, ſignify the world; and the natural day, conſiſting of night and day, and beginning, among the Jews, at evening; means here night and day; and ſo Chriſt is ſaid to be three days and three nights in the earth, though the firſt natural day, he was not in the grave any part of the night, but only the latter part of Friday, all Saturday, and ſo much of Sunday 'till the ſun approached their horizon. The Jews reckoned their days by the Nukthemeron or evening and morning, which made up the natural day. So did the Athenians. Thus in the caſe of circumciſion, which was preciſely obſerved the eighth day, if the child was born in one day, though but half an hour before the end of it, that is, before the beginning, or evening of the next, that half hour was reckoned for one of the eight days, becauſe, ſay they, legal days are not accounted from time to time, or from hour to hour: in like manner, that part of Friday wherein he was buried, was the firſt day of this number. Accordingly, the ſpace of theſe three days of Chriſt's lying in the grave until his reſurrection is, as Hoſea prophecied, ſaid to be after two days. So a Luſtrum and an Olympiad, though they contain but four complete years, are yet ſaid to be five years, after the manner of our reckoning a Tertian and a Quartan ague. (G. H. W.)

The queen of the South.] The periphraſis of the queen of Saba, for the country of Saba, which the Roman writers commonly call the ſpicy Arabia, is, by the Arabians, named Jeman, and, with an article, Aljeman, or South, according to the teſtimony of Aben Ezra, Rabbi Benjamin Tudelenſis, Rabbi Abraham Zacuth, and others. Saba lies to the ſouth of Judæa, but at a vaſt diſtance from it. So that the Sabæans are, by the prophet Joel, juſtly called a people far off. (V.)

When the unclean ſpirit is gone out of a man, &c.] Q. d. When any perſon is got clear of a devil, the evil ſpirit, whoſe only enjoyment is to be obnoxious to man; ſeeks in vain, like him, for peace and tranquility in a dry and deſart country, but can find none; this puts him into a reſolution of returning back again into the man, whom he had lately tormented; accordingly finding him void of all virtue, and degenerated with vice (which the devil, through the depravity of his nature, looks upon as a beauty and ornament, wherein he takes pleaſure, like ſwine in mud, and naſtineſs) he is permitted by the will of God, the avenger, to re-enter and beſiege him with the whole army of vice, which proves infinitely more prejudicial to the man, than the ſnares which the devil lays in his way, ſo that the condition of that man is worſe, than it was before the unclean ſpirit went out of him, becauſe of his ungrateful contempt of his deliverance (V. and B.)

Seven other ſpirits.] Thus, John, Rev. i. 4. ſpeaking of the ſpirit of God, ſays ſeven ſpirits Becauſe whatſoever is arrived to its utmoſt perfection, is ſignified by this number. The common gloſs interprets ſeven ſpirits in this place the plenitude of vice or ſin. Thus venerable Bede ſays, "by the ſeven bad ſpirits is "meant all manner of vice." And St. Ambroſe, "this number "ſometimes implies univerſity." But the following clauſe evidently ſhews that the Jews, or the Phariſees and Scribes are pointed at by theſe words. Even ſo ſhall it be alſo unto this wicked generation. Q. d. Even ſo ſhall the laſt days of the Phariſees and Scribes, which, in ver. 39. in the foregoing, I juſtly call'd an evil and an adulterous generation, be worſe than the firſt: becauſe the Phariſees and Scribes, from a reſolute malice of their tempers are more blaſphemous againſt the Holy Ghoſt, in outwardly denying me to be the Meſſiah, whom both the law and the prophets have proclaim'd ſuch; though they are inwardly convinced of the veracity of my miſſion, than if the light of the truth had never ſhone upon them for conviction of their crimes: for it is far better not to acknowledge the way of righteouſneſs at all, than to know it, and act ſo falſely and unjuſtly againſt it. (G. V.)

Ver. 46, 47, 48, 49, 50. While he yet talked to the people, behold, his mother and his brethren ſtood without, deſiring to ſpeak with him. Then one ſaid unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren ſtand without, deſiring to ſpeak with thee. But he anſwered and ſaid unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? And he ſtretched forth his hand towards his diſciples, and ſaid, Behold, my mother and my brethren. For whoſoever ſhall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the ſame is my brother, and ſiſter, and mother.

Who is my mother.] If he made thoſe his mother, and brothers, who were not, how came he to deny thoſe who were? But he taught, by his own example, that the perſon, who preferr'd either father, mother or brothers, to the word of God, was an unworthy diſciple. (Tertull. againſt Marcion.)

CHAP. XIII.

The parable of the ſower; why Chriſt ſpoke in parables; the expounding of the parable. The parable of the tares; of the grain of muſtard ſeed, and the like. Chriſt is rejected by the Nazarenes.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. THE ſame day went Jeſus out of the houſe, and ſat by the ſea-ſide. And great multitudes were gathered together unto him, ſo that he went into a ſhip, and ſat, and the whole multitude ſtood on the ſhore. And he ſpake many things unto them in parables, ſaying, Behold, a ſower went forth to ſow. And when he ſowed, ſome ſeeds fell by the way ſide, and the fowls came and devoured them up. Some fell upon ſtony places, where they had not much earth: and forthwith they ſprung up, becauſe they had no deepneſs of earth: And when the ſun was up, they were ſcorched, and becauſe they had not root, they withered away. And ſome fell among thorns: and the thorns ſprung up, and choked them. But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit, ſome an hundred fold, ſome ſixty fold, ſome thirty-fold. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear. And the diſciples came, and ſaid unto him, Why ſpeakeſt thou unto them in parables?

An hundred fold.] An hundred fold in the harveſt is no ſuch prodigious thing as ſome men imagine. Indeed, it would be ſomewhat ſurprizing to have a return, by way of increaſe, of a hundred times as many buſhels, as there were of ſeed ſown: but a great deal of the corn that is ſowed, miſcarries and comes to nothing, yet it is eaſy to obſerve, that from one ſingle corn, there often come ſo many branches and ſtalks, and grains in all thoſe ſtalks, as may eaſily and ordinarily make up the number ſometimes of thirty, ſometimes of ſixty, nay, ſometimes of an hundred fold, though the truth is, the hnndred-fold is the greateſt proportion, and ſo is ſet down as the higheſt degree of fruitfulneſs in the good ground. (H.)

Why ſpeakeſt thou unto them in parables?] Joſeph Albo made this a principal objection againſt chriſtianity, that it was delivered by parables, when it ſhould have been as clear as poſſible. But this charge is very wrongfully applied. For the precepts, enjoining our belief, fixing our hopes, and marking out our method of living, are couch'd, not only in this book, but elſewhere, in the plaineſt terms in the world. Theſe are what reſpect the chriſtian law. As for ſuch as are deliver'd by parables, they are of a different kind, and are by Chriſt himſelf call'd the miſteries of the kingdom. In theſe the ſurprizing diſpenſation of providence is laid open; In theſe is foretold what will be the event of the evangelical inſtitution both to Jews and Gentiles. Now the Jews themſelves own that prophecies are generally couch'd in obſcure terms; for a principal end, namely, that the truth of the divine foreknowledge may appear when the prophecy is fulfilled. (G.)

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. He anſwered and ſaid unto them, Becauſe it is given unto you to know the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. For whoſoever hath, to him ſhall be given, and he ſhall have more abundance: but whoſoever hath not, from him ſhall be taken away, even that he hath. Therefore ſpeak I to them in parables: becauſe they ſeeing, ſee not: and hearing, they hear not, neither do they underſtand. And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Eſaias, which ſaith, By hearing ye ſhall hear, and ſhall not underſtand: and ſeeing ye ſhall ſee, and ſhall not perceive. For this peoples heart is waxed groſs, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have cloſed; leſt at any time they ſhould ſee with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and ſhould underſtand with their heart, and ſhould be converted, and I ſhould heal them. But bleſſed are your eyes, for they ſee; and your ears, for they hear. For verily I ſay unto you, that many prophets and righteous men have deſired to ſee thoſe things which ye ſee, and have not ſeen them: and to hear thoſe things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

To them it is not given.] Who ſeem wiſe in their own conceits. Now becauſe there are a great many of this ſort amongſt the multitude, the reaſon is ſufficient why ſuch things, as are more profitable, than ſalutary, are propoſed ſo obſcurely If ſome were deſirous to be acquainted with my doctrines, they might eaſily have ſtep'd out of the crowd, and come to me, and then have ask'd to be informed in ſuch things as they did not rightly comprehend. (G.)

They hear not.] With the aſſent of the heart. Matthew's meaning is as though he had ſaid, Becauſe they will not believe the moſt open miracles which they ſee performed, and the moſt plain words which they hear, I juſtly ſpeak to them by parables. They who will not ſee, when they may, cannot ſee, when they would, if God thinks fit to puniſh them. But there ariſes a difficulty from Mark and Luke, who, by a particle final, ſay that Chriſt ſpoke to them by parables, that, ſeeing, they might not ſee To this it may be anſwered, that Matthew lays open the meritorious cauſe of their puniſhment; and that the other evangeliſts do not expreſs the final cauſe, but only the event. As it is true that God is pleaſed to condemn ſome for their tranſgreſſions, and by ſuch condemnation never to ſave them again; ſo it is no leſs true that God, for the tranſgreſſions of ſome, delivers himſelf to them in obſcure terms, that they may not underſtand his miſteries, and this happens in particular caſes, becauſe he will not grant them the favour of converſion, yet, in others, that they may be converted and ſaved. In the caſe of blindneſs it happens that the divine compaſſion orders this infirmity to moleſt the perſon for a ſtated time, that the miſery of his condition, may excite in him humility and a heart ready to confeſs his ſins. But Chriſt may be ſaid to ſpeak by parables, that ſeeing they might not ſee, becauſe he knew thoſe to whom he ſpoke were deſpiſers of the truth, ſo that had he ſpoke to them without parables, he had given that which was holy to dogs, and thrown pearls before ſwine, who trod the Son of God under their feet. That it might not ſeem any wonder why the people were thus puniſhed who were ſo fond both to ſee and hear the promiſed Meſſiah, the evangeliſt proves the prodiction from Iſaiah. (V.)

By hearing ye ſhall hear.] I take the words of Iſaiah to point out firſt their puniſhment, and then the cauſe of their puniſhment. As though I ſhould ſay. Hear with your ears as much as you pleaſe, you ſhall underſtand nothing, and look as narrowly as you are able, you ſhall yet ſee nothing. The meaning of this would be, as if I ſhould ſay, You ſhall hear indeed, but ſo as to get no information; you ſhall look narrowly, but ſo as to ſee nothing. (G. and B.) Iſaiah, both in the Hebrew text, and in the vulgate, give us his prophecy in the imparative, partly becauſe the imparative, by an Hebrew idiotiſm, is frequently uſed for the future, partly to ſignify that blindneſs and obdurateneſs is frequently the puniſhment of an incenſed Almighty to chaſtiſe ſin. Auſtin, againſt Julian, ſpeaks beautifully upon this topic. “ Blindneſs of heart, ſays he, which God the illuminator alone “ removes, is a ſin, wherein we do not believe on God; and is “ the puniſhment of ſin, wherewith a proud and lofty heart is “ deſervedly chaſtiz'd, and is the cauſe of ſin, when, through “ the blindneſs of the heart, we commit any evil.” And again, “ Was not this blindneſs, the puniſhment of ſin, it would not “ be ſaid, their malice has blinded them. Was it not a judg- “ ment of the Almighty, we ſhould not read, their eyes are “ darkened ſo as not to ſee, and their back is crooked. So “ that the infliction of theſe puniſhments is the immediate con- “ ſequence of the will of God,” as Iſaiah expreſſes it both in the Hebrew, and in the vulgate. St. Thomas is ſomewhat copious on this ſubject. He ſays, “ That to have a thorough underſtand- “ ing of this matter, we muſt conſider that two things are im- “ plied by blindneſs and obdurateneſs, The firſt whereof is a “ motive of the mind of man involved in evil, and an aver- “ ſion to divine illumination; in which reſpect God cannot be “ ſaid to be the author either of blindneſs or obdurateneſs, nei- “ ther to be the cauſe of ſin. The other, is a drawing away of “ grace; whence it follows, that the mind is not divinely illu- “ minated to ſee juſtly, nor the heart of man temper'd to live “ juſtly. In this reſpect, God is the cauſe of blindneſs and obdu- “ rateneſs: But it muſt be conſider'd, that God is the cauſe “ of the univerſal light of ſouls, according to that paſſage of “ John i. That was the true light, which lighteth every man that “ cometh into the world; as the ſun is the cauſe of the univerſal “ light of bodies. Yet the difference herein is great: For the “ ſun giveth light according to the laws of nature; whereas God “ illuminates of his own accord, in obedience to his own wiſdom. “ The ſun, ſo far as his power extends, enlightens all bodies; yet “ if he meets with obſtruction in any body, he leaves it dark; as “ is evident from a houſe, when the windows are ſhut up: how- “ ever, the ſun is no way the cauſe of this darkneſs; he does not “ purpoſely do ſo, that no light ſhould ſhine within; but he who “ ſhuts up the windows is the ſole cauſe of the darkneſs. Now “ God purpoſely refuſes thoſe the light of his grace, in whom he “ finds obſtruction; ſo that, conſequently, not only he who inter- “ rupts this grace, is the cauſe of its being deny'd; but alſo God, “ who purpoſely refuſes it: and 'tis in this manner that God is ſaid “ to be the author of blindneſs, dulneſs of hearing, and hard- “ heartedneſs.” (V.)

This people's heart is waxed groſe.] God does not in the prophet make uſe of imperative words, as if he commanded him to harden his heart, make his eyes dim, and his ears dull. But the words will admit of a figurative ſenſe, which is, that the prophet is commanded to do, that which he foretells to come. Beſides, Hebrew words may as well refer to the infinitive as the imperative mood. (G.) What the Hebrew, in this place, expreſſes by the imperative, may be done here by the preterperfect, or the future, to let the reader underſtand, that phraſes of this kind, which have the air of imprecations, are not pronounced by the prophets with a mind of one wiſhing. Dionyſ. Carth. upon Acts xxviii. ſays: “ This is a metaphor taken here from the groſſneſs of the body; “ for as the groſſneſs of the body renders the body leſs active and “ pliant; ſo the groſſneſs of the heart, which is carnality, where- “ with the whole man is buried in earthly pleaſures, renders the “ ſoul incapable of the truths of heaven, and makes it indolent “ and dark.” (V.)

But bleſſed are your eyes.] Namely, in compariſon of theirs, who had but a glimmering knowledge of the coming of Chriſt Now there are three ways or degrees of knowing Chriſt; in the loweſt whereof conſiſts that glimmering knowledge, which the prophets, and other righteous men of old, had of Chriſt. In the ſecond, is comprehended that evident knowledge of Chriſt which is received by the ſight; ſuch as was that of the apoſtles, and all others, who, being eye-witneſſes of Chriſt in the fleſh, believed on him. The third degree of this knowledge, is in knowing Chriſt by his preſence, in the ſtate of immortality. So that, as Auſtin obſerves, the middle degree, with reſpect of the firſt, is a deſirable good. In fine, the eyes of the apoſtles are called bleſſed, not becauſe they were better than other mens, in which ſenſe they are called happy who have not ſeen, and yet believed; but becauſe they had the fortune to receive ſuch an extraordinary benefit as the ancient prophets could never obtain. What Paul ſays, "Tho' we "have known Chriſt according to the fleſh, yet now we have not "known," is not contradictory to this paſſage. For the meaning of the apoſtle is, that he boaſted not of the nobility of his family, as the falſe apoſtles did, for being Hebrews, Iſraelites, and the poſterity of Abraham; for Paul calls this a boaſting according to the fleſh. So that the apoſtle ſays, "Tho' we have known Chriſt ac"cording to the fleſh;" that is, tho' we have ſome times thought it a piece of glory and honour to be related to Chriſt according to the fleſh, yet now we have not known, that is, yet now we are ſo much dead to the affections of our former life, that we count it no longer our intereſt to boaſt in ſuch an affair as this; ſince he himſelf hath ſaid, that thoſe are his mother and brothers, who hear and do the will of God. So in his epiſtle to the Philippians, where he is ſpeaking of the falſe apoſtles, who confided in the fleſh, he ſays, that he himſelf has wherewithal to confide in the fleſh, but that he look'd upon all the boaſting after the fleſh, and the truſt in relations, as things prejudicial, and of no eſtimation, in compariſon of Chriſt. (V.)

Many---have deſired to ſee.] The other Jews, becauſe of their infidelity, and other crimes, were deny'd this indulgence; no conſideration of their virtue could obtain it. You are not better, ſays he, than Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and the reſt of the prophets, who had not this happineſs granted them. So that what the other Jews are deny'd, is a piece of juſtice; whereas what is allow'd to you, is the diſpenſation and favour of divine providence. (G. and B.) The holy prophets conceived extraordinary joy, when they foreſaw that to come in the ſpirit, which the apoſtles were eye-witneſſes of in the fleſh. From the very original of human kind, till the manifeſtation of the word incarnate, they were extremely deſirous to ſee thoſe things before their eyes, which they reverenc'd at a diſtance, that is, they deſired not to depart out of this world, till they had ſeen the incarnate Son of God, whom they believed would be incarnate, according to what old Simeon ſaid, who, having took up our Saviour into his arms when he was a child, burſt out into this holy benediction, Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace according to thy word, for mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation. For he had received a promiſe not to die, until he had ſeen Chriſt, "Such as was that deſire "which moved the old man, ſays Auſtin, ſuch we muſt believe "was that of all the ſaints in ages paſt." (V.)

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. Hear ye therefore the parable of the ſower. When any one heareth the word of the kingdom, and underſtandeth it not, then cometh the wicked one, and catcheth away that which was ſown in his heart: this is he which received ſeed by the way-ſide. But he that received the ſeed into ſtony places, the ſame is he that heareth the word, and anon with joy receiveth it: Yet hath he not root in himſelf, but dureth for a while: for when tribulation or perſecution ariſeth becauſe of the word, by and by he is offended. He alſo that received ſeed among the thorns, is he that heareth the word: and the care of this world and the deceitfulneſs of riches choke the word, and he becometh unfruitful. But he that received ſeed into the good ground, is he that heareth the word, and underſtandeth it, which alſo beareth fruit, and bringeth forth ſome an hundred-fold, ſome ſixty, ſome thirty.

Is he that heareth the word.] Supply, from Luke viii. 15. in a good and the beſt heart, or, according to the Hebrew text, in an honeſt, and good heart: This is he who bringeth forth fruit, as Luke ſays, in patience, which employs itſelf in expecting, rather than in ſuffering, conformably to that of Romans viii. We wait through patience; and that of James; Behold, the husbandman waits for the kind fruits of the earth, enduring patiently, till he receive rain. So the word upomone is always interpreted patience by the Septuagint. Hence God and labours, are called our patience; God, with reſpect to our expecting; labours, with regard to our ſufferings. Where God is addreſs'd to in the 71ſt Pſalm, in theſe words, Thou art my patience; the meaning is, Thou art he, whom I patiently wait for; thou art the object of that patient expectation, wherewith I crave thy aſſiſtance. (V.)

Some an hundred fold, &c.] Tho' the produce ariſeth from the ſame ground, and from the ſame ſowing, yet the number of increaſe differs extremely; for ſome bringeth forth an hundred, ſome ſixty, and ſome thirty fold. The thirty are applicable to marriage; for the conjunction of fingers, as if uniting together, and embracing one another, figures out the husband and the wife; the ſixty may be referr'd to widows, who are involv'd in a ſtate of difficulty and trouble; whence they are depreſs'd by the fore-finger; and by how much the more the difficulty is in abſtaining from a pleaſure once experienced, by ſo much the more is the reward of ſuch abſtinence. But the hundred (and herein I deſire the reader to take particular notice) is transferred from the left to the right hand, and making a circle with the ſame fingers, tho' not with the ſame hand, wherewith in the left are ſignified virginity and widowhood, denotes the crown of virginity. (Jerome againſt Jovinian) This parable is differently related by Gregory, in his 17th Hom. upon Ezekiel, tho' he uſes the ſame alluſion and ſimilitude as Jerome. 'Tis thus: Good land will raiſe an increaſe of thirty fold; this means, when the mind conceives the perfection of faith, which is in the Trinity. An increaſe of ſixty fold; this is, when the mind produces the actions of a good life. An increaſe of a hundred fold; when it riſes up to the contemplation of everlaſting life. The left hand, is the life preſent; the right, the life to come. By the hundred fold, is rightly meant the contemplation of the life eternal; becauſe, when we have done computing the thirty, and the ſixty, and come to the hundred, the hundred is transferred into the right hand. Our faith and labour is, as yet, in the left hand; becauſe, while we live here, we believe what we do not ſee, and labour to the end that we may ſee. And while the ſoul wavers about the contemplation of everlaſting life, the number removes, as it were, into the right hand. Now, to get a right information of theſe particulars, we muſt have recourſe to the treatiſe of venerable Bede, concerning the reckoning or talking by the motion of the fingers; becauſe it was a cuſtom among the ancients to begin their reckoning, from the left, till they came to ten. When they ſaid ten, they fix'd the nail of the fore-finger upon the middle joint of the thumb; when they ſaid thirty, they join'd the nails of the fore-finger and thumb cloſe together, reſembling a married couple embracing one another; when they number'd ſixty, they bent the fore-finger upon the thumb, which they kept crooked. Hence the number thirty is ſaid to ſignify matrimony; as ſixty, widowhood, and the affliction of widows. Bede, before he concludes, obſerves, that in numbering to a hundred, the numbers between were expreſs'd different ways in the left. For having a mind to expreſs an hundred, they paſs'd from the left to the right, and uſed the ſame motion of the right hand to ſignify an hundred, as they did on the left to point out ten. So that by this circle, which was by fixing the nail of the fore-finger on the middle of the thumb, like a crown in the right, was expreſs'd, according to Jerome, the crown of virginity. But that a hundred, and the numbers following, were uſually reckoned on the right hand, theſe verſes of Juvenal concerning Neſtor will make it clear:

Fælix nimirum, qui per tot ſecula mortem,
Diſtulit, atque ſuos jam dextra computat annos.

Happy, who hath, for three long ages paſt,
Kept off that conflict that muſt be the laſt;
Who counts ſecurely now upon the right,
That length of years that has rejoic'd his ſight.

Homer ſays, that Neſtor was three hundred Years old, that is, that he had liv'd three ages of man. And, in imitation of Juvenal, Sidonius Apollinaris, commending Fauſtus, and pointing him out to be an old man, at leaſt an hundred years old, ſays, "Becauſe you "have already number'd your years on the right hand." (V.)

Ver. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. Another parable put he forth unto them, ſaying, The kingdom of heaven is likened unto a man which ſowed good ſeed in his field: But while men ſlept, his enemy came and ſowed tares among the wheat, and went his way. But when the blade was ſprung up, and brought forth fruit, then appeared the tares alſo. So the ſervants of the houſholder came and ſaid unto him, Sir, didſt not thou ſow good ſeed in thy field? from whence then hath it tares? He ſaid unto them, An enemy hath done this. The ſervants ſaid unto him, Wilt thou then that we go and gather them up? But he ſaid, Nay; leſt while ye gather up the tares, ye root up alſo the wheat with them. Let both grow together until the harveſt: and in the time of harveſt I will ſay to the reapers, Gather ye together firſt the tares, and bind them in bundles, to burn them: but gather the wheat into my barn.

Leſt while ye gather, &c.] From this paſſage we learn, that time is allowed to repent in; and we are taught not to cut a brother off immediately. This ſeems repugnant to that command, which ſays, "Take away the evil man from out of your number; " have no communication with thoſe, who are call'd brothers, and " yet are adulterers and fornicators." If cutting off a brother be prohibited, and we are enjoin'd to be patient until the harveſt, how come ſome to be rooted up out of our number? Between the wheat and the tares, ſo long as it continues graſs, and is not ripened up to be ear'd, there is a great ſimilitude; ſo that our Lord pre-admoniſhes us, in caſes of doubt and ambiguity, not to pronounce too ſudden a ſentence, but to leave the determination to God the judge, that when the day of judgment comes, he may caſt out from the aſſembly of ſaints, not only the ſuſpicion of ſin, but the guilty man likewiſe. (Jerome.)

Ver. 31, 32. Another parable put he forth unto them, ſaying, The kingdom of heaven is like to a grain of muſtard-ſeed, which a man took, and ſowed in his field. Which indeed is the leaſt of all ſeeds: but when it is grown, it is the greateſt among herbs, and becometh a tree: ſo that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches thereof.

Is the leaſt of all ſeeds.] That is, 'tis one of the leaſt ſeeds of all; for there are ſome ſeeds leſs than muſtard-ſeed. The preaching of the Goſpel is the leaſt of all doctrines: for the very firſt doctrine ſeems to want the confirmation of truth, which preaches that man is God, that he dy'd, and underwent the ſcandal of the croſs. Make a compariſon between this doctrine, and thoſe of the philoſophers, and their writings; the beauty of their eloquence, and the compoſition of their orations; and you will ſoon ſee how far ſhort the ſeed of the Goſpel comes of other ſeeds. But the doctrines, or ſeeds of the philoſophers, when they grew up, ſhew nothing in them that is pungent, lively, or briſk; they are faint and dull, and ſhoot into herbs that ſoon wither and decay. On the other hand, the preaching of the Goſpel, which ſeems ſo ſmall in the beginning, on being ſown in the heart of a believer, or in the ſeveral countries of the world, does not ſhoot out into periſhable herbs, but advances up into a durable tree, where the birds of heaven come, and build their neſts; which we muſt take to be the ſouls of believers. As to the branches of the evangelical tree, which is ſaid to grow up from a grain of muſtard-ſeed, I ſuppoſe are no other than the difference of opinions, and doctrines, into which the birds, mentioned above, come to find reſt. (V.) We have a ſtory out of the Jeruſalem Talmud, in the treatiſe, De Angulo Agri, c. 2. to this effect: One Simon, the ſon of Halaptha, gave out, that he had in his grounds a tree of muſtard-ſeed ſo large, that he could climb to the top of it, as into a fig-tree. In the ſame chapter, another is produced, ſaying, that he had a tree of muſtard-ſeed which had three branches, one of which was made crooked to give ſhade to the potters which worked under it in ſummer-time; and that from this branch three cabs of ſeed had been gathered. I have mentioned this, to illuſtrate, in ſome part, this paſſage; yet I do not impoſe it upon the reader as authentick, tho' the holy land was very remarkable for its exceeding plenty. (Tremellius.)

Ver. 33, 34, 35. Another parable ſpake he unto them, The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three meaſures of meal, till the whole was leavened. All theſe things ſpake Jeſus unto the multitude in parables, and without a parable ſpake he not unto them: That it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophet, ſaying, I will open my mouth in parables, I will utter things which have been kept ſecret from the foundation of the world.

(Biſhop Cumberland, Dr. Bernard.)

Some pretend to ſay, that by the woman, in this parable, is meant the wiſdom of God; by the leaven, the doctrine of the Goſpel; by the three meaſures, the three faculties of the ſoul, viz. reaſon, anger, and concupiſcence; which three appetites are made conformable to the doctrine of the Goſpel by the wiſdom of God. But beſides this, there are other things ſaid of this parable, which, for the ſake of brevity, we purpoſely omit. (V.)

Ver. 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43. Then Jeſus ſent the multitude away, and went into the houſe: and his diſciples came unto him, ſaying, Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field. He anſwered and ſaid unto them, He that ſoweth the good ſeed, is the Son of man: The field is the world: the good ſeed are the children of the kingdom: but the tares are the children of the wicked one: The enemy that ſowed them is the devil: the harveſt is the end of the world: and the reapers are the angels. As therefore the tares are gathered and burnt in the fire; ſo ſhall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man ſhall ſend forth his angels, and they ſhall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; And ſhall caſt them into a furnace of fire: there ſhall be wailing and gnaſhing of teeth. Then ſhall the righteous ſhine forth as the ſun in the kingdom of their father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear.

All things that offend.] The chriſtian church, at firſt, was pure and unſpotted; but as ſoon as its original holineſs began to give ground, two ſorts of men of baſe principles intruded amongſt the Chriſtians; the firſt were thoſe who are here called Scandula, or thoſe who offended, who taught prejudicial doctrines, ſuch as the Nicolaite, Gnoſticks, and Carpocratians, and, under a pretext of chriſtian liberty, called thoſe things indifferent in their natures, which were repugnant to natural honeſty. The other claſs conſiſted of ſuch as threw a blemiſh on the pure profeſſion of the chriſtian faith by their ſcandalous way of living. Yet our Saviour acquaints us, that thoſe are not doom'd to be burnt up by fire from heaven; and ſhews, that wicked perſons will intrude among the good; and that corrupt teachers will blend amongſt the orthodox, till the day of univerſal judgment ſhall arrive. But theſe corrupt teachers, and theſe perſons of abandon'd lives, will give, to good and juſt men, an opportunity to exert their patience and lenity; their patience, in not ſuffering themſelves to be led away by bad examples; their lenity, in taking every meaſure to bring them back to a better and more certain courſe of living: However, 'tis very evident that theſe words of Chriſt were not ſpoken, with any deſign, to take from the magiſtrate the power of giving publick judgment, thereby to reſtrain the growth of evil, and keep criminals in awe; nor from the church, the right of excommunicating thoſe from her aſſemblies, who either adulterated her doctrine, or, by the ſcandalouſneſs of their lives, brought diſhonour upon the chriſtian name. On the other hand, 'tis not in the leaſt to be doubted, but that the lenity and patience of the Divine Being, at leaſt, in ſome reſpect, is propoſed here as an example to all men, eſpecially to magiſtrates, and the officers of the church. (G.)

Ver. 44, 45, 46. Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treaſure hid in a field: the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and ſelleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field. Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant-man, ſeeking goodly pearls: Who when he had found one pearl of great price, he went and ſold all that he had, and bought it.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto, &c.] That is, the doctrine of the goſpel, which the apoſtles were immediately to plant over the world; for this doctrine is called, in ſeveral places, the kingdom of God. Upon this, ſeveral have expounded theſe words, " The kingdom of heaven is at hand," Q. d. The time is now approaching, when the Goſpel ſhall be preach'd to all men, and theſe words, " He that is leaſt in the kingdom of hea- " ven is greater than him," q. d he who is leaſt amongſt thoſe, whoſe buſineſs is to preach the goſpel, is greater than John. Thus Chriſt ſays to the Phariſees, in chap. xxi. 43. in the ſequel, " The kingdom of God ſhall be taken from you, and given to " a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof." Which we find fulfilled in Acts xiii. 46 where Paul and Barnabas ſpeaking boldly to the Jews, ſay, " It was neceſſary that the word of God " ſhould firſt have been ſpoken to you, but ſeeing ye put it " from you, and judge yourſelves unworthy of everlaſting life, " lo, we turn to the Gentiles." This kingdom of God, therefore, that is, this doctrine of the goſpel, is very juſtly compared to a pearl, on ſeveral accounts. Firſt, If pearls are brought from remote countries, and from the fartheſt eaſt; this doctrine is nevertheleſs deduced from heaven, which according to Luke, " ſprang from an high." Secondly, If whiteneſs be reckoned a beauty in pearl, we have, to ballance that, a white ſtone offered us in the doctrine of the goſpel, Rev. ii. 17. which ſhall make our ſins as white as ſnow, though they were before as red as ſcarlet. Thirdly, If we admire ſmoothneſs in pearls, becauſe they are exactly round, and have no inequality; the doctrine of the goſpel can ballance this, for nothing is more equal or ſmooth than ſeeing it admits all without exception: " 'Tis neither " Jew, nor Greek, neither bondman, nor freeman, neither " male, nor female; for all of you are one in Chriſt Jeſus." Fourthly, If firmneſs and ſolidity is required in pearls; ſay, what is more firm and ſolid than the promiſes of God, which are in Chriſt, " Heaven, and earth ſhall paſs away, but my words " ſhall not paſs away," ſays Chriſt, Mark xiii. 31. Fifthly, If pearls are eſteem'd for their additional ſtrength, no leſs is the goſpel of Chriſt; " for it is the power of God unto ſalvation, to " every one that believeth," Rom. i. 16. It cures us of the bite of the old ſerpent, and not only relieves thoſe who are ſick, but even raiſes up the dead; " The hour is coming, and now is, when the " dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear " ſhall live," John v. 25. Sixthly, if pearls are purchaſed at a great price, becauſe of their ſplendor and beauty, and conſequently hung to the ears, and bound about the neck and arms, we have God's ſpecial command to bind his iniquities about the neck; " Let not mercy and truth forſake thee; bind them about thy " neck," Prov. iii. 3. Neither is there any thing ſo ornamental to the ears, as to hear the word of God, or to the hands, as to obey it. Seventhly, As the value of pearls is hid from the Barbarians, who are ſurpriz'd to ſee us make ſo much of a thing, which, in their opinions, is accounted a trifle; ſo, " our goſpel, which exceeds all things that can be deſir'd, " is hid from thoſe " who periſh, in whom the God of this age hath blinded their " minds, that the light of the glory of the goſpel of Chriſt might " not ſhine in them," 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4. Probably 'twas from this, that the doctrine of the goſpel was likened to hidden treaſure. However, both parables, viz. that of the hidden treaſure, and that of the pearl of great price, acquaint us, that there is no poſſibility of attaining the doctrine of the goſpel, or the exalted knowledge of Jeſus Chriſt, but by thinking meanly of all things, and counting thoſe of no value, which we ſet our ambition upon; and to obtain this end, the beſt and readieſt method is, to baniſh the thought of them from us, and to the greateſt diſtance we are able. (W. V. and B.)

Like unto a net, that was caſt into the ſea.] This net is the preaching of the goſpel, which, being let down into the ſea, that is, into the fluctuating ſea of this world, draws up with it a multitude of fiſhes, that is, of all degrees and ſorts of men, to the ſea-ſhore, which means, to the end of this world. The filling of the net, is the conſummation of the preaching of the goſpel, which draws with it all ſorts of men; Jews, to whom Chriſt preach'd; Romans, to whom Peter and Paul diſclos'd the Goſpel; Indians, to whom Thomas; Perſians, who received the word from Simon and Judas; and the Inhabitants of the leſſer India, to whom Bartholomew preach'd; Syrians, to whom Philip; Aſiaticks, to whom John; Achaians, to whom Andrew; Æthiopians, to whom Matthew; Alexandrians, to whom Mark; and in like manner other nations; who, either by the preaching of the the apoſtles themſelves, or their diſciples, and ſucceſſors, received the ſound of the goſpel: For their ſound hath gone forth into all lands. Now becauſe the preaching of the goſpel drew to it the inhabitants of all nations, 'tis ſaid to gather fiſhes of every kind; or, otherwiſe, it gathers of every kind of fiſh, becauſe it gathers of every kind of ſinners: it gathers unclean ſinners, fornicators, adulterers, inceſtuous perſons, uſurers, and all others, who either by tranſgreſſions of ſmall, or great conſequence, and by their various iniquities, have thruſt themſelves out from the preſence of God, and are ſeparated from his holineſs: it gathers of all ſorts, and juſtifies thoſe whom it gathers: it expels none who will but give ear to it, and has a mind to be a member of thoſe who receive its doctrine. The net, here ſpoken of, contains abundance of fiſhes, and thoſe of different ſpecies, good and bad together: And while this net is dragging to the ſhore, great changes are obſerved among the fiſhes. The good of times turn to be bad through miſtake, and the bad become good through favour; yet there's no judgment to be form'd, who are to be choſen for veſſels, or who to be caſt out. When the net is brought to the ſhore, that is, when it comes to the end of the world, then 'twill appear in true colours, who are the good that are to be admitted, and who the bad to be rejected: becauſe the angels elect the good for veſſels, that is, for everlaſting joy, and caſt out the bad into everlaſting puniſhment. Now all they who are not to receive the light of Chriſtianity, are ſaid to be without the net, as the Jews and Pagans, and ſuch have already had judgment paſs'd upon them; they have been judg'd according to preſcience, to difference, to operation, and to retribution. Judgment, according to preſcience, is when we are judg'd before we actually were in being: to difference, with reſpect of our being good or bad, to operation, whereby we are judg'd, by a manifeſt action, to be either good or bad; and to retribution, whereby we receive the reward of what we have either been, or done. Of theſe four ways of judgment, two are ſecret, and two revealed: The hidden are thoſe which judge by preſcience and difference; the reveal'd, by retribution and operation. Two belong to God, that of retribution, and that of preſcience; two to man, that of difference, and that of operation. However, thoſe perſons who abſolutely reject the doctrine of the Goſpel, are already under the rigor of the three firſt judgments, viz. of preſcience, difference, and operation, and will be judged by that of retribution hereafter. (Hugo Victorinus.)

Ver. 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52. Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was caſt into the ſea, and gathered of every kind. Which, when it was full, they drew to ſhore, and ſat down, and gathered the good into veſſels, but caſt the bad away. So ſhall it be at the end of the world: the angels ſhall come forth, and ſever the wicked from among the juſt; And ſhall caſt them into the furnace of fire: there ſhall be wailing and gnaſhing of teeth. Jeſus ſaid unto them, Have ye underſtood all theſe things? They ſay unto him, Yea, Lord. Then ſaid he unto them, Therefore every ſcribe which is inſtructed unto the kingdom of heaven, is like unto a man that is an houſholder, which bringeth forth out of his treaſure things new and old.

Every ſcribe which is inſtructed unto the kingdom of heaven.] Chriſt evidently makes it appear by theſe words, that his meaning is not concerning a plain ſcribe; but that his words refer to him, who, having learn'd the law before, had been taught how to make this knowledge of his, and the doctrine of the goſpel, correſpond together. Of this ſort was that ſcribe, who had learnt the knowledge of the Jews at the feet of Gamaliel, and yet was made a veſſel of election. What the old and new implies here, is no more than an abundance of every thing. Chriſt alludes to that paſſage of Levit. xxvi. 10. where God, among the reſt of the bleſſings which he there promiſes to confer, ſays, that he will ſhower upon the head of every family ſo much plenty, that they ſhould never ſtand in need of any thing; which the ſcripture expreſſes in theſe words; " Ye ſhall eat old ſtore, and bring forth the old, becauſe " of the new." This was the promiſe made to the Iſraelites But he who draws out the old and the new, at the ſame time, and out of the ſame treaſure, may be truly ſaid to he bleſs'd with a greater abundance; and to ſuch an one as this Chriſt likens the ſcribe, who, having been taught the law of his fathers, can yet make that and the evangelical precepts ſubſervient to each other. So that ſuch a ſcribe is ſufficiently inſtructed in every thing, which he ought either to know, or underſtand. (V.)

The ſcribe, ſet here in oppoſition to the diſciple, ſignifies him who is skilled in the Moſaic law, or any perſon who is furniſhed with ſacred inſtructions, and obſervations out of the law and the prophets, or acquainted with the miſteries of the Old Teſtament, or Jewiſh religion, who, when he becomes a diſciple, or turns Chriſtian, is furniſhed with the miſteries of the New Teſtament. Thus he is ſaid to be like a houſe-keeper, who, for the maintaining of his family all the year long, is ſuppoſed to have a repoſitory for proviſions, which is here call'd his treaſure or ſtorehouſe, and there to have laid in proviſions of both ſorts, new and old, the new of daily purveyance, and the old, which we call the ſtore; and being thus furniſhed, when any entertainment is to be made, he brings forth and uſeth what is neceſſary of both. Accordingly, for the furniſhing a table, he brings forth his hot and cold meat, that which is new dreſs'd, and that which remains of former meals. So likewiſe, in all other parts of œconomy, new and old garments in the wardrobe. Thus doth this knowing Jew, being farther inſtructed now by Chriſt, lie under an obligation, as occaſion requires, of performing all actions both of moral and chriſtian virtue; but chiefly of chriſtian, being firſt named here, and are the new. (H.)

Ver. 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58. And it came to paſs, that when Jeſus had finiſhed theſe parables, he departed thence. And when he was come into his own country, he taught them in their ſynagogue, inſomuch that they were aſtoniſhed, and ſaid, Whence hath this man this wiſdom, and theſe mighty works? Is not this the carpenter's ſon? is not his mother called Mary? and his brethren, James, and Joſes, and Simon, and Judas? And his ſiſters, are they not all with us? whence then hath this man all theſe things? And they were offended in him. But Jeſus ſaid unto them, A prophet is not without honour, ſave in his own country, and in his own houſe. And he did not many mighty works there, becauſe of their unbelief.

He departed thence.] The particle thence here, and in Mark vi. 5. ſignifies as well the city of Capernaum, as the places adjoining, which lay ſcatter'd about the ſea, where he ſpoke his parables. It does not appear that, after this time, he dwelt any more at Capernaum, tho' he frequently paſs'd over thither, as he did through other cities, in which he did not inhabit. Luke curtails this hiſtory, to give a brief account of it, and to aſſign a ſhort reaſon why Chriſt choſe rather to live at Capernaum, than at Nazareth, the place of his education; the cauſe of this curtailing, he ſufficiently acquaints us with, in theſe words; “Whatſoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do alſo here in thy country. (V.)

The ſon of the carpenter.] Juſtin tells us, that Joſeph was a carpenter, and that Chriſt aſſiſted Joſeph in his buſineſs of a carpenter. This is no more than what the ancient Chriſtians thought. The ſtation he aſſum'd was not an unworthy employment. It was certainly a very commendable cuſtom among the Jews, that even thoſe whoſe condition was tolerably affluent, and thoſe who addicted themſelves to the acquiſition of learning, employed themſelves in ſome trade or other, to ward againſt all the chances of fortune. (G.) Hillary and Ericus ſay, the ſon of a ſmith; tho' the general opinion runs, that he was a carpenter. Is not this the carpenter, ſays Mark, and the ſon of the carpenter, as it is ſaid here, and the ſon of Joſeph, as Luke ſpeaks. Yet no contradiction is found here, ſeeing one evangeliſt hath committed that to writing, which another hath omitted. (V.)

A prophet is not without honour.] This is a celebrated proverb among the Jews; q. d. men of any excellence, among whom prophets muſt have the principal place, are never more condemned than among their own countrymen. Thus David was deſpiſed by his own family. (G.)

CHAP. XIV.

Herod's opinion of Chriſt. The reaſon of John's being put into priſon; where he is beheaded. Jeſus withdraws. Of the five loaves. Chriſt prays. The apoſtles meet with a ſtorm at ſea. Peter is in danger.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. AT that time Herod the tetrarch heard of the fame of Jeſus, And ſaid unto his ſervants, This is John the Baptiſt, he is riſen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do ſhew forth themſelves in him. For Herod had laid hold on John, and bound him, and put him in priſon for Herodias ſake, his brother Philip's wife. For John ſaid unto him, It is not lawful for thee to have her. And when he would have put him to death, he feared the multitude, becauſe they counted him as a prophet.

At that time Herod, &c.] It may be ask'd, how Herod remain'd ſo long without knowing Chriſt? The anſwer may be, That tyrants are ſeldom told of ſuch things as they do not care to hear. But my belief is, that ſeveral of Chriſt's miracles were perform'd while Herod was purſuing his journey to Rome. And it was not long afterwards that the Arabic war broke out, which gave him full employment. (G.) The queſtion may be ask'd, how it came that Herod was ſo long a ſtranger to Chriſt, and the miracles which he perform'd? Baronius anſwers, that it was owing to his long abſence from his family, being obliged to maintain a war that king Aretas had proclaim'd againſt him, to revenge the diſhonour of his daughter, whom Herod had married, and now put away: But Baronius is miſtaken, for, not to inſiſt on the Anachroniſm, which Caſaubon, in his 15th Exerciſe, confutes with great learning. Joſephus evidently acquaints us, in the 18th book of his Antiquities, that this war was carried on by their Generals. So that Chryſoſtom's ſentiments concerning the reaſon of this long ignorance of Herod's, come neareſt to truth, viz, that it was owing to his neglect of imbibing good things; “Tales enim, inquit, ſunt viri potentes, & ſupercilia tumidi, ſerio diſcunt talia, quia negligunt.” “Such, ſays he, are perſons of authority, and ambition; they are long in acquainting themſelves with ſuch things, becauſe they are indolent.” (V.)

Tetrarch.] Sometimes there is a diſtinction made between kings and tetrarchs; ſometimes tetrarchs themſelves are called kings. See Mark vi. 14. The original of this name came from Galatia, which being divided into three parts, four governors were appointed to each diviſion. (G.) Matthew, and Mark, call him a king. Now the word king was frequently applied to any perſon who was inveſted with the ſupreme authority, tho' it was not royal. Thus what Cicero calls a tetrarchate, is by Pliny term'd a kingdom. (V.)

He is riſen from the dead.] The Hebrews, long before Pythagoras, taught in their ſchools the tranſmigration of ſouls into other bodies. Herod, and ſeveral more were evidently of opinion here, that John's ſoul had either aſſumed a new body, or that it was re-enter'd into that body, which his diſciples had buried. (G.)

For Herodias.] Joſephus aſſigns another reaſon for John's impriſonment. To oblige the reader, I will give him the whole relation as it ſtands in the 18th book of his antiquities chap. 5. “Herod, the tetrarch had married the daughter of Aretas, and lived a conſiderable time with her. On his going to Rome, he turned out of the way to pay a viſit to his brother-in-law Herod, who was Simon the high-prieſt's grandſon by his daughter. Having an opportunity to ſee his wife Herodias, he fell in love with her: this Herodias was daughter of Ariſtobulus, who was brother to both of them, and ſiſter of the great Agrippa; in ſhort, Herod had the face to offer terms of marriage to the lady; who ſeeming no way averſe to the propoſal, it was agreed between them, that Herodias ſhould be married to him, immediately on his return from Rome; nay, the agreement went farther, that Aretas's daughter ſhould be ſent back to her father. After this agreement Herod went to Rome. Having finiſhed his affairs that had called him to Rome, he returned home, but his wife having got intelligence of the ſecret agreement made between him and Herodias, before he came to know that ſhe knew any thing of the matter, begg'd leave to be ſent to Machero, a caſtle on the frontiers of Herod's and Aretas's dominions, without acquainting him with her deſign. Herod preſently complied with her requeſt, and took care to ſee her carried thither, not in the leaſt miſtruſting his wife, or that ſhe knew any thing of his agreement with Herodias. She had ſent ſometime before word to Machero of her intended journey; whereupon her father's governor having got all things ready for it, ſhe arrived there in a little time, and from thence travelling with all the expedition ſhe was able into Azable, ſhe came to her father's court, and laid open to him the agreement of her huſband Herod. This gave occaſion for a rupture, which was heightened by a diſpute they had then on foot concerning ſome lands about Gamal: Both ſides prepared an army; war was proclaimed, and the campaign was managed by their generals But on coming to an engagement, Herod was routed, and his whole army cut to pieces, being betrayed by deſerters. Herod immediately ſent notice of his defeat to Tiberias, who, being enraged at the preſumption of Aretas, wrote to Vitellius, to make war upon him, and either take him priſoner alive, or ſend him his head. However, great numbers of the Jews thought this loſs of Herod, to be owing to God's immediate anger for his having put to death John, who was ſirnamed the Baptiſt. Herod had given orders to behead this perſon, who was a man of extreme goodneſs, and endeavoured to excite in the Jews a deſire to become virtuous, intreating them to live juſtly one among another, and be baptized. This agreeable temper of John bringing over to him abundance of perſons, Herod was afraid of their numbers, and apprehended the authority of ſuch a perſon might influence his ſubjects to a revolt; ſo that he thought for his intereſt to remove him, before any innovation diſturb'd his country, or he was involv'd in danger, that might make him blame his indolence. Ac“ cording to remove this ſuſpicion which rack’d Herod, John was “ thrown into priſon, the place of his confinement being at the “ caſtle of Machero above-mentioned, where he loſt his life.” Thus much Joſephus. Mr. Reland remarks upon this account, that Joſephus was ignorant of the true cauſe of John the Baptiſt’s death which is ſet down in the goſpel. Probably, ſays he, as men’s opinions are various, Joſephus and others perſuaded themſelves, that Herod’s reaſon for throwing John into priſon, was for fear he ſhould raiſe a ſedition; or may be, his ſaying he was a wicked and impious king, might be ſufficient to foment a rebellion.

We will ſubjoin to this what Nold, in his hiſtory of Idumea, ſays, on this argument. “ Herod the tetrarch ſeeing this lady “ (who was not the daughter of Aretas king of Arabia, as Jerome “ dreams upon Matt. chap. xiv. but of Ariſtobulus) at his brother “ Herod’s, when he turned out of his way to Rome to pay him a “ viſit, married her in open violation of the law, when her law- “ ful husband was ſtill living.” Auſtin pretends to confute this, though Joſephus, Euſebius, and Hegeſippus, unanimouſly confirm it. That ſome time after this Antipas ſummoned John to court, where Herod the adulterer being one of the audience, was ſo charm’d with his doctrine, that he became one of his hearers: but John happening to mention Herodias, and alledge the illegality of Herod’s marrying his brother’s wife, and, as we are informed from Chryſoſtom, publickly condemn him before all the audience, the lady was ſo offended at the outrage, that ſhe adviſed her husband to throw him into priſon, and put him to death. Herod, indeed, at the ſollicitation of his wife conſented to the firſt, but could not be prevailed upon to do the laſt, for two reaſons; on the one ſide, for the eſteem he had for John’s perſon; on the other, for fear of his ſubjects, who, he apprehended, would not let the death of one whom they look’d on as a holy man and prophet, go unpuniſhed. This obliged Herodias to ſtifle her animoſity to another opportunity, which ſoon after preſented itſelf by her daughter on Herod’s birth day. Jerome ſays, that Herodias inſulted over John’s head after it was cut off, and prick’d the tongue with a needle. And Nicephorus adds, that having a compunction of conſcience for the wickedneſs ſhe had done, ſhe was even afraid of John when he was dead, and durſt not lay the head with the body; but took the head and buried it privately in a ſecret place of the court, throwing the body elſewhere, which his diſciples ſecretly took away, and interr’d in a certain famous city. Nicephorus mentioning John’s interment to be in a famous city, Jerome in his 27th epiſtle, acquaints us, that it was in Samaria, where Theodoret ſays his ſepulchre was afterwards open’d. Now this Samaria (otherwiſe named Sebaſte) was not only out of Herod’s dominions, but a city which the Jews extremely hated. And it was thought that the remains of ſo devout a perſon would reſt here without moleſtation. Tho’ it ſeems the pagans ſome ages afterwards, in the reign of Julian, dug up his bones, and threw his aſhes into the air. Theodoret ſays, “ That they o- “ pened the ſepulchre of John the Baptiſt in Sebaſte, burnt his bones, “ and ſcattered the aſhes in the air.” However, the barbarity of Herodias ſoon met with its deſerved reward. For being at Rome with her husband to ſollicit Caius againſt her brother Agrippa, whoſe high fortune ſhe envied, that emperor proved Agrippa’s friend, contrary to their expectations; and baniſhed Herod, but to oblige Agrippa, whoſe ſiſter he underſtood Herodias was, he gave her his effects. Herodias ſpurned at the offer, and added that it did not become her to leave her husband in his adverſity, when ſhe had been a conſtant partner with him in his proſperity: This being reſented by Caius, he baniſhed her with him. We will add to all this, a ſhort account concerning John’s head, which was found a-part from the body in the reign of Valeus, and by that emperor order’d to be carry’d to Conſtantinople; but arriving at Colaus, near Chalcedon, the mules that carry’d it ſtood ſtill, and the head could not be mov’d farther, till the emperor Theodoſius remov’d it in his purple robes, and dedicated a temple to it. Hear what Sozomen ſays: “ The head of John Baptiſt, “ ſays he, which Herodias demanded of Herod the tetrarch, was “ carried at this time to Conſtantinople. ’Tis ſaid to be found “ by certain monks of the Macedonian ſect, who firſt dwelt at “ Jeruſalem, and afterwards remov’d in Alicia. Mardonius, who “ was chief eunuch of the palace, was appointed the head of “ this embaſſy, having orders to carry it to Conſtantinople. “ The command was comply’d with, and the head put into “ a publick Cart. When they came to Colaus, a village near “ Chalcedon, the mules who were ty’d to the cart would not move “ a jot further, notwithſtanding all the blows given by the dri- “ vers to make them proceed. This unwillingneſs in the beaſts “ being taken notice of, the eunuch and all with him look’d upon “ it as miraculous; ſo that they put the head into the village of “ Colaus. About this time, whether moved to it by God, or ſome “ other impulſe, the emperor Theodoſius came to this ſame vil- “ lage, with an intention to remove the remains of John Baptiſt. “ But we are told, that a matron of exemplary devotion ſpoke “ againſt it, alledging, that force could not prevail. Upon this, “ the emperor took the repoſitory in his purple robes, wherein “ the head was incloſed, and carried it to Conſtantinople, where “ he built a very large and ſtately temple in honour of God.”

Daughter of Herodias.] Her name was Salome. Joſephus ſays, That ſhe was daughter of Herod (ſon of Mariamne, daughter of Simon) and Herodias. On Herod’s birth-day, ſhe entered the aſſembly, and by her fine dancing ſo pleaſed that prince, that he left her at her own choice to make what demand ſhe would, even to the half of his kingdom. This was an extenſive way of promiſing, which ſhe baſely abuſed: for having been inſtructed by her mother, who had been a long time tampering with her, ſhe only ask’d for John’s head. With which raſh and unjuſt demand, Herod was forc’d to comply, as he had pledg’d his honour to her; and conſequently, certain perſons were ſent to cut off John’s head in the priſon, and bring it to the dancer in a charger. Nicephorus ſays, That the head, when brought in, was reeking in its gore. This was a ſad piece of tribute, and very near without an example. Indeed, we read that Flamminias, juſt after the ſame manner, to gratify his miſtreſs, beheaded a man, but then he was criminal. See Livy, 39. and Seneca, controv. 5. for a further account of this affair. Beſides which, we have a ſtory of Marius cutting off the conſul Anthony’s head, and barbarouſly inſulting over it in the midſt of his cups; yet this was owing to an immoderate impulſe of civil revenge, and no way equal to the frantic part acted here. Agrippa, to have his birth-day celebrated with diſtinguiſh’d honour, ſent perſons to releaſe Silas, who was detain’d in priſon, and bring him to the entertainment; but he abſolutely refuſed: yet Agrippa forbore puniſhing him. Whereas Herod, on his birth-day, put a juſt man to death, tho’ the dancer was the leaſt to blame in the affair; for pertinent hereto ſays Eſthius, upon Mark vi. “ If it be demanded “ which of the three, Herod, Herodias, or her daughter, was in “ the greateſt fault, with reſpect to John’s death: it may be an- “ ſwer’d, that Herod was the greateſt offender; becauſe, to the ſin “ of hatred which he retain’d in his heart againſt John, he added “ a piece of villainous hypocriſy, pretending to be his hearer and “ admirer. Now Herodias diſcover’d her averſion plain enough. “ But of all the three, the young gentlewoman appears to be the “ leaſt criminal, becauſe what ſhe did, was in obedience to the pre- “ vious inſtruction and command ſhe had received from her mo- “ ther.” But Nicephorus informs us of the kind of death Salome ſuffer’d: “ ’Twill be no ways amiſs, ſays he, to give an account “ of the death of her daughter (Herodias) which was thus: At “ a certain time, during the winter ſeaſon, ſhe had a river to paſs, “ which was froze over, and no way could ſatisfy, but ſhe muſt “ croſs it on foot. The ice happened to break, not without ſigns “ of the direction of providence; upon which ſhe fell in up to “ the neck, and diſcover’d a kind of dancing in the water with the “ lower part of her body. By a ſudden ſtroke of the ice her head “ was ſever’d from her ſhoulders, which immediately danc’d a fa- “ tal dance upon the ice, affording to all who ſaw it, an opportu- “ nity to recall into their minds what ſhe her ſelf had formerly “ done.” Thus much Nicephorus: But ’tis wonderful whence he had this account? For not a ſoul, for near a dozen centuries before him, have, as I know of, ſaid a ſingle word in relation to theſe facts. But what this author tells us of (a little before he gives us this relation) Herodias being an eye-witneſs of this uncommon cataſtrophe of her daughter, is certainly inexcuſable. For, it ſeems, Salome was married to Philip; nay, after his deceaſe had a ſecond husband, and three children by him, and all before this ſad accident befell her, or, at leaſt, before ſhe died, and Herodias all the time was in her baniſhment beyond the Alps; ſo that it was no way poſſible for her, at that diſtance, to be an eye-witneſs of the laſt moments of her daughter, which are ſuggeſted to end in Judæa. (Nold, in vita Herodum, upon the word Salome.)

It is not lawful for thee to have her.] Meaning, becauſe he was circumcis’d, and conſequently bound to the obſervation of the Moſaic law. The Roman law pronounc’d the ſupreme magiſtrate not liable to the cognizance of its inſtitutions; but the Moſaic ſyſtem puts a reſtraint both upon king and ſubject. To have her, ſignifies to marry her. This came under the degree of inceſt, Lev. xviii. 16. For this law had but one exception, which was, when the husband dy’d without iſſue. But Herodias’s husband not only liv’d at this time, but alſo ſhe had a daughter nam’d Salome, of whom mention is made here. (G.) Levit. chap. xviii. 16. informs us, Thou ſhalt not uncover the nakedneſs of thy brother’s wife; from which law there is but one exception allow’d, and that is in Deut. xxv. where the brother happens to die without iſſue. Now it appears from Joſephus, that Philip, or Herod (take which you pleaſe) was alive at this time, when Herod Antipas married Herodias, and ordered her to depart. Beſides, if Philip had been dead, the law pronounc’d it illegal for Herod Antipas to make her his wife, ſeeing Philip had a daughter by her nam’d Salome, who is call’d the dancer by the evangeliſts. (V.)

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. But when Herod's birth-day was kept, the daughter of Herodias danced before them, and pleaſed Herod. Whereupon he promiſed with an oath, to give her whatſoever ſhe would ask. And ſhe, being before inſtructed of her mother, ſaid, Give me here John Baptiſt's head in a charger. And the king was ſorry: nevertheleſs for the oath's ſake, and them which ſat with him at meat, he commanded it to be given her. And he ſent and beheaded John in the priſon. And his head was brought in a charger, and given to the damſel: and ſhe brought it to her mother. And his diſciples came, and took up the body, and buried it, and went and told Jeſus.

Nevertheleſs for the oath's ſake.] It ſeems there were reaſons for this of an old ſtanding; but theſe, of themſelves, were too weak to be of any force. And what, pray, is eaſier to ſay, than that an oath, couch'd in general terms, is to be ſo underſtood, that no illegality is comprehended in it? I am under no ſcruple to think, that Jeptha put the ſame conſtruction on his oath. And even ſuppoſing Herod had openly promiſed to put an innocent man to death, what then? Ought he not to have thought, that an action, which in itſelf was illegal, could never be made lawful by the interpoſition of an oath? Indeed, if we would have an oath to be of force, the obligation muſt neceſſarily be legal; for to promiſe on oath, in an affair that is illegal, is of no ſignificance. Obſerve what Philo ſays; “ Every one ought to know that endeavours, by taking an ‘ oath, to act unjuſtly, that he will never obſerve, but infringe his “ oath, which ſhould be look'd upon as ſacred and inviolable, and “ as a thing that cements honeſty and friendſhip: for, in violating “ this, ſuch a man adds ſin to ſin; and it were ſafer the illegality “ of ſuch a proceeding was never countenanc'd: for, by abſtaining “ from an unjuſt action, we do honour to God, and tacitly implore “ his mercy, which is ſo much peculiar to him. And, indeed, it “ would argue want of underſtanding, and a groſs piece of madneſs, “ to make choice of two evils, when we might eſcape both by “ refraining from one of them.” An example may be drawn from David, who ſwore to put Nabal to death, and yet ſpar'd his life. Cicero brings a like example, in an oath which Agamemnon made. And Dionyſius of Halicarnaſſus, in that of the Decemvirs, about ſeizing on the commonwealth. Seneca ſays,

Præſtare fateor poſſe me tacitam fidem,
Si ſcelere caveat: interim ſcelus eſt fides.

“ I agree that I can take a private oath, provided it be legal, yet “ ſometimes this oath is illegal.” And Ambroſe: Eſt enim contra officium nonnunquam ſolvere promiſſum, juramentum cuſtodiri. “ In “ ſome caſes, we are not obliged to perform our promiſes, or keep “ our oaths.” And Auguſtine: Si ad peccatum admittendum fides adhibeatur, mirum eſt ſi fides appellatur. “ If an oath be admitted “ for a ſinful end, 'tis ſomething odd to call it an oath. (G.) This is a prepoſterous way indeed; for ſuch oaths as this, which are couch'd in general terms, ought certainly to refer to things legal and poſſible to the ſwearer: And ſuppoſing he who takes the oath, artfully extends his thoughts to an unjuſt end, yet 'tis of no validity, and the obligation ought to drop of courſe. (V.) We may collect ſeveral motives that induc'd Herod to this ſorrow; one reaſon may be, that it was his birth-day: for mirth and feſtivity were the reigning entertainment on ſuch days; the people were receiv'd at ſome banquet, which was ſplendid, and prepar'd for them at the prince's expence at this time; all ſecular employments were prohibited; ill omens were carefully avoided; quarrels and contentions were order'd to be laid aſide; and no pleadings ſuffer'd to be ſpoken in the forum:

Natalia colimus, tacete lites;

“ 'Tis our birth-day which we celebrate,
“ Let no contention or quarrel moleſt it.”

But what they took moſt care to avoid, was ſpilling of blood; no executions were admitted, they looking upon it, as a piece of great injuſtice, to deprive any perſon of his life, on that day, wherein they received theirs; nay, if any hung on the gallows or croſs before, they were ordered to be taken down. This was a cuſtom among the Pagans, for fear their genij ſhould be offended, dejected, or diſpleaſed, by ſuch an action; and probably Herod, who was more than half a Pagan, might very well have this cauſe of grief, and conſequently, be troubled to behead John Baptiſt on this day. But ſetting aſide this, the Evangeliſts aſſign two other reaſons for this ſorrow of Herod. Mark ſays, “ That Herod “ feared John, and look'd upon him as a juſt and an holy “ man; that he reformed many things, upon his requeſt, “ and took pleaſure in hearing him,” which proved a main obſtruction to Herodias's deſign of putting him to death. Now Matthew ſays here ver. v. “ That he feared the multitude, be-“ cauſe they counted John as a prophet,” and conſequently was afraid to meddle with him becauſe of his popularity, (as the Phariſees were, mentioned chap. xxi. 26) So that both theſe reaſons had an influence on Herod, and made him not ſo ready to puſh on his execution. (H.)

Beheaded John in the priſon.] 'Tis evident that this entertainment was celebrated at the caſtle of Machæro, and that John was beheaded without any formal trial; tho' criminals were commanded, by the Moſaic law, to be executed, in the ſight of all the people. (G.)

Ver. 13, 14. When Jeſus heard of it, he departed thence by a ſhip into a deſert place, apart: and when the people had heard thereof, they followed him on foot out of the cities. And Jeſus went forth, and ſaw a great multitude, and was moved with compaſſion toward them, and he healed their ſick.

When Jeſus heard of it.] Theſe words can never refer to the death of John; for 'twas ſome time ſince that he had loſt his head; they rather ſeem to point to the diſcourſe, which had paſt in Herod's court, concerning Chriſt, between John's impriſonment and his execution; for Chriſt was believed, by ſome, to be John riſen again, which made Our Saviour return from whence he came. When he had heard what Herod's ſentiments were of him he withdrew into the deſart, not purely on their account, but to give his apoſtles a little relaxation from the fatigue which they had undergone in preaching the goſpel. (V.)

And Jeſus went forth.] Meaning, out of the ſhip; or, according to John vi. 5. “ Jeſus went up into a mountain, and there “ he ſat with his diſciples;” after which he lifted up his eyes, ſaw a great multitude coming to him, took compaſſion of them, received them with much humanity, and continued curing their ſick 'till the evening; which his diſciples obſerving, they adviſed him to ſend away the multitude into the neighbouring villages, there to refreſh themſelves: But Our Saviour commanded them to give the multitude proviſions to eat, and to the end, that Philip might be convinced of the weakneſs of his faith, and that he himſelf might ſee, when human aſſiſtance was wanting, whether he would relye on his omnipotence and providence, ſaid to him, Where ſhall we find money to purchaſe a ſufficient quantity of victuals for ſo large a number of people? To which Philip makes anſwer, That ſuch a queſtion was entirely out of the way, ſince the multitude then preſent could not be filled with two hundred penny-worth of bread. Philip's words are thus expreſs'd by John, “ Two hundred penny-worth of bread is not ſufficient “ for them, that every one of them may take a little.” Tho' Mark makes him ſpeak ironically; “ Shall we go and buy two “ hundred penny-worth of bread, and give them to eat?” In anſwer to which, Jeſus ſays to his diſciples, “ How many loaves “ have ye? Go and ſee.” And when they knew, Andrew made anſwer, in the name of the reſt, “ There is a lad here, which “ hath five barley loaves, and two ſmall fiſhes; but what are they “ among ſo many, except we ſhould go and buy meat for all “ this people.” When Jeſus heard this, he order'd the five loaves and fiſhes to be brought, which he multiplied after ſuch a manner, that not only all the multitude there preſent were ſatisfied, but twelve baskets full of the fragments remained over. Now this is the method to reconcile this hiſtorical account of the multiplication of theſe loaves and fiſhes; from whence it will plainly appear, that the four Evangeliſts have no difference at all in the ſeveral relations they give us of this affair. (B.)

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. And when it was evening, his diſciples came to him, ſaying, This is a deſert place, and the time is now paſt; ſend the multitude away, that they may go into the villages, and buy themſelves victuals. But Jeſus ſaid unto them, They need not depart, give ye them to eat. And they ſay unto him, We have here but five loaves and two fiſhes. He ſaid, Bring them hither to me. And he commanded the multitude to ſit down on the graſs, and took the five loaves and the two fiſhes, and looking up to heaven, he bleſſed, and brake, and gave the loaves to his diſciples, and the diſciples to the multitude. And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the fragments that remained, twelve baskets full. And they that had eaten were about five thouſand men, beſide women and children.

Bleſſed.] That the phraſe, to bleſs here, ſignifies to give thanks, is ſufficiently known; and the ſame is otherwiſe expreſs'd, by praiſing, glorifying, ſinging, and confeſſing, but chiefly by giving thanks. The main difficulty in this paſſage is, whether the phraſe, to bleſs, is to be referr'd to the bread and fiſhes, or to the word God; that is, whether he gave thanks to God, or bleſſed the bread. But take which you will, the ſenſe, in either notion, will be much the ſame: for if he bleſſed, or gave thanks to, God, he is to be ſuppoſed to have prayed beſides for his bleſſing upon them, and, conſequently, if he did thus for them, it muſt be to God, that this was perform'd. But the uſe of this phraſe in the New Teſtament, inclines it, both here, and in Mark, to the latter notion; to that of bleſſing the bread, or giving thanks for it. (H.) Namely, the loaves, as is evident from Luke vii. 16. Jeſus perform'd this, after a cuſtom which was obſerved among the Jews at that time, who, to this very day, when they approach the table, uſually lay their hands upon the bread before they break it, and pronounce over it theſe words; "Bleſſed art thou, O Lord our "God, King of the world, who produces bread out of the earth." Now if Chriſt made uſe of this ſhort form, none can ſurely wonder why John expreſs'd himſelf in theſe words, When he had given thanks, inſtead of the phraſe, He bleſſed, which the three other Evangeliſts uſe; becauſe the bleſſing of bread, includes the action of giving thanks. (V.)

Ver. 22, 23 24, 25, 26, 27, And ſtraightway Jeſus conſtrained his diſciples to get into a ſhip, and to go before him unto the other ſide, while he ſent the multitudes away. And when he had ſent the multitudes away, he went up into a mountain apart to pray: and when the evening was come, he was there alone. But the ſhip was now in the midſt of the ſea, toſſed with waves: for the wind was contrary. And in the fourth watch of the night Jeſus went unto them walking on the ſea. And when the diſciples ſaw him walking on the ſea, they were troubled, ſaying, It is a ſpirit; and they cried out for fear. But ſtraightway Jeſus ſpake unto them, ſaying, Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid.

And ſtraightway] After Chriſt had multiply'd the five loaves in his hands, as God multiplies corn from a few grains, the multitude, as it is ſaid in John vi. 14, acknowledged him for the true Meſſiah. But when he found that the extraordinary miracle perform'd by him, had wrought upon the minds of the multitude ſo ſtrongly, that they were coming to take him by force, and make him king, he oblig'd his diſciples to go on board a ſhip, and paſs over to Bethſaida before him, 'till he had diſmiſs'd them; as we read in Mark vi. 45, John vi. 14, 15. At laſt the diſciples went down to the ſea-ſide, and took ſhipping; after their landing they made directly to Gennaſereth, where Chriſt afterwards perform'd ſeveral miracles; next to this they came to Capernaum. Mean while Chriſt left the multitude, and went back by himſelf to pray upon the mountain; from which he came down to the people before the miraculous multiplication of the loaves. (V.)

And when the Evening was come.] The different ſignification of the evening being come, in this verſe, may be obſerv'd from the ſame phraſe, ver. 15. For between that and this the people were ſet to ſupper, and riſen again: The diſciples were ſent to take ſhipping, and the multitude was diſmiſs'd by Chriſt; and after all this, Jeſus goes by himſelf to the mount to pray; after which follows this phraſe, "The evening being come;" now the true way to underſtand this, muſt be by comparing theſe paſſages with the narratives of the other Evangeliſts. St. John aſſigns not any part of the day to the former part of the action, but to the latter he doth; he ſays, "When the evening was come;" Mark in the firſt place, hath a different phraſe, "Much time being now "ſpent," And Luke another, "Now the day began to wane." In the latter place both Mark and Matthew read, "Evening being "come;" but Luke proceeds not to that part of the ſtory. By this it is clear, that the latitude of the word Opſia, which we render Evening, muſt reconcile the ſeeming difference; "The evening "and the morning were the firſt day, ſaith Moſes," and ſo 'tis evident that the Opſia takes in all from the beginning of the evening 'till the next morning, the ſpace of the ſun being ſet, as the morning is of the ſun's being up; ſo Matthew xxviii 1. "The "evening of the ſabbath is immediately attended with the light "of the morning of the firſt day of the week;" and here the firſt thing after this laſt, the evening being come, is the fourth watch in the night, that is, toward the morning. So that according to this latitude, what Luke calls the declenſion of the day, or ſun-ſetting, and Mark, the much time being ſpent, and Matthew, the evening being come, or the night-time, (for ſo it was when the apoſtles were ſailing, and Chriſt at prayers on the mountain) is by all the Evangeliſts called Opſia, or evening. (H.) 'Tis evident, from Matthew's ſaying above, ver. 13, before the miracle of the loaves, "That the evening was come," which yet was ſome hours before the ſecond time of Chriſt's withdrawing to the mountain, that the Jews divided the time of the evening into two evenings; one, which immediately followed noon-day, the other, the decline of it: and their beginning, according to the Talmudiſts, chap, 5. of the treatiſe of the paſſover, was, "a tempore quo ſol incipit in "occaſum vergere," that is, "They began from the ſun's im"mediate declining to the weſt; or as the gloſs there explains it, "they began from the firſt half-hour after noon, and ended at "ſun-ſet." Now it appears from Exod. xii. Levit. xxiii. and Numb. ix. that the paſchal lamb was commanded to be ſlain on the fourteenth day of the firſt month, within this very ſpace of time which theſe two evenings contain'd; and 'tis clear from Deut. xvi. 6. that it continu'd 'till the going down of the ſun; for the paſchal lamb, which we learn from the above cited places, was to be ſlain between the two evenings, is there read to be ſlain at even, that is, about the time of the ſun's going down. Theſe two evenings the Rabbins and Chaldeans call by another name, anſwering to duos ſoles, or two ſuns, and aſſign to each a certain ſpace of time. Beſides, they are mentioned by Euſtathius, in the 17th book of Homer's Odyſſey. And Suidas acquaints us, that this is no more than a modus of ſpeech, which the Athenians uſed; to prove which, examples are cited out of Philemon. And pertinent to this, is that expreſſion of Varro, in his Satyra Menippea, Neſcis quid veſper ſerus vehat; "You do not know what the late evening "may produce." Now veſper ſerus is as tho' one ſhould ſay, deile opſia, or evening's evening, againſt which is ſet the word proi, or morning, both in Heſychius, and Euſtathius. (V.)

In the fourth watch of the night.] 'Tis ſufficiently known, that the night was diſtinguiſh'd into ſeveral watches, the evening, mid-night, cock-crowing, and morning; the firſt ending at nine in the morning, the ſecond at twelve, the third at three, and the fourth at ſix in the morning; as the day is divided into the third and ſixth, ninth and twelfth hours. Theſe four watches were inſtituted by the Romans, and follow'd by the Jews from the time of Pompey. But the more ancient Hebrews divided the night into three watches, the firſt whereof, Lam. ii. 19. is called the firſt of the watches. Now they, who watch'd during this part of the night, uſually went to bed as ſoon as the ſecond part of the night began, and were ſucceeded in their poſt by others, who ſat up during the ſecond watch. This is in Judges vii. 19. called the mid-night watch. And the third, in Exod. xiv. 24. is called the morning watch. (G. H. and V.)

Ver. 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36. And Peter anſwered him, and ſaid, Lord, if it be thou, bid me come unto thee on the water. And he ſaid, Come. And when Peter was come down out of the ſhip, he walked on the water to go to Jeſus. But when he ſaw the wind boiſtrous, he was afraid; and beginning to ſink, he cried, ſaying, Lord, ſave me. And immediately Jeſus ſtretched forth his hand, and caught him, and ſaid unto him, O thou of little faith, wherefore didſt thou doubt? And when they were come into the ſhip, the wind ceaſed. Then they that were in the ſhip, came and worſhipped him, ſaying, Of a truth thou art the Son of God. And when they were gone over, they came into the land of Genneſaret. And when the men of that place had knowledge of him, they ſent out into all that country round about, and brought unto him all that were diſeaſed, And beſought him, that they might only touch the hem of his garment: and as many as touched were made perfectly whole.

Into the land of Genneſaret.] The place called Cinereth in Joſhua, and uſed by the Jeruſalem Targum, Numb. xxxiv. 15. was afterwards, according to Joſephus, called Genneſar, from the Chaldee Geneſar, which was the rendring of that Hebrew; from both which put together, the word Genezereth ariſes, which ſignifies the valley of branches. Now this was the title of the whole province, containing within it the lake of Genneſar, and the city of Tiberias, built by Herod in honour of Tiberius Cæſar. We are told by the Jewiſh doctors, in the Talmudic treatiſe, mentioning the journey of the ſpies whom Moſes ſent, that this country, or land, called Cinereth, had the name of Genezar, from its prodigious plenty, and rich ſoil. (Tremellius, and Hammond.) Hear what Joſephus ſays of the lake and the country: “ The lake of Genneſar takes its name from the adjoining country, being in breadth about forty furlongs, and one hundred and forty in length: its water is exceeding ſweet, and pleaſant to drink, and thinner and finer than the waters of other lakes commonly are; yet near the ſhore 'tis ſurprizingly clear, and more delicate than either river or fountain water; and perpetually cool, more than one could expect from ſo extended and wide a lake; nay, ſo cold, that ſnow itſelf cannot exceed it, eſpecially when it is expoſed to the air in tubs, which the inhabitants do in ſummer nights. The place is well ſtock'd with various kinds of fiſh, differing, both in ſhape, and taſte, from the fiſh of other countries.” And, ſpeaking of the country, he ſays: “ Along this lake a country of the ſame name is extended, exceedingly beautiful, and admirable for its Situation. The fruitfulneſs of its ſoil admits every kind of tree to grow upon it, and the huſbandmen have planted it with all manner of trees, the temperature of its air being accommodated to their different natures: for nut-trees, which, of all others, require a cool ſoil, grow here in abundance; and palm-trees, which demand warmth, flouriſh in great numbers; beſides, olives and fig-trees, which aſk for a kinder and ſofter air than the reſt, are ſeen to extend their ſhades here. A man, from ſeeing this, would ſay, that nature was ambitious in diſcovering her ſelf thus, and in putting her ſelf under ſo vaſt a reſtraint, as to make things which are repugnant to one another, thus unite and agree. But this is not all; for fruits, of different kinds, are produc'd here, beyond what ſome perſons would believe, and preſerv'd a long time: for example, grapes and figs, which may excel with all other kinds, are ſeen here for ten months in the year, while others are obſerv'd hanging on the trees the whole twelve months. But we may add to the temperature of the air, its being water'd by a plentiful ſpring, call'd by the inhabitants Capharnaum. This, in ſome men's opinions, is taken to be a vein of the Nile, becauſe there are fiſh found in it, reſembling the Coracinus, no where elſe to be met with, except in the lake of Alexandria. Now the length of this country, near the ſhore of the lake, which bears the ſame name, is thirty furlongs; and the breadth twenty.”. See more of this in Joſephus, book De Bel. Jud. chap. 10.

CHAP. XV.

God's commandments, and men's traditions. Scandal. The plant that is rooted up. The blind lead the blind. The woman of Canaan. Four thouſand are filled. Giving of thanks.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. THEN came to Jeſus Scribes and Phariſees, which were of Jeruſalem, ſaying, Why do thy diſciples tranſgreſs the tradition of the elders? for they waſh not their hands when they eat bread. But he anſwered and ſaid unto them, Why do you alſo tranſgreſs the commandment of God by your tradition? For God commanded, ſaying, Honour thy father and mother: and, He that curſeth father or mother, let him die the death. But ye ſay, Whoſoever ſhall ſay to his father or his mother, It is a gift by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profitted by me, And honour not his father or his mother, he ſhall be free. Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition.

Of the elders.] Theſe were not the ſenators, or ſuch as compoſed the great council or Synedrim of the Jews, becauſe it was the peculiar buſineſs of this Synedrim to preſide over all cauſes and determinations; but not to teach the people, or directly make new laws. For laws were generally enacted by kings, when the Hebrews lived under a regal power, and the republic was no way tied up to the ordinances of a parliament of the people. They, indeed, who were raiſed above the reſt of their countrymen by their authority or dignity, were wrongly named Presbyteri, or elders. For Joſephus, in ſpeaking of the Phariſees, ſays, “ They honoured their elders, or thoſe born before them (theſe being their Presbyteri) nor durſt they ſpeak a word againſt that which they advanced.” Again, The Phariſees delivered ſeveral precepts to the people, which they had received from their anceſtors.” Now the Sadducees were of opinion that their written laws were to be obſerved, but their traditional to be rejected. From the extraordinary regard paid to theſe gentlemen the following ſentences came to be in vogue. “ Suppoſe the Scribes ſhould aſſert, that the right hand is the left, and the left the right, you are to hear them.” But, not content to put their own fabulous accounts on a level with the laws of God, they preſum'd to place them before them For thus they ſpeak. “ There is more authority in what the ſcribes ſay, than in what the law commands.” And beſides the Jews are under no doubt but that thoſe precepts, which form their Talmud, though unwritten in the law, yet, delivered as they are pleaſed to have them, by the hands of God to Moſes, will endure to lateſt ages. (G.)

They waſh not.] The reaſon why the Jews ſo ſtrictly obſerved this cuſtom was, becauſe their teachers (who were blind leading the blind) were of opinion that their meat, drink, veſſels, or cups, if touch'd by ſtrangers, or any other perſon, whom the law deem'd impure, would firſt of all contaminate their bodies, and then their ſouls: Wherefore to remove this dreadful circumſtance, as they thought, and keep themſelves pure and undefiled, they uſed a very exact and accurate way of waſhing: But a ridiculous fear is conſtantly a ridiculous remedy. Of this opinion of the Phariſees we have ample traces of it in the apoſtles themſelves, who put a conſtruction on Chriſt's words concerning leavened bread, as though it had been a ſin to take bread either of the Phariſees or Sadducees. But it ſeems the Hebrew doctors diſtinguiſhed the Jews from the Samaritans; and the Samaritans, when they happened to meet with any Jews, commonly cryed out Pray do not touch us; and if the older Eſſenes chanced but to be touch'd by the younger, they generally waſhed themſelves, as if they had been touch'd by ſtrangers. Be this as it will, certain it is that this opinion, or doctrine, which the Scribes and Phariſees objected to Chriſt's apoſtles, ſtood on a precarious bottom. For they believ'd, in the firſt place, that the touch of ſome perſons was naturally unclean, concerning which there was no law of God extant; and in the next, that the mind or ſoul of the perſon, though ignorant of the matter, partook of the impurity, and in the laſt, that the pollution, contracted by ſuch touch, could be wip'd out of the ſoul, by a rite which God never had inſtituted, and of which they themſelves were the authors. From the like ridiculous piece of folly the ſuperſtition of the Hemerobaptiſts took its original, which Mahomet has thrown into his ſyſtem or book of laws, like many other things which he has pick'd up from that which was not his right. (G.) This was a cuſtom taken up by the Jews, and ſo ſtrictly commanded, that he who either refuſed or neglected to obſerve it, was thought guilty even of a capital crime. Rabbi Aquiba ſays, “ That he who takes meat without firſt waſhing his hands, deſerves to dye.” And another Rabbi; named Joſe, aſſerts, “ That to eat with unwaſh'd hands is worthy of death.” The former of theſe Jewiſh doctors, being in priſon, had water giving him for his uſe, to waſh and to drink, but happening by accident to ſpill half of it, he waſhed his hands in the remainder, thinking it abſolutely more neceſſary to do ſo than to drink, and to dye rather than violate the traditions of his anceſtors. This waſhing of hands, though enjoined by no ſtrict law of Moſes, but by the traditions of the Jewiſh elders, which the Phariſees look'd upon as the ſame, was conſtantly obſerved before their eating any meat; and the not obſerving it made the perſon guilty of the breach of an extraordinary matter. Maimonides ſays, “ We poſitively declare that a man muſt not eat bread before he waſh his hands.” And again, “ Whoſoever eats the bread, over which they recite the benediction, Hammot ſi, Bleſſed be he who produceth bread, muſt waſh his hands before and after.” So that all kinds of eating are not ſpecified here. For the Rabbins informs us, “ That the benediction Hammot ſi, is not ſaid over that which is not properly called bread, as cakes made of honey, ſugar and almonds. So that 'tis not ſimply eating here, but eating bread. That paſſage of John ii. 6. ſeems to refer to this, where 'tis ſaid, that the veſſels of water, (which were there at the feaſt) were according to the Jewiſh cuſtom of waſhing always before meat, that is, they ſtood there for that uſe or purpoſe. We learn from the 3d verſe of St. Mark's 7th chapter, the manner of this waſhing, They waſh their hands to the wriſt: now the word pugnie, in this phraſe, ſignifies the hand up to the wriſt, and is indeed but a part of the Cheir or hand, in the critical notion of it. For Homer, Hippocrates, and other authors, take Cheir for the whole arm; and ſo it ſeems to be taken 1 Macc. xv. 03. carry the Cheir, or arm (not hand) with the ſhoulder to the city; to which may be likened that paſſage in Homer, where he, who ſtruck another on the ſhoulder with his ſword, is ſaid to cut off his Cheir, which, doubtleſs, was his arm, from all which 'tis evident that the word pugnie ſignifies the hand up to the wriſt; and 'twas the cuſtom of the Jews to waſh their hands ſo far and no farther, by holding them up, which they called the elevation of the hands. Conſequently this waſhing the hands up to the wriſt, is evidently to waſh with this elevation, and in the rite, or ceremony, uſed in their waſhings. Thus Maimonides asking the queſtion, “ how far the waſhing of the “ hands reacheth,” anſwers, “ to perek,” meaning, by perek, that Joint, which ſets on the arm to the hand. Thus Rabbi Ben Joſeph, and Rabbi Alphes alledge, that to waſh the hands according to the rite of the ſanctuary, muſt be to that joint, which was at the end of the hand; that is, to the wriſts. (H.)

Curſeth father or mother.] Our Saviour takes the words of this ſecond text from Exod. xxi. 17. According to the deſign of Chriſt here, the word rendred Curſeth, muſt have a larger extent given it, as to it's ſignification; I mean, muſt have the extent of the ſignification of the Hebrew root Pibel; ſo that it ſignifies firſt, poſitively ſpeaking, or doing injuriouſly to any; or privately, lightly regarding in words or deeds. For as this is the thing, to which Chriſt's deſign directs the ſignification of it here, ſo Pibel, the word, us'd in all the texts to which it refers, ſignifies to ſlight, contemn, and ſet at nought. Thus we render rightly that paſſage of Exodus xxi. 7. Set light by father and mother. But though this place of Exodus does not comprehend all this, ſo as to denounce temporal death on ſuch as thus neglected their parents, yet 'tis very juſtly extended by Chriſt in the following words, as bringing danger of eternal death on thoſe, who, though they did not, in plain words, curſe their parents, which the Phariſees told them was all that was meant by the text, would yet do nothing for them, and, therefore, as St. Paul ſaith, were worſe than infidels. (H. and W.)

Gift.] This does not imply any gift; but only that which was devoted to God. The Jews would very often not only vow, but ſwear to reſtrain their kindneſs to this or that man. And in order to make this vow, or oath, the firmer and more ſacred, there was uſually annex'd to it a conſecration of the vower or ſwearer's effects to divine uſes. But if the perſon, making this vow or oath, happened to alter his mind, and ſeem ready to give to another, the prieſts, in ſuch caſe, the major part of whom were Phariſees, would inſiſt on the obligation of the oath or vow, and confiſcate the perſon's effects to the uſe of the treaſury. (G.) The meaning of this verſe is this; But contrary to this your tradition is, That if a man can anſwer his parents, when they need any relief, and tell them, ſaying, “ I have bound myſelf by an oath, that I will “ not do any thing to the relief of my father, or my mother.” Though ſome underſtand the verſe thus, “ O father! that, by “ which thou ſhouldeſt be relieved by me, is a gift already devoted “ to God, and cannot, without impiety, be otherwiſe employ'd: “ and by this piety to God, I may be as profitable and helpful to thee; “ for God will repay it upon me and thee in our neceſſities:” So that this ſon is under an obligation not to give to his father, or, as others will have it, who follow this laſt interpretation, he hath ſaid enough to his parents, or he ſhall be free from the obligation to ſerve them. Now here is an evident example to demonſtrate, that you, who ſtand ſo much for the obſerving of your traditions, do make no ſcruple to evacuate the obligation of God's commands. —— The Jews had a very ſolemn form of devoting, very contrary to charity, yet frequent among them, to bind a man by vow or execration, “ That he will be benificial to his neighbour or parent, “ in nothing.” Philo ſays, “ He confirms by oath the barbarity “ and cruelty of his diſpoſition.” This was called Corban. Maimonides and Miſnaioth has this ptetty frequently: Mark uſes it, and 'tis the ſame as Gift here. The Jews ſay whatſoever has paſt under their vow, is utterly forbidden, or unlawful as Corban, which being conſecrated, muſt not be touch'd, or employ'd to any other uſes. So that the plain meaning of the place is: A father, being in want, requires relief of his ſon; the ſon anſwers, that he hath vowed he will not, and conſequently 'tis unlawful for him to relieve him. This practice is approv'd off by the Phariſees, to the end he may thus evacuate his duty to his parent. Though it was entirely in oppoſition to the command of honouring and relieving them, yet they thought it obligatory to annul that precept; and many caſes are ſet down in which it does ſo, both in Maimonides and the Rabbins. Accordingly, it cannot be doubted but this is the very affair which Chriſt charged on the Phariſees. But what the antients more commonly received, and what Origen himſelf learnt from a Jew, is, that Corban, and the Greek word Doron, are a gift conſecrated to God. Theophylact ſays, “ That the Phariſees, being “ extremely covetous, perſwaded children to give nothing to their “ parents, but to conſecrate all to the treaſury of the temple, and “ taught them to ſay, O father! that which thou deſireth to be “ profited by me (or relieved) is a gift which I have conſecrated “ to the temple; and, accordingly they divided, with the “ children, all which they had, leaving their poor parents without “ any relief, in their old age.” This interpretation carries the face of probability, yet it appears not to be agreeable to the practice of the Jews, for we find no traces among them of any devoting, or conſecrating to God in this manner, as the teſtimonies, produced by the learn'd Pocock ſeem to evidence. (H.) The Syriac hath tranſlated the text of the Greek almoſt word for word, ſo that he who underſtands one, cannot fail to comprehend the other. This paſſage is liable to two interpretations, one with an ellipſis, the other without. That without runs thus, He who ſhall ſay to his father or mother; whatſoever gift ſhall be conſecrated by me to God, thou wilt be aſſiſted by it, or thou wilt receive equally the profit of it with me; ſhall be yet under no obligation to honour or relieve his father or mother; q. d. he has done ſufficiently according to the law of God. The other with an Ellipſis, is interpreted thus, Whoſoever ſhall ſay to his father or mother, my gift will profit thee, is under no further obligation to honour or relieve his parents. (Trem. and Jun.) The meaning of this place is this: Whatſoever I ſhall conſecrate to God, is nevertheleſs for your advantage. 'Tis the ſame thing as though I ſhould make the gift to you; becauſe (as the Phariſees now living aſſert) it will be meritorious to you. Now, under this pretext of religion, the Phariſees engroſs'd every thing into their hands; pretending that he had fully performed the duty of a ſon, who had dedicated his effects to the treaſury of the temple. (Beza) Mark expreſſes himſelf clearer on this head; it is Corban, that is to ſay, a gift, by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me. So that the genuine meaning of this paſſage is this. That, by which you may be relieved by me, is all Corban, or conſecrated to God. Upon this Chriſt reprehends the Phariſees, for clearing a perſon of his error, in tranſgreſſing a command, which plainly enjoined him to honour his parents; and for pronouncing him free, when he ſuffered his parents to want, and gave, what ſhould relieve them, to God. Chriſt therefore, with a great deal of juſtice, reproves the Phariſees for entertaining this counter opinion, becauſe he who conſecrates to God, what is abſolutely neceſſary to relieve his parents wants; devotes not his own, but other people's property; for ſuch part of my effects, as my father ſtands in need of, is none of mine, but my fathers. In Prov. iii. 'tis ſaid, honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance. The offering of one ſacrificing unjuſtly, is ridiculous. In David we have an example of his buying the oxen of king Araunah, and then offering them to God. “ Nay, ſays David, but I will ſurely buy it of thee at a price; “ neither will I offer burnt-offerings unto the Lord my God, “ of that which doth coſt me nothing. 2 Sam. xxiv. 24. (V.)

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. Ye hypocrites, well did Iſaiah propheſy of you, ſaying, This people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips: bnt their heart is far from me. But in vain do they worſhip me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. And he called the multitude, and ſaid unto them, Hear and underſtand. Not that which goeth into the mouth defileth a man: but that which cometh out of the mouth, this defileth a man. Then came his diſciples, and ſaid unto him, Knoweſt thou that the Phariſees were offended after they heard this ſaying? But he anſwered and ſaid, Every plant which my heavenly Father hath not planted ſhall be rooted up. Let them alone: they be blind leaders of the blind. And if the blind lead the blind, both ſhall fall into the ditch.

Teaching for doctrines the commandments of men.] In this place, Chriſt rejects thoſe traditions of the Jews, which they call deuteroſes, or traditions at ſecond hand, invented by the Phariſees, through a prepoſterous ſuperſtition to appear extraordinary religious; when, in fact, they were not only diametrically oppoſite to the law of God, but no way contributing either to religious decency or order, as may be ſeen in Jerome's 151ſt epiſtle to Algaſia, queſt. 10. and in his commentaries on Iſaiah. Our Lord does not reject ſuch precepts, as do not oppoſe the law of God, ſo they be but preſcrib'd by thoſe who are veſted with a legal authority, or done for the ſake of exterior order, or which may refer to ſome profitable and advantageous end. (V.)

Plant.] This word here does not mean a ſingle plant, but a garden, or nurſery of plants, and, conſequently, very juſtly belongs to a multitude of men, a ſect, or party, as here of the Phariſees, which followed Chriſt, and heard his doctrine. The main difficulty is, what is to be underſtood, by ſuch a plantation being planted, or not planted, by God: and that will beſt be found out from the context. The Phariſees, as appears from ver. 12, were offended at one ſaying of Chriſt, and, conſequently, diſcouraged from following him, or entertaining his doctrine: When he heard of it, his only anſwer is, Every plantation, which is not planted by God, ſhall be rooted out; whereas their being diſcouraged from following him, is the rooting out of his plantation; ſo their manner of entertaining his doctrine, is expreſs'd by God's not having planted that plantation. The ſum of this, therefore, is, that that faith which comes from God, having for its foundation his doctrine and teſtimony, will extend itſelf infinitely to all who come with this teſtimony, and to the whole doctrine of Chriſt; it being certain, that the Supreme Being cannot be guilty of any falſhood, or bear teſtimony to any, who ſhall pronounce any thing falſe, and as certain, that all Chriſt's doctrine, particularly this, ver. 11.

has a tincture of divinity upon it. And, therefore, 'tis plainly evident, that the faith of thoſe is not founded on God's teaching or teſtifying, who, profeſſing to hearken to Chriſt, and receive his doctrine in ſome things, but not in all, follow him a while, and then quarrel with his precepts, when they agree not with their humour. This is not God's ſeed, received into an humble, honeſt, and obedient heart, which is a mould that receives all that comes from God, and brings forth fruit abundantly; but is a faith founded on ſome other principle, namely, the gratifying their humours, or intereſts. And, accordingly, as the ſeed which fell on ſtony ground, ſoon withered away; ſo this kind of partial, and hypocritical faith, of ſuch as believe the doctrine of Chriſt, no farther than they like it, is ſure not to laſt long, whenſover a croſs and oppoſite doctrine comes in the way. (G. H. and V.)

They be blind leaders of the blind.] Chriſt calls them blind, becauſe they have not a mind illuminated by the Father of light, neither know they the path that leadeth to life; therefore, by reaſon of their evil thoughts, he tells them they are not a plantation planted by his Father, and, conſequently, affirms they muſt be rooted out. (V) It happens, that the want of underſtanding in teachers, very often ſheds its influence on thoſe who hear them; and tho' 'tis owing to their own faults, that they have not the light of wiſdom within them, yet 'tis to be conſider'd, that God, in his judgment, is the cauſe, that the ignorance of ſuch teachers makes their audience err. Thus 'tis ſaid in the goſpel, If the blind lead the blind, both ſhall fall into the ditch. Thus the Pſalmiſt prophetically denounces, ſaying, Their eyes are dim, ſo that they cannot ſee; and their back is not ſtrait. By eyes are meant, they who being plac'd in elevated poſts, undertake the office for providing for the journey; and they who follow after, are ſignified by the back. So that, conſequently, they whoſe eyes are dim, have their backs bent, becauſe they who go before, have loſt the light of underſtanding: for they who come after, muſt have their backs bent to bear the weight of their ſins upon them. (S. Gregory paſt. 1. p. c. 1.)

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Then anſwered Peter and ſaid unto him, Declare unto us this parable. And Jeſus ſaid, Are ye alſo yet without underſtanding? Do not ye yet underſtand, that whatſoever entreth in at the mouth, goeth into the belly, and is caſt out into the draught? But thoſe things which proceed out of the mouth, come forth from the heart, and they defile the man. For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, falſe witneſs, blaſpemies. Theſe are the things which defile a man: but to eat with unwaſhen hands defileth not a man.

Whatſoever entereth in at the mouth.] Supply, Whatſoever that is not altogether clean cannot defile the man, becauſe it entereth not into his heart, that is, into his ſoul: q. d. 'Tis folly to ſeek after righteouſneſs or holineſs in ſuch tranſitory, earthly, and corruptible things; or to be in any fear that they will pollute or defile; for things of this kind, are neither good, nor bad, in themſelves. (V.)

Goeth into the draught.] That is, all the impure matter in meat, is caſt out of the man, and goeth into the draught; but the body, in the mean time, retains the purer ſubſtance. Mark ſays, Purging all meats, that is, by this emiſſion, ſeparating that which is unclean in the meat, from that which is clean. Origen, upon this paſſage of the goſpel before us, encounters the Euchariſt, as to its materiality, that it goes into the belly, and is caſt out into the draught. The ſame opinion ſeems to be embrac'd by the fathers of the council of Toledo, wherein is this prohibition, Ne grande aliquid in altari proponatur benedictione ſacerdotali conſecrandum, ſed tantum modica oblata, quæ non ventrem illius, qui ſumpſerit gravis farciminis onere premat, nec in digeſtionem vadat, ſed animam alimonia ſpirituali reficiat. "Be ſure not to load the altar with things of any magnitude, to be conſecrated, and have the benediction of the prieſt ſaid over them, let what you place thereon be ſmall, for fear the receiver's belly ſhould be too much onerated therewith, or what he eats ſhould turn into digeſtion; on the contrary, let him refreſh his ſoul with ſpiritual food." By this prohibition, we are to underſtand the materiality in the Euchariſt, or the ſacrament, viz. of bread and wine, which, by conſecration, become types and ſymbols, and the body and blood of Chriſt. But, as Origen ſays, this materiality has no virtue in itſelf to render holy, or ſanctify, the perſon who uſes it; for it goes into the belly, and is caſt out into the draught. But beſides, this prohibition takes in the formality, or virtue, of this ſacrament, viz. the real body and blood, after conſecration: For, from hence, it comes, that he who, through faith, receives this typical and ſymbolical body and blood of Chriſt, or, what is all one, the conſecrated bread and wine, is join'd with the very body and blood of Chriſt, tho' ſeparated, from one another, by never ſo diſtant places. This virtue of the Euchariſt, or of the Lord's ſupper, ſuffers no conſumption, or corruption; neither is it caſt into the draught, as John of Damaſcus truly aſſerts in his fourth book, De fide orthodoxa. (V.)

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. Then Jeſus went thence, and departed into the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon. And behold, a woman of Canaan came out of the ſame coaſts, and cried unto him, ſaying, Have mercy on me, O Lord, thou ſon of David; my daughter is grievouſly vexed with a devil. But he anſwered her not a word. And his diſciples came and beſought him, ſaying, Send her away, for ſhe crieth after us. But he anſwered and ſaid, I am not ſent, but unto the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael. Then came ſhe and worſhipped him, ſaying, Lord, help me. But he anſwered and ſaid, It is not meet to take the childrens bread, and to caſt it to dogs. And ſhe ſaid, Truth, Lord: yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their maſter's table. Then Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, O woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that very hour.

A woman of Canaan.] Mark, in his 7th chapter, ver. 26. calls her a Syro-phœnician. The Hebrews ſtrictly call'd thoſe Canaanites, who dwelt at Tyre and Sidon, and the places which lay near the ſea-coaſt. See Numb. xiii. 29. Judg. i. 31. and Joſh. v. 1. where the LXX. tranſlate kings of Phœnicia. Why Mark calls her a Grecian, means not that ſhe was either a Hebrew by birth, or a Judaizer; neither, from hence, does it follow, that ſhe was an idolatreſs: for, in Judæa, and other countries, there were devout perſons, who worſhipped God, and yet were not Jews. See Acts x. 2. So Paul very frequently mentions the word Grecian in this ſenſe, including all mankind in the claſs of Greeks and Jews. As to what regards the woman, God ſo diſpoſed the event, that as the foregoing diſcourſe ſhadow'd out the abolition of the ritual law, ſo this did the adoption of the Gentiles. (G.) This woman of Canaan is call'd a Syro-phœnician by Mark, vii. 26. that is, as the context here ſhews, a Phœnician of Tyre or Sidon; for Chriſt, ver. 21. was in thoſe maritime coaſts at this time. We learn from Pliny's natural hiſtory, book 5. chap. 12. that this country borders upon Syria: Obſerve his words; Qui ſubtilius dividunt circumfundi Syria Phœnicem volunt eſſe enim primum oram maretimam Syriæ ab Arabia, deinde Phœnicen. "They, who divide more artfully, affirm, that Phœnicia is bounded by Syria, becauſe there is firſt the ſea-coaſt towards Arabia, then Phœnicia." Dionyſius ſays, "That it creeps up cloſe to the ſea;" and adds, that the inhabitants are not all call'd by one appellation, but are diſtinguiſhed by ſeveral names:

> They on the continent are Syrians nam'd,
> They to the ſea Phœnicia's ſons are fam'd.

That is, are call'd Syro-phœnicians, not after the manner which Livy acquaints us the Lybo-phœnicians were, miſtum Afris punicum genus, "a ſort of Phœnicians mingled with the Africans," but only as bordering upon Syria, or on ſome parts of it, according to the accounts of others Now it appears that Phœnicia and Canaan are the ſame region; for the Septuagint render Canaan, in the book of Numb. Phœnicia; ſo they call Shaul, Exod. vi. 15. Shaul of the Phœnician; but Gen. xlvi. 10. The ſon of a Canaaniteiſh woman. And we find in Numb xiii. 29. when their ſituation is ſet down, that 'tis expreſly ſaid, The Canaanites dwell by the ſea, which confirms their dwelling in Phœnicia. Theſe Phœnicians were famous for merchandize, and an extreme cunning and knowledge in that buſineſs. Obſerve what Homer ſays, in the 15th book of his Odyſſey:

> Hither Phœnicia's ſailing people came,
> Who boaſt, for ſhips and ſea, an endleſs name.

And

> The ſly Phœnician hither was convey'd,
> Who has a thouſand tricks on mankind play'd.

And Dionyſius:

> The firſt who ſtem'd in ſhips the boiſt'rous main,
> And ſought out diſtant lands for ſake of gain.

But if Phœnicia was ſo famous for mariners and traffick, no leſs was Canaan. Thus in Hoſea, xii. 7. 'tis ſaid of Ephraim, He is Canaan (which we render merchant, from the Chaldee) the ballances of deceit are in his hand: for, it ſeems, the Canaanites were ſuch to a proverb. And ſo of Tyre 'tis read, Iſaiah xxiii. 8. Their merchants are princes, and their traffickers the honourable of the earth. Beſides, what the Heathens aſſert of the original of letters, and learning, confirmeth the ſame. For they tell us, that Cadmus brought it from the Phœnicians, (theſe very Phœnicians of Tyre) being himſelf a Tyrian. Lucian, indeed, calls him a Syro-phœnician merchant; but others ſtyle him Cadmus the iſlander, as being of the iſland Tyre. They acquaint us farther, that it was this Tyrian, or Phœnician, who brought learning to the Greeks, that is, from the Hebrews, who inhabited Canaan. Now Laertius ſays, that philoſophy had its beginning from Barbarians; but Clemens of Alexandria, that the Greeks ſtole all the learning they had from the Jews. (H.)

I am not ſent, but unto the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael.] What means this phraſe, I am not ſent, but unto the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, unleſs it be, his not appearing perſonally to the Gentiles, but to the people of Iſrael? He appear'd, indeed, not to the Gentiles, that they who continually ſaw, and rejected him, might undergo the greater judgment. He was converſant among the Jews, he choſe his mother among them, and to be conceiv'd, and born, among them; he was pleaſed to ſhed his blood among them; and among them are his footſteps, provided they are juſtly ador'd; among them he was laſt ſeen; from among them he mounted up into heaven, and only ſent to the Gentiles. Perhaps ſome perſons may think, that, as he did not come perſonally among us, but only ſent to us, we have not heard his voice, but only the voice of thoſe whom he ſent. God forbid, away, away with ſuch a thought from our hearts; for he himſelf was virtually preſent in thoſe whom he ſent. Hear St. Paul, who was ſent by him; for this apoſtle was chiefly ſent to the Gentiles: Paul himſelf ſays, "Will ye not receive Chriſt, who ſpeaks in me?" (Auguſtine.)

Ver. 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39. And Jeſus departed from thence, and came nigh unto the ſea of Galilee, and went up into a mountain and ſat down there. And great multitudes came unto him, having with them thoſe that were lame, blind, dumb, maimed, and many others, and caſt them down at Jeſus feet, and he healed them: Inſomuch that the multitude wondred when they ſaw the dumb to ſpeak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to ſee: and they glorified the God of Iſrael. Then Jeſus called his diſciples unto him, and ſaid, I have compaſſion on the multitude, becauſe they continue with me now three days, and have nothing to eat: and I will not ſend them away faſting, leſt they faint in the way. And his diſciples ſay unto him, whence ſhould we have ſo much bread in the wilderneſs, as to fill ſo great a multitude? And Jeſus ſaith unto them, How many loaves have ye? And they ſaid Seven, and a few little fiſhes. And he commanded the multitude to ſit down on the ground. And he took the ſeven loaves and the fiſhes, and gave thanks, and brake them, and gave to his diſciples, and the diſciples to the multitude. And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left, ſeven baskets full. And they that did eat were four thouſand men, beſide women and children And he ſent away the multitude, and took ſhip, and came into the coaſts of Magdala.

Baskets.] It may be ask'd, How ſo many baskets came to be in the wilderneſs? The anſwer is at hand; Either the Evangeliſt means only ſuch a quantity by the baskets; not that there were really baskets there; or it may be that baskets were in the deſart, in which bread was brought to be ſold to the multitudes that came to Chriſt; and in them were gathered up the fragments of that which remained, as Chriſt commanded. (V.)

Magdala.] What the Greek reads here Magdala, the Syriac reads Magedu, and the vulgar Latin Magedan, and the antient Greek and Latin manuſcripts Magadan, which makes it probable that this coaſt of Magdala, is the ſame with the valley of Mageddon, or Megiddo, which belongs to the tribe of Manaſſes, where Joſias was ſlain, by Pharaoh Neco. For to this belongs the narration of that ſtory in Herodotus, "Neco fought on "foot with the Syrians (the Hebrews) in Mygdol, and obtain'd "the victory, and, as it follows, took Cadytis after the engage-"ment; which, according to Joſeph Scaliger, was Cadiſh, a "great city of Syria." Dalmanatha, ſo called by Mark, and Magdala, are the ſame. (H. and V.)

CHAP. XVI.

The Sign of Jonas. The Leaven of the Phariſees. The Sentiments of the People concerning Chriſt. Our Saviour foretells his own Death.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. THE Phariſees alſo with the Sadducees came, and tempting, deſired him that he would ſhew them a ſign from heaven. He anſwered and ſaid unto them, When it is evening, ye ſay, It will be fair weather: for the ſky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather to day: for the ſky is red and lowring. O ye hypocrites, ye can diſcern the face of the ſky, but can ye not diſcern the ſigns of the times? A wicked and adulterous generation ſeeketh after a ſign, and there ſhall no ſign be given unto it, but the ſign of the prophet Jonas. And he left them and departed. And when his diſciples were come to the other ſide, they had forgotten to take bread,

O ye hypocrites.] Ye hypocrites, you have skill enough to expound and interpret, the appearances of the ſky, and can prognoſticate, what kind of weather it will be, by obſerving the colour in the ſky and clouds. Now, when my preaching in theſe words, Repent, for the kingdom of God is at hand, and my performing all kinds of miracles, to enforce your belief, has no influence at all over you, Is it not ſtrange that you cannot diſcern what is coming upon you? Can there be a more certain prognoſtic of approaching deſtruction than this? And are not you much more nearly concern'd herein, than you can be in fair or rainy weather? Why ſhould not your penetration and ſagacity in other things extend to this alſo? 'Tis an argument of great perverſeneſs and falſeneſs in you, that, when ſo many miracles have been wrought, and repentance ſo long preach'd among you, you now require a ſign from heaven, to evidence that I am a true prophet. You would never act thus, if you were not reſolv'd to reſiſt all reformation. And ſince you are ſo, all that I ſhall farther add, is, to put you in mind of Jonas's preaching to Nineveh, and to aſſure you, That, if you do not now repent, you ſhall be ſuddenly deſtroyed. (H---'s Paraph.)

But can you not diſcern the ſigns of the times?] To wit, of the approaching coming of the Meſſiah. Would you but narrowly look into the oracles of the prophets, you could not but confeſs that the time of Daniel's weeks was at hand; that the Syrian and Egyptian ſplendor is extinguiſh'd; that the morals of the people are deprav'd to an extreme; that their teachers, whom you yourſelves pretend to be, have loſt that warmth of religion which ſhould animate your minds; and that all the religion you boaſt off, conſiſts of a medley of cold ceremonies. Whereas I propoſe to you a doctrine of apparent purity, perform ſigns, not merely to pleaſure the mind, but that mankind may reap advantages from them, namely, reſtoring the ſight to the blind; curing the lame; healing the ſick; all which are evident ſigns of the kingdom of the Meſſiah. The meaning of Chriſt's ſaying, Can you not, &c. is this. How comes it that you cannot ſee, unleſs becauſe you are reſolved not to ſee? (G.) Q. d. O Phariſees and Sadducees, you can tell how to diſcern the ſigns of the ſky that are fallacious, but cannot obſerve thoſe infallible traces in the law and the prophets, which point out my coming! O prepoſterous knowledge, and ſubtilty of genius! What Chriſt ſays, Luke xvii. 20. The kingdom of God cometh not with obſervation, is no way repugnant to what he ſays here; for the meaning of that phraſe is, the kingdom of God, or the time that ſhall be after the reſurrection, when Chriſt, by his ſecond coming, ſhall conſummate his kingdom, which, by his firſt coming, he has begun within us, will not be long before it comes, and be preceded with pomp, wonders, and other ſigns, which will evidence its approach; for Chriſt promiſes, that ſigns ſhall not be wanting to bear teſtimony of his ſecond coming, Luke xxi. 27. (V.)

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. Then Jeſus ſaid unto them, Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, and of the Sadduces. And they reaſoned among themſelves, ſaying, It is becauſe we have taken no bread. Which when Jeſus perceived, he ſaid unto them, O ye of little faith, why reaſon ye among your ſelves, becauſe ye have brought no bread? Do ye not yet underſtand, neither remember the five loaves of the five thouſand, and how many baskets ye took up? Neither the ſeven loaves of the four thouſand, and how many baskets ye took up? How is it that ye do not underſtand, that I ſpeak it not to you concerning bread, that ye ſhould beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, and of the Sadducees? Then underſtood they how that he bade them not beware of the leaven of bread, but of the doctrine of the Phariſees, and of the Sadduces.

Beware of the leaven of the Phariſees and Sadducees.] Mark, after mentioning the Sadduces, ſpeaks of the leaven of Herod. Now my opinion is, that ſome of the Sadducees were Herodians, that is, they gave out that Herod the Great was the Shilo promiſed by Jacob. 'Tis true, indeed, that Herod was a ſtrict obſerver of the Roman dignity, which was an artifice to ſecure his dominions. Chriſt acquaints us here, to be very careful to avoid two kinds of doctrine; one, which places a principal part of religion in external rites and ceremonies, chiefly ſuch as are the invention of men; the other, which transforms religion into the kingdom of this world. (G.) The leaven of the Phariſees, in this place, means no more than the influence of their doctrine upon all their followers. Mark ſays, The leaven of the Phariſees and of Herod. The reaſon of this may be, that ſome of the Sadducees were alſo Herodians, that is, they adher'd to Herod's party, or the Roman government, when the Phariſees, on the other hand, took Cæſar for an uſurper; but it may be, that Chriſt, by mentioning all three, the leaven of the Phariſees, of the Sadducees, and of Herod, meant that each party had counter deſigns againſt him and his apoſtles. What the Phariſees and the Sadducees were, has been ſufficiently explain'd; it may not be amiſs to enquire a little into theſe Herodians. They do not appear to be a diſtinct ſect from the Phariſees or Sadducees, but ſome of them were Sadducees, as is clear by comparing this paſſage with Mark viii. 15. A learned perſon aſſerts they were Grecians, who were brought out of the deſart by king Herod, and that they became a ſect afterwards; to prove which, he cites Aruch. But in this he has committed a groſs blunder, and miſtook the Hebrew word Ionim, as though it had been Iones, Grecians, when 'tis no more but Ionim, doves, or pidgeons, which Herod brought out of the deſart with him, and from which came a certain ſort of pidgeons (not ſect of men) very different from the others. Many of the antients took the Herodians to be they, who, relying on Jacob's prophecy, concerning the ſceptre departing from Judah, believed it was fulfilled in Herod the Great, who was not a Jew, and yet ſway'd the ſceptre there, and that he was the Shilo promiſed by Jacob at that time. Conſonant hereto is Epiphanius, who calls them idle, and hypocritical Jews, who thought that Herod was the Meſſiah, promiſed by the prophets. So are Tertullian, Chryſoſtom, Theophilact, and Jerome; nor, indeed, is it any way probable, that, at this time, full thirty years after Herod's death, there ſhould be any of this belief, that Herod was the Meſſiah. We have another obſervation to make, which is, that, in the room of Herodians, the Syriac reads Herod's followers, which may hint to us another interpretation, which ſeems the moſt probable. Certain it is, that ſome of the Jews acknowledged Cæſar's authority, while others look'd upon him as an uſurper; Theſe, for the moſt part were Phariſees. The occaſion of their difference was thus. The Zelots, or Maccabees, made themſelves maſters of the government of Judæa, about one hundred and fifty years before Chriſt's Nativity. Judas Maccabeus, who was one of them, apprehending the growing power of Antiochus, entered into an alliance with the Romans, which continued ninety years: about which time Hyrcanus, and Ariſtobulus, the ſons of Alexander, happening to diſpute the kingdom between them, and the latter proving ſuperior, and getting poſſeſſion, Hyrcanus apply'd for redreſs to the Romans. Antipater, was made mediator, who petitioned Pompey, then not far off, to come with an army to the relief of Hyrcanus. Pompey complied, and upon that, ſiege was laid to Jeruſalem. Thoſe of Hyrcanus's party within ſoon delivered it up, while that of Ariſtobulus, was obliged to retire into that part where the temple ſtood; whereupon pompey ſtorm'd the temple, and took it. Thus the Romans became maſters of the city, and Hyrcanus was reſtored to the high-prieſthood, and to the kingdom of Judæa, but, under a proviſion, to hold it under the Roman protection, which was conſented to by thoſe of Hyrcanus's party; in the mean time, they, who favoured Ariſtobulus, look'd upon the Romans as uſurpers, and poſſeſſors by violence; and thus the difference continued 'till Our Saviour's time. (H. from Joſephus.)

Of the doctrine of the Phariſees and Sadducees.] Supply, from Luke xii. 1. which is hypocriſy. For the Phariſees taught ſome things that were conſonant to the law, and conducive to holineſs, all which are commanded by Chriſt below, chap. xxiii. ver. 2. to be done and obſerved; but others, diametrically oppoſite thereto, which our Saviour bids his apoſtles beware of; and acquaints them, not to make the commandments of God of none effect, by keeping up to the traditions of men. Chriſt here enjoins his apoſtles to beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, and Sadducees, that is, of their hypocritical doctrine. But in Mark he mentions the leaven of Herod, that is, to avoid the hypocrital meaſures of that prince's life. For Chriſt, on account of the extraordinary cunning and deceit of Herod the tetrarch, calls him the fox, Luke xiii. 32. This Herod was entirely the creature of the Roman emperor; and of all his qualifications, choſe moſtly to imitate his cunning and diſſimulation. He would, at one time, endeavour to recommend himſelf, with much art and addreſs, to the people, as tho' he had been a prodigious aſſertor of the Jewiſh religion, and yet pay all the adulation and ſervility poſſible to the Roman emperor; as if he had been the perſon moſt devoted to him of any in the world, when all the while he was ſecuring his intereſt, and playing his own cards to the beſt advantage. (V.)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. When Jeſus came into the coaſts of Ceſarea Philippi, he asked his diſciples, ſaying, Whom do men ſay, that I, the Son of man, am? And they ſaid, Some ſay that thou art John the Baptiſt, ſome Elias, and others Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He ſaith unto them, But whom ſay ye that I am? And Simon Peter anſwered and ſaid, Thou art Chriſt, the Son of the living God. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Bleſſed art thou Simon Barjona: for fleſh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven. And I ſay alſo unto thee, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church: and the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatſoever thou ſhalt bind on earth, ſhall be bound in heaven: and whatſoever thou ſhalt looſe on earth, ſhall be looſed in heaven. Then charged he his diſciples, that they ſhould tell no man that he was Jeſus the Chriſt.

Ceſarea Philippi.] This is not that city where Philip the Evangeliſt dwelt, mentioned Acts xxi. 8. From Euſebius we learn, that Philip the tetrarch, who was Herod's brother, erected many houſes in the city Paneas, and, having thus amplify'd it, call'd it Ceſarea Philippi, the firſt in honour of the emperor, the ſecond of himſelf. With this account agreeth Joſephus. Now the Ceſarea, ſimply mentioned ſo, without any addition, in the Acts, was built by Herod, and was in Syria, and call'd formerly Straton's tower. Ærodius, in his pandects, relates of this laſt Ceſarea, that the Jews and Syrians had a diſpute, before the emperor Nero, concerning the right of this city. The Jews, it ſeems, alledged in their defence; that, becauſe Herod built it, and planted Jews in it, it was a city of Judæa; the Syrians, to confront this, inſiſted that it was not in Syria, that Herod was not the founder of it, but only the enlarger, and gave it a new name, and that he built it not for the Jews, becauſe he erected images in the temple, which the Jews did not allow of Upon the whole, Nero gave it in favour of the Syrians. (G and H.) The Ceſarea, barely called ſo, without any addition, was a city ſtanding on the Mediterranean, and was formerly named Straton's tower. Herod the Great very much amplified, and ſtrengthened it, through apprehenſions of his ſubjects revolting; he adorned it with a very lofty tower, with buildings, a temple, theatre, amphitheatre, and magnificent ſewers; he made a harbour to it, not inferior to the Pyræum, which he named after Auguſtus, according to the account we have from Joſephus, who ſays, the major part of the inhabitants of this city were Greeks, namely, Gentiles. The other Ceſarea, which is called Philippi, as being enlarged by Philip the ſon of Herod, and called Ceſarea, in honour of Cæſar, was formerly named Paneas. This city ſtands near the ſprings of Jordan, was antiently called Lais, or Leſem, afterwards Dan, from the tribe of that name, which ſeized upon it, and at laſt Paneas by the Greeks who governed Syria, who were better acquainted with the word Pan, than Dan. (Veil, and Charles Stephens.)

Simon Bar-jona.] Simon, no doubt means Simeon, and Barjona, Bar-johanna, that is the ſon of John. I ſuppoſe that this name of Bar-jona is added here for no other reaſon, but that he was commonly called ſo, before he liſted himſelf under the banners of Chriſt. (G.) That is, ſon of Jona, which is a contraction of the word Johannan, when Peter is called Simon of John, that is, Simon ſon of John. (V.)

Fleſh and blood.] This is a phraſe, pretty frequent in the ſcriptures, ſignifying no more than a mere man here upon earth, one who hath aſcended no higher than the common condition of men. The Rabbins make uſe of it, when 'tis oppoſed to God, to mean the vile condition of man with reſpect to him. In Cod. Berachoth, the parable of a rich man is called the parable of a king of fleſh and blood, that is, of a human, mortal king here on earth. Thus in 1 Corinth. xv. 50. Fleſh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, that is, theſe corruptible, groſs, and earthly bodies of ours, 'till they are refin'd: So 'tis ſaid, Epheſ. vi. 12. Our wreſtling is not againſt fleſh and blood, that is, againſt common human enemies, but, againſt the moſt potent oppoſers. So Chriſt tells Peter here, that his confeſſion, that Chriſt is the ſon of God, was not founded on any human teſtimony; nor on the wiſhes of men, which were not likely to be gratified by his doctrine, but on the ſtronger teſtimony of God himſelf. So St. Paul ſays, when he mentions his call to the apoſtleſhip immediately from heaven, that he applied himſelf not to fleſh and blood, that is, to any men, to receive his miſſion or commiſſion of an apoſtle from them. (G. H and V.)

Upon this rock will I build my church.] The appellation of Petros, which means a ſtone in this place, eſpecially one of ſuch firmneſs and ſtrength, as to ſuſtain the greater weight of the building, is very applicable to the perſon of St. Peter in reſpect to the church. He was the apoſtle of the circumciſion, as Chriſt himſelf was. Peter was by this time become an apoſtle of conſiderable note. James, and John, and himſelf, were frequently join'd together, and all three had indulgences granted them, which were deny'd to the reſt of the twelve; tho' it appears that Chriſt look'd upon John as the higheſt in his favour. Peter, indeed, ſignaliz'd himſelf, in twice confeſſing Chriſt to be the Meſſiah, and calling him the Son of God, with an air of extraordinary boldneſs and intrepidity; and a particular favour Chriſt ſeems to have given him, in diſcovering himſelf to him the firſt after his reſurrection: Beſides which, he had the honour of being the firſt preacher to the Jews (including the Gentiles at the ſame time,) and acquaint them with the truth he himſelf profeſs'd; which was, that Jeſus was the Chriſt. 'Tis in this reſpect that he is here told he ſhould be a ſtone, by way of excellence; for all the Levites were called by the Hebrews ſtones of the temple, through a common notion of this phraſe: I mean, that he ſhould be ſuch a ſtone, as might properly be call'd, next the corner one, the firſt in building the church of Chriſt, which, when once built, ſhould never be deſtroy'd; and that he ſhould have a power of governing, which is ſignify'd by the keys, yet ſo as that other diſciples ſhould be look'd upon as foundation-ſtones; as they are call'd, after the erecting it, columns and pillars, that is, principal ſupporters of the church built, and principal ingreents in the building, and, conſequently, veſted with a power of governing, of binding and loſing, remitting and retaining, in as large a degree, as is here given to Peter. So that the application of this whole ſpeech to S. Peter's perſon, doth not either immediately import, or, by neceſſary, or probable conſequence, infer any œcumenical paſtoral power in him, much leſs in any other perſon by chain of ſucceſſion from him, over the other apoſtles, and their plantations, that is, the univerſal church of Chriſt; but only a reverence due to him, who was ſo excellent, and principal an inſtrument in the firſt erecting of the church, and, conſequently, in proportion, to his ſucceſſors in each church by him planted, ſo far as they ſhould walk in his ſteps. And as for any other privileges of any particular ſee, or biſhop, upon claim of ſucceſſion from St. Peter, they cannot appear, by this text, or any ſtreſs to be laid on it, to belong to any one or more, in excluſion to all others. (H.) The fathers expounded theſe words four ways. In the firſt place, by Petra, or ſtone, they underſtood St. Peter. In the ſecond, by Petra, they meant the apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors. In the third, Petra, was underſtood to ſignify the faith which Peter confeſſed, an interpretation generally better received, and more cloſe to the letter. Laſtly, in the fourth, which bears near analogy to the third, Petra was ſuppoſed to mean Chriſt himſelf. Now theſe four ways of conſtruction agree in the effect, tho' not in point of ſpeech. Suppoſe, for example, any one ſhould ſay, God hath cur'd me, or the doctor hath cur'd me, or rheubarb hath cur'd me, tho' theſe are different ways of expreſſion, yet, in the main, there is no variance; for the man, who ſpeaks thus, thinks on the ſame thing all the while, namely, that God cur'd him, as being the firſt efficient cauſe; the doctor, as the ſecond cauſe; and the rheubarb, as the inſtrument. Thus, when the fathers ſay, that the church is built upon Chriſt, upon Peter, or the Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors, upon faith, or the confeſſion of faith, they ſhew no diſagreement in fact; and, as Auſtin commonly ſays, Locutionum hæc fuit diverſitas, non ſententiarum: "They only differ'd in point of "expreſſion, their ſentiments were all the ſame." For Chriſt was the firſt efficient cauſe of the building of the church, from whom, as from an only fountain, ſprings all the virtue which governs, defends, or makes the church continue. Chriſt is the foundation which is laid, and no body can lay any other but that: Chriſt is the foundation, which, according to St. Thomas, per ſe habet ſoliditatem, "hath ſolidity in itſelf," like ſome rock, upon which a building is erected. Now Peter, as an Apoſtle, and the chief of the Apoſtles, is the ſecond efficient cauſe; for the Apoſtles, witneſs St. Paul, are fellow-labourers of Chriſt in the building the church: yet Peter is a foundation, as the other Apoſtles are, whoſe ſolidity is not from itſelf, but from another foundation laid underneath it. as ſtones may be ſaid who are laid on a ſolid rock underneath them. The Apoſtles are built upon Chriſt by faith, and charity. And Peter, the firſt who confeſs'd, in the preſence of all the Apoſtles, that Chriſt was the Son of the living God, obtain'd, from making this confeſſion, the name of Peter. "Hanc confeſſionem Chriſtus "Petram cum vocaſſet," inquit Baſilius, "Petrum nominat eum, "qui primo hanc confeſſus eſt, confeſſionis indicem appellationem "donans. Hæc enim vere eſt Petra pietatis, hæc ſalutis baſis, "hic fidei murus, hoc veritatis fundamentum, fundamentum "enim aliud nemo poteſt ponere præter illud quod poſitum eſt, "quod eſt Chriſtus Jeſus." After Chriſt had called this con"feſſion of his Petra or rock, he gave him the name of Peter, "who was the firſt that made this confeſſion, and in the appel"lation included the ſymbol of his confeſſion. For this is verily "the rock of piety, this the baſis of ſalvation, this the wall of "faith, this the foundation of truth; for no other foundation "can be put, but that which is already laid, which is Chriſt "Jeſus" (V.)

Will I build my church.] The Syriac renders Eccleſia, or church, by a word which ſignifies an aſſembly, compoſed of a certain kind of men. Very often this Eccleſia means no other but the people of Iſrael. 'Tis ſaid, Acts vii. 38. "This is he that was in the "church in the wilderneſs, with the Angel which ſpake to him "in the mount Sinai, and with our fathers, who receiv'd the "lively oracles to give unto us." Sometimes this people, I mean Iſrael, though confin'd in one region, ſhadow'd out the multitudes of chriſtians all over the world: Now why believers are ſaid to be built on Peter, is no way miſterious, ſince they are ſaid by Paul to be built upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and prophets, Jeſus Chriſt himſelf being the chief corner ſtone; neither is there any repugnancy in God's being called in ſome paſſages the rock, and Chriſt the ſole foundation, ſince 'tis no new thing to adapt ſuch ſimilitudes commonly to things that are different, and are to be ſignified after a different manner. For Paul, elſewhere, calls himſelf the Builder; which office Chriſt claims to himſelf: Neither is the word rock, or foundation, any otherwiſe given to the Apoſtles, than as it refers to ſalvation: In Chriſt's ſaying, I will build, is pointed out the time, wherein Peter, the firſt of the Apoſtles, profeſs'd his moſt firm faith to the Jews, Acts xi 14, and to the Gentiles, Acts xv. 7, (G.) Like as builders, firſt ſeek for ſtones, and, when they have found them, hew, poliſh, and uſe other methods with them to make them fit for the building; then join them together, that, from a due proportion of parts, the edifice may riſe, even ſo our Lord elects ſome perſons from the innumerable multitude of mankind, infuſes faith into their ſouls, and ſo purifies them throughout with the baptiſm of regeneration, that the Apoſtles call them new creatures. Of theſe conſiſt the church of God, Chriſt being the foundation ſtone. (V.)

Keys of the kingdom.] What is here meant by the key, is beſt diſcernable from Iſaiah, where God foretells Eliakim, the ſon of Hilkiah, "That he will call and cloath him with the robe of Shebna, "which was over the houſhold, and ſtrengthen him with his "girdle, and commit his government into his hand, and lay the "key of the houſe of David upon his ſhoulder, and he ſhall "open, and none ſhall ſhut, and ſhut and none ſhall open." By which is noted the beſtowing on him the power of adminiſtring and ruling the whole family, or houſe of the king, ſo as to entertain and admit into it, and in like manner, to exclude out of it, whom he would. Accordingly, Chriſt, accommodating it to the church, points out the power of governing in it. This primarily and independently belongs to Chriſt, the holy, and true, which hath the key of David, where a difference muſt be obſerved between the key of David, and the keys of the houſe of David. Keys are an enſign of authority, but this authority is not all of one kind; it is greater or leſs, it is principal, or independant, inferior or derivative, and the keys are the emblems of theſe ſeveral kinds. David we know, was a king, and independant from any on earth, and conſequently, the key of David notes an independant, ſupreme authority, and that applied to the church, belongs only to Chriſt, in that prophetic expreſſion. Whereas the keys of the houſe of David mean an inferior power, that of a ſteward in David's family, which, being perfectly ſubordinate to him, hath yet the adminiſtration of the affairs of his family entruſted to him. Now Chriſt is the original and prime fountain of all power over the whole church, which is the ſpiritual kingdom of David, to whom was given by the Father all power in heaven and earth, particularly that of loſing or remitting ſin on earth; and this power Chriſt communicates here to his Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſors the biſhops in the church, as to many ſtewards. Hence, ſays Chryſoſtom, “ the biſhops are thoſe faith- “ ful ſervants in the parable, whom the Lord ſets over his houſe- “ hold;” that is, literally, ſtewards. This agrees perfectly with the promiſe of Chriſt, of the Apoſtles ſitting on twelve thrones, where the power of governing and judging in the church, anſwerable to that of the Phylarchæ, or chief of the tribes, which was next to the regal authority among the Jews, is directly that of the Oeconumans, or ruler of the king's houſhold, which is here, as in Iſaiah, noted by the keys. This power, being promiſed here by Chriſt to be conferred on Peter, a ſingle perſon; ſo that whatever he bound or looſed, was bound or looſed by the affirmation of Chriſt, is, by force of the words (before the keys were given) whatſoever ye ſhall bind, and ye ſhall looſe, actually, and equally conferr'd on every one of the Apoſtles, and, accordingly, the fiery tongues deſcended and ſat upon every one of them. Thus, when Cephas, in reſpect of his authority, is called Petros, a ſtone, 'tis apparent that all, and every one of the Apoſtles, have the ſame title beſtowed upon them, as it is ſaid Rev. xxi. 14. where the wall of the City had twelve foundations, and upon them twelve names of the twelve Apoſtles; every one of whom, in reſpect of this power and dignity in the church, is particularly compared to a precious ſtone. And when the wall of that city, the church, is exactly meaſured, and found to be 144 cubits, that is, twelve times twelve, 'tis clear, that an equal portion, or province, is aſſigned to each of them. To this purpoſe is that of Theophilact: “ Tho' “ it was ſaid to Peter alone, I will give unto thee the keys; yet they “ were given to all the Apoſtles.” And Cyprian, in his 7th epiſtle, ſays: “ Our Lord, providing for the honour of the bi- “ ſhop, and the diſpoſition of his church, ſpeaks in the Goſpel, and “ ſays to Peter; I ſay unto thee, that thou art Peter, and I will give “ thee the keys; and what thou ſhalt bind, &c. From thence, by “ viciſſitudes of times, and ſucceſſions, the ordination of biſhops, “ and the diſpoſition of the church doth flow; ſo that the church “ is built on biſhops, and every act of the church is govern'd by “ them.” So Irenæus, l. 5. 20. “ The Apoſtles delivered the “ churches to the biſhops.” So Tertullian, de præſeri, c. 32. “ As the church of Smyrna had Polycarp placed biſhop there by “ John, ſo the other churches are able to ſhew thoſe whom they “ have conſtituted biſhops by the Apoſtles, the children, as it were, “ of the Apoſtles, who are propagated by them.” So St. Athanaſius, in his epiſtle to Dracontius, ſays, in ſpeaking of the office of a biſhop, that it is one of the things, “ which Chriſt hath formed “ by his Apoſtles.” So Baſil the Great expreſſes himſelf; “ Epiſ- “ copacy is the apoſtolical precedence or authority over others.” So St. Ambroſe: “ All biſhops (for that is the meaning of the “ word ſacerdotes, ſuch as Peter was at this time) received in St. “ Peter the keys of the kingdom of heaven.” So Theophilact: “ They who, according to St. Peter, are vouchſafed the honour or “ grace of epiſcopacy, have power to bind, and looſe.” And conſonantly to this, all the ancient writers generally ſpeak; even St. Jerome himſelf, in Pſal. xlv. “ Becauſe the Apoſtles have departed “ from the world, you have, in their room, their ſons the bi- “ ſhops.” (H.) The promiſe of giving theſe keys of the kingdom of heaven, was not made directly in this place; but he promiſed to give them to him after his reſurrection, when he addreſs'd himſelf to his diſciples, John xx. 21. ſaying. Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt; whoſeſoever ſins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſeſoever ſins ye retain, they are retained. By the keys, is meant the power of preaching the Goſpel, adminiſtring the ſacraments, and exerciſing eccleſiaſtical diſcipline, in ſpecial caſes. Chriſt makes uſe of this metaphorical way of ſpeaking, to let the governors of the church underſtand, that they are the diſpenſers of the myſteries of God, being his faithful ſervants, whom he hath conſtituted and ſet over his family. Bernard, in his firſt book De conſideratione to Eugenius, ſpeaks to this effect: “ Your authority “ conſiſts in crimes, not in poſſeſſions, becauſe 'tis to thoſe, and “ not theſe, that you have received the keys of the kingdom of “ heaven, in order to exclude prevaricators, and not poſſeſſors: “ That you may know, according to Matthew ix. that the ſon “ of man hath power in earth to forgive ſins. Pray, which has “ the greater dignity and authority in it, to forgive ſins, or to di- “ vide an inheritance? But there is no compariſon. Thoſe low “ and groveling things have their judges, the kings and princes “ of the earth: Why do you invade another's territories? Why “ do you thruſt your ſickle into another perſon's harveſt? Not “ becauſe you are unworthy your ſelves, but becauſe it ill becomes “ you to inſiſt for ſuch things, when you are already in poſſeſſion “ of better. Hence Chriſt, Luke xii. 14. where he obſerved “ ſome perſons diſputing about an inheritance, and wanting him “ to determine it, ſays, Who made me a judge, or divider over “ you?” Thus Prudentius addreſſes himſelf to Herod:

Hoſtis Herodes impie
Chriſtum venire quid times?
Non eripit mortalia,
Qui regna dat cæleſtia.

Why, Herod, all this doubt and fear
Of Chriſt's appearance here below?
Who comes not earthly things to ſhare,
Hut heavenly gifts, and crowns beſtow. (V. B.)

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. From that time forth began Jeſus to ſhew unto his diſciples, how that he muſt go unto Jeruſalem, and ſuffer many things of the elders, and chief prieſts, and ſcribes, and be killed, and be raiſed again the third day. Then Peter took him, and began to rebuke him, ſaying, Be it far from thee, Lord: this ſhall not be unto thee. But he turned, and ſaid unto Peter, Get thee behind me, Satan, thou art an offence unto me: for thou favoureſt not the things that be of God, but thoſe that be of men. Then ſaid Jeſus unto his diſciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs, and follow me. For whoſoever will ſave his life, ſhall loſe it: and whoſoever will loſe his life for my ſake, ſhall find it. For what is a man profited, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul? For the Son of man ſhall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he ſhall reward every man according to his works. Verily I ſay unto you, There be ſome ſtanding here, which ſhall not taſte of death, till they ſee the Son of man coming in his kingdom.

Get thee behind me, Satan.] It appears, that even in Chriſt's time this word was called Snriſti. According to the Hebrew notion of it, it ſignifies an enemy. And Chriſt here acquaints Peter, that, through a pretext of love, he was yet in fact his enemy; aſſigning this reaſon, becauſe he ſavoured not the things that were of God, but thoſe that were of men; for the carnal mind was enmity againſt God, Rom. viii. 7. (G.) Satan here ſignifies, according to the uſe of the Hebrew phraſe 2 Sam. xix. 22. an adverſary, where David, rejecting the counſel of Abiſhai, ſays, Why art thou to me this day in Satanam, for an adverſary? That is, why doſt thou give me this evil pernicious counſel, and ſo ſupply the true enemy's, or even the devil's place to me? (H.) 'Tis a proverbial ſaying among the Hebrews, meaning to give bad and pernicious counſel; for Satan, in Hebrew, ſignifies an adverſary. (V.)

Deny himſelf.] Denying himſelf, is renouncing all intereſts, relations, and engagements of his own, when they come in ballance, or competition with Chriſt. Thus ſays Porphyry of the Gymnoſophiſts among the Indians, that there were two ſorts of men, the Divines, by families, and the Samamei, who were choſen, and who, having once taken the ſtole upon them, never thought of any return to their wives, children, or themſelves again. (H.)

Coming in his kingdom.] See Mark ix. 1. Which words clearly point, if I am not miſtaken, to the reſurrection, aſcenſion into heaven, the coming of the Holy Ghoſt, and the propagation of the Goſpel by ſigns and miracles; which were to be certain teſtimonies of Chriſt's then reigning. Now the kingdom of the Meſſiah is frequently call'd the kingdom of God, both by the Hebrew doctors and chriſtian writers. (G.) The nearneſs of this to the ſtory of Chriſt's transfiguration, makes it probable to many, that this coming of Chriſt is that transfiguration of his: But that cannot be, becauſe the 27th verſe, of the ſon of man's coming in his glory with his angels to reward, &c. (to which this verſe clearly connects) cannot be apply'd to that; and there is another place, John xxi. 23. which may be of ſervice to the right underſtanding of this, which ſpeaks of a real coming, and one principal perſon, agreeable to what is here ſaid of ſome ſtanding here, who ſhould not die, till that coming of his. Which certainly was fulfill'd in John's ſeeing the Panolethria, or famous deſtruction of the Jews, which was to happen in that generation, that is, in the life-time of ſome there preſent, and is call'd the kingdom of God, and the coming of Chriſt, and conſequently, the ſon of man's coming in his kingdom, that is, his coming in the exerciſe of his real office, to execute vengeance on his enemies, and ſeparate from them the true believers. Now, becauſe the way, for God to be preſent in one place, more than another, is, by the preſence or ſatellitium of his angels, and becauſe their appearing is called ſhechina, or glory, and becauſe again, theſe angels are his officers, and employ'd in his ſervice to puniſh; therefore, this coming of his is ſaid to be in the glory of his father, with his holy angels, as it is ſaid Jude 14. The Lord cometh with his holy myriads, that is, with his hoſts of angels, to execute, &c. which, it ſeems, was an ancient form of ſpeech there cited from the book of Enoch, by God's coming with his angels to ſignify his taking vengeance on ſinners. (H.)

CHAP. XVII.

The transfiguration of Chriſt. Elias. John the Baptiſt. The infidelity of the Apoſtles. The force of faith. Chriſt foretells his own Paſſion. Pays tribute.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. AND after ſix days, Jeſus taketh Peter, James, and John his brother, and bringeth them up into an high mountain apart, And was transfigured before them, and his face did ſhine as the ſun, and his raiment was white as the light. And behold, there appeared unto them Moſes and Elias talking with him. Then anſwered Peter, and ſaid unto Jeſus, Lord, it is good for us to be here: if thou wilt, let us make here three tabernacles; one for thee, and one for Moſes, and one for Elias. While he yet ſpake, behold a bright cloud overſhadowed them: and behold, a voice out of the cloud, which ſaid, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed: hear ye him. And when the diſciples heard it, they fell on their face, and were ſore afraid. And Jeſus came and touched them, and ſaid, Ariſe, and be not afraid. And when they had lift up their eyes, they ſaw no man ſave Jeſus only. And as they came down from the mountain, Jeſus charged them, ſaying, Tell the viſion to no man, until the Son of man be riſen again from the dead.

Peter, James, and John.] Chriſt took theſe along with him, to the end ſo great an event might have the teſtimony, not only of two, but of three. And as the future glory of Chriſt had three heavenly, and three earthly witneſſes; ſo this famous event had three heavenly witneſſes, God the Father, Moſes, and Elias; and three earthly, Peter, James, and John; Peter, the principal of the apoſtolic company; James, who was to be the firſt of the Apoſtles to bear witneſs with his blood; and John, who was to ſurvive all the Apoſtles, and tranſmit a living teſtimony to the next age. (G.)

An high mountain.] There runs a very ancient tradition in the church, that, by this high mountain is meant Tabor, which is call'd ſo in the Chaldee paraphraſe of Jonathan. This mountain is call'd Itabyrius by Joſephus, and the Greek commentators. Jerome, in his epiſtle to Marcella, names it Tabrius: "Mount Tabor, ſays the ſame Jerome, "ſtands in the plains of Galilee, being round, and "high, and every way of an exact equality." Now becauſe this mountain faces the weſt, 'tis put for the weſt itſelf, Pſalm lxxxviii. as Hermon is for the eaſt. In 2 Pet. i. 18. it is called the Holy mount, and Atabyrius by Polybius. Maſius tells us, that it is two hours journey from Nazareth: And others, that it is called the mountain of Snow. Joſephus ſays, it is thirty furlongs high, and that on the ſummit is a plain of ſix and twenty furlongs; tho' Polybius will allow it no more in height than fifteen. Poſſibly theſe two hiſtorians had different parts of the mountain in view; for mountains of magnitude have more ways commonly than one to aſcend them. We learn from Geminus, in his elements of Aſtronomy, that the perpendicular height of this mountain, is fourteen furlongs: So that we need not wonder at Joſephus's aſſigning it thirty furlongs, if the windings and turnings, that lead up to the top, be conſider'd Beſides, John of Damaſcus, in his homily concerning the transfiguration, ſhews us ſufficiently that Tabor is a mountain of uncommon altitude. (V.)

Moſes and Elias talking with him.] One was the promulgator of the law, the other the moſt famous amongſt the prophets, whom Chriſt expreſs'd during the forty days which he faſted: That they appear'd in their real bodies, for a teſtimony of the reſurrection both of Chriſt and of us, is the more ſo to be believed, as it is poſſible to think that God preſerved theſe bodies purely for this purpoſe. For the body of Elias was taken up into heaven, and that of Moſes was not found, but guarded, that the devil might not get poſſeſſion of it. (G.)

Tell the viſion to no man.] To form a juſt notion of the reaſon, why Chriſt ſo often enjoin'd his diſciples and others to conceal his miracles, and his being the Meſſiah, we muſt conſider the ſeveral paſſages, where this command of our Saviour occurs. The firſt place, wherein we find it mentioned, is to the leper, whom he cur'd; See thou tell no body, Matt. viii. 4. Then, chap. ix. 30. to the blind, whom he reſtored to ſight; He charged them, ſaying, See ye tell no man. As yet, the contexts ſeem to aſſign no reaſon for this concealing, unleſs it be allow'd in this latter, when they not paying obedience to his command, but his fame diffuſing itſelf far and near, he cur'd the dæmoniacks who came to him; which, when the Phariſees heard, they ſay, he caſts out devils by the prince of devils. For 'tis poſſible that our Saviour, foreſeeing the perverſeneſs and blaſphemy of the Phariſees, and that they would proceed to the crucifying of him, inſtead of being convinced by his miracles, did, in mercy to them, and to leave them the excuſe of ignorance, forbid the divulging them, leſt they ſhould come to the ears of thoſe, who would make ſo bad an uſe of them. In chap. xii. 16. 'tis ſaid, That he charged them, that they ſhould not make him known. Whom did he charge? The words, in Mark iii. 12. are ſet immediately upon the mention of the devil's falling down to him, and ſaying, Thou art the Son of God. But as this is but a paſſage, which comes in incidentally, upon the mention of his caſting out the devils, among the other cures, which he wrought on many, 'tis not neceſſary that the word many muſt belong to the devils, immediately precedent, but may belong to the word many, or multitude, who were cur'd by him: Now if it appertains to the devils, the men, who were poſſeſs'd with them, muſt be included in the notion, or elſe how could they fall down before him? And ſo 'tis poſitively ſaid, that he charged them, that is, either the many multitudes, or all they, who were cured by him. In the ſame chapter, we find two circumſtances, which ſeem to give ſome light to the matter in hand, concerning the reaſon of his charge to be concealed. The firſt is this: Upon his curing the wither'd hand on the ſabbath-day, the Phariſees went, and conſulted againſt him, how they might kill him, or, what's the ſame, how they might bring a capital charge againſt him. Now, it ſeems, when Jeſus knew it, he withdrew, not through any fear of death, as Origen alledges againſt Celſus; but becauſe he would not die, till the convenient ſeaſon was come of dying, more for man's advantage, than he had hitherto liv'd. It follows, therefore, that as great multitudes followed him, ſo he healed them all; and, conſequently, did not withdraw himſelf ſo as to omit or neglect doing any good, but purely to avoid, for the preſent, any further oppoſition and diſputation, nay, death itſelf, which viſibly ſeem'd to threaten him; unleſs, at the inſtant of ſuch danger, he had withdrawn himſelf from it by miracle, or made uſe of his omnipotence to preſerve himſelf; which he would not do, being come not to reſiſt, but to lay down his life, which, as the appointed ſeaſon was not yet arriv'd, he deferr'd to put in execution. And upon this it follows diſtinctly; And he charged them that they ſhould not make him known; which words point out the reaſon of his prohibition, viz. his deſire to decline, and fairly avoid (probably the diſpute with the perverſe and treacherous Phariſees) the death which they were providing for him. The ſecond circumſtance is drawn from the prophecy of Iſaiah, which is cited on the back of theſe words, That it might be fulfilled, which was ſpoken by Iſaiah the prophet. Now the ſum of this prophecy is this: That when the Meſſiah came, he ſhould, in the diſcharge of his office, behave with extraordinary quietneſs and moderation; that he ſhould never ſet himſelf out magnificently, which is the caſe of other princes, againſt all oppoſers; That he ſhould never make uſe of ſecular force to defend himſelf, but demean himſelf in obedience to the precepts of that Goſpel, which he came to proclaim; treating ſinners, and the infirm, with meekneſs, and mercy; and never giving over, till he had cauſed his Goſpel to take ſuch deep root on earth, as never to be tear'd up again; extending it to the Gentiles, and making them to believe on, and confide in his name. Now part of this prophecy, which regards his preaching, and making known the will of God to as many as were likely to receive advantage from it, his not reſiſting, or contending with others; his meekneſs, and not conteſting with the Phariſees, may paſs for one part of the prohibition, which, being added to the former circumſtance, makes up the entire reaſon of his doing ſo, namely, that he would not have his miracles divulged, becauſe, when they were ſo, the Phariſees ſtill came, diſturbed and oppoſed him, and would, probably, have proceeded to cut him off, before he had done what he was ſent for, that is, preached the Goſpel to all the Jews, and alſo made it known to the Gentiles. But, beſides theſe, there is another paſſage, of great ſervice to this purpoſe, and that is, Chriſt's asking his diſciples, Luke ix. 20. what opinion the world entertained of him, and, then, what were their own ſentiments concerning him; upon which Peter anſwers, that he was the Chriſt of God; whereupon it immediately follows, that he ſtrictly charged them, and commanded them, to tell no man that thing. Now why he gave, at this time, ſo ſtrict a command not to promulgate this, when his miracles, and all that he did and taught, had hitherto tended to this very end; the reaſon was certainly this, leſt the world ſhould think, on his diſciples proclaiming his actions abroad, that it was an artifice contrived between them, and leſt thoſe ſhould object againſt this as a fraud, whom no miracles could convince. And beſides, Chriſt was ſenſible that he was to be rejected, and to ſuffer death, and, conſequently, not to be believed on by the chief of the Jews. And to the proclaiming of his divinity, till they had that great event of his reſurrection to add to his own teſtimony, was not yet ſo ſeaſonable. This was the cauſe of the like ſpeech, Mark ix. 30. where, paſſing through Galilee, where he had preach'd and done miracles formerly with great freedom, he was not pleaſed that any man ſhould know it; for, as it follows, ver. 31. he ſaid to his diſciples, The ſon of man is delivered into the hands of men. Which very circumſtance he acquaints the Phariſees themſelves with; for, when they importune him for a ſign to prove him the Meſſiah, he tells them they ſhall have no other ſign but that of the prophet Jonah, which, referring clearly to that of his riſing from the grave the third day, ſignifies that he would make uſe of no farther methods to convince them, till his divine power, by his reſurrection from the dead, and the completion of the types, and prophecies in him, ſhould be convincingly made known to them. This I take to be the reaſon why he then prohibited them to tell abroad that he was the Meſſiah, becauſe, having been thus long rejected by the rulers, and the prophecies of his dying, containing a prediction, that they ſhould ſtill reject, and put him to death, it was abſolutely neceſſary, that the moſt clear teſtimonies of his being the Meſſiah, of which the Apoſtles had many, particularly, Peter, James, and John, received that of the voice from heaven, at the transfiguration, ſhould be reſerved, and not publiſhed, till after his death, and reſurrection, that ſo his riſing from the dead, being added to his former miracles, and to his infinite meekneſs and charity, demonſtrated by his death, might be able to convince the moſt pertinacious, obdurate heart, which would not now, having ſo often reſiſted, be perſuaded by his miracles, or preaching, much leſs by the teſtimony of his own diſciples, but might, probably, be wrought upon afterwards by the evidence of his reſurrrection. And thus, in the parable, Luke, chap. xix. the king takes poſſeſſion of his kingdom, that is, Chriſt mounts up to heaven, before he proceeds to execution againſt his enemies, that would not have him reign over them. Now, according to this, it is, that, at the transfiguration, when the three Apoſtles, Peter, James, and John, had received a clear teſtimony, by a voice from heaven, This is my beloved, &c. he commands them to tell it no man, till the ſon of man be riſen from the dead; acquainting them, at the ſame time, that it was propheſied of him, that he muſt ſuffer. In which paſſage, the three diſciples being taken up alone into the mountain with him, and commanded to tell it no man, the phraſe no man will moſt probably be interpreted in the greateſt latitude, no, not to the reſt of the diſciples: And the reaſon of this ſtrict prohibition will be this, that the deſign'd uſe of this viſion, being the working of faith in the obdurate, and the ſeaſon of making that uſe of it, being not yet come, till after the reſurrection, it was needleſs to be reveal'd to the whole number of the twelve, who believed already, and, conſequently, had no neceſſity to know it, being not permitted to preach it to others, had they been acquainted therewith. Thus we have given the reader the ſeveral paſſages, where this prohibition of Chriſt occurs, to reveal his actions. (G. H.)

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13. And his diſciples asked him, ſaying, Why then ſay the Scribes, that Elias muſt firſt come? And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Elias truly ſhall firſt come, and reſtore all things: But I ſay unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatſoever they liſted: likewiſe ſhall alſo the Son of man ſuffer of them. Then the diſciples underſtood that he ſpake unto them of John the Baptiſt.

Elias muſt firſt come.] The reaſon of this ſpeech of the Apoſtles is to be traced only from their having ſeen Elias, and his departing again out of their ſight. They ſay, according to the opinion of the more learned Jews, that he muſt come, and remain among them, reſtore all things, inſtruct the people, and diſcover the Meſſiah. We may collect, by this queſtion of theirs, what was the principal matter of the diſcourſe between Chriſt, Moſes, and Elias; for 'tis no way poſſible, that this queſtion, incidentally mention'd, ver. 9. ſhould refer to Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead, ſince the Scribes were not of opinion, nor did believe, that the Meſſiah ſhould either die, or riſe again, nor, conſequently, that Elias's appearance ſhould happen before that. Neither this Goſpel, nor that of St. Mark, indeed, take notice what was the prime ſubject of their diſcourſe; only 'tis ſaid, that the diſciples asked him, ſaying, Why then ſay the Scribes, that Elias muſt firſt come? What theſe Scribes were, has been ſufficiently mentioned already. They were verſed in all the doctrines of the Old Teſtaments, and in the prophets, among whom, Mal. iv. 5. they found, that Elias was to come before a ſet time, that is, before the great and dreadful day of the Lord. This being, then, what the Scribes aſſerted, and the queſtion of the diſciples, Why then do they ſay, that Elias muſt firſt come? being an objection againſt what they had heard diſcourſed of in the mount, it neceſſarily follows, that the diſcourſe was concerning the approach of that great and dreadful day of the Lord. Now what is meant, by this great and dreadful day of the Lord, is evident from the three firſt verſes of that chapter: Behold, the day cometh, that ſhall burn, as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, ſhall be as ſtubble, and the day that cometh ſhall burn them up, that it ſhall leave them neither root, nor branch: But unto you that fear my name, ſhall the ſun of righteouſneſs ariſe, with healing in his wings, and ye ſhall go forth, and grow as calves of the ſtall. And ye ſhall tread down the wicked; for they ſhall be as aſhes under the ſoles of your feet, in the day that I ſhall do this, ſaith the Lord of hoſts. What was the ultimate completion of this prophecy, is ſufficiently evident, namely, the rooting out of the wicked, obſtinate Jews, ver. 1. and the delivery, and preſervation of all the humble, and faithful penitents, out of that deſtruction, ver. 2. together with the advantages, that ſhould come to the faithful by that means, as from a victory over enemies, and perſecutors, ver. 3. Thus in Joel: The fire devoureth before, and the flame conſumeth behind; the land, from a garden of Eden, becomes a deſolate wilderneſs, yea, and nothing ſhall eſcape them. And then, Fear not, O land, be glad, and rejoice, for the Lord will do great things; be not afraid, be glad, ye children of Sion, ye ſhall eat in plenty, and be ſatisfied, and praiſe the name of the Lord, that hath dealt wondrouſly with you, and my people ſhall never be aſhamed. And it ſhall come to paſs, that whoſoever calls upon the name of the Lord, ſhall be delivered: for in mount Sion, and in Jeruſalem, ſhall be deliverance, as the Lord hath ſaid, and in the remnant whom the Lord ſhall call. Theſe two, then, being the parts of that great and dreadful day, which pointed out the deſtruction of the unbelieving Jews, who ſtood out, perſecuted, and crucified Chriſt; and the preſervation of the remnant, meaning the perſevering believers; and John Baptiſt, being the prophet, ſent into the wilderneſs, like Elias, to foretell this deſtruction, and to preach repentance for the averting it; there is little reaſon to doubt, but that the prophecy of Malachi was exactly thus fulfilled, and that, conſequently, this was the matter of the diſcourſe of Elias, and Moſes with Chriſt, tho' couch'd in a viſion, in terms ſomewhat dark, and obſcure: Upon which the diſciples, knowing this to be the day ſpoken of by Malachi, but not knowing that Elias was yet come, put this queſtion to Chriſt, Why then do the Scribes ſay, that Elias muſt firſt come? meaning by firſt, before this great and dreadful day of the Lord, which they now heard was approaching, and had nothing to ſay againſt it, but the known ſcripture-prediction, that Elias was firſt to come. This agrees with what St. Luke relates of it, the only one of the four Evangeliſts that mentions any thing of this diſcourſe of Elias and Moſes with Chriſt; his words being theſe, They ſpake of his deceaſe, which he ſhould accompliſh at Jeruſalem. Now, as to this diſcourſe, Elias and Moſes were very fit perſons to be introduced in a viſion, to deliver it, becauſe Elias called down fire from heaven upon the enemies of God, and ſo might very juſtly repreſent the deſtruction of enemies; and Moſes, ſetting aſide the mention of the deſtruction, wrought on Pharaoh and the Egyptians, ſet the Iſraelites at liberty from the perſecution and ſlavery, which they ſuſtain'd in that country, and ſo might alſo very juſtly repreſent the deliverance, and preſervation of patient, and perſevering believers. (G. H.)

Reſtore all things.] This refers to John the Baptiſt, and is no more than that he is to come and reſtore all things. What is ſaid, by the prophet Malachi, of the great and terrible day, before which Elias was to come, and what follows afterwards, leſt I come, and ſmite the earth with a curſe, ſhould not remove us from putting this interpretation on the prediction of this prophet. For it can no way refer to the common judgment concerning the world, but chiefly and certainly regards thoſe puniſhments, and calamities, which waited for the obſtinate and unrelenting Jews, which God required of them by the hand of Titus (G.) The word, in this place, render'd to reſtore, is, by Phavorinus and Heſychus, tranſlated to finiſh, or perfect. If this be admitted, then, according to this conſtruction of the word, the meaning of this place will be, he ſhall finiſh, or perform, eſtabliſh, or ſettle, all things; he ſhall not only perform all that was propheſied of Elias, at his coming, but alſo cloſe up the firſt ſtate of the world, viz. that of the Moſaic œconomy, and like an harbinger, enter upon the ſecond, viz. that of the Meſſiah. 'Tis in this ſignification, that it is ſaid, the law and the prophets were until John; ſhewing, by this, that he was the concluſion and cloſing up of that ſtate, which was to have been the office of Elias, under whoſe name John was prefigured. The prophecy of Malachi ſignifying a ſpiritual reſtoring, a bringing to repentance, or preaching the doctrine of repentance to the Jews, they underſtood it in a more carnal ſenſe, of reſtoring them to their ſplendid ſtate again, which they enjoy'd before their captivity, and late conqueſt of the Romans over them. Yet our Saviour, acknowledging this prophecy, puts the right interpretation on it, and diſcovers how faithfully it was accompliſhed in John the Baptiſt. (H.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. And when they were come to the multitude, there came to him a certain man, kneeling down to him, and ſaying, Lord, have mercy on my ſon, for he is lunatick, and ſore vexed: for oft-times he falleth into the fire, and oft into the water. And I brought him to thy diſciples, and they could not cure him. Then Jeſus anſwered, and ſaid, O faithleſs and perverſe generation, how long ſhall I be with you? how long ſhall I ſuffer you? bring him hither to me. And Jeſus rebuked the devil, and he departed out of him: and the child was cured from that very hour. Then came the diſciples to Jeſus apart, and ſaid, Why could not we caſt him out? And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Becauſe of your unbelief: for verily I ſay unto you, If ye have faith as a grain of muſtard-ſeed, ye ſhall ſay unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it ſhall remove; and nothing ſhall be impoſſible unto you. Howbeit this kind goeth not out, but by prayer and faſting.

Lunatick.] It appears from the 18th verſe below, that a devil was the cauſe of this diſeaſe: Now devils commonly make uſe of the knowledge they poſſeſs, in joining natural cauſes to their own influence. So that the devil, here mentioned, uſually laid hold of thoſe opportunities, when he found the brain of the perſon, more than ordinary, infirm and weak, which generally happens in intervals. (G.) The Greek word, in this paſſage, exactly ſquares with the Engliſh word lunatick; yet there has ariſen a miſtake from giving it that tranſlation: for lunacy, and lunatick, are commonly taken in Engliſh to ſignify a mad-man, and nothing elſe, I mean, that ſpecies of madneſs which comes upon men, who have any intervals, at a certain time, about the full of the moon. But, by what is ſaid here of falling into the fire, and water, which diſcover the effects of this diſeaſe, 'tis evident, that it was no madneſs which affected the man's ſon here, but a plain epilepſis, or falling ſickneſs; And this is farther evinced by the relation which St. Luke, chap. ix. 39. gives us of the ſame ſtory, where it is ſaid, that "the ſpi-"rit taketh him, and he ſuddenly crieth out, and it teareth him, "that he foameth again, and bruiſing him, hardly departeth from "him." All which are clear ſymptoms of an epilepſy. Now the reaſon of this malady's being expreſs'd by the word lunatick, is, becauſe this diſtemper being in the head, as well as madneſs, the moon has the ſame influence upon one as well as the other. And the moon, indeed, generally affects thoſe by its changes, who are ſubject to this diſeaſe, and throws them into fits of it. Now becauſe 'tis ſaid, in the 18th verſe below, that Chriſt rebuked him, and the devil went out of him, which ſhews this perſon to be poſſeſſed with a devil; and in Luke ix. 39. that the ſpirit taketh him; and 42. that the devil threw him down, and tare him; and Jeſus rebuked the unclean ſpirit; the clear meaning of all this, is: That as it was uſual, in thoſe times, for the devil to have authority over the bodies of men, and, conſequently, to exerciſe it, in bringing diſeaſes upon them, ſo 'twas common for the devil here, that poſſeſs'd this man's ſon, to throw him into frequent fits of the Epilepſy, of which there was no other method of curing him, but by caſting out the devil. This will hold good with regard to all dæmoniacks, who appear to be brought into ſome diſeaſe or other by the devil, that inhabits within them. And thus, when men are deliver'd up, by the cenſures of the Apoſtles, unto Satan, 'tis ſaid to be to the deſtruction of the fleſh, that is, to the bringing ſome violent and ſad diſeaſe upon them. (H.)

This kind goeth not out but by prayer, and faſting.] Meaning, as Chryſoſtom and St. Thomas excellently expound this place, all kinds of devils, who, by reaſon of their different ways of tempting, and vexing thoſe whom they poſſeſs, have different names aſſign'd them; one being call'd the unclean ſpirit, or the ſpirit of fornication; another, the ſpirit of pride; another, the ſpirit of dizzineſs; another, the father of lies? another, a man-ſlayer from the beginning; another, a dumb devil, and the like. But, probably, you will ſay, that David delivered Saul of a bad ſpirit, by the force and charms of muſick: For the king's phyſicians, who ſtood near his perſon, without troubling themſelves much about the kind, or matter of the ſong, demanded only, that a perſon might be fetch'd, who knew how to play on the harp, to ſooth and refreſh by his art the tormented king. How comes it, then, that an empty ſound ſhall be able to expel a devil, which, as Chriſt himſelf aſſures us, cannot be removed, but by prayer and faſting? I anſwer, that muſick, which is a corporeal thing, has no influence, of itſelf, upon a devil, which is a ſpirit; yet, that it has ſome power, by means of the accident, becauſe, when thoſe affections are removed, by which the devil inſinuates himſelf into our minds, or, when that melancholly, or madneſs is baniſhed, by which the enemy of our peace works our deſtruction; in theſe caſes, the evil ſpirit is expelled at the ſame time .Conſonant hereto, are thoſe famous words of Paul, Epheſ. iv. 26, 27. Let not the ſun go down upon your wrath: Neither give place to the devil. Q. d. Give no room to the devil. From which 'tis evident, that inordinate affections open an entrance to the devil, eſpecially if theſe affections are vehement, ſuch as anger is, which is call'd a tranſient madneſs. So that the devil is expelled by thoſe means, which have influence to cool or moderate theſe affections. Let us explain this by an example drawn from the rays of the ſun; theſe can neither be divided by a ſword, nor can any blaſt extinguiſh them; neither can all, we are able to do, ſeparate them; ſo that it may be truly ſaid, that we are unable to do any thing againſt them; yet, by putting the ſhutters of our chamber window cloſe together, we ſhall exclude theſe rays. Thus, with reſpect to muſick, tho' it hath no power directly over a devil, yet, by ſhutting up the entrance, whereby he gains admittance to the ſoul, it expels him. In ſhort, muſick baniſhes an evil ſpirit by the ſame method, which it takes to charm a good one. Now it draws a good ſpirit to it, in endeavouring to pacify a ſoul in diſtraction, and fill it with rapture and holy pleaſure, baniſhing from it every thing that may reſiſt the influence of the Holy Spirit, or deny its inſpirations. Thus Eliſha, 2 Kings, chap. iii. ordered a minſtrel to be call'd, that, as he play'd, the hand of the Lord might come upon him. Thus Matthew calls him a lunatick, who was poſſeſs'd with a devil, becauſe the diſeaſe he labour'd with augmented as the moon encreaſed, when the devil was ſure to torment him. So that had a phyſician remov'd that diſeaſe, the ſame pains would have done to have remov'd the devil out of the ſick perſon; conſequently, by the ſame way of reaſoning, the muſician, by ſoothing the mind of Saul with his art, was able to deliver him from the devil, to whom, by his madneſs, he had given ſo much room. But the ſcriptures ſufficiently inform us, that God gave to David an extraordinary knowledge in muſick; for we not only have therein thoſe ſacred Pſalms, which he compoſed, which are ſung at this day over the whole Chriſtian world, but he is alſo commended more than any other muſicians; and Amos vi. 5. in the Hebrew text, acquaints us, that he invented and made ſeveral inſtruments of muſick. (V.)

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. And while they abode in Galilee, Jeſus ſaid unto them, The Son of man ſhall be betrayed into the hands of men: And they ſhall kill him, and the third day he ſhall be raiſed again: and they were exceeding ſorry. And when they were come to Capernaum, they that received tribute-money, came to Peter, and ſaid, Doth not your maſter pay tribute? He ſaith, Yes. And when he was come into the houſe, Jeſus prevented him, ſaying, What thinkeſt thou, Simon? of whom do the kings of the earth take cuſtom or tribute? of their own children, or of ſtrangers? Peter ſaith unto him, Of ſtrangers. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Then are the children free. Notwithſtanding, leſt we ſhould offend them, go thou to the ſea, and caſt an hook, and take up the fiſh that firſt cometh up: and when thou haſt opened his mouth, thou ſhalt find a piece of money: that take, and give unto them for me and thee.

Tribute-money.] The perſons who collected this money, were not the publicans of the Romans, but men, veſted with a power from the prieſts to demand this tribute or didrachm, for the ſervice of the temple, which was ſo order'd by the law of Moſes. This law, tho' it was temporary, was, as the exigence of the times requir'd, put in force; tho', as often as the tenths, and other obventions, were ſufficient, there was no need of exacting this tribute. But the revenues of the Levites conſiderably decreaſing after the revolt of the ten tribes, this didrachm began again to be demanded. (G.) The didrachm ſignifies two drachms. The word drachme is a Greek word, being, according to Julius Pollux, firſt called dragme, which means, an handful, becauſe it contain'd ſo many pieces of braſs money, as would make an handful, namely, ſix. This word came not only from the Greeks to the Romans, but alſo to the Jews, after the time of the Selencidæ. Accordingly, we find in Ezra ii. by drachminim, the Greek word, with a little variation, which the Septuagint render drachme, and we, drachms. Now, according to Heſychins, and Phavorinus, four Attic drachms make one ſhekel, or ſtater; and ſo, ver. 27. it appears, that one ſtater was two of theſe half ſhekels, which ſerved there for two mens tributes. True it is, that the ſhekel of the Jews, and Alexandrians, which was the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, was double as much as the ordinary ſhekel or didrachm. And, therefore, in Exod. xxx. 13. where there is mention of an half ſhekel, which was to be paid for the uſe of the temple, the Septuagint reads, the half of the didrachm, or half ſhekel, which is all one with a whole Attic didrachm. This ſum all perſons, above twenty years old, paid annually to the uſe of the temple, and ſo continued till Veſpaſian transferr'd it to the capitol. So ſays Joſephus: "He commanded that every Jew ſhould pay the yearly tribute of two "drachms to the capitol, as they had done before to the temple at "Jeruſalem." (H)

Of their own children.] Our Saviour draws the ſimilitude here, from the kings of this world, to the king of heaven, in this manner. We ſee that kings exempt their own ſons from paying tribute. Now this tax of the didrachm is exacted in the name of God. Who, then, doubts that God is not pleaſed to free his only Son from this tribute? Beſides, the ſon is greater than the temple; and 'tis not uſual for the ſuperior to pay tribute to the inferior. (G.) It will appear from two circumſtances, that the own ſons, mentioned here, are not the natural ſubjects of the kingdom, nor the ſtrangers thoſe whom it had conquered and brought under its dominion. 1. Becauſe the natural ſubjects commonly paid tribute, and the law was clear, that every Jew ſhould pay his half ſhekel to the temple. 2. Becauſe there were no ſuch men in the Jewiſh ſtate, which now exacted this tribute, as were thus brought under its dominion, who could poſſibly be call'd ſtrangers in that notion. If it be underſtood, that no king impoſes tribute on his own children, or family, but on the children of other men, the words and ſenſe will then be clear. And, conſequently, this tribute, which was collected in the name of the king of heaven, ought not to be exacted from the ſon of that king, but from others. There ſeem to be ſome reaſon to think, that this tribute here might be a tax paid to the Romans, and impoſed under the form of the didrachm ever ſince Pompey conquered the Jews; or elſe, that Auguſtus impoſed it. Now what makes this more probable, is a paſſage from Joſephus, De Bell. Jud. l. 7. c. 10. where he ſaith, that Agrippa remitted them the tax, which they had annually paid. So that it is not unlikely, but that the Romans impoſed this tax under the form of a didrachm, which was the known tax among the Jews. In Cicero's orations againſt Verres, we read, that the Prætor of Syria demanded the tenths of Judea, which, we know, was firſt inſtituted by God to be paid to the Prieſts. It may be demanded here, why this payment ſhould fall particularly on Chriſt, and Peter, and not on the reſt of the diſciples. I anſwer to this, 1. That it no way appears by Chriſt's paying for himſelf, and Peter, that the others did not alſo pay. 2. That it may be very probable, that the receivers did at that time require it only of thoſe who dwelt at Capernaum, and, conſequently, of Chriſt and Peter; and that the reſt paid it in their ſeveral cities. (H.)

Thou ſhalt find a piece of money.] Peter Nannius, and others, in their annotations upon St. Ambroſe, acquaint us, that the ſtater, (here tranſlated a piece of money) is a Doric coin, of the ſame weight with the didrachm; ſo that the ſtater is the ſame as the ſicle, in Hebrew ſchekel, from the radical word ſchakal, to hang, and weigh; becauſe, formerly, both braſs, and ſilver coins, were quite different to what they are now, both in their valuation and figure, being of a rude make, and hung to weights. Beſides, 'tis out of diſpute, that the ſhekel is the moſt ancient of all coins: for we read in Geneſis, cap. xxiii. that Ephron valued his field, in which were two caves, at four hundred ſhekels of ſilver, which Abraham weighed to him, being current among the merchants. And we find in Exod. xxx. 15. and Ezek. xlv. 12. that the ſhekel contained twenty gerahs, or pence. Maimonides, in tract. De ſiclis, c. 1. art. 2. ſays, that a ſhekel weighed three hundred common corns of barley; but Joſephus, that it was in value to four Athenian drachms. Whence it follows, that it was equal to two Hebrew drachms: for the Hebrew, and Alexandrian weights, were as much more as the Athenian, as any one may inform himſelf out of Varro. For this reaſon, the Septuagint hath all along render'd it dridrachmon, and not tetradrachmon, becauſe they tranſlated the Jewiſh law at Alexandria, the weights of which place exactly correſponded with thoſe of the Hebrew. This being a circumſtance which but few have carefully conſider'd, the reſt have invented two kinds of ſhekels, one, which they called the ſacred ſhekel, containing four Athenian drachms, and the other, common, which no were is, nor never was, to be met with, containing only two drachms This is not fact: The truth is, that the ſhekels, which we meet with up and down in the Old Teſtament, are commanded to be examined by the weight of the ſhekel of the ſanctuary, or, according to the literal conſtruction of the Hebrew text, according to the ſhekel of the ſanctuary: So that this was the ground of the miſtake; for all the Jewiſh coins were preſerved in the ſanctuary, and made ſtandards to all the reſt. Beſides, 'tis no leſs true, that the Gentiles had this cuſtom of keeping their weights and meaſures in their temples, and, conſequently, looked upon them as ſacred, making all others according to their ſize and ſtandard. (Lewis de Compeigne de Veil.)

CHAP. XVIII.

Chriſt teacheth to be humble. Concerning offences, and forgiving one another. The parable of a king accounting with his ſervants.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AT the ſame time came the diſciples unto Jeſus, ſaying, Who is the greateſt in the kingdom of heaven? And Jeſus called a little child unto him, and ſet him in the midſt of them, And ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye ſhall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whoſoever therefore ſhall humble himſelf as this little child, the ſame is greateſt in the kingdom of heaven. And whoſo ſhall receive one ſuch little child in my name, receiveth me. But whoſo ſhall offend one of theſe little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millſtone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the ſea.

At the ſame time came the diſciples to Jeſus.] The diſciples having now been informed of Chriſt's reſurrection, were of opinion, that his kingdom, which they look'd upon not as merely ſpiritual, but regnum adſpectabile, which all the Jews hoped for, was now going to commence. Theſe diſciples did not doubt, but, as they were the ſervants of the ſon of God, the principal rewards of his kingdom were, of courſe, to devolve upon them; and it appears, from the paſſage before us, that they began to diſpute about their precedency, who ſhould be the ſuperior, and who the inferior among them. (G.) The diſciples began now, as appears from Luke ix. 46. to conſider who ſhould be the greateſt. Mark acquaints us, ix. 43. they had a diſputation concerning it on the road; but when they came home, Chriſt ask'd them, what they had been diſcourſing about; at firſt, it ſeems, they were ſilent; but afterwards they put the queſtion to him which is now before us. Thus Luke takes notice of what they thought; Mark, of what they diſputed about; and Matthew, of the queſtion they put to Chriſt. (V.)

And Jeſus called a little child unto him, and ſet him.] Supply, from Luke ix. 47. by him. Anaſtaſius the librarian, in his commentaries on the 8th ſynod, explaining the reaſon, why Thomas, Metropolitan of Tyre, and biſhop of the ſee of Antioch, and Elias, legate of Theodoſius, patriarch of Jeruſalem, ſhould, in the ſecond ſeſſion of the ſame ſynod, which was the fourth at Conſtantinople, call St. Ignatius the Martyr, and third biſhop of the ſee of Antioch from the Apoſtle Peter, Deifer, ſays: "The "Greeks tell us, that he, whom our Lord called and ſet in the "middle, ſaying, Except ye be converted, and become as this "little child, was Ignatius, and upon that call him Deifer: That "the Apoſtles, upon his advancement to the government of the "Church, durſt no longer lay hands upon him, becauſe they knew "that God had praiſed him with his mouth, and ſanctified him "with his touch." (V.)

Whoſo ſhall receive.] In this paſſage is definitely put one office of beneficence, for any kind, or office of beneficence; q. d. the humility of theſe little ones ſo pleaſes me, that he, who extends his kindneſs upon them, ſhall meet with the ſame reward from me, as tho' I my ſelf had received that kindneſs: Likewiſe, he who ſhall ſcandalize, or throw any manner of offence in the way of theſe little ones, ſhall be terribly puniſhed, as having diſhonoured thoſe, whom I chiefly ſet my affection upon. Hear what St. Leo, in ſer. 7. in Epiph. ſays: Chriſt loves infants, in receiving them ſo wiſhfully both with ſoul and body; Chriſt loves infants, and makes them of ſervice to direct the morals of older perſons by; Chriſt loves infants, who are the patterns of humility, the rule of innocence, and the form of gentleneſs. But that we may have a complete underſtanding of what is meant by this ſurpriſing converſion into little childten, which is propoſed for our imitation, St. Paul acquaints us, ſaying, Do not prove children to the ſenſes, but be as little ones in malice. So that from hence we are informed, that onr converſion is not to the little foibles, and innocent paſtimes of children, but our buſineſs, by it, is to draw ſomething thence, that may ſuit the character of graver years; we are to abandon, and fly from the impetuous ſallies of anger; we are to cultivate peace, baniſh from our remembrance all injurious thoughts, put away from the ſoul the thirſt after honour and grandeur; we are to promote ſocial love, and natural equality; for 'tis a great virtue not to do an injury, and more ſo, to be ignorant how to act miſchievouſly; becauſe the doing and repaying of an injury, is a maxim of this world; but to render good for evil, the infancy of chriſtian equanimity. (V.)

That a millſtone, &c.] Expreſs'd in the vulgar Latin by mola aſinaria. The millſtone, mentioned here, was ſuch an one, as was turn'd, not by the hand, but by an aſs. This being not mentioned among the four remarkable Jewiſh puniſhments, namely, burning, ſtoning, beheading, and ſtrangling, 'tis probable this modus of ſpeech came from the neighbouring Syrians. (G.) Meaning, a millſtone of a large ſize. Now there were two kinds of millſtones, one turned by aſſes, the other by the hand; theſe were conſiderably leſs than thoſe turned by aſſes, which, according to Lucian, and Apuleius, had their eyes covered with a linnen cloth, and ſo walked in a perpetual round. Thus Hilary, Can. 8. in Math. ſays, "The work of the millſtone, is a labour of blindneſs; for they "that are turned by aſſes have their eyes blinded." St. Gregory, in his firſt part, Curæ paſtoralis, chap. 2. ſays, "that by the mola "aſinaria, is ſignified the labour and winding about of this life, "and by the deepneſs of the ſea, extreme damnation." (V.)

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. Wo unto the World becauſe of offences: for it muſt needs be that offences come: but wo unto the man by whom the offence cometh. Wherefore if thy hand or thy foot offend thee, cut them off, and caſt them from thee: it is better for thee to enter into life halt or maimed, rather than having two hands or two feet, and to be caſt into everlaſting fire. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, and caſt it from thee: it is better to enter into life with one eye, rather than having two eyes to be caſt into hell-fire. Take heed that ye deſpiſe not one of theſe little ones; for I ſay unto you, their angels do always behold the face of my father which is in heaven. For the ſon of man is come to ſave that which was loſt.

Their Angels.] As Chriſt made uſe commonly, of ſuch expreſſions, as he knew the Jews underſtood when he pronounced them; ſo both antient and modern Jews, eſpecially the more pious and devout ſort, were of opinion that God aſſigned guardian angels to watch over particular perſons, which opinion was no other than what the Chriſtians themſelves embraced, as appears from the paſſage of Acts xii. 15. where it is read, "Thou art mad, But ſhe "conſtantly affirmed that it was even ſo; then ſaid they it is his "angel:" and from ſeveral Authors of antiquity. So that 'tis probable that Chriſt approved of this opinion. As to what is ſaid of their beholding the face of God, it regards not any kind of angels, but thoſe of a ſuperior claſs, who are, as appointed by the Almighty, to watch over religious and devout perſons. The ſimilitude here is taken from the cuſtom of kings. Refer to 1 Kings x. 8. Luke i. 19. Iſaiah lxiii. 9. 1 Sam. xxii. 6. and xxv. 27. It was believed that ſeven were veſted with an extraordinary power among theſe ſuperior angels. See Jer. lii. 13. Dan. x. 13. Theſe angels were a kind of ambaſſadors between God and man. Whence we may learn the great evil we commit in inſulting over their innocency. (G.) 'Tis a doctrine of ſcripture, that angels are Gods miniſtring ſpirits, and pay obedience to his commands in protecting his ſervants here below: in Revelations we read ſeveral times of ſeven ſpirits, or according to Andreas of Cæſarea, ſeven angels, who are in heaven to behold the face of God, in the ſame manner as this place affirms of them. But it is not poſitively ſaid in this paſſage, whether their angels, taken notice of here, are of that claſs, who are ſaid to be peculiarly deſigned to particular perſons; ſo far, indeed, we can trace, that, as God ſees convenient, they are employed in ſervices for the benefit of theſe little ones, namely, of Chriſtians. This is not to be doubted. Dyoniſius Alexandrinus ſays, that the reaſon of theſe angels continually beholding the face of God is, becauſe they continue and ſtedfaſtly behold the beauty of God, and never fall off from that dignity, and preferment, as Lucifer did, which they enjoy by their nearneſs to the true, real, and eternal good. But beſides this conſtruction, there is another to be put on this phraſe behold the face, which is, to attend as a ſervant. Pſalm cxxiii. 2. to be ready to perform whatſoever is commanded. Elias Levita, ſpeaking of the word Mitateron, ſays, he is the prince of faces, that is, an angel who always beholds the face of the High King, meaning God. Both which conſtructions being put together make up the full ſenſe of the words, which yet ſignify further, an eminent ſort of angels. (H.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. How think ye? if a man have an hundred ſheep, and one of them be gone aſtray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth into the mountains, and ſeeketh that which is gone aſtray? And if ſo be that he find it, verily I ſay unto you, he rejoyceth more of that ſheep, than of the ninety and nine which went not aſtray. Even ſo it is not the will of your father which is in heaven, that one of theſe little ones ſhould periſh. Moreover, if thy brother ſhall treſpaſs againſt thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he ſhall hear thee, thou haſt gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes every word may be eſtabliſhed. And if he ſhall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the church, let him be unto thee as an heathen man and a publican. Verily I ſay unto you, whatſoever ye ſhall bind on earth, ſhall be bound in heaven: and whatſoever ye ſhall looſe on earth, ſhall be looſed in heaven.

How think ye?] Q. d. I ſubmit it to yourſelves to be judges in the caſe I am going to lay before you; if an ordinary man on earth is maſter of a poſſeſſion, whereon he ſets any conſiderable value, ſuppoſe he is poſſeſs'd of an hundred ſheep. Now if one of theſe ſheep happen to ſtray from the reſt, which he preſently obſerves, does not he value that one ſo much, as to leave the other ninety and nine, (knowing them to be ſafe in the paſture or fold) and go and ſearch diligently for it? and when he has found it, is he not affected with more joy at the firſt ſight of it, than he is at caſting his eyes upon his whole flock, which had never run this hazard? for, according to Auſtin the greater trouble precedes the greater joy. So that Chriſt would inform us from hence, that he came into the world with ſo ardent a deſire to gather together the loſt ſheep, that, provided but one was ſtrayed, his compaſſion extended to preſerve it. (H. par. and V.)

If thy brother ſhall treſpaſs againſt thee.] See Lev. xix. 17. But we are principally to ſee that, by giving our brother this reproof, we endeavour not more to make our own Intereſt than to perform ſervice to him. Beſides, we are to take care, that when we give this reproof, we have an eye to his fame and character. Now the word brother, in this place, ſignifies one who profeſſes the ſame rule of faith with us. But what is properly pointed out by theſe words is, tranſgreſſions which are owing to man's weakneſs and and imbecility, ſuch as anger, envy, and the like, taking in at the ſame time, thoſe injuries which are committed againſt another. (G.)

Tell the Church.] See 2 Cor. xi. 6. 1 Tim. v. 20. Thoſe places ſpeak of ſins of a higher nature: tho' ſuch, as ſeem trifling in the beginning, may, by a pertinacious contempt of thoſe who adviſe for the better, become equal to thoſe higher tranſgreſſions. Even Chriſt, while the law remained, and the Jews continued undivided, had begun to collect together an aſſembly of perſons, which he called by a name, peculiar to the practice of the Hebrews, and his diſciples, who wrote in Greek, Eccleſia. Now 'twas cuſtomary for the Jews to make the laſt appeal to the people, tho' the elders, as judges, pronounced ſentence, which Tertullian, and other writers, acquaint us the Chriſtians followed. (G.) To the church, means to the preſidents or governors in it, as Chryſoſtom expounds this paſſage. By the word Eccleſia or church is ſignified no other than the paſtors of it, whoſe duty and office is to feed and govern the flock committed to their Charge. And that church is meant here, to which obedience and ſubjection is due; and the ſcripture tells us, that eccleſiaſtical obedience and ſubjection is not due to the people, but only to the paſtors, the governors of the church. Obſerve what Cyprian ſays, "the body of the prieſts is pretty copious, yet cemented together by one common alliance, ſo that "if one of our community endeavours to ſow heretical opinions, "or to commit deſtruction among the flock of Chriſt, preſently "all the reſt come up to its aſſiſtance, and like good and merciful ſhepherds, gather the lords ſheep into the flock: for tho' "we are many ſhepherds, yet 'tis but one flock which we feed, "tho' the ſheep are all the world, which Chriſt came to redeem "with his blood and ſufferings; ſo that 'tis our duty to gather them "together, and take care of them, and not to ſuffer our ſuppliant and weeping brethren to be uſed with cruelty, or trodden under foot by the proud and extravagant behaviour of "ſome." (V.)

Let him be unto thee as an heathen and a publican.] The meaning of theſe words is this. Then you ſhall be left at liberty to break the alliance of friendſhip, and avoid for the future, the familiar acquaintance that has paſt between you, in order that you may be no more expoſed to his incorrigibleneſs and obſtinacy; you have performed your duty; reckon him among the number of the heathen, ſuch as were the publicans and tax-gatherers: the Jews, taking the major part of them, had a very bad opinion in this caſe, and that was, in denying to theſe the common offices of humanity; they would admit no farther than what regarded the ties of ſtrict friendſhip. All the pains, uſed to make theſe reform, ſignified little, unleſs there were viſible marks of freſh hopes of repentance. Upon the whole, I take it, that theſe words of Chriſt point out rather one permitting than commanding: and that this paſſage has nothing to do with excommunication, of the antiquity and neceſſity whereof, I ſhall take another opportunity to enlarge, tho' I do not deny, but that a good argument, in behalf of excommunication, may be juſtly grounded on the words in this paſſage. (G.) The ſum and ſubſtance of theſe nine verſes is this, if any fellow Chriſtian of yours commit an injury againſt you, and, by ſo doing offend God, you muſt have recourſe to charity, and be ſure to baniſh from your breaſt all thoughts of revenge againſt him; you muſt forgive him freely; nay, you are under an obligation to uſe all prudent methods, in order to reduce him to a ſenſe, and reformation of his error; beſides which, you are to extend this piece of good nature to all other wilful faults, which he ſhall happen to commit. And how to behave towards him in this point, let this be the method; firſt go and admoniſh him of his error privately, that he may not ſuffer in his character by an open diſcovery at firſt; if he recant upon the advice and admonition which you give him, you have done what you ought to do; you have reaſon then to make merry, as at the finding the ſtray ſheep, in having prov'd ſo happy an inſtrument of his repentance. But if this firſt trial of your charity ſucceed not, another eſſay muſt be made, take along with you one, or two other men, that the crime, which you lay to his charge, may be confirmed to him by ſufficient evidence, and that he may no longer prevaricate or deny it; or, that the authority of theſe teſtimonies being added to the private admonitions which you have already given him, may have the more influence over him, and induce him to condemn himſelf. Now, provided he proves ſtill refractory, without either giving ſigns of conviction, or contrition for his crime, then make it a matter of publick cognizance, acquaint the rulers of the aſſemblies with it, or tell it in the preſence of all the people, that the governor may ſet his crime before them. But if this laſt method meet with no ſucceſs, if he ſtill remain obſtinate, you are then to conſider him as a deſperate ſinner, fit for the cenſures of the church to overtake him. To which the rulers of the church are, in this caſe, to proceed and uſe the keys, given them, as ſtewards of the houſe, for the ejecting of ſuch, and Chriſt aſſures them, that whatſoever they ſhall caſt out of the church on earth, ſhall be excluded by him from heaven, without repentance, and ſubmiſſion to their cenſures, without their reformation, and ſincere deſire to reconcile themſelves to them: that Chriſt will back theſe cenſures, which they ſhall thus inflict by his commiſſion, and ſo, whomſoever they ſhall receive into the peace of the church upon repentance, ſhall be pardoned by him likewiſe. (H. and B.)

Ver. 19, 20, 21, 22. Again I ſay unto you, that if two of you ſhall agree on earth as touching any thing that they ſhall aſk, it ſhall be done for them of my father which is in heaven. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them. Then came Peter to him, and ſaid, Lord, how oft ſhall my brother ſin againſt me, and I forgive him? till ſeven times? Jeſus ſaith unto him, I ſay unto thee, Until ſeven times: but, until ſeventy times ſeven.

Where two or three are gathered together in my name.] The corruptors and bad interpreters of the goſpel are ſure at all times to give us the moſt trifling things, and run over thoſe of moſt conſequence, touching a little at ſomething in this paſſage, and in the next craftily concealing themſelves. As they are cut off from the church, ſo they cut off the meaning of an entire chapter. Our Lord, inculcating to his diſciples the love of unanimity and peace, expreſſes himſelf thus; "I ſay unto you, If two of you ſhall meet "together on earth, whatſoever you ſhall aſk, ſhall be given you "by my Father who is in heaven; for wheresſoever two or three are "gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them." Shewing by this, that 'tis not the number, but the unanimity, of the worſhippers, that contributes to this. If two of you, ſays he, ſhall meet together on earth; there he fixes unanimity and concord, as the ſureſt end of meeting together. But how can that perſon pretend to meet with any one, who is not fit to be admitted into the body of the church, or mix with its fraternity? How can two or three gather together in the name of Chriſt, who appear to be ſeparated from Chriſt, and his Goſpel? We have not ſeparated from them, but they from us. When hereſies, and ſchiſms, began afterwards to be broach'd, and different houſes of worſhip were erected, 'twas then that the head and fountain of truth was abandoned, and forſaken. Our Lord, in ſpeaking of the church, addreſſes himſelf to thoſe who are in the church, that provided they are unanimous and conſenting, if they follow thoſe rules and ordinances, which he has commanded and left them, be they but two or three gathered together in his name, and unanimouſly devoted to prayer, they ſhall obtain of the Majeſty of God, what they aſk for. Whereſoever two or three ſhall be gathered together in my name, ſays he here, there am I in the midſt of them: meaning, two or three that meet together with ſimplicity of heart, in peace, with a deſire to fear and reverence God, and preſerve the commands he has enjoined, With theſe two or three, he ſays he is in the midſt. When the three children were caſt into the fiery furnace, their reliance upon God, and prayers to preſerve them, ſecured them from the rage and heat of the flames. So when two of the Apoſtles were thrown into priſon, their ſimplicity, and unanimity, made him be preſent with them; he opened the doors of the priſon, to the end they might faithfully preach the word to the people. When he lays down in his precepts, and ſays, Where two or three ſhall be gathered together in my name, there am I in the midſt of them; he does not pretend to ſeparate mankind from his church, who was the firſt inſtitutor, and founder of the church; but he reproaches the perfidious with their diſagreements, and recommends peace to the faithful, ſhewing, that it is more ſecure for two or three praying unanimouſly together, than for many to meet together in diſcord; and that the prayers of a few, gathered together in his name, will avail a thouſand times more, than the jarring ſupplications of a multitude. (Cyprian.)

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35. Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his ſervants. And when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him which owed him ten thouſand talents. But forasmuch as he had not to pay, his Lord commanded him to be ſold, and his wife and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made. The ſervant therefore fell down, and worſhipped him, ſaying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. Then the lord of that ſervant was moved with compaſſion, and looſed him, and forgave him the debt. But the ſervant went out, and found one of his fellow-ſervants which owed him an hundred pence: and he laid hands on him, and took him by the throat, ſaying, Pay me that thou oweſt. And his fellow-ſervant fell down at his feet, and beſought him, ſaying, Have patience with me, and I will pay thee all. And he would not: but went and caſt him into priſon, till he ſhould pay the debt. So when his fellow-ſervants ſaw what was done, they were very ſorry, and came and told unto their lord all that was done. Then his lord, after that he had called him, ſaid unto him, O thou wicked ſervant, I forgave thee all that debt, becauſe thou deſiredſt me: Shouldſt not thou alſo have had compaſſion on thy fellow-ſervant, even as I had pity on thee? And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormenters, till he ſhould pay all that was due unto him. So likewiſe ſhall my heavenly Father do alſo unto you, if ye from your hearts forgive not every one his brother their treſpaſſes.

Who took account of his ſervants.] The ſervants here, whom the king, or lord, is ſuppoſed to call to account, ſeem to be thoſe, who are entruſted by him to negotiate or tranſact buſineſs for him. And, proportionably, his reckoning with them here, is by St. Luke expreſs'd by commanding his ſervants to be called, that he might know how much every one had gain'd by trading, that is, what every man had acquired, and had truly to bring in, above the money which he had received. Which is ſet down to be a very ſtrange increaſe. One pound had been improv'd into ten, another into five pounds. In St. Matthew, five are increaſed into five more, two into two more; ſome ſuch encreaſe being brought in by both Evangeliſts, only he who had laid up his money in a napkin, kin, had been perfectly idle, and done nothing with it. Agreeably to this, it follows here, that one of theſe ſervants, when he comes to be reckoned with, is found, upon account, to be indebted to his lord, ten thouſand talents, which, at the rate of ſeven hundred and fifty ounces of ſilver to a talent, and of five ſhillings to an ounce, amounts to one million eight hundred ſeventy five thouſand pounds; a vaſt ſum of money! and that being demanded, he was no way able to make payment, and, therefore, according to the caſe of ſuch debtors, his lord ſentenced him to be ſold. But, upon this, he begs his lord to bear with him a while, and he will repay him all that was due upon account, all the ten thouſand talents. The lord being moved with compaſſion, not only releaſed him from the ſentence of being ſold, but forgave him, at the ſame time, the whole debt. The word, here render'd debt, hath another ſignification, and means uſury, or intereſt, and, conſequently, might be thought here not to mean the whole debt, but only the intereſt that would be due for the time of forbearance, which he now deſired. And, indeed, the words of the ſervant ſeem to incline to this, which are, that he would have patience, and grant him ſome time, promiſing, if he would, to pay him the whole ſum, not deſiring the forgiveneſs or remiſſion of that. But tho' the Greek word daneion ſignifies intereſt, or uſury, yet it means a debt or loan, and ſo is expreſs'd to do here: and the Arabic reads Colla mah alaibi, all that was upon him, all that he was liable to, or reſponſible for; which was plainly, not only all the intereſt that this forbearance would amount to, but even the principal itſelf. For tho' the ſervant does not aſk for the remiſſion of that, but uſes the ordinary form of inſolvent debtors, who deſire patience, or releaſement from priſon, and ſtrive, by fair promiſes, to make his creditor believe that he ſhall loſe nothing; yet the mercy of God, expreſs'd here by that of the lord's, and the example, ſet before us in the former paſſage, ver 22. of plenary and abſolute forgiveneſs of what is already ſuffer'd, and what may follow, will certainly extend itſelf to the whole ſum, and not ſuffer it to be reſtrained to no more than the requeſt of the creditor, and the forbearance of the intereſt. This is alſo demonſtrated by the other part of the parable, where we have his manner of dealing with his fellow-ſervant; for what he would not forgive him, is anſwerable to that which the lord had remitted him, only the difference lay in the quantity; a few denarii, or eight parts of an ounce to ſo many talents. Now the concluſion from all this, is this plain truth; That God's pardons here in this life are not abſolute to us, while we become uncharitable to our brethren, but, according to the petition in our Lord's prayer, are anſwerable to our dealings with others, and, conſequently, conditional, and are no longer likely to be continued to us, than we perform their conditions. (H.) The ſcope of Chriſt, in this parable, is, to exhort us to forgive others ſuch injuries as they commit againſt us. The argument is drawn from the example of God, who pardons us our ſins, and ſeverely puniſhes thoſe who refuſe to forgive others: And this he ſets before us under the parable of a king, who is a creditor, generouſly remitting a large debt, and ſeverely puniſhing the inhumanity of his ſervant, who refuſed to forgive a ſmall debt owing to him. (V;)

An hundred pence.] Denarii. 'Tis not agreed by all what the Denarius is: ſome will have it to be the ſame as an Athenian drachma; others, as the Jewiſh drachma, which contain'd two Attic or Roman drachms. They who have weighed this affair with more accuracy, will not permit the denarius to be the ſame as the drachma; but, if we may credit Fungerus, it comes near to the latter. (V.)

CHAP. XIX.

Chriſt healeth the ſick. Anſwereth the Phariſees touching divorcement. How to attain everlaſting life.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AND it came to paſs, that when Jeſus had finiſhed theſe ſayings, he departed from Galilee, and came into the coaſts of Judea, beyond Jordan: And great multitudes followed him, and he healed them there. The Phariſees alſo came unto him, tempting him, and ſaying unto him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife for every cauſe? And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, Have ye not read, that he which made them at the beginning, made them male and female? And ſaid, For this cauſe ſhall a man leave father and mother, and ſhall cleave to his wife: and they twain ſhall be one fleſh. Wherefore they are no more twain, but one fleſh. What therefore God hath joined together, let no man put aſunder,

He departed from Galilee.] That he might go up to Jeruſalem to the feaſt of tabernacles, as appears from the ſeventh chapter of John. But as he went to Jeruſalem, he paſs'd through the middle of Samaria, the preſence of his Apoſtles, where, in a certain caſtle, he commanded ten lepers to ſhew themſelves to the prieſts, who, according as Luke relates the ſtory in his 17th chapter, were made clean as they went on their way. After this, as John acquaints us, chap. vii. from the 11th verſe to the end, he went up into the temple, and there taught. And from thence, as the ſame Evangeliſt takes notice, in his 8th chap. to ver. 12. he went up into the mount of Olives, and abſolved the woman, taken in adultery, who was brought before him. Next, he made a long ſermon, and, having finiſhed it, caſt his eyes, as he paſs'd by, upon a man who had been blind from his birth, whom he reſtored to his ſight. Afterwards he taught, as we learn from the 10th chapter of the ſame Evangeliſt, who was the good ſhepherd, and declares himſelf ready to make a ſacrifice of his life for his ſheep. Probably, about the ſame time the election and miſſion of the ſeventy-two diſciples happened, as alſo the anſwer which Chriſt made to the lawyer's queſtion, what he ſhould do, in order to obtain everlaſting life, as it is all ſet down by Luke, in his 10th chapter. Beſides which, it appears probable, that Martha's ſollicitude, and Mary's ſitting at the feet of our Lord, which Luke mentions in the ſame chapter, fell out much about the ſame time. (V.)

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. They ſay unto him, Why did Moſes then command to give a writing of divorcement, and to put her away? He ſaith unto them, Moſes, becauſe of the hardneſs of your hearts, ſuffered you to put away you wives: but from the beginning it was not ſo. And I ſay unto you, Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and ſhall marry another, committeth adultery: and whoſo marrieth her which is put away, doth commit adultery. His diſciples ſay unto him, If the caſe of a man be ſo with his wife, it is not good to marry. But he ſaid unto them, All men cannot receive this ſaying, ſave they to whom it is given. For there are ſome eunuchs, which were ſo born from their mothers womb: and there are ſome eunuchs, which were made eunuchs of men: and there be eunuchs, which have made themſelves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's ſake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it.

To put away your wives.] From comparing theſe two or three verſes with Matthew's 5th chapter, ver. 32. it doth not appear, that what is here recited was a law given either by Moſes, or by any other perſon after him, to the antient Hebrews; but only a permiſſion, by indulging them in this point, in the caſe of nakedneſs, or turpitude: for the Phariſees evidently refer to that here, and to what Mark ſays in his 10th chapter, ver. 7. Why then did Moſes command, &c. where this command of Moſes only amounts to this, that he, who preſumes to put away his wife, ſhall perform it legally, by giving her a bill of divorce; purely that the woman, ſo divorced, may marry again, and bring forth children by ſome other huſband. This is what Moſes only permitted for the hardneſs of the Jews hearts, but did not allow, much leſs enjoin, it. Indeed, in after-times, 'tis true that there were ſome licentious doctrines brought into the ſchools, by ſome of their doctors, or latter interpreters of Moſes. Some of theſe, notwithſtanding they allowed it in no other caſe but that of nakedneſs or turpitude, did yet extend the word turpitude to every little diſcontent or diſlike; whilſt others, without conſidering the word turpitude, extended the allowance to every cauſe. However, the context ſeems not to refer to theſe doctors, but properly to the permiſſion which Moſes afforded. Which indulgence, Chriſt retrenches, and ſtricty commands, that no cauſe, ſave that of fornication, ſhall be ſufficient to ground a divorce upon; and that no Chriſtian ſociety ſhall allow this indulgence, which was only afforded the Jews for the hardneſs of their hearts. (H.) We ought, if we think juſtly, to think marriage ſuch a cohabitation of the man with the woman, as places the woman under the eye and care of the man: for we may obſerve this cohabitation in certain ſpecies of the brute creation. But in man, who is a rational creature, there is, beſides this, an union and fidelity, which binds him to the woman, and the woman to him.

This is all that nature ſeems to require in the caſe of marriage, in order for its ſubſiſtence and continuance; neither does the divine law ſeem to have required any thing more before the propagation of the Goſpel: for before the promulgation of the law, we read of holy perſons who had ſeveral wives at the ſame time; and even while the law remained, we find certain precepts given to thoſe who had ſeveral wives To the king it is preſcribed, not to acquire too large a number either of wives or horſes; where the Hebrew interpreters remark, that eighteen wives or concubines were allow'd the king, and God imputes to David that he had given him ſeveral illuſtrious wives. In the ſame manner we find a way laid down, how a man (who was willing) ſhould put away his wife; yet no man is hindred from marrying her thus divorced, except the prieſt and he who put her away; notwithſtanding this liberty, thus allow'd to the divorc'd woman, of taking another husband, was ſo reſtrained by the right of nature itſelf, that no confuſion might ariſe thence among the iſſue that was to ſucceed. Hence that queſtion of the pontifical right in Pautus, an concepto, necdum, edito partu rite nuberet. In both theſe caſes of matrimony, the Hebrews were enjoined to ſtay three months before they contracted. But the law, which Chriſt brought into the world, hath reduc'd this rule of marriage among Chriſtians to a more perfect ſtandard; for it not only pronounces thoſe to be guilty of adultery who ſhall put away their wives, for any other cauſe but fornication, but imputes the ſame thing to thoſe who ſhall marry her who is thus put away. Beſides, the Apoſtle Paul not only gives the husband authority over the body of his wife, but the wife, in her turn, the ſame power over the body of her husband. Hear what Lactantius ſays, "Non enim, ſi ait juris publi ci ratio eſt, ſola "mulier adultera eſt, quæ habet alium, maritus autem, etiamſi "plures habeat, a crimine adulterij ſolutus eſt. Sed divina lex ita "duos in matrimonium, quod eſt in corpus unum-pari jure conjungit, ut adulter habeatur, quiſquam compagem corporis in diverſa diſtraxerit" 'Tis not the woman alone, as the common law eſteems, that is not guilty of adultery, who has another husband, but the man alſo, tho' he has ſeveral wives, is free from that imputation. However the divine law ſo joins two together in marriage, which is one body by an equal right, that he is accounted an adulterer, who ſeperates that union, and takes to him ſeveral wives. I am very ſenſible that it is the opinion of ſeveral that Chriſt, in both theſe reſpects, hath not given us a new law, but only renew'd that which the father of the univerſe executed at the beginning; and that the words of Chriſt, where he recalls us to that beginning, have drawn them into this way of thinking. But to this it may be anſwer'd, that the firſt ſtate of man, thus objected, wherein God gave to one man but one woman, ſufficiently diſcovers the very thing that was moſt pleaſing to his divine majeſty, and that from hence it follows that this was always eſteem'd very laudable and praiſe-worthy, with this reſtriction however that he who acted againſt it committed no crime, becauſe where there was no law, there was no tranſgreſſion of law; and 'tis abſur'd to ſay, that any law was executed in thoſe original times concerning this matter. Thus alſo when God, whether by Adam, or by Moſes, ſaid that the alliance of marriage ſhould be ſo firm, that the husband ſhould leave the houſe of his father, and erect a new family with his wife, he advanced almoſt the ſame words, which were ſpoken to Pharaoh's daughter, Plſam, xlv. 10. forget alſo thine own people, and thy father's houſe. Now from this cloſe alliance it appears what was moſt grateful to God, namely, that the conjunction of ſuch a marriage ſhould be perpetual. Hear what Euripides, in his Andromache, makes Hermione ſpeak:

---- ---- 'Tis far from being juſt
For one, call'd man, to lord it o'er two wives;
Let him, who wou'd with prudence rule his houſe
Take one kind dame to grace his nuptial bed.

And in the Chorus

Far from commending ſtill my tongue ſhall be
Two wives, two beds; for hence dire diſcord ſprings
Hatred, and noiſe, and ſtrife, the bane of peace,
Let one kind wife the nuptial bed adorn.
Share all her husband's love, and all his cares.
Where towns, and countries ſtoop beneath the ſway
Of different lords; confuſion there is ſeen,
Cabals are heighten'd, citizens rebel:
But where the ſceptre's graſp'd by only one
Obedience follows; love and peace there reign.
Where two, contending for the laurel; ſtrive
Who beſt in numbers, or in wit, excells
There oft the muſe foments a direful war.
When the proud veſſel gently with the wind
Divides the billows with one bellyed ſail,
Or when one ſteady hand directs the helm,
More is effected, than by all the aid
Of jarring numbers in opinion ſtrange.
'Tis one ſupreme that juſtly rules the land.
One only wife that governs well the houſe,
Provided we for peace and comfort wiſh.

And Plautus in his Mercator,

A good wife will be ſatisfied with one husband, and a good husband with one wife.

Thus it appears both from ſacred and prophane hiſtory, that this conjunction was eſteem'd; yet it is no way from thence evinc'd that God commanded at that time that this union might not be diſſolv'd in ſome caſes. On the other hand, Chriſt prohibited man to ſeparate from that which God by his own inſtitution had enjoin'd, becauſe it appear'd to God the moſt grateful and acceptable, and to himſelf the beſt materials to inſert in his new covenant. Certain it is, that ſeveral nations, as they allow'd of the liberty of divorce, ſo they were not debarred from taking to them ſeveral wives at the ſame time. Tacitus acquaints us, that the Germans, in his time, were the only nation that made uſe but of one wife; and the ſame account we find both in the Indian, and Perſian Hiſtories. Among the Ægyptians the prieſts were the only perſons who were allow'd to marry only one wife. But we learn from Athenæus, that Cecrops was the firſt among the Grecians, who gave one woman to one man; which was not long obſerv'd by the Athenians, as we are acquainted from the example of Socrates, and others. But if there were nations that confined themſelves more in this reſpect, as the Romans, who, tho' each had two wives, abſtain'd a long time from uſing divorces, they are certainly to be commended, as being people who had made choice of a very laudable thing. And from hence we find that the Flamminie among the Romans were ſure to ſuffer death on their marrying; tho' it does not follow from hence they who acted otherwiſe, that before the promulgation of the goſpel, committed any crime. (See more of this in Grotius de jure Belli ac pacis. p. 147. 148. 149.)

Except it be for fornication] Some ſynods have by their decrees permitted a woman, legally convicted of adultery, to be put away, and marry another, believing that this paſſage of the goſpel countenanc'd them in it. But Auſtin aſſerts, in his three books to Pollentius, that the marriage, which is contracted after a lawful divorce, comes under the imputation of adultery; and is pleaſed to ſay that theſe words, Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and ſhall marry another, committeth adultery, bear analogy to theſe: he who knows good things, and neglects to put them in execution, committeth ſin. Now as the Apoſtle James doth not clear thoſe who err by ignorance, but condemns ſuch as knowingly tranſgreſs; ſo our Lord condemns thoſe for adultery, who, for a leſs crime than fornication, put away their wives, and marry others. Jerome, in his thirteenth epiſtle to Oceanus, in his one hundred and forty-ſeventh to Amandus, and in his annotations on the fifth and nineteenth chapter of this goſpel, reſtrains the exception, unleſs for fornication, to the liberty alone of putting away, which immediately goes before. If this interpretation of Jerome be genuine and litteral, as the ſynod of Foro-Julia, celebrated under Charles the great, by Paulinus Patriarch of Aquileia, ſuppoſes, then they who ſhall put away their wives for the ſake of fornication, and marry others, are to be eſteem'd in the opinion of our Lord, adulterers, according to the expreſs declaration of the ſixth ſynod held at Paris, under Lewis the pious. Yet Auſtin, who aſſerted with ſo much warmth, that the marriage which was contracted after a legal divorce, came under the imputation of adultery, and was repugnant to the goſpel, and who got the oppoſite opinion to be exploded by the whole African church, by a general council, whereat were two hundred and four biſhops, afterwards advanc'd in his treatiſe of Faith and Works. That whoſoever ſhould put away his wife, for the cauſe of being taken in adultery, and ſhould marry another, he did not think ſuch a man was to be equalled to thoſe, who divorced their wives, and marryed again, excepta cauſa adulterij. That the divine writings were ſo obſcure in this point, that he could not tell, whether the man, who was at liberty to put away his wife in caſe of adultery, was yet to be reckoned an adulterer if he marryed another; for, as he thought, any man might err in this, and yet not be pardoned: Hence we need not wonder, why chriſtian emperors, and kings, in all nations and ages, have been ſo various in their determinations in this point; why councels and ſynods have concluded ſo differently about it, and why ſo many divines and fathers of the church have thought ſo ſtrangely concerning it. As for Auſtin's part, in his Retractat. book 20, chap. 57. he owns 'tis a queſtion that has abundance of difficulty in it, and that with all the penetration he is maſter of, he cannot explain it with perſpicuity enough. However, I can find one circumſtance which appears plain enough in this queſtion, when the laws of one's country, and thoſe canons that are admitted, do not prohibit; this is, that if a man ſhall marry another wife, or a woman another husband, the authority of the ſacred writings frees him from the imputation of having ſinn'd in any point, neither is he thereby cut off from the church, or depriv'd of the life eternal, but the ſame authority thinks fit to bear with them becauſe of their weakneſs. (V.)

Eunuchs.] It appears, from the context, that eunuchiſm is taken here for the chaſtity of a ſingle life, be it acquir'd by what way ſoever, whether by natural temper, or by ſome outward accidental weakning of nature, as was very common among the Gentiles, in order to obtain ſome offices or poſts of honour, which men, who had thus put a reſtrain upon their deſires, were deſign'd for, (H.)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Then were there brought unto him little children, that he ſhould put his hands on them, and pray: and the diſciples rebuked them. But Jeſus ſaid, Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me: for of ſuch is the kingdom of heaven. And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence. And behold, one came and ſaid unto him, Good maſter, what good thing ſhall I do that I may have eternal liſe? And he ſaid unto him, Why calleſt thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God: but if thou wilt enter into liſe, keep the commandments.

Why calleſt thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God.] When we return an anſwer to a thing, we are to mind the queſtion which is put to us. The anſwer is always given to that which is aſk'd. Firſt then, I demand of him who finds fault with theſe words, whether our Lord was not pleaſed at being called good, or whether he rather choſe to be called bad? for that ſeems to be implied in the ſaying, Why calleſt thou me good? I cannot ſuppoſe any man to be ſo ſtupid, as to attribute a malicious deſign in him who ſaid; "Come to me all you that labour, and are heavy laden, and I will "give you reſt: Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for "I am meek and low in ſpirit, and you ſhall find reſt for your "ſouls; for my yoke is eaſy, and my burden is light." Here he propoſes himſelf to be meek and humble; and is he to be thought angry, at being called good? It cannot be ſuppoſed that he reſented his being called good; conſequently we muſt enquire by what other name he declares himſelf, ſince we are not to believe that he approv'd of being call'd good. It ſeems, that the lawyer, beſides calling him good, ſaid, "Good maſter, what good thing ſhall I do? So that he mentioned two things, good, and maſter. Now becauſe he is againſt being call'd good, it follows, that he approves of being called a good maſter. The lawyer, who was elated with his obſervance of the law, but entirely ignorant of the end thereof, which was Chriſt; and thinking that his works would juſtify him, and not underſtanding that our Saviour was come to ſave the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, put this queſtion to him, who was the Lord of the law, and the only begotten Son of God, as tho' he had been but a common expounder of the ordinary precepts and commands, which were written in the law. But Chriſt, as it appears, not approving of the profeſſion which he made of his faith, in conſidering him as an ordinary interpreter of the law, anſwered him thus; Why calleſt thou me good? And to the end he might let him ſee in what reſtriction the word good was to be taken, he ſubjoin'd, there is none good but one, that is God. So that he did not reject the appellation of good, provided it had been attributed to him as being God, with the Father. But we alſo find, after the young man had diſcover'd his pride, in having fulfilled the law, as he thought, Chriſt giving him this anſwer; "One thing is wanting, go, and "ſell that thou haſt, and give to the poor, and thou ſhalt have "treaſure in heaven, and come and follow me." Thus you ſee he does not abſolutely refuſe the name of good, who promiſes a treaſure in heaven; neither does he quite relinquiſh the title of maſter, who offers to be a conductor to this happineſs. Indeed, he diſcovers the worldly opinion of himſelf, in alledging that goodneſs is only conſiſtent with God. And to the end he may ſhew both himſelf and God to be good, he executes the offices of goodneſs, in laying open the treaſures of heaven, and affording himſelf a director to them. Since, therefore, he refuſes neither the name of good, nor the honour of being called maſter, but only reproves the faith of him, who could think no farther of him, than what his own low ſentiments ſuggeſted; we learn hence, what he meant by his anſwer to his Apoſtles in another place, who call'd him maſter: for he ſays, You call me maſter and lord, and bleſs me; I am ſo indeed. And in another place he ſays, Do not be called maſters, for Chriſt is your maſter. Where maſter being pronounced with faith, he commends it, and owns the name. (Hillary, book 9. De trinitate.) The old and more correct copies of this Goſpel prefer this reading, Why ſpeakeſt thou to me concerning good, there is but one good: But the ſenſe is the ſame. Altho' this young man acknowledged no more to be in Chriſt, than what was in common with other men; yet he was in hopes, by his directions, to arrive at the poſſeſſion of that good, which is obtained in the life eternal; as if he only wanted one to ſhew him the way to that, and for the reſt he was able to manage himſelf. Thus believing he called Jeſus good maſter, that is, the diſcoverer of good. But Chriſt, oppoſing this miſtake of his, and willing to ſet before us an example of his modeſty, ſays, that there are not many fountains of good, but only one, which is God; ſhewing hereby, that 'tis not enough to have good laid open to us, unleſs God illuſtrate the mind, and give additional ſtrength thereto. Which makes me wonder the more, that there ſhould be perſons to traduce the memory of the Chriſtian writers of thoſe ancient days, as if they extolled the abilities they poſſeſs'd, as flowing from themſelves, and not from God. But far otherwiſe was the inſpiration of thoſe moſt holy men, by whoſe learning and doctrine, on the one hand, and by their blood, on the other, the Chriſtian religion was eſtabliſh'd. The Jews and Aſſyrians commonly called God One, without any other addition. Chriſt ſays, that God is the fountain of the true good; thereby to let the young man underſtand, who had ſtill a deſire to purſue virtuous ways, but confided too much in his own ſtrength, that this real good was not ſo much to be learnt by mere aſking for it, but that it ought rather to be acquired by ſupplication and prayer. (G.)

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. He ſaith unto him, Which? Jeſus ſaid, Thou ſhalt do no murder, Thou ſhalt not commit adultery, Thou ſhalt not ſteal, Thou ſhalt not bear falſe witneſs. Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Thou ſhalt love they neighbour as thy ſelf. The young man ſaith unto him, All theſe things have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet? Jeſus ſaid unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and ſell that thou haſt, and give to the poor, and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven: and come and follow me. But when the young man heard that ſaying, he went away ſorrowful: for he had great poſſeſſions.

If thou wilt be perfect.] To trace the notion of the word perfect, or perfection here, we muſt conſider what is meant, by entering into the kingdom of heaven, as mentioned ver 23. For it is evident, that refuſing to comply with the condition, which Chriſt required of the young man, in order to his being perfect, doth alſo exclude him from entering into this kingdom, or, which is all one, make him incapable of enjoying it. Now, as this kingdom of heaven ſignifies that crown of eternal life and bliſs, which was this young man's aim, ver. 16. ſo, the entering into this kingdom, is the complying with the condition, which Chriſt requires; and, conſequently, his going away from, ver 22, or forſaking, Chriſt, which was occaſioned by the greatneſs of his riches, is the very ſame with the rich man's not being able to enter into this kingdom. ver. 23. This is alſo clear from the queſtion and anſwer which follows ver. 25. where, when the diſciples aſk, who then can be ſaved? Chriſt's anſwer is, by looking upon them, &c. acquainting them thereby, that they were examples of this poſſibility; perſons capable of this ſalvation, this entring into the kingdom of heaven, as having performed the condition, which was required of them to qualify them for it. So that it ſeems neceſſary to conclude from theſe premiſſes, that the word perfection, here ſpoken of, means chriſtianity itſelf, and that in a very eminent degree; and that the condition, which is here required, ſignifies the matter of command, and not the councel barely, to which he who will not aſcend, as the young man here, cannot be called, or deemed a Chriſtian, nor can attain to that bliſs, as it is now propoſed to us under the Goſpel. From hence it follows not, that no man is to be ſaved, or to be accounted a Chriſtian, but only he who ſells all that he hath, and gives it to the poor, and ſo follows Chriſt; for Chriſt hath given no ſuch command, in any other place, for all men to do ſo: Beſides, this command, which is here given to the young man, and the like, in ſome degree, to the diſciples, to leave their nets, that is, their whole eſtates, and follow him, obliges none, but thoſe, to whom it was given. The truth is this, that he, who ſets his affection upon any thing more than Chriſt, is no Chriſtian; and that whatſoever Chriſt ſhall, at any time, require of me, either, by an explicit command, as here, or, by his providence, by making it impoſſible for me to preſerve my fidelity to him, or my obedience to any known command of his, without parting with my wealth, I muſt impartially perform it, though it be with the loſs of my eſtate, or even of my life; and if I do not reſolve, and undertake to do ſo, I cannot be ſaved; I am no Chriſtian; or, if, after I have vowed it (as every Chriſtian doth in his baptiſm, vowing there, that whenever the world comes in competition with Chriſt, to forſake the world, and follow Chriſt) I do not perform it in the time of trial, I forfeit the privileges of Chriſtianity; and all title to happineſs. This is the very thing that makes it ſo difficult, nay, almoſt impoſſible, for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven, becauſe, the rich man repoſes his confidence in his wealth, and depends upon them as his felicity, placing his heart in the midſt of his treaſure. (G. and H.) The Romaniſts, on this text, ground the vows of a monaſtic life, and other fooleries, which are not only raſh, but ſuperſtitious, and contrary to ſcripture. (V.)

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26. Then ſaid Jeſus unto his diſciples, Verily I ſay unto you, that a rich man ſhall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven. And again I ſay unto you, It is eaſier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. When his diſciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, ſaying, Who then can be ſaved? But Jeſus beheld them, and ſaid unto them, With men this is impoſſible, but with God all things are poſſible.

It is eaſier for a camel.] The Jews had a common proverb among them, that an elephant cannot paſs through the eye of a needle, to ſignify the moſt impoſſible thing; thus it is ſaid in the Babylonian talmud, perek Haroc Barachoth, “ perhaps you are one of “ Pombeditha (which was an academy of Jews in Babylon) where “ they can make an elephant paſs through the eye of a needle;” intimating hereby, that they were a pack of bravoes and boaſters, that would pretend to act impoſſibilities; and 'tis ſaid alſo in Ge“ mara, “ there is no elephant that enters by the hole of a nee“ dle.” Now Chriſt was pleaſed to change this proverb, from an elephant, which was a beaſt that few had ſeen, to a camel, which was very common in Syria, and whoſe bunch, on his back, hindered him from paſſing through a narrow entrance. But there is ſomething further to be obſerved in this point, and that is, that Phavorinus, on the word Camelos, ſays, that 'tis not only the name of that beaſt, but it ſignifies alſo “ a cable, where“ with mariners bind their anchors,” and cites this paſſage of the goſpel, as peculiar to that ſignification. So ſays Theophylact, “ that it is a cable which ſailors uſe to throw their an“ chors with.” Could we find other authors of the ſame opinion as to this word, the conjecture of this gentleman would be vaſtly ingenious. But this word, from which, very likely, the Engliſh cable came, by a ſmall variation of (m) into (b), is by Suidas, and the ſcholiaſt of Ariſtophanes, written with an (Iota) Camilos: So, indeed, Heſychius writes it, and, from him, it is that Phavorinus commonly borrows it. Therefore this being the only place which Phavorinus cites, 'tis more poſſible, that it was but a conjecture of that Grammarian, and, conſequently, of no more authority than ſuch. For he, not being acquainted with that proverbial ſpeech among the Jews, which we have acquired a better notion of from their writings, preſumed upon this bold interpretation. However, the application of this proverb to the rich man's turning Chriſtian, or entering the kingdom of heaven, is to be extended no further, than to mean the greatneſs of the diſtance, from one of theſe conditions to the other, by reaſon of the rich man's hopes and confidence, being ſo contrary to thoſe of the Chriſtian, and ſo perfectly irreconcileable with them. This is ſo far affirmed by Plato, who ſays, that 'tis impoſſible to be exceeding good, and exceeding rich, which made Celſus, a great enemy of Chriſt and his doctrine, ſay, that this ſpeech of Chriſt was but a corruption of what Plato had ſaid before. (H. and W.) Many are of opinion, that theſe words do not refer to the beaſt, called a camel, but to the word camelus or camilus, which ſignifies a mariner's rope; for we find in Theophylact, Euthymius, and Phavorinus, this word tranſlated a thick cable, which ſailors uſe to caſt their anchors with. However, the reader is left at his own liberty to conſtrue the word here a camel; becauſe the more received acceptation of it inclines to that, Chriſt mentioning the camel's paſſing through the eye of a needle, as the Talmudiſts do the elephant's paſſing by the hole of a needle, ſeems to point out the type of ſome impoſſibility. Chriſt, indeed, here makes uſe of camel inſtead of an elephant. But I muſt own that the greater analogy being between a cable and a thread, which uſually is drawn through the eye of a needle, I am induced to think the cable is rather intimated here; nor indeed, is that Jewiſh proverb any way different to this, which the learned Buxtorf acquaints us with out of Moed katon, where 'tis ſaid; “ As difficult is the paſſage of the ſoul out of the body, as “ that of a cable, through a narrow hole:” So that the Syrians and Arabians very juſtly underſtand the word here, not for a camel but for a cable. (V).

With God all things are poſſible.] God, when invoked with humility, can, by his providence, or by the influence of his grace, ſet rich men at liberty from the contagion, which riches bring along with them. This very often happens to be the caſe, not only of thoſe who give univerſally what they have to the poor and needy, but alſo of thoſe who do ſo particularly. (G.) Becauſe God is able, by his Grace, to make thoſe, who are rich, not to be over ſollicitous, either about preſerving what they have, or acquiring more riches; neither to ſet their affections too eagerly upon them, nor to boaſt of them, nor to put too much confidence in them; for rich men labour under extreme difficulties as to their ſalvation, becauſe they confide ſo much in their temporary wealth and poſſeſſions. (V.)

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30. Then anſwered Peter, and ſaid unto him, Behold, we have forſaken all, and followed thee; what ſhall we have therefore? And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Verily, I ſay unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of man ſhall ſit in the throne of his glory, ye alſo ſhall ſit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael. And every one that hath forſaken houſes or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands for my names ſake, ſhall receive an hundred-fold, and ſhall inherit everlaſting life. But many that are firſt, ſhall be laſt; and the laſt ſhall be firſt.

In the regeneration.] The Greek word rendered here Regeneration properly means a new or ſecond ſtate. The followers of Pythagoras uſe it for the return of the ſoul, eis geneſin, when that ſoul, which was once in him who is dead, comes back to life again in another body: But ſacred writers make uſe of it to mean the reſurrection; whether that of the future, being of body and ſoul, or that which Chriſt is pleaſed to make preparatory thereto, the ſpiritual proſelytiſm, expreſſed by that verſe in Titus iii. 5. Not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us, by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the holy Ghoſt; and from hence 'tis uſed for Baptiſm; being ſet, by Phavorinus, to ſignify holy baptiſm. But, by the ſame analogy, it may point out that ſecond or new ſtate, mentioned by Iſaiah, that age to come, or that ſtate of the church under Chriſt, or his ſpiritual kingdom, beginning at the reſurrection of Chriſt; and this, either in regard of Chriſt's reſurrection, which is the beginning of it, and is properly enough called, the new birth of Chriſt, or elſe in reſpect of all other things becoming new; meaning, that the Gentiles are received into the church, and the Jewiſh prieſthood and ceremonies aboliſhed. The ſitting on ſeats, and judging the twelve tribes, mentioned here, is an expreſſion, taken from the chief of the tribes among the Jews, who had a dignity inferior, but next to the regal power, in which Chriſt was inthroned by his aſcenſion. We may trace, from the gift of the keys, but more chiefly from what is added ver. 20, upon this occaſion, what this dignity was to be. There, we find, that the ſons of Zebedee, or their mother in their behalf, having built an expectation, of ſome earthly grandeur, upon the promiſe, which Chriſt, at this time, made them, particularly of that grandeur, of the chief of the tribes, petition him, that, in diſpenſing theſe dignities among the twelve, they might have the preeminence above the reſt of the twelve. Upon which Chriſt lets them ſee into their folly, and wrong ſentiments; and ſhews them, that they were no ſort of ſecular advantages or ſuch dignities as would be very deſirable to them, which were likely to devolve upon them by this means. Now 'tis ſomewhat evident, from this anſwer of Chriſt to his diſciples, that the judicature, here ſpoken of, refers to the church of Chriſt, which Auſtin affirmeth. But becauſe St. Paul affirms this likewiſe of the Saints, that they ſhall judge the world; and becauſe St. Luke joins herewith the eating and drinking at his table in his kingdom; and becauſe Mark, beſides mentioning the reward in this time, meaning the world, takes notice alſo of the world to come, and everlaſting life; 'tis, therefore, the moſt ſafe to interpret this judging here, of the power and authority of the Apoſtles in the church of Chriſt, yet, at the ſame time, ſo as not to exclude the future dignity which is hinted tacitly they ſhould enjoy. (G. and H.)

Shall receive an hundred-fold.] We have, in the Alcoran, a paſſage, very agreeable to what is here ſaid; “ They who lay out “ their riches in the way of God, are like a grain of corn, which “ ſhall ſhoot out ſeven ſtalks.” Now ſuppoſing that ten corns are within each of theſe ſeven ſtalks, the amount will be ſeventy fold, as Matthew acquaints us in his 13th chapter. But ſuppoſing there are fourteen or fifteen in each, as is no way unlikely in the moſt fruitful ground, then the increaſe will be an hundred fold, which, being the proportion of the moſt fruitful harveſt, is there ſet down as the harveſt of the Chriſtians, and that even in this life. (H.) Mark explains this paſſage thus —— He ſhall receive an hundred fold now in this time, houſes, and brethren, and ſiſters, and mothers children and lands, with perſecution, and in the world to come eternal life —— Hear what Gregory in his 18th homily upon Ezekiel, ſays. “ By the hundred-fold is ſignified great perfecti“ on, neither does any holy perſon ſo relinquiſh earthly things, “ that he may poſſeſs them in this world in a larger increaſe: be“ cauſe every one who leaves the earth with an earthly appetite “ ſtill hovering in his mind, cannot be ſaid to leave, but covet, “ it: neither will he, who leaves one wife, receive an hundred in

" her ſtead: But by the number (hundred) is ſignified perfection,
" becauſe, every one, who abandons his temporary and worldly
" goods for the name of God, not only receives this perfection
" of mind in this world, as never to covet again thoſe things,
" which he deſpiſes, but alſo the glory of eternal life in the " world to come; ſo that he hath received the hundred-fold
" back, which he gave, who, having received the ſpirit of per" fection, covets not the things of this world, though he enjoys
" them not. For that man may juſtly be ſaid to be poor, who " wants that, which he hath not; yet he who has not, and ſtill
" remains ſatisfied, is a rich man in himſelf. Poverty, indeed,
" conſiſts in the poorneſs and want of the mind, not in the " quantity of what is poſſeſt. For he who can make himſelf ſa-
" tisfied in his poor condition, is, in fact, a rich perſon. (V.)

Many that are firſt, &c.] Q. d. Many, who are firſt in this world, by reaſon of their various titles and dignities, ſhall be laſt in the age to come, and, on the contrary, many, who are laſt in this world, ſhall be firſt in the age to come, and the firſt in glory: Theſe words ſeem to be ſpoken by our Saviour, to remove that wonder and amazement, which the Apoſtles and others, who had relinquiſhed all to follow him, might conceive when he told them of their judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael, that is, all the people that were to be judged. (V.)

CHAP. XX.

The labourers in the vineyard. The evil eye. Chriſt foretells his own paſſion. The ſons of Zebedee. Chriſt teacheth his diſciples to be lowly. The cup. Chriſt our miniſter. Two perſons blind.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. FOR the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is an houſholder, which went out early in the morning to hire labourers into his vineyard. And when he had agreed with the labourers for a peny a day, he ſent them into his vineyard. And he went out about the third hour, and ſaw others ſtanding idle in the market-place. And ſaid unto them, Go ye alſo into the vineyard, and whatſoever is right, I will give you. And they went their way. Again he went out about the ſixth and ninth hour, and did likewiſe. And about the eleventh hour he went out, and found others ſtanding idle, and ſaith unto them, Why ſtand ye here all the day idle? They ſay unto him, Becauſe no man hath hired us. He ſaith unto them, Go ye alſo into the vineyard, and whatſoever is right, that ſhall ye receive.

About the third hour.] That is, about the hour, which we commonly call nine o' clock in the morning. The Jews divided their days into twelve hours, the firſt of which began at ſun-riſing, the twelfth at ſun-ſetting: Now theſe twelve hours were diſtributed into four parts, at equal diſtances from one another; and theſe parts, again, were called firſt, third, ſixth, and ninth, each of which conſiſted of three hours, and had its name from the hour to which it immediately followed. (V.)

Whatſoever is right.] When we hire perſons to perform a piece of work, we generally uſe two ways in doing it, either by paying down the price before-hand, or by giving an indefinite promiſe to pay what ſhall be right. Now the mentioning theſe two ways of hiring, does not ſeem at all unneceſſary in this place, becauſe the reward of obedience, which was propoſed under the Diſpenſation of the Covenant, made on Sinai, was certain and fix'd, was definite and obvious to the ſenſes, being the happy promiſe of the land of Canaan, long life, and other particulars, which the law propoſed: whereas, under the diſpenſation of the new covenant of Sion, the hope of thoſe who obey, is not fix'd in things that are diſcernible, but purely in the goodneſs of God, from which we truſt to obtain thoſe things, which neither eye hath ſeen, nor ear heard. (G.)

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. So when even was come, the lord of the vineyard ſaith unto his ſteward, Call the labourers, and give them their hire, beginning from the laſt unto the firſt. And when they came that were hired about the eleventh hour, they received every man a peny. But when the firſt came, they ſuppoſed that they ſhould have received more, and they likewiſe received every man a peny. And when they had received it, they murmured againſt the good man of the houſe, Saying, Theſe laſt have wrought but one hour, and thou haſt made them equal unto us, which have borne the burden and heat of the day. But he anſwered one of them, and ſaid, Friend, I do thee no wrong: didſt not thou agree with me for a peny? Take that thine is, and go thy way: I will give unto this laſt, even as unto thee. Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own? Is thine eye evil becauſe I am good? So the laſt ſhall be firſt, and the firſt laſt: for many be called, but few choſen.

Is it not lawful for me to do what I will with mine own?] Thus ſuch as are importunate are rejected. Tho' other reaſons may be aſſign'd, in behalf of the divine diſpenſation, beſides that of, Sic volo, ſic jubeo, " My pleaſure is ſuch, my command is ſuch." But this is cuſtomary with God; he frequently ſatisfies the counſels and deſires of thoſe, who addreſs him with humility and veneration, when the contumacious, by right of his empire and authority, are commanded ſilence. (G.) Chriſt teaches us, by theſe words, That God, in thoſe things which he is pleaſed to execute, acts as the moſt abſolute and unlimited Lord; that his will is his juſtice, and the rule of all equity; that he does not always perform a thing, becauſe we ſhould think it juſt, but purely becauſe we ought to think that it is ſo; and becauſe he, who does nothing but what is the reſult of the moſt conſummate wiſdom, is pleaſed ſo to will or command it. Whence, as the revealed will of God in the law is therefore juſt, becauſe it is his will, and the reſult of his infinite wiſdom; ſo his ſecret will is therefore perpetually juſt, becauſe it is his will, and always annexed to his immenſe wiſdom. Thus Auſtin very appoſitely ſpeaks, in his ſecond book, chap. 18. of the merits of ſinners: " Wherefore God is pleaſed to work a refor-
" mation in ſome, and on others, according to the meaſure of his
" averſion, to inflict puniſhment; yet no body can, with any ſhew
" of reaſon, object againſt his mercy in conferring a benefit, nor
" juſtly ſpeak againſt his veracity in exerciſing his authority, or re-
" venge, as we have an example in theſe workmen of the Goſpel,
" to ſome of whom he gave the hire that pleaſed them, to others
" the ſame, but what did not pleaſe them; yet no body can juſtly blame his conduct in this particular, becauſe the purpoſe of his more ſecret juſtice is confin'd entirely to himſelf. (V. and A.)

So the laſt ſhall be firſt.] Q. d. They, who are firſt in mens opinion, ſhall be the laſt before God; and, on the contrary, they who are laſt in mens opinion, ſhall be the firſt in God's ſight, both in dignity, holineſs, and merit. The laſt are here called the reprobate Jews by God, who have received the temporal hire, which was promiſed by Moſes: the firſt are called the Gentiles elect, who receive the everlaſting hire, which is promiſed by grace. 'Tis very evident from Luke xiii. 18. that the laſt mean here the reprobate Jews, who are expelled. Thus in the 5th Chapter, in the foregoing, the leaſt in the kingdom of heaven is ſaid to be he, who ſhall not be in the kingdom of God; tho' others ſay, he who is contemptible in the preſent church, meaning, according to both conſtructions, who deſerves not the enjoyment of the kingdom of heaven. By a like phraſe, below, chap. xxi. 31. the publicans, and harlots, are ſaid by Chriſt to go into the kingdom of God before the Phariſees, becauſe they believed on John, when the Phariſees neither believed, nor repented; where, we muſt take it for granted, is ſignified, that the publicans and harlots ſhall enjoy the kingdom of God, when the Phariſees ſhall be refuſed admittance. Thoſe words in the parable, give them their hire, beginning from the laſt unto the firſt, may induce us to underſtand, that, in the day of judgment, thoſe are firſt to be rewarded, who ſtand the laſt in mens opinions, and are by them derided and ſcorned, and that the reprobate are to meet with their deſerved puniſhment, as Chriſt ſufficiently ſhews below, chap. xxv. ver. 34, and 47. Our Saviour, at the ſame time, informs us, that all who labour in the church are not equally approved by the father of the family, as to the pains they have taken, but only ſuch, who, having been choſen in Chriſt, before the beginning of the world, have continued holy and pure in his ſight in charity. Thus Dionyſius Petavius, with a great deal of truth and learning, aſſerts, that the end and ſcope of this parable is purely deſigned to ſhew us, that the means of obtaining the kingdom of heaven, and our ſalvation, are not to be determined by mens opinions, but by the ſole and gratuitous will of God, and according to his own free pleaſure: And that the way of its adminiſtration bears no analogy to the uſe and cuſtom of man's government on earth. And that this is the ſenſe of this parable, the ſame gentleman proves from this clauſe in it; For many be called, but few choſen. Hence it is clear, that the choſen only are ſet againſt the reprobate; and that this place does not refer to the greater, or leſs degree of glory of the choſen. But Chryſoſtom, in interpreting this parable, adviſes us not to be too nice in ſearching every word of it, but only to direct our ſcrutiny to the deſign; and when we have found that, to proceed no farther in our inquiry. Whence the ſame Petavius acquaints us, that what is mentioned in this parable, of one peny being given to all alike, of the inequality of the work of the labourers, of the complaint of thoſe who were hired firſt, and other circumſtances of the ſame kind, is only done to adorn and ſet it off, to let all underſtand, what the Apoſtle ſays, and what Auſtin ſo frequently throws at the Pelagians; By grace you are ſaved through faith, and yet this not of your ſelves, for it is the gift of God, that none ſhould boaſt of works. Now a good life, which is rewarded with eternity, is the grace of God, and eternal life is freely given, becauſe it is freely given to whom it is given. But altho' Chriſt's intention, by this parable, is to teach us, that their ſalvation is freely given, who obtain a bleſs'd immortality; yet he chiefly alludes to the abdication of the Jews, who, according to the order of their call, and to the adoption of the Gentiles in their room, were the firſt; ſo that neither thoſe who are rejected, nor thoſe who are called, can complain of God, with whom dwells no iniquity. (V. and B.)

Is thine eye evil, becauſe I am good?] The word render'd good here, hath a peculiar meaning in this and ſome other places, and ſignifies bounty or liberality. Thus, in this paſſage, the Maſter is ſaid to be good, becauſe he beſtow'd upon him, who had been but one hour in the vineyard, as much hire, as was the wage for the whole day. Though this action could be conſtrued no injury to ſuch as had ſuſtain'd the labour of the whole day, becauſe they received the full hire they had contracted for, yet, it appears, they murmured about it. Now, to ſpeak the truth, there ſeems ſome difficulty, how to reconcile this with God's rewarding every man according to his works, which is every where ſaid of him, and his giving a more liberal harveſt to him that ſoweth plentifully, than to him who ſoweth leſs plentifully. The method to remove this difficulty, muſt be by taking notice, that this parable, which Chriſt makes uſe of here, was a parable which the Jews had in common among them; ſo that if Chriſt made uſe of, or referr'd briefly to any part of it here, the moſt certain way will be, to ſupply it by the authors among them who have fully ſet it down. Now we find this in the Jeruſalem Gemara, or Talmud, Cod. Berachoth, where mention is made of a king, and labourers, whom he had hired, one of whom receiv'd, for a ſmall time, the wages of the whole day, which made the reſt uneaſy, and in a murmuring manner tell him, “we have labour'd, ſir, all day, and this “man hath not wrought above two hours of the day, and yet, “hath received his hire in peace,” which means, he hath receiv'd the full hire of a day for that ſmall time. To this complaint the king makes this anſwer. “That the man, in that two hours, “hath done as much work as you have done all the day.” Thus we find it plain, that the ſtreſs of the buſineſs is put upon the extraordinary diligence of thoſe, who came in late, which God is pleaſed to reward as fully as the whole day's labour of the others. Beſides, God was not bound by contract with theſe as with the others, but only by a promiſe of giving them what ſhould be right, which means, of dealing juſtly with them. But although the ſtreſs of Chriſt's anſwer or reaſon ſeems, in this paſſage, to be entirely grounded on the free will and liberality of the Lord, and not upon the extraordinary diligence of thoſe, who came in late, yet this other reaſon is to be ſuppoſed here alſo, as being not excluded by the former, any more than God's rewarding according to works, is excluded by his being merciful. But 'tis alſo poſſible that Chriſt might have mentioned it here, though it be not ſet down here for the ſake of brevity. (H.)

Many be called, but few choſen.] The word choſen denotes that which is extraordinary, or remarkable, in any thing, whether with regard to it's own quality, or to the eſteem of others. With reſpect to eſteem conſult Iſaiah xlii. 1. Now as the word call has its degrees, ſo has choſen, being ſometimes taken in a more lax ſenſe, as in Pſalm cv. 6. cvi. 5. Sometimes more ſtrictly, as in Pſalm cvi. 23. 2. Sam. xxi. 6. Sometimes choſen implies devout and holy men, as in Iſaiah lxv. 9, 23. And this ſignification, which alſo agrees with this place, is the moſt receiv'd in the Books of the New Teſtament. Thoſe are diſtinguiſh'd by the word called whom God favours with the evangelical vocation; and thoſe, by the word choſen, who, being call'd, come, and carry themſelves agreeably to their vocation. (G.) 'Tis worth our time to be at the pains of examining the different conſtructions of the words called and choſen, as they occur in the Old and New Teſtament, which, for once and all, we ſhall ſet about here. Now call and called are much the ſame in the New Teſtament, and will help us to find out the ſignification of both. If we refer to the Apocrypha, and to the 3d book of the Maccabees, where we meet with them both together, it will prove an uſeful riſe; called there ſignifies gueſts invited to a feaſt. But, in the Greek tranſlation of the canonical books of the Old Teſtament, called hath another meaning; for example, thoſe men, who were choſen by Adonijah to be of his party, are nam'd, 1. King i. 49. The called of Adonijah, not for any reaſon of being invited to a banquet, but for their adhering to him. For, in the ſame manner, thoſe whom he choſe out to be his confidents, are term'd the two hundred called men. 2 Samuel xv. 4. Thus the word called, as yet, means no more than ſuch as are pitched upon, either to receive ſome extraordinary favour or kindneſs, or elſe to be employed in ſome extraordinary places or poſts of truſt. But beſides this conſtruction, there is another, which is, that the word ſignifies to celebrate, or holy. Thus we frequently meet, in the book of Exodus, and in Leviticus, with the phraſe called holy, that ſuch a day, the ſeventh, or the like, ſhall be the called, or the ſolemn, holy; holy, meaning a day dedicated to a ſeperate uſe, to the ſervice, and worſhip of God, and the ſolemn, or called, an extraordinary feſtival, a known day, diſtinguiſhed by God with that privilege above others; and both put together implying a ſolemn holy, or an holy ſolemnity, not an holy convocation, I apprehend, as our Engliſh reads. Thus far will the Old Teſtament lead us into the ſenſe of this word. In Romans ix. 11. God's calling is ſet to ſignify his peculiar favour, contrary to doing any thing on intuition of merit; and Romans xi. 19. it means his favour in granting the terms of ſalvation, and place of repentance unto the Jews, and is join'd with his gifts, or graces, particularly, with his promiſe to them, that they ſhould not utterly be deſtroyed, and the way to heaven, which is the knowledge of Chriſt, ſhou'd not be hindred them. In 1 Cor. i. 26. it ſignifies that invitation to Chriſt, which chiefly brought in thoſe who were of the pooreſt ſpirits. So, in Epheſ. i. 18. and iv. 4. the phraſe, the hope of his calling, is the hope that reſults from the mercy of God in revealing his ſon to them, or, poſſibly in a paſſive ſenſe, the hope that was conſequent to their belonging to Chriſt, as being chriſtians. So, 2. Tim. i. 19 the holy calling is the honourable condition of being chriſtians, through the free mercy of God, in revealing his ſon to us, not upon the intuition of any merit of ours, but by his own free undeſerved grace. So, 1. Cor. i 24. the called, being oppoſed to infidel Jews and Greeks, are ſervants, and followers of Chriſt. In this place 'tis evident that called belongs to the notion of entering into Chriſt's ſervice in his vineyard, and choſen to ſome extraordinary diligence, or excellence, which is conſequently entitled to a reward. Nay called may refer to the favour of being called before others, or preferred before others in that reſpect, while others lie idle a great while, becauſe they are not called, but, on the other hand, choſen may refer to ſuch, as are entitled to the reward promiſed by God, which we find was as fully granted to them who came late to the vineyard, as to thoſe who appeared there the firſt; and this diſcovers, that they who came in late, ſuſtain'd as much fatigue, for the time, nay, more than the others did; that beſides many of thoſe, who were firſt called, namely, the Jews, appeared not at all, and conſequently, were not entitled to a reward. By what hath been already ſaid, may be found out the meaning of the word called in the ſeveral places of the New Teſtament. We will now touch a little upon the word choſen or elect. To begin with the Old Teſtament firſt. The Hebrew word, which muſt principally be conſidered, means to approve, examine, and chuſe. And therefore Prov. vii. 3. where our Engliſh renders, the Lord trieth the hearts, the Septuagint read hearts choſen or elect before the Lord. And from hence they make the word to ſignify any choice perſon, fit for an employment, eſpecially for war, and from thence, is uſed 1 Mac. iv. 1. for a choice party, a thouſand of the choice, or beſt, horſemen. So, in Exodus it is ſaid, choſen chariots, and ſo, the left handed men, who were ſuch excellent archers, are, Jud. xx. 16. called choſen men. Beſides, the word ſignifies a young man; who is the moſt capable of military, and ſuch like employments. Thus, 1 Samuel viii. 16. we render your goodlieſt choſen or young men; and the word, in Deut. xxxii. 25. is clearly taken for young men, in oppoſition to maidens. But the conſtruction, that is moſt primitive and literal, is that of choice, or choſen, as it ſignifies the beſt, and thoſe, who are found upon experiment to be fit to be preferr'd before others, as every choſen man in Iſrael, 2 Sam. vi. 1. And David gathered together all the choſen men in Iſrael, or all who were capable for the militia. 'Tis true indeed, that the word, by a metalepſis, came, at firſt, to ſignifie a young man, becauſe the age was determined; after which, and not before, a man was thought fit for that employment, and ſo the choice men, and thoſe of the militia, were, conſequently, thoſe of ſuch an age: and therefore when Joſhua Numb. xi. 28. is called a ſervant of Moſes, the Septuagint render a choice perſon about him. Thus again the word came from men to be applied to things, as Gen. xxiii. 6. In the choice of our ſepulchres; but, ſays the Targum, in the fairneſs, meaning, in the beſt of them. So, Deut. xii. 11. your choiceſt vows. So Iſaiah xxii. 7. the choiceſt valleys. And ſo Eccleſ. the choiceſt myrrh. There are abundance of other paſſages, that might be produced, but we purpoſely omit them for the ſake of brevity. As the word, frequently ſignifies in the Old Teſtament a Soldier, ſo it is taken in the New, in an evangelical ſenſe, for one of Chriſt's militia, that is, a believer, a chriſtian, a faithful ſervant of his, as ſuch are, who differ from unbelievers. In ſhort, the word means generally ſomething that is excellent, ſomewhat of eminence above other men, and of difference from them, as the believer or chriſtian excells and differs from all thoſe who are not ſo. (H. W. V. and S.)

Ver. 17, 18, 19. And Jeſus going up to Jeruſalem, took the twelve diſciples apart in the way, and ſaid unto them, Behold, we go up to Jeruſalem, and the Son of man ſhall be betrayed unto the chief prieſts, and unto the ſcribes, and they ſhall condemn him to death, And ſhall deliver him to the Gentiles to mock, and to ſcourge, and to crucifie him: and the third day he ſhall riſe again.

And Jeſus going up to Jeruſalem.] Namely, from the city of Ephraim, for, Chriſt, as John acquaints us in his 11th chapter, two days after he had heard of Lazarus being ſick, returned again into Judæa, and came into the city of Bethany, about fifteen furlongs from Jeruſalem, where he rais'd Lazarus, who had been dead four days, to life again. This was no ſooner made known to the prieſts, and phariſees, but they aſſembled together, and took councel againſt Chriſt. Our Saviour, having notice of their deſign, and the ſteps they were taking, withdrew into a part of the country, not far from the deſart, into a city called Ephraim, where he ſtay'd with his diſciples, till he went up from thence to Jeruſalem, there to celebrate the laſt paſſover of his life; of which going up Matthew takes notice in this place. We may believe that, during this journey of his up to Jeruſalem, thoſe circumſtances happened, which are recorded by Luke chap ix. from the 51ſt verſe, to the 57th, of Chriſt's being repulſed out of the city of the Samaritans, which occaſioned thoſe words of Luke, until the days of his aſſumption were compleated, which ſufficiently make it evident, that this journey of his was not a great way diſtant from ourLord's death,which was the beginning of his aſſumption: for to be aſſumed means no more than to be taken up to God. But,beſides this Luke,ſays,that he ſtedfaſtly ſet his face to go up to Jeruſalem, which diſcovers the firmneſs and reſolution of his mind, who was going to an unavoidable death. However, it muſt be confeſt, that it was no direct way to paſs through Samaria, from Ephraim, which ſtood between Jericho and Samaria, tho' Chriſt might have a great many reaſons inducing him to travel as he did. Why Luke took no notice of this particular,a reaſon is aſſign'd for it by a perſon of learning; who ſays "That Luke, having acquainted us with two very ſingular and remarkable pieces of advice; one of which was to exhort his Apoſtles to put from their hearts the thoughts of ambition, the other to avoid envy, believ'd it very ſeaſonable to add a third, which was againſt revenge. (V.)

They ſhall condemn him to death.] That is, they ſhall pronounce him guilty of death, tho' they ſhall not give the determinate ſentence over him. In this particular, the Jews themſelves were under a reſtraint. From whence John takes notice, that, when Pilate permitted them to judge, and puniſh Chriſt, according to their own law, the very perſons, who had ſtrove to ſtone the woman, taken in adultery, and Chriſt himſelf, and who afterwards ſtoned Stephen, made anſwer, It is not lawful for us to put any man to death. That the ſaying of Jeſus might be fulfilled, which he ſpake ſignifying what death he ſhould dye. (V.)

And ſhall deliver him to the Gentiles.] Pilate, with all the judges, and guards about him, is to be underſtood here. Chriſt diſcovers, in this place, the indignity of the deed they were going to commit, in making uſe of the aſſiſtance of thoſe perſons to deſtroy him, whoſe very touch they themſelves avoided. (G.) Chriſt here acquaints his diſciples with the ſentence, that was to be paſt upon him by the Gentiles, and the puniſhment he was to ſuffer, which was the being faſtned to the croſs, a puniſhment not cuſtomary among the Jews, as Caſaubon, in his 16th exerciſe againſt Baronius, chap. lxxvii. endeavours to prove by three arguments. The firſt is the teſtimony of the Rabbins, who affirm, in expreſs words, that crucifixion was a Roman puniſhment, and unknown to their nation. The ſecond is drawn from the antient conſtitutions themſelves of the Jews, which the Rabbins alſo alledge, to add the greater veracity to their own opinion. For no more than four ways of puniſhment, in capital caſes, as uſed by the Jews, which were ſtoning, burning, beheading and ſtrangling, are to be met with in any of the antient fragments of their doctors, which are contained in their Talmudic Pandects. Be this as it will, it appears that thoſe, who had ſuffered the puniſhment of ſtoning, were, for the ſake of exhibiting more ignominy, hung up for a few hours, purely to be expoſed to the ſun, and the eyes of mankind, which the Jews accounted the worſt evil imaginable, becauſe of the dreadful words, pronounced by God in Deut. xxi. 23. Curſed is he that hangeth on a tree. We are told by Philo, that the ſame kind of puniſhment was commonly exacted of Homicides, though, according to the Rabbins, Homicides were not ſtoned, but beheaded Laſtly, the third argument is grounded on a particular, that there is no word in the antient Hebrew language, which ſignifies the croſs properly called ſo, nor any word, that peculiarly means the action of crucifixion, nor any text or argument, throughout the whole Old Teſtament, that can prove this kind of puniſhment to be us'd among the Hebrews, againſt the teſtimonies that are producible out of the Rabbinical writings. For all thoſe are ſaid to be hung on the threſhold, or the croſs, who were hung on high, and had either a ſtake drove through them, or were ſtrangled with a cord, or, being once dead, were expoſed to the ſun, and the eyes of mankind, for the ſake of more ignominy: whence all theſe words, threſhold, croſs, and the like, uſed in the Vulgate, and other verſions of the Bible, mean no more in the Hebrew text than a tree. (V.)

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. Then came to him the mother of Zebedee's children, with her ſons, worſhipping him, and deſiring a certain thing of him. And he ſaid unto her, What wilt thou? She ſaith unto him, Grant that theſe my two ſons may ſit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left in thy kingdom. But Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, Ye know not what ye ask. Are ye able to drink of the cup that I ſhall drink of, and to be baptized with the baptiſm that I am baptized with? They ſay unto him, We are able. And he ſaith unto them, Ye ſhall drink indeed of my cup, and be baptized with the baptiſm that I am baptized with: but to ſit on my right hand, and on my left, is not mine to give, but it ſhall be given to them for whom it is prepared of my Father. And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation againſt the two brethren. But Jeſus called them unto him, and ſaid, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exerciſe dominion over them, and they that are great, exerciſe authority upon them. But it ſhall not be ſo among you: but whoſoever will be great among you, let him be your miniſter. And whoſoever will be chief among you, let him be your ſervant. Even as the ſon of man came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter, and to give his life a ranſom for many.

Ye ſhall drink indeed of my cup.] When we meet the cup mentioned in the New Teſtament, we underſtand it for Chriſt's paſſion, according to that phraſe. Father, if it is poſſible, let this cup paſs from me. James, the ſon of Zebedee, drunk of the cup of martyrdom,in being beheaded by Herod: John, on the contrary, drunk of the cup of confeſſion, which the three children in the fiery furnace likewiſe did, though he made no ſacrifice of his blood; for eccleſiaſtical hiſtory informs us, that this ſame John was thrown into a cauldron full of boiling oil, there to obtain the crown of Chriſt; but, coming out unhurt, was immediately baniſhed to the iſland of Palmos. (Jerome.) I am more of opinion that the word cup here ſignifies, in a lax ſenſe, the heavier ſufferings of our Saviour, than his death in a ſtrict conſtruction; and I am the rather induced to this, becauſe it anſwers better to what followed. For that James was beheaded is indiſputable; but ſeveral openly declare againſt John's ſuffering the ſame cataſtrophe: Neither, indeed, does what Chriſt ſays, Are ye able to drink of the cup that I ſhall drink of? lay any impediment in the way of this conſtruction; for, I take it, that thoſe words ſufficiently refer to ſome heavier ſufferings that were to be ſuſtained. (G.)

It is not mine to give.] Theſe words have been expounded by many, but the beſt interpretation of all, in my opinion, is that of Epiphanius Her. 69. of Ambroſe, in his 5th treatiſe of faith, chap. ii. and of Cyril of Alexandria, book x. of his Theſaurus, chap. v. Theſe fathers ſay, that the ſtreſs of this paſſage does not lay in theſe words, It is not mine, but in the pronoun you; that Chriſt does not make any compariſon between himſelf and his Father, as if he had thought fit to ſay, that he was not able to give that which his Father was, becauſe, had he been minded to expreſs himſelf thus, he would have ſaid, It is not mine to give you, but my Father's. On the contrary, Chriſt makes a compariſon between the ſons of Zebedee, and thoſe who were predeſtinated to that glory, which Zebedee's ſons aim'd at: q. d. It is mine to give you what you ask, but not to you, but them for whom it is prepared of my Father; for "what is prepared of the Father, ſays Auſtin, in his firſt book of the Trinity, chap. 12. is alſo prepared of the Son, becauſe the Father and the Son are one." (V.)

The princes of the Gentiles, &c.] Q. d. Do not ſhew any reſentment, becauſe they aim at the principal places in my kingdom; for let me acquaint you, theſe are attended with no external ſplendor, no riches, nor pleaſures, which are the dazling things to which the princes among mankind commonly direct their aim. On the contrary, he who deſires the loftieſt place in my kingdom, ſets his deſires on dangers, diſadvantages, and ſlavery; ſo that, if you will but juſtly weigh things, what they endeavour to obtain, will appear not worthy of your envy. Thus the following words were pronounced, in a ſolemn manner, to the prince of the captives at Babylon: "That he took care not to elate himſelf; that he was veſted with a duty, rather than power; and that, from that day, "he was to begin to be a ſervant to all" (G.)

Let him be your ſervant.] The Apoſtles are commanded not to aſpire to dominion and authority; on the other hand, they are enjoin'd ſubmiſſion: "There is a chief prieſt, or faithful ſervant of "Chriſt, ſays Bernard, whom he himſelf hath appointed, not to "exerciſe dominion over his flock, but to afford them meat; not "to command, but to diſpenſe." Thus alſo Chryſoſtom, in his 25th homily upon 1 Cor. beautifully expreſſes himſelf: "This is "the rule of Chriſtianity, this the exact definition of it, to con"ſult the publick benefit." And again, in his third homily upon the Acts of the Apoſtles, he ſays: "By laws and commands all "things are performed;" meaning, among princes; "but here," that is, in the government of the church, "no ſuch things are re"quired; neither is it lawful to urge authority, or inſiſt upon peremptory commands." Which Gregory Nazianzen, in his apology, witneſſes in much the ſame words: "That is our principal law, and "which our Saviour himſelf hath eſtabliſhed, not to feed his flock "with compulſion, but to ſuffer them to eat peaceably, and with "a willing and free mind" Now the principal difference between the regal, and ſacerdotal authority, conſiſts in this; the regal is not only entruſted with the preſervation of every individual beneath its government, but alſo with the ſafety of the whole community; whence it follows, that, to preſerve the entire body of the community, it has an indiſpenſible authority over all its ſubjects. Which is quite otherwiſe in the eccleſiaſtic, or epiſcopal government, to which the preſervation of the church is entruſted in ſuch a manner, that neceſſity obliges it to have a principal care over the ſafety of every individual; yet that the whole body of theſe individuals cannot be preſerved by the ruin of any of its members; but, in imitation of our holy maſter, the ninety and nine ſheep are to be left, to the end the hundredth may be brought back into the fold. Beſides, when laws are to be made, which regard the controverſies that commonly happen among ſubjects, princes ſhould have an eye to their advantages, and not ſuffer themſelves to be bound by them, unleſs it ſhall appear, by common practice, that ſuch laws are beneficial and advantageous to the whole community. And if princes have no mind to purſue the laws in common, but to act with the higheſt authority, they may urge the execution of ſuch conſtitutions, as de jure dubio feruntur, and oblige obedience from their unwilling ſubjects, without incurring the imputation of governing tyrannically. For tho' it may happen ſometimes, that the commands of kings may diſcover hard terms in them, yet the very nature and order of governing and obeying requires, that ſubjects comply with the injunctions of their maſters, as the Apoſtles elegantly teach us; Paul, in the 13th of Romans, and Peter, in his firſt epiſtle, chap. ii. But this high authority has no place in the eccleſiaſtic laws, which concur not with natural, or divine law. In which ſenſe we are to take theſe teſtimonies, which I have cited out of Nazianzen, Chryſoſtom, and Bernard, to explain this text now before us. Beſides, there is a very material difference between the puniſhments, which publick laws exact of offenders; and the excommunications, and cenſures, which the church uſes againſt the wicked and impious. For princes behead the adulterer, or the murtherer, that is, the offender is ſure to meet with a puniſhment ſuitable to his crime, and bring down upon his head the authority of his prince. Now the church wants not to exact puniſhment, but only requires to put a remedy to the diſeaſe. So that it inflicts excommunication, not to kill, but to reduce the ſinner to repentance, and, in ſome meaſure, to procure his ſalvation; as Chryſoſtom acquaints us, in his 15th homily upon the ſecond of Corinthians. Whence Theodoret remarks, that the regal and eccleſiaſtic authority purſue two methods; the former exacting ſevere puniſhments of the guilty; the latter endeavouring to bring back thoſe that err to a better courſe of life, and apply remedies to ſuch as are indiſpoſed, eſpecially, at all ſuch times, as the evangelical laws, or the received canons, are tranſgreſſed. (V.)

In this place, after verſe 28. there is a large addition in the ancient Greek and Latin MS. thus tranſlated: "But do ye ſeek to "increaſe from a little, and from the more to leſſen. But when "ye enter, and are invited to ſupper, lie not down in the moſt "eminent place, leſt a more honourable perſon than thou come "in, and he that made the invitation come and ſay to thee, Get "thee lower, and thou be put to ſhame. But if thou lie along in "the inferior place, and one inferior than thou come, then he "that made the invitation ſhall ſay to thee, Come up higher, and "this ſhall be for thy advantage." It appears, from Luke xiv. 8 that ſomething, reſembling this, was ſpoken by Chriſt upon this occaſion. (H.)

Ver. 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34. And as they departed from Jericho, a great multitude followed him. And behold two blind men ſitting by the way-ſide, when they heard that Jeſus paſſed by, cried out, ſaying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou ſon of David. And the multitude rebuked them, becauſe they ſhould hold their peace: but they cried the more, ſaying, Have mercy on us, O Lord, thou ſon of David. And Jeſus ſtood ſtill, and called them, and ſaid, What will ye that I ſhall do unto you? They ſay unto him, Lord, that our eyes may be opened. So Jeſus had compaſſion on them, and touched their eyes: and immediately their eyes received ſight, and they followed him.

Two blind.] One being nobler born than the other, Mark and Luke have taken notice but of one. This occurrence fell out as Chriſt was leaving the town: And what Luke ſays, in his 18th chapter, ver. 35. makes nothing againſt it; for the phraſe to draw near, does not always ſignify a motion to a place, but very often only means the diſtance to it. Such is that expreſſion of Luke, in his 19th chapter, ver. 29. For he was already paſt Bethany. (G.) Becauſe one of theſe blind perſons was nobler than the other, Mark and Luke have only mentioned that one. Mark calls him Bartimæus. All circumſtances put together, ſufficiently declare that three of the Evangeliſts have told this miracle. Neither does what Luke ſay, that this miracle happen'd as Chriſt came near to Jericho, throw any objection againſt it, becauſe the other Evangeliſts affirm that it happen'd as he came from thence: for 'tis poſſible that Luke remark'd the place, where the blind man firſt began to cry out, namely, when he came near Jericho, and that being not cur'd at that time, he appear'd with the other blind perſon again in the way, as Jeſus came out of Jericho, at which time both were called and cur'd. Probably others may give a better anſwer, and ſay, that the word to approach, does not always imply a motion to a place, but very often means only the diſtance, as we find in the ſame Luke, chap. xix. 29. When he approach'd Bethphage and Bethany, that is, when he was near thoſe places; for he was already paſs'd Bethany. (V.)

CHAP. XXI.

Chriſt riding to Jeruſalem on an aſs. He caſteth out the buyers and ſellers. The houſe of prayer. The barren fig-tree. The baptiſm of John. They who do the will of God. Publicans and harlots. God's vineyard. Jews. The maſter's ſon killed by the labourers. The corner-ſtone.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. 5. AND when they drew nigh unto Jeruſalem, and were come to Bethphage, unto the mount of Olives, then ſent Jeſus two diſciples, Saying unto them, Go into the village over againſt you, and ſtraightway ye ſhall find an aſs tied, and a colt with her: looſe them, and bring them unto me. And if any man ſay ought unto you, ye ſhall ſay, The Lord hath need of them; and ſtraightway he will ſend them. All this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophet, ſaying, Tell ye the daughter of Sion, Behold, thy king cometh unto thee, meek, and ſitting upon an aſs, and a colt the fole of an aſs.

And when they drew nigh unto Jeruſalem.] The preſent hiſtory, as is evident from John xii. 12. happened the day before Chriſt's ſupper in Bethany, in the houſe of Simon the Leper. 'Twas at this ſupper that Mary, the ſiſter of Lazarus, anointed the feet of our Lord, which is recapitulated by Matthew in his 26th chapter, and by Mark in his 14th, with a deſign to acquaint us with the reaſon of Judas's betraying Chriſt, who reſented his having loſt the gain, which he was in hopes of making of the ointment, when ſold, John takes notice, in his 12th chapter, of this ſupper of Chriſt in Bethany, and of the anointing performed at the ſame time, and, after his uſual manner, points out ſome circumſtances, which the other Evangeliſts have omitted. Now from what John ſays, that Chriſt came to Bethany ſix days before the Paſſover, and that the day after (which all Chriſtians, from time immemorial, believed to be the Lord's day, as ſome of Auſtin's ſermons, De tempore, and an homily of St. Maximus Turinenſis, who flouriſhed about the year 420, witneſs) a large multitude, which was come to the ſolemnity, when they heard that Jeſus was coming to Jeruſalem, took palm branches and went before him, it appears that Jeſus came on the ſabbath-day into Bethany, which had it been ſix days before the Paſſover, that ſolemnity was celebrated on the Friday, and not on the Sabbath-day; as Rupert and Paul Burgenſis, without any juſt foundation, ſuppoſe: for the ſixth day from the ſabbath, is not the ſabbath-day, but Friday. Neither does that, which the followers of Rupert's opinion object concerning the feaſt of Pentecoſt, prove any obſtruction in this point; that all Chriſtians, as they pretend to ſay, from remoteſt antiquity, believed that it happened on a Lord's day, in the year of the paſſion of Chriſt, as may be evinced from Clement's Conſtitutions, and from Auſtin's 154th ſermon De tempore; conſequently, they tell us, that the firſt day of the feaſt of Azymuth was a Sabbath-day, and not a Friday. For, from the ſecond day of Azymuth, were reckoned ſeven weeks, that is, nine and forty days; but, to make up theſe an entire number, they added a fiftieth; whence came the word Pentecoſt. So that if the firſt day of the Azymuth was a Sabbath-day, as Rupert and Paul Burgenſis contend for, then the firſt day of the ſeven weeks, and, conſequently, the other ſix, began on a Lord's-day, and terminated upon a Sabbath: and after the Sabbath of the ſeventh week, the Pentecoſt immediately followed. But, if the firſt day of the Azymuth fell upon a Friday, all the other weeks terminated upon a Friday; and the Pentecoſt, which was the fiftieth day, proved a Sabbath. This objection, which our adverſaries bring, makes nothing at all againſt the veracity of our own opinion in this reſpect; for it may be ſolved two ways. In the firſt place, we have a doubt, ariſing out of the law itſelf, concerning the certain day of Pentecoſt: for thus we read in Deut. xvi. 9, Seven weeks ſhalt thou number unto thee: begin to number the ſeven weeks from ſuch time as thou beginneſt to put the ſickle to the corn. Now the ſickle was put to the corn the day following the firſt day of the Azymuth, which is called the Sabbath, Levit. xxiii. 15. that a ſheaf of the corn might be offered to God. But, becauſe the Sabbath was next to the firſt day of the Azymuth, it ſeems not likely that the ſheaf of corn was offered then, it being unlawful to put the ſickle to the corn on a Sabbath. If this be granted, our adverſaries objection will vaniſh in courſe, ſince that year, which our Saviour ſuffer'd in, it happen'd on the firſt day of the Azymuth after a Sabbath. Whence it follows, that the offering of the fruits, and the reckoning of the ſeven weeks, were to be thrown upon a Lord's day that year, and, conſequently, that the Pentecoſt happened upon the ſame day. In the next place, it may be alledged, that theſe words of Luke, Acts ii. ver. 1. When the days of Pentecoſt was fully come, contain an Hebraiſm; q. d. when they were come, or, after the days of Pentecoſt were come. Which, indeed, is not without an example: for the Jews are fond of expreſſing themſelves thus, as may be ſeen in the Hebrew in Leviticus xii. 6. Numb. vi. 13. Eſter i. 5. This being allowed, but not granted, that the Jewiſh Pentecoſt happened on a Sabbath, in that very year in which our Saviour ſuffer'd, it may be underſtood that the Holy Ghoſt came down upon the Apoſtles on a Lord's day, becauſe the words, when they were come, conſider'd after the Hebrew manner of ſpeaking, not only ſignify that the days of Pentecoſt were come, but that they were fully and actually paſs'd; ſo that the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt happened on the day after the Jewiſh Pentecoſt. (V.)

Were come to Bethphage] 'Tis not unlikely that Bethphage was the village whither the diſciples were ſent; ſo that Chriſt ſpoke theſe things in a valley, which had Bethany on the one ſide, and Bethphage on the other, tho' Bethphage was the nearer of the two to the city. (G.) This place is taken notice of by the Talmudiſts; probably it took its name from the fountain that was there: for as the Greeks call a fountain pege, ſo the Syrians, Chaldeans, and Talmudiſts term it phege, or phage, whence this name Bethphage came to be compounded, which ſignifies the place of a fountain. (Tremell.) Mark, in his 11th chapter, ver. 1. ſays, When they came nigh to Jeruſalem, and Bethany. And Luke, chap. xix. ver. 29. When he was come nigh to Bethphage, and Bethany. But the modern Greek copies of Mark has it thus, When they were come nigh to Jeruſalem, unto Bethphage, and Bethany. Tho' the Vulgate, and Origen, in Tractat. 14. upon Matthew, do not read Bethphage in Mark, but only Bethany. This Bethany was about fifteen furlongs from Jeruſalem, as John ſays, xi. 18. that is, about two miles. But Bethphage was almoſt under the very walls of Jeruſalem, if we will believe the Jews, who aſſert, that they dreſs'd their evening ſacrifices there; which is alſo proved by the learned Buxtorff out of Bartenora, and by Bartenora out of Moſes Maimonides, who ſpeaks thus: Bethphage nomen erat loci extra Jeruſalem, prope montem templi, in quo coquebant oblationes: "Bethphage was the " name of a place without Jeruſalem, near the mount of the tem- " ple, where they dreſs'd the oblations." In Tract Talmud. Menachoth. But the gloſs of the talmud, in treatiſe Sota, fol. 45. A. and Bava Metſia fol. 90. A. ſays, that all the exterior circumference of Jeruſalem was called Bethphage, and that this name ſignified a girdle. But others will not have phage to mean any ſuch thing; but only the bridle a of horſe. Bochart, who underſtood the languages exceedingly well, is pleaſed that the name of Bethphage ſhould come a Groſſis, or green figs; as Olynthius a city of Thrace was nam'd much after the ſame way: for Groſſis were called by the Chaldeans and Syrians Pagge, or Phage originally. Origen and Jerome, upon Matthew ſay, that Bethphage means the place of jaw-bones. Bernard in his ſermon ad milites templi. chap. xii. the place of cheeks. Tremellius the place of a fountain; and Lewis de Dieu, the place of a flatterer. But of all theſe etymologies Bocharts ſeems the moſt pleaſant. What one Evangeliſt ſays, that this occurrence happened in Bethphage, and another, in Bethany, and a third, in both places, may be eaſily reconciled. For it ſeems that the fields of theſe villages joined to one another, ſo that conſequently, that which was tranſacted in the confines may be ſaid to be done in either place, or in both. (V.).

Go into the village over againſt you.] Thus, below chap. xxvii. 61. the women are ſaid, to ſit over againſt the ſepulchre, when they ſat near it. Thus, Carthage is ſaid to ſtand over againſt Italy. Thoſe interpreters ſeem to trifle, who render it thus, Go into the village which is your enemy, meaning, into Jeruſalem which will withſtand the Apoſtles. Now Jeruſalem is neither a village, nor a caſtle, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Greek text reads it, but is called a city, as well it ought, being one of the largeſt in Aſia. Probably this was the reaſon that the Greek books in Mark read into the city, inſtead of into the village, to the end the city of Jeruſalem might be ſuppoſed to be meant thereby. For my part, I take that to be the village which lay before them, and to which Chriſt pointed with his finger. But the antients are ſilent in this matter. In Nubienſis we have only this account, "Ad duo milliaria a " monte olivarum pagus erat, ex quo adducta eſt Aſina, qua vectus " eſt dominus Chriſtus, cum ingreſſus eſt Jeroſolymam: ſed pagus " ille nunc deſertus eſt, nec ullos habet incolas. Two miles from the " mount of olives was the village, out of which the aſs was " brought, whereon Chriſt rode, when he made his entrance into " Jeruſalem: but the village now is abandon'd and uninhabited." Perdiccas the Epheſian, after having treated of Bethphage and Bethany, ſays, "over againſt this mountain ſouthward is a ſmall " village, which afforded the aſs and its colt. (V. A.)

Ye ſhall find an aſs tied, and a colt with her.] Matthew is the only Evangeliſt who takes notice of the aſs with her foal; the others paſs this by as a circumſtance the leſs neceſſary, becauſe Chriſt only rode upon the colt: What John ſays chap. xii. 14. of Chriſt's declaring he had found a young aſs, by means of his diſciples, ought to be remark'd. Mark and Luke obſerve, that this young aſs had never been back'd by any one, to the end it might redound to Chriſt's honour; and John takes notice, that Chriſt was laid in a ſepulchre, wherein no perſon before had ever been laid. We have an example not unlike this, in 1 Sam. chap. 6, where we read of the Philiſtines ſending back the ark in a new cart, drawn by milch kine, which had never borne the yoke before. So did the Gentiles, in certain ſacrifices, offer up victims, which had never borne the yoke, as may be ſeen in Macrobius's Saturnalia, book 2 chap. 5. As to the riding on an aſs, we are able to quote ſeveral places out of ſcripture, to prove, that the eaſtern people look'd upon it as no diſhonourable action. Let us beſide add what Chryſoſtom, in his firſt homily upon Titus, ſays was objected againſt the biſhop of Conſtantinople, meaning himſelf, as an argument or proof of his exceſſive pride, that he kept ſervants to wait upon him, and rode upon an aſs. I paſs by what the Arabians ſay of their great men being uſed to ride in this manner, and what Leo Africanus mentions, how that the ladies in Ægypt uſe this way of riding at this time of day, as it was formerly practiced at Rome, as may be collected from Lampridius in the life of Heliogabalus. (G. V.)

Sitting upon an aſs, and the colt the foal of an aſs.] The words Subjugale, and Aſinus, in the Greek commentators of the ſcriptures, are ſynonymous terms, and uſed indifferently one for the other. Chryſoſtom cries out here with a great deal of reaſon. "Put the " queſtion to a Jew, and aſk him, what king came riding on an aſs " to Jeruſalem? Be aſſured that he can name none but this only." That this prophecy of Zachariah litterally ſpeaks of Chriſt, appears from the ſequel of his 9th chap. wherein he mentions the peace that is to be reſtored by him, and conſequently, of no farther uſe to be made of chariots, horſes, and inſtruments of war; wherein he ſays, that his empire ſhall reach from ſea to ſea, and to the fartheſt ends of the earth, and that the captives ſhall be redeem'd by him by the blood of the covenant. Now the antient Jews unanimouſly referr this place to the Meſſiah, neither do ſeveral of the moderns run into a contrary opinion. A brief account whereof will not ſeem amiſs in this place. Rabbi Eliezer, in his 31 chapter, ſays, in ſpeaking of Abraham's aſs. "This " ſhall likewiſe be the aſs, whereon the ſon of David ſhall ſit.

Hence it is ſaid by Zachariah chap. ix. 9. “ rejoice greatly, “ O daughter of Sion, &c.” The Talmudiſts, upon the Sanhedrin chap. xi. fol. 98. A. ſay, “ Rabbi Joſue, ſon of Levi, throws “ this objection. It is written of the Meſſiah, Dan. vii. 13. And “ behold, one like the ſon of man, came with the clouds of “ heaven. But it is written, Zach. ix. 9. of the ſame Meſſiah; “ lowly, and riding on an aſs. To this he anſwers, if the Iſraelites “ are worthy, he will come with the clouds of heaven; but if “ they are not worthy, he will come lowly, and riding on an aſs.” Hence aroſe that jeer of Sapores, king of Perſia. “ King Sapores “ ſaid to Rabbi Samuel; you ſaid that the Meſſiah will come “ upon an aſs: I will ſend him a party-coloured horſe, which I “ have.” The Rabbi anſwered him in half Perſian, “ Have you, “ Sir, an horſe of a thouſand colours.” The opinion of this Rabbi was, that the aſs, whereon the Meſſiah was to ride, was not a common one; but a beaſt, beautified with a mixture of ſo many fine colours, that no horſe, either for ſhape or price could come up to it. The jeer of Sapores could not be eluded any other way, but by this artifice. Bnt there was an indiſpenſible neceſſity to lay open the matter juſt as it really was, viz. that the kingdom of Chriſt was not of this world, but lowly, and humble. And in the next page, Rabbi Joſeph ſays, “ O that the Meſſiah would come, and “ that I might have the honour to ſit under the ſhadow of the “ dung of his aſs.” And fol. 99. A. Rabbi Hillel ſays, “ The “ Iſraelites ſhall not have the Meſſiah, becauſe they have already “ conſum'd him in the days of Hezechiah, Rabbi Joſeph ſhall “ reign, do thou pardon Rabbi Hillel, who art his lord. When “ was Hezechiah? In the time of the firſt temple. But Zachariah “ prophecied in the time of the ſecond, and he ſpoke of the “ Meſſiah, as if he was yet to come; Rejoice greatly, O daughter “ of Sion.” Galatinus, in his 4th book, chap 2, cites the following words out of Rabbi Eſaia's book, Bereſchith Rabba, upon Geneſis, cxix. 14. “ That which is written in Iſaiah xxxii. 20. “ That ſend forth the feet of the ox, and the aſs. That ſend forth, “ ſignifies that Elias, of whom it is written Malachy iii. 1. Behold I ſend my angel. The foot of the ox means the Meſſiah the “ ſon of Joſeph, as it is ſaid of Joſeph, Deut. xxxiii. 17. His “ glory is like the firſtling of his bullock. And the foot of the “ aſs ſignifies the Meſſiah the ſon of David, of whom it is written “ Zacch. ix. 9. lowly, and ſitting on an aſs. Midras Koheleth “ cites Eccleſ. i. 9.” The thing that hath been, it is that which ſhall be. “ Rabbi Barcuhias ſaid in the name of Rabbi Iſaac. As was “ our firſt redeemer (Moſes) ſo ſhall be our laſt redeemer (the Meſſiah.) “ How was our firſt redeemer? Such as he is ſaid to be, Exod. iv. 20. “ Moſes took his wife, and his ſons, and ſet them upon an aſs. So “ ſhall be our laſt redeemer, of whom it is ſaid, Zach. ix. 9. “ lowly, and riding upon an aſs.” Theſe are the teſtimonies of the more antient Jews, with whoſe opinions ſeveral of the moderns agree. Rabbi Saadias Gaon, upon Daniel vii. 13. ſays, “ Is it “ not written of the Meſſiah, Zach ix. 9. lowly, and riding on “ an aſs? ſhall he not rather come with humility, than with Equipage, and grandeur?” Rabbi Solomon alledges thus upon Zach. ix. 9. “ That place cannot be interpreted of any other, “ but the Meſſiah; becauſe it is ſaid of him; and his dominion “ ſhall be from ſea even to ſea. Neither do we find during the “ continuance of the ſecond temple, any one who ſhould reign “ like him in righteouſneſs. David Kimchi, in giving an expoſition of theſe very words with relation to the Meſſiah, thus expreſſes himſelf. “ He ſhall be juſt, and by his righteouſneſs, the “ people ſhall be ſaved from the ſword of Gog, and Magog; he “ ſhall be lowly, meek, and good natured, which interpretation is “ given by Jonathan. As Iſaiah ſays, chap. xlii. 2. he ſhall not “ cry, nor lift up, nor cauſe his voice to be heard in the ſtreet; “ a bruiſed reed ſhall he not break. He ſhall ride upon an aſs, “ not through any want, becauſe the whole world ſhall be under “ his dominion, but through his humility, and to acquaint the “ Jews that there was no farther need of horſes or chariots: And “ then adds, I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, and the “ horſe from Jeruſalem.” Rabbi Abarbanel, who followed Solomon and Kimchi, ſays, “ Becauſe the people generally imitate “ the example of the king, when all Iſrael ſhall ſee the Meſſiah “ their king lowly, and ſit riding on an aſs, there will not be one, “ neither in Ephraim (under which name is ſignified the kingdom “ of the ten tribes of Iſrael) nor in Jeruſalem, in the kingdom of “ Judah, who will ride either in a chariot, or on horſeback. “ Whence it comes that he ſays: I will cnt off the chariot from “ Ephraim, &c.”

Notwithſtanding this general conſent, both of antient and modern Jews, with relation to the point now before us; yet there are two Rabbins very much celebrated, who have preſum'd to oppoſe this ſtream of their own writers; but with no good intention, or purpoſe, or for any other reaſon but to wreſt this argument out of our hands, for the manifeſtation of Chriſt. The perſons I point at are Rabbi Moſes, and Eben-Ezra; the firſt endeavouring to prove that the prophecy of Zachariah is accompliſhed in Nehemiah, and the latter, in Judas Maccabeus; I mean what Zachariah foretold of the king, who was to be lowly, and enter Jeruſalem in an humble condition. But the famous Bochart hath convinced both theſe writers of a downright miſtake; as he hath alſo done a more modern author, among the Chriſtians, whoſe name he ſpares, who, in oppoſition to the receiv'd tradition both in the church, and ſynagogue, is pleaſed to advance, that this paſſage of Zachariah, ſhould be underſtood of Zorobabel. As to the Rabbins, juſt mentioned, this learned Gentleman takes the following method to refute them. Whatſoever theſe Rabbins aſſert of Nehemiah, or Judas Maccabeus, that they were either kings in Judæa, or that they were poor, or rode upon an aſs, they ſhall never be able to prove, neither that they liv'd in a profound peace, or that their dominion extended from one ſea to the other, and even to the fartheſt corners of the earth, which are the exact criterious of that king, of whom Zachariah makes mention. Nehemiah, indeed, is ſaid to be a king in Judah, in Nehem. vi. 7. Which Rabbi Moſes lays hold of, to prove his being a king; but herein he diſcovers the height of his ignorance; for he is not really called a king. Sanaballet indeed writes, that Goſſem the Arabian accuſed him of affecting the kingdom, which charge he endeavoured to wipe of by ſaying, “ 'Tis not as you ſay, for theſe are things of your making “ and inventing.” In chap v. 14, Nehemiah clearly acquaints us that he was commanded by king Artaxerxes to be governor of Judah. Let us determine the ſame thing of Judas Maccabeus, and his brothers, Jonathan, Simon, and Hyrcanus, Simon's ſon, who were his ſucceſſors, and who, notwithſtanding their being called kings in the records of the ſecond temple, were yet no ſuch thing, but only prieſts and ethuarchs of the Jews, whence affairs were managed under them by the common conſent of all the people. Thus it is ſaid in 1 Macc. iv. 59. And Judas commanded, with his brethren and the whole church of Iſrael, &c. and in chap. xii. 6 Jonathan the high prieſt, and the elders of the nation, and the prieſts, and the reſt of the people of the Jews, to their brethren at Sparta, Greeting. However, we learn from Joſephus, in his firſt book de bel. jud. chap iii. and 13th of the Antiquities, chap. xix. and from Pſeudo Hegeſippus, out of Joſephus, book 1. chap ii. that Ariſtobulus, the ſon of Hyrcanus, having changed the government into a kingdom, was the firſt who put a diademupon his head.

Now as to the aſs before mentioned, whether it belong'd to Nehemiah, or to Judas, can no where be found. Of Nehemiah, indeed 'tis ſaid, Nehem. ii. 12, and 14. that he rode upon a beaſt, but of what ſpecies this beaſt was, whether it was an horſe, or a mule, or a camel, or an aſs, the ſcripture is entirely ſilent. It appears from the 9th verſe of this ſame chapter, that Nehemiah was the king's butler, who, on his departing to Suſa, receiv'd from him ſome of the officers of the army, and ſome of the cavalry to eſcort him. And 'tis likewiſe told us, chap. v. 17 and 18. That, while the walls of Jeruſalem were building, Nehemiah had every day at his table, an hundred and fifty of the Jewiſh rulers, for the maintainance of whom were daily allow'd one ox, and ſix choice ſheep, and fowls, and, once in ten days, ſtore of all ſorts of wine, and a great many other particulars. And we learn from the 7th chap. v. 70. That he preſented the ſacred treaſure with a thouſand drams of gold, fifty baſons, and five hundred and thirty prieſts garments. Yet this is he, who is ſaid by Rabbi Moſes not to be worth ſo much as would keep an horſe; when we read in this very chapter, verſe 68, 69. that there were above ſeven hundred horſemen among the common people of Iſrael, and near the ſame number of men who rode on mules, or camels. So that Aben-Ezza, juſtly refuting Moſes in this particular, ſays, “ Nehemiah was a Governor, neither wanted he proviſions ſuitable “ to his government, for a great many were daily admitted to his “ table, as we find chap. v. of Nehem. verſe 17, and 18. how “ comes it then that he wanted a horſe?” But what a groſs piece of blindneſs was this in Aben-Ezza, in not ſeeing, that the ſame objection was equally good againſt Judas Maccabeus. Judas Maccabeus was a prieſt of the family of Jehojarib, as we are acquainted from 1 Macc. ii. 1. Whence it was the firſt order of the prieſts, 1 Deut. xxiv. 7. And upon this the perſons, who were ſent by the king, thus addreſt Matathias the father of Judas. Thou art a famous and mighty prince in this city, 1 Macc. ii. 17. Judas Maccabeus, who was his ſon, and ſucceſſor, ſubdued great numbers of enemies, before he came to Jeruſalem, among whom was Appollonius, governor of Syria, and Seron perfect of Celo-Syria; alſo Ptolomeus, Gorgias, and Nicanor, all chief officers ſent by Lycias to give him battle; and at laſt Lycias himſelf, under whoſe government Antiocus had put all the provinces of the empire, from Ægypt to the Euphrates. During theſe ſucceſſes he plunder'd the camp of Appollonius, and the Samaritans, as we read 1 Macc. iii. 12 and took, as it is ſaid, 1 Macc. iv. 23. a large quantity of gold, ſilver, hyacinth, purple, and other riches, out of the camps of Ptolomeus, Nicanor, and Gorgias. We learn alſo from 1 Macc. iii. 41. and 2 Macc. viii. 10. That, after the victory gained over Lycias, ſeveral merchants came with ſums of money to purchaſe the captives of the Jews. Judas Maccabeus, having enrich'd himſelf with theſe ſpoils, recover'd Jeruſalem, re-ordain'd the worſhip of God, purified the temple from the prophanation of Antiochus, and carried new veſſels into it, namely, a candleſtic, table, and altar, all made of gold, according to the account of Joſephus l. 12. c. 12 of his Antiquities. Beſides, he beautified the front with golden crowns, and after the fabric was finiſhed, celebrated a ſolemnity with the people, which continued eight days, during which time, according to the place of Joſephus juſt cited, he omitted nothing that might contribute to heigthen the pleaſure of the ſolemnity; but receiv'd them with magnificent and coſtly ſacrifices, as if it had been an entertainment. Now what perſon, but he, who was blind in his underſtanding, would believe, that ſuch things were performed by him, who was reduced by his neceſſity to change his horſes for aſſes? As Aben-Ezza refuted Moſes, ſo Abarbanel hath refuted Aben-Ezza in theſe words. “ I am “ ſurprized at the ſtupidity, that hath blinded his underſtanding: “ when Judas Maccabeus was never, in the whole courſe of his Life “ once favoured with the name of king, much leſs of a king denominated from Sion, which David aſſumed. Beſides, if the “ prophecy of Zachariah concerned the Maccabees, or the Aſmoneans; what buſineſs had it with the Ephraimites, ſince the “ kingdom of Ephraim was not exiſting while the ſecond temple “ ſtood? Moreover, Judas Aſmoneus, or Maccabeus, did not “ pronounce peace to all nations, neither did his dominion extend “ from ſea to ſea, nor, while he liv'd, was the bow of the king- “ dom of Ephraim eſtabliſhed. For the kingdom of the ten “ tribes, which was called the kingdom of Ephraim, was not yet “ reſtored. So that every word of this paragraph prove him “ groſly out in his opinion.” Thus far Abarbanel, who, as he proves Zachariah's prophecy not yet accompliſh'd, ſuppoſes, nevertheleſs, falſly that the Prophet took notice of the reſtoration of the kingdom of Ephraim, when he ſpeaks not a ſyllable about it, unleſs it be of the bow of Ephraim; Q. d. that it ſhould come to paſs that Ephraim, and Judah, in conjunction together, ſhould engage the Greeks in battle, which was really fulfilled under the Maccabees, under whoſe conduct the Jews ſhook off the Grecian yoke, among whom was Ephraim; neither did Salmanaſar make the whole ten tribes captives, which were named Ephraim. Now it was near a hundred years from the Iſraelites being carried away into captivity, that Joſiah oblig'd thoſe who remain'd to reform; and a great many out of that number chearfully made preſents of money towards rebuilding the temple, and celebrated the paſſover at Jeruſalem with the tribes of Judah, and Benjamin. And under Eſdras and Nehemiah, thoſe Jews who came from Babylon offer'd for a ſin-offering, for all Iſrael, twelve he-goats, and as many heifers for the twelve tribes of Iſrael.

But it is not leſs abſurd to ſay, that the prophecy of Zachariah was accompliſhed in Zorobabel, than in Nehemiah, or Judas Maccabeus. For Zorobabel was a king neither in reality or appellation. The ſcripture, indeed, in Malachy. i. 8. calls him a governor. At Babylon he was the kings body-guard, and, according to Joſephus, the governor of the captive Jews. From hence he was firſt ſent by Cyrus, and afterwards by Darius, the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, into Judæa, to take upon him the government of that province, and rebuild the temple in the king's name, and at his expence. Eſdras, in his 3d chap. v. 2. calls him the prieſt after Joſue, tho' other paſſages give him the precedence; becauſe, among the Jews, the viceroy, and high prieſt, were veſted with a dignity alike, or were upon an equal level of authority. 'Tis in vain to object the paſſages of Jeremiah. xxiii. 5. and Ezechiah xxxvii. 22. and 24. to prove Zorobabel's being called a king. Theſe places do not any way refer to Zorobabel, but to Chriſt, or the Meſſiah, as the Rabbins unanimouſly confeſs, which, for our ſatisfaction, may be ſeen in the treatiſe of the Talmud, entitled Bava Bathra, chap. v fol. 75. So that 'tis ſomewhat ſurprizing to find Theodoret aſſert, that this cited place of Jeremiah was by the thunder-ſtruck Jews (that is ſo confounded and aſtoniſhed, as if they had been thunder-ſtruck,) referr'd to Zorobabel. But Theodoret excellently refutes this opinion, by oppoſing, againſt it, what Jeremiah ſays of a king, which no way ſquar'd with Zorobabel, who never was a king, but only the governor of the people. Beſides, Jeremiah adds, that the name of that king was to be the Lord our righteouſneſs, which both the ſynagogue, and church, by a general conſent, acknowledge was no way applicable to any but the Meſſiah, promiſed in the law and the prophets. The objection, that is brought out of Ezekiel, is ſufficiently clear, from the bare reading of the paſſage, that is referable to none but the Meſſiah. For 'tis promiſed there, that there ſhall be one king and one ſhepherd, in the name of David, who ſhould ſway over all the Iſraelites for ever; when Zorobabel had only the government over the Jews, who returned from Babylon, who were no more than between four or five thouſand perſons, and that for a few years. Moreover, the Hebrew commentators do not pretend to deny that the Meſſiah is pointed out in this place; nay, they ſeem under a vaſt concern for fear Zorobabel ſhould be thought a king; leſt thoſe promiſes ſhould be deem'd by poſterity to be accompliſh'd in him, which the prophets made of the reſtoration of David's kingdom, and thereby make the world believe that no other king was to be expected. Refer to the beginning of the chronicle of the ſecond temple, which treats of this matter.

But ſuppoſing, though not granting, that Zorobabel was eſteem'd a king, Zachariah cannot be ſaid to pronounce thus of him; “ Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Sion, ſhout, O daughter of “ Jeruſalem, behold thy king cometh unto thee,” unleſs we will have the prophet to feretell a thing to come which was already paſt. For Zorobabel was actually come, at the very time when Zachariah wrote, who owns that he wrote his prophecies in the fourth year of king Darius. But Zorobabel, as we learn from Eſdras i, and 2. came to Jeruſalem in the firſt year of Cyrus the Great, which was the year he took Babylon in, and transferred the empire to himſelf, which was twenty five years before, as appears from Joſephus 11 Antiq. chap. 4. and Eſdras iv. 24. It ſeems that when he returned to Babylon, in the firſt year of Darius, to compliment the new king, he was immediately remanded back into Judæa, to rebuild the temple, which had been begun under Cyrus, and interrupted under Cambyſes, who was the Artaxerxes of the Perſians: 'Tis of no ſervice to ſay that Zachariah uſed the future for the preterperfect tenſe, eſpecially, when with all the additions, every thing refers more ſtrongly to Chriſt than Zorobabel; for the words of the prophet are, “ Behold thy king “ cometh unto thee,” meaning, to thy profit and advantage, not his. Our Saviour Chriſt does not come unto himſelf, but unto us. Hence Eſdras ix. 5. “ A child is born unto us, a ſon is gi- “ ven to us.” Hence the Angel ſays to the ſhepherds, Luke ii. 11. “ Unto you is born this day a Saviour, which is Chriſt the “ Lord.” Now the caſe is different with Zorobabel, who came to himſelf; for the rebuilding the temple, was not only for his intereſt, but that of all the Jews. And what is ſaid of this king being juſt, and a Saviour, is peculiarly applicable to Chriſt; whereas of Zorobabel's juſtice we read nothing memorable in ſcripture. Beſides, Jeremiah calls Chriſt the Lord our righteouſneſs. And the Angel ſays in Matthew i. 21. That Chriſt was called Jeſus, becauſe he was to ſave his people from their ſins. And again, Chriſt is more juſtly called poor than Zorobabel, who received large ſums of money, firſt from Cyrus, and then from Darius, to rebuild the temple with. But Chriſt was ſo poor, that he lived a pitiful life on the alms given him by women; neither had he a place to lay his head in. Nay, the qualifications ſo peculiar to him, were meekneſs and humility; that he principally deſires us to learn them from his example, alluding, probably, to this very place of Zachariah. Now any thing like this in Zorobabel, for my part, I muſt confeſs I cannot ſee.

In ſhort, how can what Zachariah mentions of this king, that he was to come riding on an aſs to Jeruſalem, be underſtood of Zorobabel? When was ever ſuch a thing performed by Zorobabel? You will not preſume to ſay that theſe words of Zachariah point out Zorobabel's modeſty, and love of peace. For ſo may Solomon, in the midſt of all his cavalry, be ſaid to ride on an aſs, becauſe never prince or king loved peace more than he. How is it any way likely that, what Zachariah ſays by a phraſe, common to the prophets, thereby to ſignify the ſpiritual peace, which was to be in the church under the kingdom of Chriſt; And I will cut off the chariot from Ephraim, can be meant of Zorobabel? Or how, pray, can Zorobabel be underſtood in what Zachariah ſays of the ſame king, in the ſame verſe; And he ſhall ſpeak peace unto the heathen. Neither can theſe words of Zachariah any way refer to Jeruſalem, as if that city may be ſaid to ſpeak peace unto the heathen in the ſame ſenſe, as Mordecai is ſaid in Eſther to ſpeak peace to all his ſeed, becauſe Jeruſalem under the Maccabees was in alliance with the Lacedemonians and Romans. For, he ſhall ſpeak, is of the maſculine gender in Hebrew, and conſequently referable to the king, and not to Jeruſalem, which is of the feminine; and ſo is the pronoun his in the following phraſe; And his dominion ſhall be from ſea even to ſea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth, is the affix maſculine in the Hebrew (V.)

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9. And the diſciples went, and did as Jeſus commanded them, And brought the aſs, and the colt, and put on them their cloaths, and they ſet him thereon. And a very great multitude ſpread their garments in the way; others cut down branches from the trees, and ſtrawed them in the way. And the multitude that went before, and that followed, cried, ſaying, Hoſanna to the ſon of David: Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, Hoſanna in the higheſt.

Put on them their cloaths, and they ſet him thereon.] There are thoſe who acknowledge in this place an enallage of number, very common in ſcripture, whereby that is attributed indefinitely to many, which is only applicable to one. For example; we read in Geneſis viii. 4. “ That Noah's ark reſted upon the mountains of “ Armenia,” meaning, upon one of the mountains of Armenia, which was Ararat. So Geneſis xxiii. 6. 'tis ſaid, In the choice of our ſepulcres bury thy dead, meaning, in one of our ſepulchres, which ſoever you have a mind to chuſe, bury thy dead. So Matthew xxvi. 8. when his diſciples ſaw it, they had indignation, meaning one of his diſciples, who was Judas Iſcariot. And ſo xxvii. 44. The thieves caſt the ſame in his teeth, meaning, one of the thieves, as is clear from the other evangeliſts. But Theophylact will allow no enallage in theſe words, “ Sedit autem ſuper illis, inquit, non ſuper “ duobus jumentis, ſed ſuper palliis, aut primum quidem aſino, “ deinde etiam pullo inſedit; he ſat upon them, ſays he, not upon “ the two Aſſes, but upon the garments, or he firſt ſat upon the “ aſs, and afterwards upon the colt”. The Syriac ſays, that the diſciples brought to Jeſus the aſs and the colt, and put their garments upon the colt, and that he rode upon it. Some will have it that he rode upon both. (T. J. V.)

Cut down Branches from the Trees.] So we read in the Apophthegnus p p. That as Macarius travelled from Panaremus to the lower deſart. “ The brothers took palm-branches in their hands, “ and went to meet him”. So, to do honour to Fulgentius, the author, who wrote his life, witneſſes of him in theſe words, “ Per “ omnes prolixi itineris vias gaudia majora reperiens, in occurſum “ ſuum populis tendentibus, cum luce ruis & lampadibus, & arbo- “ rum frondibus, He found abundance of more ſatisfaction in all “ the places of his tedious journey which be paſt through, for the “ people throng'd to meet him with flambeaux, and branches of “ trees”. Sirmond, who had it from the mouths of the clergy of Rheims, take notice, in his third volume of the councels of France, that Ebon biſhop of Rheims was honoured in the ſame manner. “ He was receiv'd by Rothald, Simeon, and Lupus, his ſuffragans, “ and by the repreſentatives of all the other biſhops of the dioceſe “ of Rheims, who being unable to meet him through indiſpoſi- “ tion, ſent their letters of excuſe by them. Beſides, all the ca- “ nons and monks of the dioceſe, and an infinite number of per- “ ſons of both ſexes, went in proceſſion to meet him, having bran- “ ches of trees, and flambeaux in their hands, ſinging and chant- “ ing all the way they went. They met him at a conſiderable “ diſtance from the church, whither they conducted him with “ ſongs of praiſe”. (V.)

Hoſanna, to the ſon of David.] The word Hoſanna, which comes from the Hebrew verb and particle, is us'd for the hymn it ſelf; as Io pean among the Greeks. The meaning is this, we ſing this hymn, which forbodes good, to the Meſſiah our King It may be demanded, why the cuſtom of carrying branches, and of ſhouting Hoſanna, which belong'd to the branch-bearers, and happened in September, ſhould now be perform'd in a diſtant part of the year. We muſt conclude from hence, that it was the conſtant belief of the Jews, that their ſolemn days not only contained a remembrance of their departure out of Ægypt, but alſo a preſage of the days of the Meſſiah. So that ſuch part of the people, as adher'd to the miracles of Jeſus, were firmly perſuaded that this perſon was the Meſſiah, as the cuſtoms and words of the branch-bearing truly declares. (G.) Hoſanna is a contraction of Hoſchiah Na which were of common uſe, and chiefly in the feaſts of tabernacles, to put the Jews in mind of ſome paſt benefit, to confirm them in their hopes for the future, and make them acquieſce in the belief they had of the Meſſiah. Hence it came, that theſe holy days, and the branches, which were carry'd in them, were call'd Hoſchana, from the glad and ſolemn acclamation then us'd: as is more copiouſly treated of in the Talmud in book de Feſto tabernaculorum. So that 'tis probable, that the branches, which, for the ſake of honour, they ſtrewed in the way of the Meſſiah, who was our Chriſt, were as ſymbols, that brought into their minds a more ſolemn and ſacred deſire to witneſs the preſervation that was diſcernibie in the Meſſiah. (T.) Elias Levita, in a Treatiſe of his, entitled Thishi, acquaints us, that the word Hoſanna is a contraction of Hoſchiah Na, I beſeech thee, ſave, which was cuſtomarily uſed in acclamations. So that to find out the whole meaning, we are to underſtand, that in all acclamations and inſcriptions in whatever language they were, thoſe, who were the hearers or readers, were left to ſupply what was deficient to make up the entire meaning; thus this acclamation Hoſannah to the Son of David, is to be taken in this manner, “ I beſeech thee, O God, ſave “ the ſon of David;” for the Hebrew word, whence Hoſanna is deriv'd, is frequently conſtrued with a third caſe, as may be ſeen Pſalm 85. But Hoſanna may be taken in another conſtruction, becauſe, as the learned Caninius excellently obſerves, 'tis us'd as a technical noun from the ſame word, in the Rabbinical writings, the plural of which we find in their rituals, where they ſay Hoſchannoth Leſucoth, that is, “ The forms of the hymns that are uſed in “ celebrating the feaſt of tabernacles”, whoſe ſeven days have each their peculiar names, which are call'd Hoſchana, or Hoſanna of the firſt day, Hoſanna of the ſecond day, Hoſanna of the third day, and ſo on. By this appellation the branches of trees were likewiſe called, as thoſe of the palm, olive, and willow, which the Jews were uſed to carry upon their ſolemn feſtivals; repeating all the time the form of Hoſchiah Na, and the like intercalar verſes in which that word was found. So that we are under no reſtraint to conſtrue the word Hoſanna in the acclamation before us, viz. Hoſanna to the Son of David; the ſame as branches, which word is us'd by John in this very hiſtory. And then by ſupplying what is wanting, we may venture to interpret this acclamation thus: theſe palm, olive, or willow branches we bear for the honour of the ſon of David. Now it was a cuſtom among the ancients, when they celebrated ſome of their feſtivals, to carry olive-branches, who, were thence called Thallophori, which means no more than the perſons who carry'd theſe branches. Sometimes of the twigs, leaves, and fruits of ſeveral trees they made a kind of faſciculus, or noſegay, which they carry'd in this manner, much reſembling that, which the Athenians call'd Eireſione; the way of making which we are told from Joſephus in his 3*d*. book of Antiq. chap. 10. was with myrtle, willow, palm, and the fruit of a tree called Perſea. This the modern Jews carry and ſhake about in the feaſt of tabernacles; and call it Hoſchana, or Hoſanna. Epiphanius, in his ſermon in die palmarum, ſeems to allude to the making and ſhaking of this faſciculus; for the ancients, when they ſolemniz'd any pompous ceremony, brandiſhed about this faſciculus, in honour of him, for whom the ceremony was prepared; as the Jews commonly did in the honour of God. (V.) Dr. Hammond's remarks are much the ſame, which we will briefly ſet down here. The word Hoſanna is contracted of Hoſchiah Na, ſave I beſeech thee, a form of acclamation, uſed by the Jews in their feaſt of tabernacles, wherein they likewiſe carried boughs in their hands, and ſung pſalms, or as it is in Maccabees, cry'd Hoſanna. Both theſe were cuſtomary among the Grecians, in any time of ſolemn feſtivity. Elias Levita tell us, that from both theſe put together, it came for theſe boughs to be call'd Hoſanna; and to bind up Hoſanna's, is properly to bind up branches of willow, which were moſtly us'd, where they could be procured; though the branches preſcribed in Nehemiah, are thoſe of olive, pine, and myrtle. This ceremony, thus us'd to Chriſt in a very extenſive manner, with all the ſolemnities of ſtrewing garments, and boughs in the way, as at the inauguration of a King, as in David's coronation, is a token of the peoples acknowledging him to be the Meſſiah, the Shilo, whom they expected. (H)

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. And when he was come into Jeruſalem, all the city was moved, ſaying, Who is this? And the multitude ſaid, This is Jeſus the prophet of Nazareth of Galilee. And Jeſus went into the temple of God, and caſt out all them that ſold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the ſeats of them that ſold doves, And ſaid unto them, It is written, My houſe ſhall be called the houſe of prayer, but ye have made it a den of thieves. And the blind and the lame came to him in the temple, and he healed them.

The tables of the money-changers.] 'Twas cuſtomary, even while the temple ſtood, from a very old tradition, which we read in the Talmud, in tract de ſiclis, on the five and twentieth day of the twelfth month, to place tables in the temple, and appoint money-changers to theſe tables, to the end, that thoſe, who had not an half ſhekel, as was commanded by the law, might be at no loſs of time in finding them with theſe money-changers, or bankers, with whom they either made exchanges, or left pledges. Thus the paying of this tax was not obſtructed; though all Iſrael was enjoined to pay it: With the money ariſing thereby were purchaſed the beaſts for the ordinary and public ſacrifices, and their libations, alſo the ſhew-bread, and wood for the ſacrifices, and for maintaining the perpetual fire. (T. and J.) The Greek word Trapeza, or table, is that from which thoſe, who dealt in returning money, or in bills of exchange, had the appellation of Trapezites, as mentioned Matt. xxv. 27. Thus in Gemara Sanhedrim, chap. 7. ſect. 11. we read; “ I have a great deal of money, but there is no Trapezite, or money-merchant, with whom “ I may place it.” By this the Trapezite ſeems to be that ſort of men, who, as merchants among us, returns money for others to ſome other place, or aſſiſts them in doing ſo, whereby they make ſome advantage to themſelves, and alſo are of ſervice to thoſe for whom they act in this manner. Hence, becauſe the Iſraelites were commanded by the law to come up to Jeruſalem, (let their habitations be at never ſo great a diſtance) and there ſacrifice, and pay the half ſhekel, for the uſe of the temple, theſe Trapezites ſet up their tables in the very temple, purely to merchandize with ſuch as had occaſion for them; after the example of others, who brought oxen, ſheep and doves, to ſell to thoſe who had not brought their ſacrifices with them. Theſe traders are called here Collybiſtes, that is, perſons who dealt in money. Now 'tis a miſtake in thoſe, who, from the nature of this word, are induced to tranſlate it money-changers here, and in John ii. 14. meaning, by money-changers, thoſe who changed one piece of money into another, or greater or ſmaller coins into that of the ſhekel, when the word imports only to deal in money by way of return or exchange; a way of merchandize, giving ſo much money here, for ſo much more in another place, where the thing paid for is not ſo much the uſe of money, as the conveying it from one place to the other, or the ſaving others the trouble of conveyance. (H.) That there ſhould be no want of ſacrifices, in the fore part of the temple, which, 1 Chron. xxvi. 18. is called Parbar, oxen, and ſheep, and doves were put to ſale. Hence Maimonides informs us, in tract de vaſis ſanctuaris, chap. 7. num. 9. That, among the officers of the temple, there was one diſtinguiſhed by the name of Captain over the neſts, or the birds, "Cum quo inquit, paciſcuntur, ut oblationes "aves comparet, has vel iſtas pro ſiclo. Et quiſquis tenebatur vel "turtures offerre, vel pullas columbarum, pretium ad ſanctuarium "affecebat. Et iſte præfectus dabat aves iis, quorum erat offerre, "& cum queſtoribus eas eſtimabat, & poſtquam de pretio con-"venerat, eas inbra triduum dabant. Et ſiqua avis prophana "erat, aut prophana fiebat, antequam offeretur, aliam pro ea "dabat." With whom they bargained for a ſhekel to be ſound "with ſuch and ſuch birds for their offerings. Now whoſo-"ever was obliged either to offer turtles, or young pidgeons, "carried the money into the ſanctuary. And thereupon the "officer gave the birds to thoſe who were to offer them, but "firſt ſet the price with the treaſurers; and, when they had "agreed upon the money to be paid, they gave them within "three days after. But if any of the birds was, or happened to "be impure, before it was offered; another was given in ex-"change." Thus far Mamonides. Jerome has given us a very beautiful deſcription on this place of Matthew, of the ſeveral artifices, invented by the avaritious prieſts, to fill their pockets. Theſe are his words. "In the temple of Jeruſalem, the fineſt "and moſt ſpacious of any in the whole world, whither Jews "aſſembled almoſt from all countries, were innumerable ſacrifi-"ces ſlain, by the preſcription of their law: Theſe were oxen, "rams. he-goats and the like, which were offered up princi-"pally on their ſolemn days. The poorer ſort among them "were not without their offerings of turtles and young pidgeons: "Yet it ſometimes happened, that they who came a great di-"ſtance off, had no victims. The prieſts, therefore, bethought "how to make their advantage of the people. They procured "all thoſe beaſts that were preſcribed for the ſacrifices, and "ſold them to ſuch as had none, and afterwards received them "back when bought. This artifice was never taken notice of, "becauſe of the indigence of the vaſt multitudes who came, "who had not ſufficient to bear their expences, neither had "any ſacrifices, nor ſo much as to purchaſe the birds, or the "leſſer offerings. To remedy this inconvenience, the prieſts "ſet up bankers, to lend them money upon ſecurity. But be-"cauſe the law forbade uſury; and money lent out upon inte-"reſt was thought hurtful, they had recourſe to another de-"vice, which was, appointing Collybiſbe in the room of the ban-"kers. Now Collybiſbe was uſed by them as with us, to ſignify "banqueting diſhes, ſet off with different ſorts of fruits. Thus "becauſe theſe Collybiſbe could not take uſury, inſtead of that "they took different ſpecies of things; as if Ezekiah did not "alſo foretel this, when he ſaid, Uſury and ſuperabundance ye "ſhall not take. Now our Lord taking notice of this way of "merchandizing, or robbing, in the houſe of his father, was "moved in ſpirit, and made a ſcourge, and therewith drove the "multitude out of the temple, ſaying: "It is written, My "houſe ſhall be called the houſe of prayer, but ye have made "it a den of thieves. For he is a robber, who makes lucre "of religion, and whoſe worſhip, is not ſo much the veneration "he has for God, as the opportunity of making his own in-"tereſt and advantage. (V.)

Ver. 15, 16, 17. And when the chief prieſts and ſcribes ſaw the wonderful things that he did, and the children crying in the temple, and ſaying, Hoſanna to the ſon of David; they were ſo diſpleaſed, And ſaid unto him, Heareſt thou what they ſay? And Jeſus ſaith unto them, Yea; have ye never read, Out of the mouth of babes and ſucklings thou haſt prefected praiſe? And he left them, and went out of the city into Bethany, and he lodged there.

Saw the wonderful things, &c.] Many ſuppoſe, that the greateſt miracles that were performed, were raiſing Lazarus from the dead, reſtoring ſight to the perſon who was blind from his birth, the voice of the father being heard at Jordan, and Chriſt's transfiguration on the mount. But for my own part, I take the occurrence here before us to be the moſt wonderful and ſurprizing; that one man, who at this time was contemptible, and eſteem'd by hardly none, inſomuch that he was crucified afterwards, I ſay that one man in this caſe, and while the Scribes and Phariſees were enraged againſt him, ſhould be able, even when they were looking on, with a ſcourge in his hand, to drive ſo vaſt a number of perſons out of the temple, overturn their tables, and ſeats, and perform other things, which a numerous army could ſcarce have done. There was ſomething certainly that appear'd fiery and ſparkling in his eyes; and his aſpect diſcover'd the majeſty of his divinity. Though the prieſts were afraid to lay hands upon him; yet they reproach'd his actions, and made the acclamation of the people, and children, who cryed, Hoſanna to the ſon of David, a matter of charge againſt him, becauſe it was attributed to him as the ſon of God. (Jerome.)

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. Now in the morning, as he returned into the city, he hungred. And when he ſaw a fig-tree in the way, he came to it, and found nothing thereon, but leaves only, and ſaid unto it, Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward for ever. And preſently the fig-tree withered away. And when the diſciples ſaw it, they marvelled, ſaying, How ſoon is the fig-tree withered away! Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, if ye have faith, and doubt not, ye ſhall not only do this which is done to the fig-tree, but alſo if ye ſhall ſay unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou caſt into the ſea; it ſhall be done. And all things whatſoever ye ſhall ask in prayer, believing, ye ſhall receive.

Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward.] Whenever the Lord performs any ſuch thing, either in trees or beaſts; is it our buſineſs to enquire, how the fig-tree came to be wither'd, if it was not the ſeaſon for its bearing fruit? To make ſuch an enquiry as this, argues the greateſt folly: becauſe in things as theſe there can be found no fault, nor any cauſe for puniſhment. 'Tis the miracle perform'd upon them that ought to draw our attention; and the performer of the miracle our admiration. Neither can the creator be thought to deal injuriouſly with the owner, if he makes uſe of his creature as he pleaſes, for the preſervation of others. (S. Thomas) We have a proof in this very thing of the goodneſs of our Lord; for when he is pleas'd to give us an example of the ſalvation, which he procures for us, he diſcovers his power in human bodies; but when he has a mind to give us a repreſentation of the ſeverity, which he will exerciſe on the contumacious and diſobedient, he diſcovers it in the withering of the tree. (Hillary) Chriſt, our moſt merciful Lord, having figur'd out, by innumerable miracles, the benefits that waited for us in the life to come, ſhadows out here, by one ſingle miracle, not in man, but in a tree, the ſeverity of that judgment, which waited for unfruitful men: This was done to acquaint us for certain that the barreneſs of good work will be puniſhed by a withdrawing of God's favour from us. (G.)

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. And when he was come into the temple, the chief prieſts and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and ſaid, By what authority doſt thou theſe things? and who gave thee this authority? And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, I alſo will ask you one thing, which if ye tell me, I in likewiſe will tell you by what authority I do theſe things. The baptiſm of John, whence was it? from heaven, or of men? And they reaſoned with themſelves, ſaying, If we ſhall ſay, From heaven? he will ſay unto us, Why did ye not then believe him? But if ye will ſay, Of men; we fear the people; for all hold John as a prophet. And they anſwered Jeſus, and ſaid, We cannot tell. And he ſaid unto them, Neither tell I you by what authority I do theſe things.

I alſo will ask you one thing.] Chriſt had very juſt reaſons to make no anſwer to their demand. For it was no way poſſible to ſuppoſe they would believe him on ſaying that his commiſſion was from heaven; when they did not believe John, whom yet they were afraid to ſay openly that he was no prophet? (G.)

The baptiſm of John.] 'Tis not call'd the baptiſm of John, as if John was the firſt inſtitutor of it, but becauſe he was the firſt, who was commanded by God to promulgate and adminiſter baptiſm for the remiſſion of ſins; whereas the Apoſtles adminiſtred the baptiſm which Chriſt promulgated, to which the baptiſm of John gave place, by reaſon of the abundance of ſpiritual gifts, which thoſe obtained who were baptiz'd by the Apoſtles. (V.)

Ver. 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. But what think you? A certain man had two ſons, and he came to the firſt, and ſaid, Son, go work to day in my vineyard. He anſwered and ſaid, I will not: but afterward he repented, and went. And he came to the ſecond, and ſaid likewiſe. And he anſwered and ſaid, I go, ſir; and went not. Whether of them twain did the will of his father? They ſay unto him, The firſt. Jeſus ſaith unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, that the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you. For John came unto you in the way of righteouſneſs, and ye believed him not: but the publicans and the harlots believed him. And ye, when ye had ſeen it, repented not afterward, that ye might believe him.

In the way of righteouſneſs.] Underſtand, by the way of righteouſneſs, that doctrine of John, which, by an additional ſign, was called the baptiſm of repentance. For that is the way to true righteouſneſs, which Chriſt teaches us. (G.)

Ver. 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46. Hear another parable: There was a certain houſholder, which planted a vineyard, and hedged it round about, and digged a wine-preſs in it, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country. And when the time of the fruit drew near, he ſent his ſervants to the husbandmen, that they might receive the fruits of it. And the husbandmen took his ſervants, and beat one, and killed another, and ſtoned another. Again, he ſent other ſervants, more than the firſt: and they did unto them likewiſe. But laſt of all, he ſent unto them his ſon, ſaying, They will reverence my ſon. But when the husbandmen ſaw the ſon, they ſaid among themſelves, This is the heir, come, let us kill him, and let us ſeize on his inheritance. And they caught him, and caſt him out of the vineyard, and ſlew him. When the Lord therefore of the vineyard cometh, what will he do unto thoſe husbandmen? They ſay unto him, He will miſerably deſtroy thoſe wicked men, and will let out his vineyard unto other husbandmen, which ſhall render him the fruits in their ſeaſons. Jeſus ſaith unto them, Did ye never read in the ſcriptures, The ſtone which the builders rejected, the ſame is become the head of the corner: this is the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes? Therefore ſay I unto you, The kingdom of God ſhall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. And whoſoever ſhall fall on this ſtone, ſhall be broken: but on whomſoever it ſhall fall, it will grind him to powder. And when the chief prieſts and Phariſees had heard his parables, they perceived that he ſpake of them. But when they ſought to lay hands on him, they feared the multitude, becauſe they took him for a prophet.

The ſtone.] The metaphor is taken from builders, who ſeek for ſtones fit to put in the building, and throw ſuch away as do not ſuit with the places deſigned for them. Yet ſometimes it happens, that the ſtone, which was at firſt rejected, is found afterwards fit to be placed in the corner of the foundation. Thus the ſtone, which the builders at firſt rejected, and which afterwards became the head of the corner, is Chriſt, who was rejected by the builders, meaning, the Scribes and Phariſees among the Jews, who rejected him, as it is ſaid, Wiſd. ii. becauſe he is of no ſervice to us; or, according to Luke xix. we will not have this man to reign over us; or, as John ſays, we have no king, but Cæſar. But theſe Scribes and Phariſees procur'd him to be crucified; yet the ſame Chriſt, by a wonderful and ſudden converſion, is not only received into part of the ſpiritual building, which is the church, but by the ſurpriſing diſpoſition of God, is become the corner ſtone, that is, the ſole foundation of the whole church, which ſtands upon itſelf, thereby firmly joining together the two walls of the church, the Jews, and Gentiles. Now as Chriſt is the corner ſtone, he is conſequently a king, becauſe the princes, and elders among the people, are call'd the corners of the people, by an Hebrew phraſe, as if they were their chief ſupports and foundations. (V.)

The kingdom of God ſhall be taken from you.] Q. d. Becauſe you are going to perform every particular of this parable, by killing the heir of the vineyard, God ſhall reign no longer in you; but the kingdom which you have enjoyed to this time, by his free grace, ſhall be given to the Gentiles bringing forth the fruits of the ſpirit. (V.)

CHAP. XXII.

The parable of the wedding. The call of the Gentiles. The wedding garment. Chriſt is ask'd concerning the tribute of Cæſar, and the reſurrection. The love of God. The love of our neighbour. Chriſt asks the Jews concerning the Meſſiah.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. AND Jeſus anſwered and ſpake unto them again by parables, and ſaid, The kingdom of heaven is like unto a certain king, which made a marriage for his ſon, And ſent forth his ſervants to call them that were bidden to the wedding: and they would not come. Again, he ſent forth other ſervants, ſaying, Tell them which are bidden, Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage. But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his farm, another to his merchandiſe: And the remnant took his ſervants, and entreated them ſpitefully, and ſlew them. But when the king heard thereof, he was wroth: and he ſent forth his armies, and deſtroyed thoſe murderers, and burnt up their city. Then ſaith he to his ſervants, The wedding is ready, but they which were bidden were not worthy. Go ye therefore into the high-ways, and as many as ye ſhall find, bid to the marriage. So thoſe ſervants went out into the high-ways, and gathered together all, as many as they found, both bad and good: and the wedding was furniſhed with gueſts. And when the king came in to ſee the gueſts, he ſaw there a man which had not on a wedding-garment: And he ſaith unto him, Friend, how cameſt thou in hither, not having a wedding-garment? And he was ſpeechleſs. Then ſaid the king to the ſervants, Bind him hand and foot, and take him away, and caſt him into outer darkneſs: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. For many are called, but few are choſen.

Is like.] We are to enquire, whether this be the ſame reading in Matthew, which Luke deſcribes by the name of ſupper? There ſeems, indeed, at firſt view, ſome things that diſagree with one another; for in this goſpel Matthew mentions a dinner, in that of Luke 'tis a ſupper; here 'tis ſaid, that he who came without a wedding-garment, was rejected; there no mention is made of any being repulſed who entered. From whence we juſtly collect, that the preſent church is underſtood here by the wedding; and there by the ſupper, the eternal and laſt banquet: becauſe ſome come into this to go out again; but whoſoever once enters to partake of the other, cannot return back. Now if there be any one who inſiſts that this is the ſame reading, I had rather ſubſide, than any way enter into a diſpute about it. But what one Evangeliſt ſays of a dinner, and the other of a ſupper, carries no inconſiſtency along with it; becauſe it was a cuſtomary thing among the ancients to dine at the ninth hour, ſo that their dinner may juſtly be called their ſupper time. (Gregory, Hom. 38. upon the Goſpel.)

A marriage for his ſon.] Then God the Father made a marriage for God his Son, when he joined him to man's nature in the womb of the virgin; when he was pleaſed, that he, who was God before all ages, ſhould become man in the end of the world. But becauſe this marriage-conjunction was made of two perſons, be it far from our thoughts, to believe, or ſuppoſe, that the perſon of God and man, our redeemer Jeſus Chriſt, was united only of two perſons. We ſay, indeed, that he exiſts of two, and in two natures; but we avoid believing, as a very impious thing, that he is compoſed only of two perſons. So that it may be ſafer to ſay, becauſe the Father made here a marriage for his Son, whereby he joined the holy church to him by the miſtery of his incarnation, that the womb of the virgin was the bed of this bridegroom. (Greg. ibidem.)

Deſtroyed theſe murderers.] With ſword, famine, and peſtilence, as Joſephus acquaints us, in the ſeventh book of his Antiquities; who aſſerts farther, that in the ſiege of Jeruſalem, above eleven hundred thouſand ſouls periſhed, beſides the innumerable havocks and deſtructions which the Jews, both before and afterwards, ſuſtained, who refuſed or neglected to come to the heavenly entertainment prepared for them. Tho' the text ſays, that all this happen'd for the murder'd ſervants of the king, yet it does not deny that the putting him to death was a principal cauſe of their ſufferings, who, under the form of a ſervant, did not ceaſe by that to be equal to the Father. (V.)

The good and the bad.] There was ſome difference among the Gentiles before they were invited to embrace the Goſpel; for ſome entirely abandon'd themſelves to the purſuit of what their own inclinations ſuggeſted; others ſeemed to have nobler ſentiments in view, and to ſquare their lives and actions more conformable to the rule and direction of reaſon. However, all were devoted to the veneration of falſe Gods, and the acquiſition of empty praiſe, yet God forbore to make any diſtinction; but included all, though guilty, in his general pardon, to the end it ſhould appear that he acted by the influence of his free grace, and not according to their works (G.)

He ſaw there a man which had not on a wedding-garment.] What do we think does this wedding-garment ſignify? If we ſay that it means either baptiſm or faith, who came to this marriage without baptiſm or faith? For he who did not believe, was thruſt out of door. What, then, ought we to ſuppoſe this marriage-garment means, unleſs charity? He, who went to the marriage without a wedding garment ſignifies him, who ſits in the church, whoſe faith is dead, and has no charity. Charity is juſtly compared to a wedding-garment, becauſe our maker had this upon him, when he came to the marriage of aſſociating the church with him. 'Twas the love of God brought this to paſs, to the end his only begotten Son might unite to him the minds of the elect. Whence alſo John ſays, "for ſo God loved the world that he gave his "only begotten ſon for us." So that he who came through charity to mankind, diſcover'd that the ſame charity pointed out the wedding-garment. (Greg.)

Bind him hand and foot.] Then ſhall their hands and feet be bound by the ſolemn and dreadful ſentence of the Lord, who would not be bound from the purſuit of wickedneſs by a better courſe of life. Then ſhall miſery and puniſhment bind them, who ſuffered themſelves to be bound by their crimes from the practiſing good and laudable actions. For thoſe feet, which refuſed to go and viſit the ſick, and thoſe hands, which gave nothing to the poor and indigent, are voluntarily bound from executing that which is praiſe-worthy. And they who are willingly bound in their vices now, ſhall be unwillingly bound then in miſery and puniſhment. The ſaying, "that he is caſt into outer "darkneſs," is well applied. For inner darkneſs ſignifies blindneſs of heart, but outer darkneſs eternal damnation. Then ſhall every one be caſt into outer, not into inner darkneſs; and he who voluntarily abandons himſelf now to blindneſs of heart, ſhall be then caſt unwillingly into the darkneſs of damnation; where weeping of eyes and gnaſhing of teeth are ſaid to be; gnaſhing of teeth of thoſe who rejoiced here in gluttoneſs and a riotous way of life; weeping of eyes of thoſe, who gave themſelves up in this world to the purſuit of illegal deſires; for to ſuch puniſhments ſhall thoſe members be doomed, as the vices were which they followed in this life. (Greg.)

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. Then went the Phariſees, and took counſel how they might intangle him in his talk. And they ſent out unto him their diſciples, with the Herodians, ſaying, Maſter, we know tha: thou art true, and teacheſt the way of God in truth, neither careſt thou for any man: for thou regardeſt not the perſon of men. Tell us therefore, What thinkeſt thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæſar, or not? But Jeſus perceived their wickedneſs, and ſaid, Why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? Shew me the tribute-money. And they brought unto him a peny. And he ſaith unto them, Whoſe is this image and ſuperſcription? They ſay unto him, Cæſars. Then ſaith he unto them, Render therefore unto Cæſar, the things which are Cæſars: and unto God, the things that are Gods. When they had heard theſe words, they marvelled, and left him, and went their way.

Their diſciples, with the Herodians.] Some of the Phariſees, who were followers of Judas the Gaulonite, thought it an unlawful thing to acknowledge any other authority but that of God, as in Deut. xvii. 15. This opinion was not a novel one. It was of long ſtanding, and the ſpring of innumerable calamities. 'Tis one thing to draw a foreign yoke upon a man's neck, and another, for the ſake of preſerving life, to ſtoop under ſlavery, or ſuſtain the hard terms already impoſed upon us. Slavery is not removed by expoſing our ſelves to a certain death: For the continuance of life, which affords time for repentance, ſhould be reckoned in the number of the principal advantages of the body. Seneca blames Brutus, for ſuppoſing, that liberty could not exiſt under the government of one man. 'Tis noble to fight for liberty, but when once we have ſurrendred, what's to be done then? Do not thoſe promiſes bind us, which we make through neceſſity in war time? If not, away with the ſanction of all treaties. But here was a long poſſeſſion in the caſe, to diſturb which is always thought unjuſt in public affairs. This very law we find the antient Chriſtians impoſing upon themſelves, namely, to perform loyalty and obedience to him who was head in the government. (G.) We have given Doctor Hammond's remarks upon the Herodians in the foregoing. We ſhall juſt touch upon what Grotius and Du Veil ſay of them. The Sadducees, who were, for the major part, Herodians, were mightily for the liberty of their republic. For, among the ſeveral arguments they made uſe of, they inſiſted upon this, to prove, that their anceſtors believed no rewards and puniſhments after this life; for if ſo, they would never have run to arms ſo often to vindicate their liberty. Nor is it improbable that Herod's ſons, who too openly flattered Cæſar, uſed all their cunning and artifice to gain their private ends, and made uſe ſecretly of this doctrine, thereby hoping, that, one time or other, they ſhould be reſtored to the kingdom by the intervention of the people. (G.) "Cum militibus "Herodis, ut ait Hieronymus, ſeu quos illudentes phariſæi, quia "Romanis tributa ſolvebant, Herodianos vocabant, & non divino "cultui deditos. Quidam Latinorum ridicule Herodianos putant, "qui Herodem Chriſtum eſſe credebant: quod nuſquam omnino "legimus." "With rhe ſoldiers of Herod, according to Jerome, "or with thoſe who were ridiculed by the Phariſees for paying "the tribute, being called Herodians. Some of the Latins ridiculouſly ſuppoſe that theſe Herodians were they who believed "that Herod was Chriſt, which we never found yet." Yet Jerome in his dialogue againſt the Luciferians, attributes this error to the Herodians. Others ſay that the Herodians were ſpies, who took care to fiſh what they could out of the people, and then go and acquaint Herod therewith. That theſe Herodians took Herod for Chriſt is witneſſed by Epiphanius Hæreſ. 7. by Tertullian Lib. de præſcriptione adverſus Hæreticos, chap. 45. and by Philiſtrius in his laſt hereſy which preceded Chriſt. (V.)

What thinkeſt thou?] The Syriac renders it capitation, a tax which was impoſed upon every head by Cæſar's order. Dio acquaints us, that Cæſar commanded this capitation to be collected two ways, on every houſe, and on every head. Now what is ſaid here of the Herodians, I take the pure and genuine ſenſe thereof to be this: That when the Phariſees found they could not, by all the artifice and arguments they could uſe, prove Chriſt a violator of the law, though they were his bittereſt enemies, yet they went and acquainted the ſervants of Herod the Tetrarch with what they had done, purely to bring Chriſt under a notion of having acted againſt Cæſar's authority. That upon this the Phariſees ſent their diſciples to Chriſt, under a pretext of asking his advice in a caſe of conſcience, and that the Herodians ſhould take particular notice of what he ſaid, and therewith acquaint Cæſar. (Junius.) The right word ſhould be rendred Cenſe here: But Mark and Luke call it tribute. Though a Cenſe properly ſpeaking, was a deſcription of how much value every man's eſtate was, or how many acres, or other effects he poſſeſt, from which the modus of fixing the tribute, according to every perſon's ability, had its original; yet in the provinces, the tribute it ſelf was called the Cenſe, which word, though of Latin derivation, we find mentioned three times in the Greek goſpel of Matthew, and but once in that of Mark. Heſychius the Grammarian gives a ſpecial conſtruction to the word Cenſe, calling it the money that was to be paid by the head, which cuſtom began in Judæa, after the deceaſe of Auguſtus, according to Jerome. (V.)

Cæſar.] We have a tradition, that the firſt Scipio Africanus was called Cæſar at firſt, from being cut out of his mother's womb. But this account wants foundation: For we read of a Claudius Cæſar before the Samnite war. Beſides, the etymology of the name is no leſs untrue. The name Cæſar was not given Scipio on any ſuch account, as being cut or exciſed out of his mother's ther's womb. It much rather ſeems to be derived from Cæſo, which word means almoſt the ſame thing. But as Feſtus informs us: " Cæſar, quod eſt cognomen Juliorum, a Cæſarie dictus, " quia ſcilicet cum Cæſarie natus eſt. Cæſar, which is the fir " name of the Julii, takes it name from hair, becauſe he was " hairy when born." The derivation of Cæſar, from a ſlain elephant, which is named ſo in the mooriſh tongue, as the breaker through of an army, (the Arabian Caſſara ſignifying to break through) is too far fetched. (V.)

To God the things that are Gods.] Q. d. O man, as you render to Cæſar his image in the money, even ſo give to God his image in your ſelf. Render, O man, to your creator his own image, reſtore it juſt, not iniquitous, give it humble, not lofty, not abandoned to covetouſneſs, nor defiled with rapine, not born away with the paſſion of anger, not attached to worldly deſires, not given to ſordidneſs, not ſtained with fornication; but ſound with prudence, full of truth, and ſhining with good works, and an exemplary converſation. (Fulgentius, in his ſermon upon the words of Micah, I will tell thee, O man, the thing that is good. &c.)

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33. The ſame day came to him the Sadducees, which ſay that there is no reſurrection, and asked him, Saying, Maſter, Moſes ſaid, If a man die, having no children, his brother ſhall marry his wife, and raiſe up ſeed unto his brother. Now there were with us ſeven brethren, and the firſt, when he had married a wife, deceaſed, and having no iſſue, left his wife unto his brother. Likewiſe the ſecond alſo, and the third unto the ſeventh. And laſt of all the woman died alſo. Therefore in the reſurrection, whoſe wife ſhall ſhe be of the ſeven? for they all had her. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Ye do err, not knowing the ſcriptures, nor the power of God. For in the reſurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven. But as touching the reſurrection of the dead, have ye not read that which was ſpoken nnto you by God, ſaying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob? God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. And when the multitude heard this, they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine.

Sadducees.] We have deſcrib'd above the opinions of this ſect, as Joſephus gave them us; but for the farther information of the reader, we beg leave to add a few more remarks: Rabbi Nathan, in his commentaries of a ſmall treatiſe, entitled The Opinions of the Fathers, writes of the ſect of the Sadducees, that they took their name from one Tzadock, the diſciple of Antigonus, one of the moſt celebrated perſons among the antient Hebrew doctors, who liv'd immediately after Ezra. It was very frequent with this Antigonus to inculcate to his ſcholars that ſaying, which we meet with, in the firſt chapter of this treatiſe, " Ne ſitis ſicut ſervi qui miniſtrant " domino ob conditionem quod accepturi ſint premium. Be not " as ſervants who obey their maſter for hire ". Which words Tzadock miſconſtrued, either through ignorance, or a baſe deſign, drawing a wrong concluſion thence, that as the good had no rewards, nor the bad no puniſhments to expect, man had nothing either to hope for or fear hereafter, but that the ſoul vaniſh'd into air, and the body had no expectation of being reviv'd. Thus Tzadock transferr'd his name, and heretical opinions, to poſterity. Now, nothing in the world could be more conſonant to the law, and to the worſhip of God, than what Antigonus taught his ſcholars, namely, " That God was to be loved purely for himſelf, and embrac'd for that juſtice which he preſcrib'd ". (Trem. & Jun.) See chap. xvi. 8. above, and acts xxiii. 8. where we are to underſtand, by the word Pneuma or ſpirit, that divine inſpiration, wherewith the phariſees juſtly believ'd the prophets were influenc'd by God. The Sadducees admitted of no Apocalypſis, or revelation, but only of that, whereby the law was given, to which the Sadducees paid obedience. But 'tis more ſurpriſing that they denied the exiſtence of angels, ſince they admitted the writings of Moſes, wherein Angels are ſo often mentioned. The anſwer to this, in my opinion, is this, that their ſentiments were the ſame with ſeveral of the Jews, who, as Juſtin affirmeth, believed in his time that angels were the individual and inſeperable virtues of God, which God, whenever he pleaſed, could ſend out of him, or draw back again into himſelf; which opinion the ſame martyr oppoſes with this truth " eſſe angelos qui ſemper maneant & non diſſolvantur. That angels are eternal, and not ſubject to diſſolution ". The Sadducees placed good and evil equally alike in the mere power of man. But Joſephus aſcribes to the opinion of the Phariſees a mixture of fate, and freewill, to which the ſect of the Stoicks came pretty near. (G.)

Whoſe wife ſhall ſhe be of the ſeven.] The Phariſees grounded their hopes of a reſurrection more upon tradition, than good arguments. Hence came ſuch a multitude of different opinions. And as the Talmudiſts imagined banquets to themſelves, whereat they were to eat Behemoth and Leviathan, ſo even at this time of day, they fancy the enjoyment of ſome happy and pleaſant life, not unlike that which they have here on earth So that 'tis not ſurprizing they ſhould perſwade themſelves to a belief of the uſe of marriage continuing hereafter, which romantic whim Mahomet borrow'd from the Jewiſh traditions, as he did ſeveral other things, and inſerted them in his Alchoran. As for the Sadducees, they ſuppoſed that Chriſt thought the doctrine of the reſurrection on the ſame ſuppoſitions, made uſe of by the Phariſees. But hoping to ſail with a ſmooth ſtream, they miſt of their aim, and daſhed againſt a rock. (G.)

They neither marry, nor are given in marriage.] Before Chriſt produces the proofs of that doctrine, which was the ſureſt foundation of true religion, he removes all the falſe ſuppoſitions, on which the Sadducees laid the ſtreſs of their objection. 'Tis cuſtomary in this place to diſcuſs the queſtion concerning the right of parents in placing out or marrying their children. And I cannot ſee what can be alledged to oppoſe or hinder thoſe vows or oaths mentioned Numb. xxx. 14. from being applyed to nuptials and marriage contracts. (G.) Given in marriage, expreſt in the vulgar Latin by the word Nubentur, which the Romans very ſeldom made uſe of in the caſe of the man, properly ſpeaking the phraſe uxori nubere. to be married to a wife, meant that husband who was dependant upon, and, as it were, govern'd by his wife: Hence that of Martial to Priſcus in the 10th Epigram of his 8th Book.

Uxorem quare locnpletem ducere nolim
Quaeritis? Uxori nubere nolo meæ.
Inferior matrona ſuo ſit, Priſce, marito:
Non aliter fiunt fœmina, virque pares.

Is that your queſtion why I will not wed
A wealthy wife to grace my nuptial bed?
Depend; I'll ne'er be wedded to a wife,
For her to govern and direct my life;
But let the woman to the man give way,
When both are equal; both do then obey. (V.)

Reſurrection.] The argument againſt the living of ſouls after death, which ſome take from the paſſage now before us, lies thus: Chriſt, to prove the reſurrection of the dead, makes uſe of the following argument--God ſaith, he is the God of Abraham--long after the death of this patriarch ---- And God is not the God of the dead, but of the living---- Which proof lies thus, if we put it into form:

Abraham's body ſhall riſe.

And likewiſe thoſe of Iſaac and Jacob;

Ergo,
The bodies of the dead ſhall riſe.

To prove the antecedent lies thus;

Abraham ſhall live again now he is dead,
Ergo,
His body ſhall riſe;

To prove the antecedent of this lies thus;

God is the God of Abraham now he is dead.
Ergo,
Abraham ſhall live again now he is dead.

If this antecedent was deny'd, the plain words of ſcripture wou'd then be deny'd, and therefore the argument, or conſequence, or nothing, muſt be deny'd. And this will be made out by the following,

God is not the God of the dead, who are ſo dead, that they ſhall never live again.
Ergo,
It being granted that God is the God of Abraham, ſince the time of his death, it muſt follow, that, though he be now dead, he ſhall live again.

This argument of Chriſt being ſuppoſed to lie in this manner; they who deny'd the reſurrection of the body, might have oppoſ'd againſt it a very ready anſwer; provided the ſoul was deny'd to live ad perpetuum: For their reply might have been thus:

> "The ſoul of Abraham lives all this while ſince his death, "and therefore God's being the God of Abraham, granting him to be the God of none but the living, doth not "conclude that Abraham's body ſhall riſe; for he, who "lives in ſoul may be ſaid to be living, though his body "never riſe.

Now, becauſe 'tis certain, that the argument uſed here by Chriſt was a very good one, concluding unanſwerably what he meant to prove, it does not follow, that the immortality of the ſoul, on the allowance whereof this argument of Chriſt is or may be refuted, ought to be thought a truth. The anſwer to this objection againſt the immortality of ſouls, from this method of Chriſt's arguing againſt the Sadducees, is produced with eaſe, by remembering that the Sadducees, with whom Chriſt diſputed, are not ſuppoſed to grant the immortality of the ſoul, any more than the reſurrection of the body: And, therefore, this argument of Chriſt, tho' it would not be ſufficient proof againſt him, who allow'd the immortality, and continued life of the ſoul, without ever having the body united to it, would, yet, be a good argument, ad homines, againſt the Sadducees, and that would be ſufficient to ſalve the buſineſs. Or, ſecondly, that the reſurrection of the body is a neceſſary conſequence of the immortality of the ſoul; and that the proving the ſoul to live after death is, therefore, uſed by Chriſt, as a ſufficient argument to infer, that the body ſhall alſo certainly riſe again. But this is not all: They, who make uſe of this arguing of Chriſt, to favour their belief of the Pſychopannychia, do miſtake the thing which Chriſt went about to prove againſt the Sadducees: for it being certain that the Sadducees diſallow'd of any other life, but that of man in his mortal ſtate, affirming that there was no ſpirit, no ſoul of man exiſting after death, and, conſequently, that the body rotted, without any hope of riſing again; 'tis as certain, that Chriſt produced his argument out of the law, which was the only ſcripture acknowledged by the Sadducees, againſt this doctrine of theirs in its full extent, not only againſt one part of it, which was the reſurrection of the body. But, beſides this, he proved to them, by a teſtimony of the law, which they could not deny, that there was another life after this. Now 'tis evident, that the queſtion and objection, made by the Sadducees, of the woman's having ſeven huſbands, and alſo of that concerning the body, proceeded from all this, concluding, as far as it could, tho' the argument was very weak and ridiculous, againſt all the notion of a future ſtate: for if the death of the huſband annulled the relation, that was between him and his wife, as it certainly did; and he and ſhe liv'd any way together after this life, the Sadducee thinks that the relation muſt alſo revive; and upon that he grounds his argument, as he likewiſe doth on the ſuppoſition of another life of ſpirits, and ſpiritualiz'd bodies. For if there were theſe relations between huſband and wife in heaven, they would, certainly, be there as well before, as after, the reſurrection of bodies: unleſs the Sadducees believed Chriſt's doctrine to be, that procreation, and the like, which could not be done without bodies, continued the ſame in heaven, as on earth; which no where is evinced to have been, or to be; or that that was the particular thing, which they oppoſed here. (H.)

God is not the God of the dead ---- but of the living.] This argument, which appears ſomewhat obſcure to ſeveral perſons, will be made evident by what the writer to the Hebrews ſays: "But now "they deſire a better country, that is, an heavenly; wherefore "God is not aſhamed to be called their God, for he hath prepared "for them a city." In the firſt place, 'tis to be admitted that the word God, when it has a poſſeſſive caſe after it, ſignifies beneficent. See Levit. xxvi. 12. In the next, we are to add, that as Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, are particularly named, the meaning is, that God is their God in a particular manner, for their faithful obedience. And, in the third place, we are to remark, that they received ſeveral advantages in their lives, tho' attended with a great many difficulties. Hence it follows, that theſe perſons had nothing more excellent conferred upon them in this life, than what was given to other men, for which God might be called their God. So that it remains, that God was their God, not only during their continuance in this life, but alſo when Moſes pronounced theſe words. Beſides, God ſays, that for Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, he will bleſs their poſterity; how much more then may he be ſaid to bleſs them! Now thoſe are not capable of this bliſs, who continue always in a ſtate of death. Wherefore it follows, that they are to be reſtor'd to life, to the end God may be their peculiar God. See 1 Cor. xv. 19. Numb. xxiii. 10. From whence the Hebrew doctors think, that there are certain rewards laid up for the righteous after this life. But 'tis worth our while to inſert here what the Hebrews obſerve, that God, throughout the Old Teſtament, is not call'd the God of any one while living in his mortal ſtate. (G.) Luke adds, chap. xx. 38. for all live unto him, meaning, God, who will ſhortly receive them from death. Chriſt proves not the reſurrection of the dead, which is the hope of Chriſtians, by expreſs words of ſcripture, but makes uſe of argument and conſequence: which method is very frequently uſed againſt the founders of heretical opinions: for when they ſtrive to turn the phraſes of ſcripture into a wrong ſenſe, the true meaning muſt be found out by argument and conſequence. Chriſt, with great wiſdom, infers the reſurrection againſt the Sadducees, from the words of Moſes; tho' the Sadducees endeavoured to make Moſes an adverſary againſt the reſurrection. The force of our Lord's argument conſiſts in this, that Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, are not the names of ſpirits, but of perſons made of body and ſoul, as is obſerved by Irenæus, Chryſoſtom, Theophylact, and Euthymius. So that when God is called the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and at the ſame time the God of the living, it follows, that Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, live unto God. (V.)

Ver. 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40. But when the Phariſees had heard that he had put the Sadducees to ſilence, they were gathered together. Then one of them which was a lawyer, asked him a queſtion, tempting him, and ſaying, Maſter, which is the great commandment in the law? Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy mind. This is the firſt and great commandment. And the ſecond is like unto it, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thy ſelf. On theſe two commandments hang all the law and the prophets.

Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God. Love is an action of the will, which is here ſignified by the heart; for as the corporal heart is the principle of all the corporal motions, ſo the will is the principle of all the ſpiritual motions. There are three principles of action which move from the will; the intellect, which is ſignified by the mind; the vis appetativa inferior, which is ſignified by the underſtanding; and the vis executiva exterior, which is ſignified by fortitude. We are commanded to fix our whole intention upon God, which proceeds from the heart; to ſubdue our intellect to God, which proceeds from the mind; to regulate our appetite, in obedience to God, which proceeds from the underſtanding; and to make our exterior actions obey God, which proceeds from fortitude. The heart refers to the thoughts, the ſoul to life, and the mind to the underſtanding. Some will have the heart to mean the intellect, the ſoul the will, and the mind the memory, or, according to Greg. Nyſſ. the heart ſignifies the vegetable life, the ſoul the ſenſitive, and the mind the intellectual. (S. Thomas.)

Ver. 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46. While the Phariſees were gathered together, Jeſus asked them, Saying, What think ye of Chriſt? whoſe ſon is he? They ſay unto him, The ſon of David. He ſaith unto them, How then doth David in ſpirit call him Lord, ſaying, The Lord ſaid unto my Lord, Sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footſtool? If David then call him Lord, how is he his ſon? And no man was able to anſwer him a word, neither durſt any man (from that day forth) ask him any more queſtions.

What think ye of Chriſt?] Matthew tells this hiſtory, as if Chriſt directed his words to the Scribes and Phariſees; when Mark and Luke, as if he did it to the people. However the matter is all the ſame. We cannot find which of the Evangeliſts preſerves a propriety of ſpeech; but this we can find, that the Jews only ſuppoſed that Chriſt was the ſon of David, without having any knowledge of his excellence, by which he was the lord of David. This is what Auſtin aſſerts, who ſays alſo that it was not the deſire of the Jews, that Jeſus ſhould ſave his people from their ſins, but they wanted him to regain for them the kingdom of Iſrael, which was transferred to foreigners, and to defend them from their viſible enemies. The very Apoſtles themſelves were not entirely free from this opinion and deſire, which was the relick of an idle tradition which the Jews had imbibed from their infancy. This is evident with regard to the Apoſtles; for when they had but a little time before received from Chriſt the power of the Holy Ghoſt which came upon them, whereby he evidenced to them his divinity and immortality; they yet asked him, Lord, wilt thou at this time reſtore again the kingdom to Iſrael, Acts i. 6. (V.)

No man was able to anſwer him a word.] It appears from this paſſage that the Jews firmly believed that David wrote that Pſalm of the Meſſiah, as may be evinced from the antient Rabbins, againſt the objections of their modern Doctors, who falſely aſſert that Melchiſedech, or Eliezer his ſervant, wrote it of Abraham. (V.)

CHAP. XXIII.

The Scribes teaching the people the law of Moſes, who. Phylacteries. Greetings. Shutting the kingdom of heaven. Swearing by the temple. Whited ſepulchres.

Ver, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. THEN ſpake Jeſus to the multitude, and to his diſciples, Saying, The Scribes and the Phariſees ſit in Moſes ſeat. All therefore whatſoever they bid you obſerve, that obſerve and do; but do not ye after their works; for they ſay, and do not. For they bind heavy burdens, and grievous to be born, and lay them on mens ſhoulders, but they themſelves will not move them with one of their fingers, But all their works they do, for to be ſeen of men: they make broad their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments, And love the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts, and the chief ſeats in the ſynagogues, And greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi, But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your maſter, even Chriſt, and all ye are brethren.

Sit in Moſes's ſeat.] 'Tis plain the pontifices and other prieſts are not pointed at here, for theſe ſhould have been principally named; neither is the whole Synedrim meant here; for the Sadducees had as much authority as the Phariſees in that aſſembly. So that it appears from the 8th verſe below, that their Maſters or Doctors are to be underſtood in this place. Now almoſt all theſe Doctors were brought up in the principles and opinions of the Phariſees, and many of them ſat as judges in the grand council of the Jews. Moſes's ſeat, was the ſeat, wherein theſe Doctors ſat teaching and expounding the law, either to the people in public, or to their ſcholars in private. I cannot but think thoſe to be in a miſtake, who poſitively ſay, that the Jews expounded their law in a ſtanding poſture. 'Tis very poſſible, that where any of the people were authorized to interpret, they did it commonly ſtanding, that they might be the better heard by their audience. But the chief of the ſynagogue, or they, who exerciſed the faculty of Doctor publickly, ſat in a chair, like our chriſtian biſhops, and gave expoſitions on the law: However, we will not pretend to deny that they read the words of the law ſtanding, and then ſpoke the reſt ſitting; the wrong uuderſtanding of which difference hath led ſome into a miſtake. (G.)

Heavy burdens.] Thoſe doctors or lawyers, who are men of humanity, will ſtrive to make that thing light which is heavy, by putting a mild conſtruction upon it. The caſe, in this reſpect, was quite different with the Jews: For their doctors, eſpecially the Phariſees, ſtretched every thing as far as it would go, without admitting any exceptions, though never ſo probable. (G.) What theſe heavy burdens were, which the Phariſees impoſed upon men, may be found out of their own writers. Rabbi Joſue, before Chriſt's time, numbers, among ſeveral things, that are pernicious to the world, the plagas phariſæorum, the ſtrokes or ſeverities of the Phariſees; which are mentioned in the Talmud: "By the ſtrokes of the Phariſees, he means ſuperfluous "worſhips and troubleſome rites ſecretly introduced into the "Jewiſh religion." So Maimonides; "They called the additions, "whereby they made the law heavy, ſtrokes or ſeverities. (H.)

Phylacteries.] Chriſt acquaints us, that the extraordinary deſire the Phariſees had to make known their piety to the people, was manifeſt in nothing more than this, that, in the obſervation of ſuch rites, as were of no great moment towards the promoting of religion, but appeared gay to outward view, they arrogated to themſelves reſpect and duty: This is confirmed by our Lord by the example of two rites, one whereof had been received through cuſtom, and the other commanded by the expreſs words of the law. For the fringes or borders were appointed by a ſpecial declaration of God, to be worn, to diſcriminate the Jews from all other nations; but the Tephillin, which the Greeks call Phylacteries, had nothing but cuſtom for their original. The Philactery conſiſted ex literis ſcriptis in membranis tenuiſſimis, of letters written upon the thinneſt parchment: Such as is commonly uſed by the Jews at this time of day: But the perſons pointed at by Chriſt in this place, enlarged the breadth of theſe borders and Phylacteries, a great deal more than what was generally worn. (G.) The Jews made theſe Phylacteries a great part of their religion, though it was a groſs miſtake and impoſition. Upon God's commanding them, Deut. vi. 8. Exod. xiii. 16. "To "bind theſe words for a ſign upon their hands, and as frontlets "between their eyes, and to write them upon the poſts of their "doors and gates," which certainly were no more than figurative expreſſions of what went before; and Deut. vi. 7. "To teach "them diligently unto their children, and to talk of them when "they ſat in their houſes, and when they walked in the way;" the Jews, who were apt to turn all inward piety to exterior ſhew and formality, would needs underſtand this precept in a literal ſenſe, and made ſcrolls of parchment, in which they wrote four ſections of the Pentateuch, 1. the nine firſt verſes of Deut. vi. 11. the nine firſt verſes of Exod. xiii. 3. the eight laſt verſes of the ſame chapter; and 4. the nine verſes, from the 13th to the 22d of Deut. ii. They prepared theſe ſcrolls of parchment with a multitude of ceremonies, and ſeveral decrees, which they made about the creatures, of whoſe skins this parchment was to be made, and about the knives, wherewith it was to be cut, and a great deal more of the like particulars. When they were made, they applied them to their foreheads and wriſts, and called them in Hebrew Tephillin, becauſe the ſpecial uſe of them was in their prayers; and here are termed Phylacteries, either becauſe they were to aſſiſt them in keeping the law in their remembrance, or becauſe they were a kind of amulet or charm, againſt faſcinations and diſeaſes; againſt the malus genius, ſays Paul Fagius. Thus were the Phylacteries made, by the Jews, with a carnal view, and accompanied with ſeveral ridiculous ceremonies; yet impoſed upon God, as if he had poſitively commanded them. Now the Phariſees, who were the moſt exact people among the Jews, endeavouring at all times to outvye others in the way of performance, and, at the ſame time, the moſt oſtentatious of any, and always aiming to be diſtinguiſhed from the reſt by ſuch marks of ceremonial piety, wore thoſe of a greater breadth than any others, and are here ſaid properly to do this, that they may be looked on by men. (H.) The Phylacteries were two ſcrolls, or ſchedules of parchment, having written within them certain chapters of the divine law, which were put into caſes covered over with black leather, and having long ſtrings faſtened to them, wherewith the Jews, on their ſolemn days, at ſuch times as they made their morning prayers, tied one to the forehead, and the other on that part of the left arm over againſt the heart. They ſuppoſed, that the law commanded them, to bind the head and arm with theſe amulets, to put them in mind, that as children were to direct all their actions in obedience to the will of their parents, ſo the body and ſoul were to be uſed in ſubjection to the pleaſure of God, and all their actions and thoughts to the preſcription of the law. Indeed, we read in Exod. xiii. 16. theſe words. "And it ſhall be for a token upon thine hand, "and as frontlets between thine eyes." But 'tis more obvious in Deut. vi. 8. "And thou ſhalt bind them for a ſign upon thine "hand, and they ſhall be as frontlets between thine eyes" (Lewis de Compeigne de Veil.)

Borders.] Theſe were the fringes which God commanded the people to uſe, Numb. xv. 38, "and wear on the borders of their "garments, with a blew ribbon on the fringe. The uſe of this in "that place is aſſign'd thus. 1. that they may look upon it, and "remember all the commandments of God, and do them; 2. that "they ſeek not after their own hearts, and their own eyes, after "which they uſe to go a whoring;" meaning, that they take not up the cuſtoms and faſhions of other nations, to which they had been very prone, from their departure out of Ægypt, and are therefore, forewarned by this precept to keep themſelves a peculiar people to God in exterior forms, and, conſequently, in inward purity of heart: in order whereto the other was deſign'd, thereby to diſtinguiſh them from all other nations of the earth. By this it appears how the cuſtom of the fringes differ'd from that of the Phylacteries. This latter was entirely a tradition, and invention of the Jews, on a miſtake of the command of God, which they enlarged to vanity and ſuperſtition, but the firſt hath a truth in God's precept; was really commanded by him towards a pious end, which being forgotten, they ſatisfied themſelves with an exterior obſervation of them; which the Phariſees made as pompous as they were able, labouring to exceed all other men in the bigneſs of their fringes, wherein they plaid an extraordinary piety, thinking by this method, to diſtinguiſh themſelves from all other people, and from ſeveral of their countrymen, who wore them not ſo large. And upon this Our Saviour looks upon them in this place, as a number of vain-glorious ſeperatiſts. (H.)

The uppermoſt ſeats in the ſynagogues.] It was a cuſtom, of very old ſtanding, among the Jews, for thoſe who had no place in the ſynagogue, to ſit diſtinguiſh'd according to their years; which was preſerv'd by the Eſſenes, who were the leaſt tainted with counter opinions of any of the Jewiſh ſects. And, indeed, the ſame practice prevail'd in the firſt ages of chriſtianity. But in many places a cuſtom got ground, which was to honour thoſe with the more diſtinguiſh'd ſeats, who had acquir'd any character for their learning,and to this the paſſage here before us refers. This was tolerable in ſome meaſure; for Chriſt did not object againſt the order of ſitting, but the deſire of gaining the higheſt places; but the matter of complaint was, that neither virtue or learning could at length keep what they had enjoy'd, but riches obtain'd the honour, and this even in the chriſtian churches, which James reprehends with that ſeverity it juſtly merits. (G.)

Rabbi Rabbi.] The meaning of Rabbi was more extenſive than Rab; neither was any one diſtinguiſh'd by this appellation, but only they who had receiv'd a teſtimony of their learning by the impoſition of hands. The Jews in their greetings us'd the word Rabbi twice. (G.) This name began in Palæſtine, a little before Chriſt's coming, to be attributed to perſons of learning, who were made doctors or maſters by impoſition of hands. Though the Babylonian Jews did no call their doctors by this appellation. (V.)

But be ye.] Thoſe men of learning among the Jews, who had acquir'd the name of doctors, arrogated to themſelves an authority to teach what they thought proper, and to force a belief of their opinions. But the followers of Chriſt ought not to inſtruct the people in points as neceſſary,which are the reſult of their own opinions,but in ſuch only as Chriſt himſelf hath declared neceſſary. The Jews had ſeveral of theſe doctors among them, who were the heads of particular ſects, and drew followers after them, each ſtanding upon his own authority, to which their followers always adhered: but among Chriſtians 'tis not fit to ſay, " I am of Cephas, I am of Paul, I am Apollo. There are, indeed, in the Chriſtian churches didaſcali or doctors ſo call'd, as well in a common, ſee Tim. xi. 7, 2. Tim. i. 11. as in a peculiar acceptation, ſee Acts xiii. 1. 1 Cor. xii. 28, 29. Epheſ. iv. 11. but far different to that by which the Jewiſh maſters were diſtinguiſh'd, not as the founders of any particular doctrine, but as the meſſengers of one common doctrine, which office of meſſenger is not to be undertaken with raſhneſs or precipitation.

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12. And call no man your father upon the earth: for one is your Father which is in heaven. Neither be ye called maſters: for one is your Maſter, even Chriſt. But he that is greateſt among you, ſhall be your ſervant. And whoſoever ſhall exalt himſelf, ſhall be abaſed; and he that ſhall humble himſelf, ſhall be exalted.

One is your maſter.] We are to call no one maſter or father, but God the father, and our lord Jeſus Chriſt, father, becauſe from him all things proceed. Maſter, becauſe all things are through him, or becauſe by the diſpenſation of his fleſh all of us are reconcil'd to God. 'Tis made a queſtion, how, in oppoſition to this command, the Apoſtle of the Gentiles came to call himſelf doctor, or maſter: or how, in the common language of the country, eſpecially in Palæſtine, and the monaſteries of Ægypt, they mutually name one another fathers. To get to the right underſtanding of this, is as follows: namely, by remembring that 'tis one thing to be a father, or maſter, by nature; another by indulgence. If we call a man father, we do honour to his years, we do not thereby ſhew that he begat us. Thus likewiſe, we term a perſon maſter from our acquaintance with him as a real maſter. But not to dwell on ſo many particulars. (Jerome.)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. But wo unto you ſcribes and phariſees, hypocrites; for ye ſhut up the kingdom of heaven againſt men: for ye neither go in yout ſelves, neither ſuffer ye them that are entring to go in. Wo unto you ſcribes and phariſees, hypocrites; for ye devour widows houſes, and for a pretence make long prayer; therefore ye ſhall receive the greater damnation. Wo unto you ſcribes and phariſees, hypcrites; for ye compaſs ſea and land to make one proſelite, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than your ſelves. Wo unto you, ye blind guides, which ſay, Whoſoever ſhall ſwear by the temple, it is nothing: but whoſoever ſhall ſwear by the gold of the temple, he is a debtor. Ye fools, and blind: for whether is greater, the gold, or the temple that ſanctifieth the gold? And whoſoever ſhall ſwear by the altar, it is nothing: but whoſoever ſweareth by the gift that is upon it, he is guilty. Ye fools, and blind: for whether is greater, the gift, or the altar that ſanctifieth the gift? Whoſo therefore ſhall ſwear by the altar, ſweareth by it, and by all things thereon. And whoſo ſhall ſwear by the temple, ſweareth by it, and by him that dwelleth therein. And he that ſhall ſwear by heaven, ſweareth by the throne of God, and by him that ſitteth thereon.

A Proſelite.] A Proſelite is one,who,being a Gentile by birth and religion, comes over to the Jewiſh religion, either in whole, or in part. For we find three ſorts of ſtrangers,and two of Proſelites among the Jewiſh writings. The firſt kind of ſtrangers conſiſts of thoſe, who remain in open idolatry, and theſe were not permitted to live, or have any place of being, in the land of Iſrael. The ſecond ſort of ſtrangers are the firſt of Proſelites, who, though they did not embrace the whole Jewiſh religion of circumciſion, waſhing and keeping the ſabbath, &c. yet renounced the idolatry,and polytheiſm of the Gentiles, and aſſented to ſome foundations of the Jewiſh religion, which they called the ſeven precepts of the ſons of Adam and of Noah. Theſe were call'd Proſelites of the gates, who were allowed to live among them, and to come into the outer court of the temple, call'd Atrium Gentilium, or the court of the Gentiles, which was divided by a low wall from the other, call'd by St. Paul a half wall of Partition, Epheſ. ii. 14. on which, according to Joſephus, was written, that no ſtranger might go into the inner court, and, in ſhort, were permitted by the Jews to have a portion in the life to come, whether it be heaven, or the kingdom of the Meſſiah, as Maimonides ſays, Dep. chap. 3. ſect 5. Yet of theſe Proſelites 'tis obſervable, that, after the Jews came under the Roman yoke, and ſo were unable to keep their Proſelites of the gates within the rules preſcrib'd them, having now no juriſdiction over them, their wiſemen determined that they ſhould have no commerce with them, which was, accordingly, obſerv'd, till St. Peter's viſion aſſured the Chriſtian Jews, that this was not required of them. The third kind of ſtrangers, and ſecond of Proſelites, are thoſe, who embrac'd the whole Jewiſh religion, ſubmitted to be circumciſed, and to perform the whole number of the precepts of the law. Now theſe were admitted to priviliges proportionably, and differ nothing from a Jew, but only that they were not born in the land, as the Mamalucks among the Mahometans, of whom Juſtin Martyr affirms, that the circumciſed Proſelite is as one born in the land. To which purpoſe they apply that of the prophet, " That the ſtranger," meaning, " the Proſelite, ſhall be join'd " unto them, and ſhall be joined to the houſe of Jacob, for one, " and the ſame law is given to all who are circumciſed." Of this ſort were the Sichemites, Achior, Nebuzaradan, Urias the Hittite, and Herod the Idumaan: whoſe kingdom in his ſucceſſors is, therefore, called the kingdom of the ſtrangers. And theſe are called " Proſelites of righteouſneſs, and proſelites of the covenant." The Jews ſay of theſe, that they muſt, above all things, be circumciſed; and Tacitus, having mention'd the cuſtom of circumciſion among the Jews, add, " tranſgreſſi in morem eorum eam uſurpant, nec quicquam prius imbuuntur quam contemnere divos." " The firſt thing they are taught, when they become Proſelites, " is to deſpiſe the Gods." And becauſe ſome other nations had got a traditionary cuſtom of circumciſion, without forſaking heatheniſm, or undertaking any degree of Polytheiſm, as the Ægyptians, and from them, according to Diodorus Siculus, the men of Colchos, and of old the Iſmaelites, and now the Turks: it is, therefore, reſolved among the Jews, that if any ſuch ſhall become a Proſelite, though he cannot be circumciſed again, yet on the eighth day from his becoming ſuch Proſelite , ſome blood muſt be drawn from that part, which they call the breaking of the ſkin, which they confeſs Moſes knew nothing of, but is an inſtitution of their own.

Theſe Proſelites of the covenant may be meant by the children of the covenant, Acts iii. 25. the multitude there being mixed of Jews and proſelites, and both theſe taken notice of in the third chapter, the Jews under the title of children of the prophets, meaning, of Abraham; the reſt under that of children of the covenant, which, being made with Abraham, belonged not only to Iſraelites, but to all the kindreds of the earth, as it follows there. Now this place ſeems to be underſtood of this laſt ſort of Proſelites, wherein Chriſt reproacheth the diligence of the Phariſees, who took ſuch pains to make a proſelite, that is, to bring a Gentile, who was no way bound to it, to be circumciſed, and to undergo all the Jewiſh law, which God had never propoſed to the Gentiles; ſhewing them by this, that it was not true purity, and reformation of heatheniſh vices, which they thought to work in their proſelites, but they did it only to obtain more companions, to their faction of holding up the external ceremonies of circumciſion, againſt the reformation now preached by Chriſt. From whence it appears not only why the Phariſees were called hypocrites for ſo doing, this being no way an act of piety, which they pretended to perform with ſo much zeal; but alſo why the proſelite, thus made by them, is ſaid to be worſe than they, or their own children, made doubly more than the child of hell, meaning, of puniſhment. 1. Becauſe, before the coming of Chriſt, the Phariſees were bound to obſerve the whole law; and though Chriſt, who was the ſubſtance of it, did take away the typical parts of it, yet the Phariſees were more excuſable, if they continued to obſerve it; whereas the Gentiles were never bound under any obligation to ſuch performance, and, conſequently, had not that plea or excuſe, if they ſhould reſiſt Chriſt upon the ground of his deſtroying the Moſaic law, which was the great ſcandal againſt Chriſt's doctrine. 2. Becauſe the Phariſees, being now engaged in this faction againſt Chriſt, theſe new proſelites of their, to approve themſelves to their maſters, expreſſed more bitterneſs againſt Chriſt, than the Phariſees themſelves had done, and, by their inſtigation, were made inſtruments of more miſchief to the Chriſtians afterwards. Thus ſaith Juſtin Martyr; "The proſelites do not only not believe, but "do, doubly to what the Jews act, blaſpheme the name of Chriſt, "and kill and reproach us who do believe, and make all imagi- "nable haſte to ſhew themſelves like you." The truth of this was very obſervable in the Gnoſticks, who being Gentiles firſt, then Chriſtians; at laſt turned Jews in appearance, and then became moſt inveterate enemies and perſecutors of the orthodox Chriſtians. (H. B. P.)

Swear by the temple.] The Jewiſh doctors conſidered ſome oaths of a higher, ſome of a leſs nature. Thoſe, which they accounted high, were ſuch; as were taken by God, to which their Corban, as being a gift dedicated to God, came pretty near. This was two-fold, either a gift that was laid upon the altar; or a ſum of money ſent into the treaſury. But thoſe oaths which were taken by the temple, and the altar, were conſidered in a leſs view. So that the Jewiſh doctors could eaſily diſpenſe with them, but with Corban it was otherwiſe. 'Tis not out of the way to think that they, who ſwore by the life or genius of the Roman emperors, were, on perjuring themſelves, puniſhed in a moſt ſevere manner; and that he, who ſwore by God, was left by them to take his puniſhment of God. (G.) By this, which Chriſt affirms of the Phariſees, it ſeems they had a tradition, that ſuch oaths only were obligatory, as were conceived by God, or ſomething immediately conſecrated to him, meaning thereby, not the temple and altar, which had only an univerſal conſecration; but other particular oblations and gifts, which were, by the voluntary piety of man, devoted to him Of this ſort is the gold of the temple, and the gift on the altar: wherein, it ſeems, they placed a greater ſanctity than in the other. Chriſt looked on this as a nice and pitiful piece of deceit, either to fruſtrate the obligation of ſome oaths, it being ordinary with them to ſwear per templa tonantis, according to the poet, by the temple, when they did not think themſelves obliged thereby, or to make a nice diſtinction, where, indeed, there was none, the whole ſanctity of the gold or gift flowing from the temple or altar, to which, and the God in it, they were conſecrated. It would be hard to gueſs, what ſhould be the pretence of this doctrine of theirs, unleſs they conceived that the diſſolution of the temple had removed its ſanctity, without ever being recovered by Herod's rebuilding and enlarging it; when the gold, or gift, which the piety of the Jewiſh doctors had conſecrated, might be allowed by them to have that ſanctity. But this is too weak a reaſon, and leaves it to the cenſure of hypocriſy, which Chriſt lays upon it in this place; the true cauſe certainly being, that, by perſwading men, that the gold and gifts brought to the temple, were the holieſt things in the world, holier than the temple, or altar it ſelf, they might induce men to great liberality that way, and ſo make gain of their doctrine. (H.)

Ver, 23, 24, 25, 26. Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye pay tithe of mint and aniſe, and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith: theſe ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Ye blind guides, which ſtrain at a gnat, and ſwallow a camel. Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye make clean the outſide of the cup and of the platter, but within they are full of extortion and exceſs. Thou blind Phariſee, cleanſe firſt that which is within the cup and platter, that the outſide of them may be clean alſo.

Judgment, mercy, and faith,] The beſt way, for the acquainting our ſelves with the meaning and difference of theſe three, will be from the obſervation of Maimonides, who, in Moreh Nevoc, part 3. chap. 53, ſays, are moſt accurately diſtinguiſhed among the Hebrews. The firſt ſignifies juſtice, or equity in judging. The ſecond is the higheſt degree of mercy, or bounty. The third denotes that virtue of honeſty in all kinds, which, by the law of God, is due from us to our brethren, whether by way of ſtrict juſtice, or of charity. Thus, when John the baptiſt acquaints all the different kinds of men, who came to him, what was their righteouſneſs, the preſcription he gives to the multitude is, to communicate to him that hath not: Now the whole difference, of this from the ſecond, is, that; in that, a man performs all acts of charity, which the law requires, as often as occaſion preſents it ſelf: but, in the other, the merciful man ſeeks out for opportunities, and performs more than the law requires; which Chriſt, therefore, calls perfection.

Now to the two firſt of theſe in Maimonides, the two former are exactly agreeable; judgment being clearly anſwerable to the firſt, and mercy to the ſecond. All the difficulty lies in the third, or faith, which at firſt ſight, may appear probable to be equivalent to righteouſneſs. For the Hebrew word, which is directly tranſlated faith, means very often righteouſneſs, and truth. So that 'tis not improbable that faith, here underſtood for righteouſneſs, ſhould not be render'd faith, but fidelity. In this ſence hath Calvin interpreted it in this place. But if we extend our obſervations ſomewhat farther, it will appear, that there is no room for theſe probabilities: the expreſs words of Luke, in ſetting down this paſſage, enforcing another interpretation. For Luke's words are theſe, "Ye tythe mint, and rue, and all manner of herbs, and "paſs over judgment, and the love of God." where, as by judgment, muſt be underſtood all the duties of juſtice, and charity to our neighbours, ſo the love of God, which comprehends all the duties of the firſt table, is ſet down as directly anſwerable to faith, which muſt, therefore, of neceſſity be the believing in God, as faith is the foundation of our love of him, according to the apoſtle, 1 Tim. i. 5. The end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of faith unfeigned. This is the faith very appoſitely mention'd by Chriſt to the Jews, whom he ſo often reprehends for their want of it, or their not believing in God, and ſhows that their guilt was apparent from the disbelief of him, who had demonſtrated to them by ſo many ſigns and miracles, that he was ſent by God. If the queſtion ſhould be ask'd, with what propriety faith can be call'd, in this ſence one of the weightier things of the law, when it is ſo frequently ſet in oppoſition thereto, and not even made a ſingle part of it, and when the law of Moſes was but the previous inſtructor to that faith, which ſhould after be revealed; the anſwer will be ready, that the law, to which faith is ſet in oppoſition, is principally that of the Jewiſh ceremonies, which, being but the ſhadow of thoſe things, which are the objects of the Chriſtian faith, were to be remov'd, when the body itſelf appear'd; and thus is faith ſet oppoſite to them, as perfect is oppoſite to imperfect, or clear day to twylight. As for the law of God, as it was given to Moſes, and comprized all the firſt table of the commandments, 'tis evident that faith in God is a part, and a weightier part of that law, and conſequently, reducible to the firſt and great commandment, the love of God, being certainly comprehended in it, and not only ſo, but particularly contained in the firſt commandment of the table, I am the Lord thy God, thou ſhalt have no other gods but me: The former part of which words are fœderal, and, therefore, to be anſwered, by our believing what God promiſeth in his covenant, namely, that he is our God, a merciful and gracious father, and, conſequently, to be filially depended upon, truſted in, obey'd and lov'd by us. And the latter part, which commands us to have God for our God, muſt be conſtrued alſo to require from us a believing of him, with reſpect to his attributes, and every thing he hath reveal'd both in the Old and New Teſtament. As for the premiſes of another life, which are a principal part of the object of a Chriſtian's faith, if they be not thought to have been revealed under the law of Moſes, which is ſuppoſed to point out at an earthly Canaan, and, conſequently, at the felicities of this life only, it muſt certainly be a miſtake, occaſioned by many, probably, by not diſtinguiſhing between leſs evident revelations, and none at all, or, perhaps, through not obſerving, that thoſe diviner promiſes were revealed before the law; but being inſufficient to convince a ſenſual world, God was farther pleaſed to add, under Moſes, thoſe earthly promiſes, to attract even ſenſual men, and give them a preſent taſte of thoſe good things, which he had laid up for them, who adher'd to him: ſo that theſe being revealed to Adam and Noah a long time before, and by tradition from them ſtedfaſtly liev'd by all the people of God, were ſuppoſed, as known already, in the Moſaic law, and, therefore, wanted no farther deſcription therein; beſides Moſes in giving the law to the Jews, ſet down, over and above the law itſelf, an hiſtory from the creation to his time, in which are found ſeveral paſſages, which give clear demonſtrations of a future life, and the felicities there promiſed, as the reward of a life ſpent in good works. This ſeems to be clear, from what is ſaid of Enoch, Gen. v. 24. That he walked with God, and was not, for God took him, when he was but 365 years old; which muſt neceſſarily infer, that Enoch was diſtinguiſhed by ſome extraordinary favour from God. The Apoſtle to the Hebrews, xi. 5. ſays, he was tranſlated; and this walking of his with God ſhews as neceſſarily, that the life, to which God took him, was much more deſirable than what he had abandon'd here; or elſe his untimely death, which we find in the Old Teſtament much ſooner recited, than the death of any other perſon, either before or after him, could not be propoſed as a reward of his walking with God. Now this tranſlation being no ſecret to thoſe, in whoſe time it happened, and Moſes putting it to writing, for the information of all the Iſraelites, it muſt neceſſarily convince them of this truth, that there was a life of happineſs, laid up in ſtore hereafter, for all ſuch, as ſtrove to recommend themſelves to God, by the ſincerity and uprightneſs of their life here. The ſame we read in Kings, of Elias being viſibly carried up to heaven; which extraordinary and ſurprizing circumſtance, not only the ſons of the prophets foretold ſome time before it happened, but Eliſha, who was his ſucceſſor in the prophetic office, witneſſed it, being himſelf an eye-witneſs of this ſtupendious occurrence. Nay, the ſame is evinced out of the law, where God calls himſelf the God of Abraham, a long time after his death: from which our Saviour concludes againſt the Sadducees, that Abraham liv'd with God, and that there remain'd another life hereafter for the righteous. The ſpeech of Balaam bears analogy to this, where he ſays, Numb. xxiii. 10. Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my laſt end be like his. But more, the words of Daniel, long before the time of Chriſt, and, conſequently, under the law: Many of them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth, ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to ſhame, and everlaſting contempt. In ſhort, tho' the Moſaic law does not mention any one paſſage, that can be conſtrued literally of any other life, but that in the land of Canaan; yet, no doubt, all the ceremonies of the law were principally deſign'd to this end, namely, to ſhadow out, and, conſequently, make known this truth to them, by ſenſible repreſentations, yet in ſuch a manner, as would beſt conduce to the pleaſing the minds of ſo childiſh, unthoughtful, and groſs a people. This the Apoſtle to the Hebrews was well acquainted with, who knew their meaning, and interprets it, quite throughout that epiſtle, in this ſenſe, aſſuring us there, that Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, expected a city that had foundations, whoſe builder and maker was God, Heb. xi. 10. meaning heaven, no doubt, by that phraſe. So 'tis ſaid of Moſes, ver. 26. that he had reſpect to the recompence of reward, that, certainly, which was after this life, for he came not to Canaan. Theſe additional remarks have been made on this occaſion, purely to refute the doctrine of thoſe men, who cannot diſcern, under the law, any other promiſes, but ſuch as refer to man's earthly condition. (H.)

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites; for ye are like unto whited ſepulchres, which indeed appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead mens bones, and of all uncleanneſs. Even ſo ye alſo outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within ye are full of hypocriſy and iniquity. Wo unto you Scribes and Phariſees, hypocrites! becauſe ye build the tombs of the prophets, and garniſh the ſepulchres of the righteous, And ſay, If we had been in the days of our fathers, we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets. Wherefore ye be witneſſes unto your ſelves, that ye are the children of them which killed the prophets. Fill ye up then the meaſure of your fathers.

Whited ſepulchres.] We need not be at much pains to find out what is meant by theſe whited ſepulchres. It ſeems that they were waſhed over with white lime, purpoſely for paſſengers to diſcern them, and avoid contracting legal pollution by them: for this cuſtom of marking the ſepulchres was common among the Jews; "Calcem aqua maceratam effundit in locum immunditiei;" "He "poured ſlack'd lime upon the place of uncleanneſs." Yad. Tum. Met. chap. 8. The reaſon whereof we find aſſign'd in Raſhi ad Gemar. Moed. Kat. chap. 1. fol. 5. "Quod ipſa alba ſit inſtar oſ-"ſium, quam ergo videntes, eo non accederent;" "Becauſe lime "is white and reſembles bones, and, therefore, they ſee, and go "not near it..' So among the Chriſtians: "Corpora occiſorum "per dealbatas aras, aut menſas poterunt numerari;" "The bo-"dies of the ſlain may be yet number'd, by the whited altars, or "tables;" meaning, by the tombs, which were built over them in the form of an altar, or table, and thus whited. All the miſtery in this place is, how it follows hence, that they appear outwardly fair, when Luke, xi. 44 informs us, that they are as graves that appear not. This ſeeming difficulty will be removed, by conſidering, that this fairneſs doth not refer only to their being whited over before, but points out the reaſon of the neceſſity they were under of being whited: for, it ſeems, that thoſe graves were grown over with graſs, and, ſo, were not to be diſtinguiſh'd, from other common ground; they were, to outward view, as fair green graſs, and as if no graves were underneath, and, conſequently, outwardly fair, as they are properly ſaid to appear, and, as Luke ſays, as graves that appear not. This was the caſe with theſe ſepulchres; ſo that thoſe perſons, who walked over them, were not aware of their being graves; by which means, they contracted pollution. And this was the reaſon for the neceſſity of their being waſhed over, purely to be a mark for their avoiding them. Agreeable to this was Chriſt's reproving the hypocriſy of the Phariſees, that, as fair as they appeared outwardly, they might not impoſe upon the too credulous, who were not acquainted with their baſeneſs and wicked deſigns. (Pacock and Ham.)

Ver. 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39. Ye ſerpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye eſcape the damnation of hell? Wherefore behold, I ſend unto you prophets, and wiſe men, and ſcribes; and ſome of them ye ſhall kill and crucify, and ſome of them ſhall ye ſcourge in your ſynagogues, and perſecute them from city to city: That upon you may come all the righteous blood ſhed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel, unto the blood of Zacharias, ſon of Barachias, whom ye ſlew between the temple and the altar. Verily I ſay unto you, all theſe things ſhall come upon this generation. O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, thou that killeſt the prophets, and ſtoneſt them which are ſent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! Behold, your houſe is left unto you deſolate. For I ſay unto you, Ye ſhall not ſee me henceforth, till ye ſhall ſay, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Zacharias, ſon of Barachias.] There are ſcruples among learned men, who this Zacharias was; becauſe there are ſeveral, who lay claim to this appellation, to each of whom ſome part of this character is referrable. The firſt is Zachariah the prophet, who was alſo the ſon of Barachias. Zach. i. 1. But we have no account from any author that he was ſlain, and ſuppoſing he was, yet he could not be, between the temple and altar, becauſe the temple was deſtroyed in his time, and, conſequently, there was neither temple nor altar then. Moreover, though he was the principal of thoſe, who cauſed the rebuilding of the temple, yet this certainly could not offend the Jews; nor is it imaginable that a people, ſo lately delivered from their captivity, ſhould put their prophet ſo ſoon to death, or contaminate their temple. The ſecond Zacharias was the father of John the Baptiſt, and though the ſcripture neither mentions him to be ſon of Barachias, nor to be killed, yet we have two traditions concerning the latter. The firſt, which pretends to great antiquity, ſays, that he was ſlain by Herod, when he maſſacred the children, for not acquainting him where his ſon was. This is aſſerted by Origen, Baſil, Gregory Nyſſ. Cyril of Alexandria and Baronius. But Jerome refutes this opinion, There is another cauſe aſſigned, namely, that Mary, after the birth of Chriſt, continuing to come to the place in the temple, where virgins commonly prayed by themſelves, was prohibited by thoſe, who knew ſhe had a child, but was juſtified by Zacharias the prieſt in ſo doing, who affirmed ſhe was ſtill a virgin; upon which the men of that age fell upon him, as a manifeſt infringer of the law, and ſlew him between the temple and the altar. But let the reader chuſe which of theſe two cauſes he likes beſt, yet it is clear that neither is juſtly applicable to this place, where Chriſt ſpeaks of their killing of prophets, who were particularly ſent to denounce judgements againſt the Jews, and bring them over to repentance, which cannot be applied to this perſon, who was only a prieſt. There was a third Zacharias, and he a prophet, who was ſlain by the people at the command of Joaſh, for bearing witneſs, or denouncing judgments, againſt them, being particularly ſent by God for this purpoſe. Now this death of his was between the temple and altar, or as the ſcripture ſays, in the court of the temple; and it is ſaid of him when he died, he ſaid, the lord look upon it, and require it, which makes the mention of his death very fit to be joined with Abel, whoſe blood cried for judgment from the ground. But there are ſeveral objections produced againſt this account. That the perſon in queſtion was the ſon of Jehoiada; That being ſlain by Joaſh ſo long ago, he could not properly be ſet down as the laſt of that catalogue, whoſe blood brought down vengeance on the Jews, it being very reaſonable that as the catalogue commenc'd with Abel, it ſhould go down lower than this Zacharias; that it is ſaid that they, meaning, thoſe of that preſent generation, killed him. To the firſt it is anſwer'd, that 'tis a cuſtomary thing for men to have more names than one; that, therefore, his father might be call'd Barachias, as having two names, or that appellation might be given him for his ſanctity and purity of life, or, Jehoiada's father being call'd Achiah, he might, conſequently, be nam'd Barachiah, which means the ſame, as the ſon of Achiah. Jerome favours the former part of this account. To the ſecond objection 'tis difficult to give a probable anſwer. To the third the following anſwer is oppoſed, that the word they is referable to that people, meaning, the Jews, of whom the generation, then in being was a part, coninuing in their ſins; for 'tis very common in ſcripture to charge the actions of the fathers upon the children, who remain in their iniquity, and ſo on the contrary. For an example of the former caſe. The Amelechites were deſtroy'd for the deeds of their parents, which had been done a matter of four hundred years before. 1 Kings, xv. 2, 3. Now to prove the contrary caſe. The land of Canaan is ſaid to be both promiſed and given to Abraham, yet it is clear that Abraham never had poſſeſſion, but his poſterity. Thus alſo the Jews, in the time of Judith, are mention'd to dwell in Meſopotomia, to go down into Ægypt, to paſs through the red ſea, and the wilderneſs, when all theſe particulars were accompliſhed in their progenitors. This unity, whereby a nation becomes one, and wherein the ſucceeding is made part of the proceeding, generation, and the preceeding, part of the ſucceeding, commonly happens, when the ſons imitate the actions of their parents, and ſo fill the meaſure, which they had begun, to the end the deeds of the fathers may be imputed to the ſons, for which they receive either a good, or an evil recompence from either God, or man. But beſides the three perſons already mentioned, Joſephus acquaints us with another Zacharias the ſon of Baruch, which might well be the ſame as Barachias, as Ananus is Ananias. This hiſtorian tell us, that this perſon was a very honeſt man, and yet, tho' tryed and acquitted before ſeventy judges, yet that the Zelots, a little before the laſt ſiege of Jeruſalem, ſlew him in the court of the temple, or, in the midſt of the temple. Now, according to this account, Chriſt, who nam'd Abel the firſt who was ſlain, might very probably mention this Zachariah, alſo as the laſt inſtance of their bloody minds upon holy and eminent men. Cyprian de Vallera in his Spaniſh bible, hath the following remark upon theſe words whom ye killed, meaning, whom ye ſhall kill; " he foretelleth the hiſtory of " Zachariah, the ſon of Baruch, which Joſephus, de bell Jud, de- " ſcribeth, whereby the meaſure was filled up, for which Jeruſalem " was deſtroyed." Now the only objection, that can be brought againſt this is, that the death of this Zachariah was ſome years after the time that Chriſt now ſpoke, but this is readily anſwered, firſt, that the Aoriſt may juſtly be render'd whom ye ſhall have ſlain, and that it muſt be ſo, becauſe the blood of Chriſt, Stephen and James, and all that ſhould be ſpilt within the forty years, was contained in all the righteous blood here mentioned, as ingredients in that Judgement upon the Jews; ſecondly, that 'tis cuſtomary in prophecies to uſe the time paſt for the preſent. Thus Rev. ii. 13. 'tis mentioned that Antipas was killed; yet though he was not ſlain till after the time of that viſion, which makes it evident, that it muſt be taken ſo. This is the moſt full interpretation of this place, and clear from difficulty. (G. H. V.)

Altar.] There was the altar of incenſe within the temple, and the altar of holocanſt, or burnt offering, that ſtood without in the court. Philo mentions both diſtinctly, " The law, ſays he, ap- " pointed two altars to be made, differing in matter, and place " and uſe; for one was built of choice unhew'd ſtones, and erected " in the open court, by the ſtairs of the temple, and was for the " bloody ſacrifices; the other was made of gold, ſet in the inner " court, within the firſt veil, which was prohibited to be ſeen by " any but the prieſts, who were clean. This was for the offering " of the incenſe." So that what was ſaid of Zachariah being ſlain at the command of Joaſh in the court of the temple, is very agreeable to this place, that he was ſlain between the temple and the altar. So likewiſe is the hiſtory of Zachariah, the ſon of Baruch, mentioned by Joſephus, that he was ſlain in the court, or in the midſt of the temple. (H.)

Generation.] This word doth not mean a hundred years compleat, but rather the third part of that number, as Homer ſays of Neſtor.

Two generations now adorn'd his age,

Which ſignifie about threeſcore years. Thus Herodotus; " three " hundred generations are equal to ten thouſand years: " Thus " Clemens of Alexandria, three generations amount to a hun- " dred years;" " thus Phavorinus, the antients uſed the word to " ſignifie thirty years;" and, citing the abovementioned place of Homer, ſays that " Neſtor was above ſixty years old." Thus Heſychius, that it means either the life of a man, or thirty years, or twenty five, or twenty. Some phyſicians take it for ſeven years, and Jerome for ten: Though the life of a man, according to Heſychius, doth not mean the uſual ſpace of a man's life from his birth to his death, for that may be 60 or 80 years, but ſo as that the ſpace of the life of fourteen men, children to one another, and ſucceeding one another, make up fourteen Generations, according to Matthew. By all this it is clear what is meant by the phraſe this Generation: Such a ſpace that they who were then alive might live to ſee it. Thus Chriſt foretels the great and terrible judgments that were to befall the Jews within a few years, about forty, or within the ſpace of the life of ſome who were then alive. (H. W.)

Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem.] What Matthew mentions here, as ſpoken after Chriſt's triumphant entry into Jeruſalem, Luke, in his 13th chapter mentions it, as ſpoken by Chriſt againſt Jeruſalem, while he remained in the territories of Herod, namely, in Peræa beyond Jordan; whence, as it is no way likely that Chriſt pronounced theſe words twice, ſo either Luke anticipated the relation, or Matthew inſerted what Chriſt ſaid concerning Jeruſalem, among the things he objected to the Phariſees, for the ſake of the ſimilitude of the argument. (V.)

How often would I.] The will of God is rightly diſtinguiſhed, out of the ſacred ſcriptures, into the will of the ſign, and the will de bene placito. The will of the ſign, according to Holy Thomas, 1. p. q. 19 art. 11. is metaphorically ſaid of God, when he does thoſe things, " which are commonly ſigns in us of " willing, though they are not ſigns in God that he wills; as " puniſhment is not a ſign, that there is anger in God, but " ſo that it is a ſign of anger in us, and is, therefore, called " anger in God." Thus Mark, in his 6th chapter, ſays of Chriſt, that when he ſaw his diſciples toiling in rowing, " he " would have paſſed by them," though he did not do ſo; but he is ſaid to have willed this by the will of the ſign, becauſe he did that which was a ſign in us of the will of paſſing by. Thus the ſame Evangeliſt in his ſeventh chapter ſays of Chriſt, that when he went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, he " entered into an houſe, and would have no man know it," becauſe he entered the houſe in a private manner, and poſſibly gave orders for the doors to be ſhut: which, when men do, is generally a ſign that they would be concealed. Thus 'tis ſaid in the 4th of Exodus, that the Lord would have ſlain Moſes, and elſewhere, that he would have deſtroyed his people, becauſe they had done what are commonly the preparatives to theſe actions. This modus of ſpeech is confirmed, not only by the frequent uſe of it throughout the ſacred writings, but alſo in our common way of converſing together, wherein we very often uſe theſe forms; " this man will periſh, this houſe will fall, " the heaven will rain", becauſe what are ordinarily called the ſigns of the will, are ſometimes called ſimply the will, and frequently the ſign is called by the name of the thing ſignified.

The will de bene placito, or the will, properly called ſo, which is properly and formally in God, according to Holy Thomas in the above cited place, is divided by the antecedent and conſequent; the antecedent is nothing elſe but quædam velleitas, which regards things in general, from which no effect follows. The conſequent is really and ſimply the will, which regards things juſt as they are, and agreeably to their particular circumſtances; and 'tis from this will that every effect of divine, juſtice and mercy proceeds. Having premiſed thus far, the next thing will be to lay open the various expoſitions of the paſſage now before us.

There are ſome who will have Chriſt to ſpeak of the antecedent will de bene placito. But this expoſition cannot ſtand, ſince Chriſt ſays, how often would I; for the antecedent will is perpetually the ſame. Beſides, Chriſt acquaints us with the effect of this will, wherewith he would have gathered the children of Jeruſalem; that it was the miſſion of the prophets, whereas no effect flows from the antecedent will; but every effect proceeds from the conſequent, becauſe it regards things juſt as they are, and agreeably to their particular circumſtances.

Auſtin underſtands this place of the conſequent will, ſo that Chriſt's meaning will be, as if he had ſaid, that, notwithſtanding the inveterate oppoſition of this impious city, he had gathered its children together by his abſolute will, by which he does every thing as he pleaſes; yet that the baſe citizens thereof were to be chaſtis'd, for ſtriving all they could to hinder him from gathering thoſe, whom he would, together. But Ezekiel ſeems to oppoſe this expoſition, where he mentions the Lord's addreſſing himſelf to the ſame city in the like ſtyle: " I would have cleanſed thee, and " thou art not cleanſed from thy filthineſs." From whence it is clear, that our Lord ſignifies in this place, that what he ſays he would have done was not performed.

Others interpret this place thus; I would on my part, but you would not on yours. But the words of Chriſt, How often would I, and what he ſaid before, that killeſt the prophets, and ſtoneſt them which are ſent unto thee, are againſt this interpretation. Jerome ſays, that by this laſt clauſe, our Saviour pointed at all the prophets, whom he had ſent in former times, and ſo would have often gather'd the children of Jeruſalem together, not only while he continued in man's mortal ſtate, but, while the prophets flouriſhde. But he was debarred from executing what he would by his human will, becauſe he had not yet taken man's nature upon him.

Hillary underſtands this paſſage of the will of the ſign, ſo as if Chriſt would ſpeak of the precepts, exhortations, and admonitions, which regarded the preſervation of the Jews, ſo often told that people by Moſes and the prophets; to all which, notwithſtanding, they prov'd ungrateful, ſtill continuing obdurate and harden'd in their errors. But holy Thomas's interpretation is the beſt, and comes neareſt to the latter, namely, that Chriſt would have gathered the ſons of Jeruſalem together, becauſe he had inſpired the holy prophets, whom he ſent, with a pious deſire to this purpoſe; but that the impious city had always diſappointed them of their good endeavours. This ſenſe agrees with the place cited above, out of Ezekiel, where, juſt before, we read, "Much pains is taken, yet the abundance of its ruſt departs not from it, neither "by fire." Which words ſufficiently ſhew, that the labours of the prophets are underſtood, who foretold the will of God,and the fire of tribulation. (V.)

CHAP. XXIV.

The deſtruction of the temple. The ſigns of the coming of Chriſt. Iniquity. Falſe Chriſts. The ſigns of the end of the world. Angels. The fig-tree. The days of Noah.

Ver. 1, 2, 3. AND Jeſus went out, and departed from the temple; and his diſciples came to him, for to ſhew him the buildings of the temple. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, See ye not all theſe things? Verily I ſay unto you, There ſhall not be left here one ſtone upon another, that ſhall not be thrown down. And as he ſat upon the mount of Olives, the diſciples came unto him privately, ſaying, Tell us when ſhall theſe things be? and what ſhall be the ſign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?

To ſhew him the buildings of the temple.] As it is cuſtomary with thoſe, who admire the bigneſs, and ſtrength of any building: Tho' Herod the Great, to enlarge the temple, laid new foundations; yet, as he made uſe of old materials, and did not pull the old temple down together, but at different times, it may, on that ſcore, be juſtly nam'd the ſame temple as that built by Zorobabel. (G.)

One ſtone ſhall not be left upon another.] Meaning, not one ſtone, that cleaves to another, ſhall remain undiſturbed. Joſephus gives us a large deſcription of the ſtupendous building of the temple, and of the ſurprizing ſtones, for their bigneſs, of which it conſiſted; acquainting us that the form of building and workmanſhip in his time, was not perform'd ſo by the Jews on their return from their captivity; but that the reedifying of this temple was wholly owing to the effect of Herod the Great's liberality. What Matthew ſays here, that the diſciples ſhew'd Chriſt the temple, and that he anſwer'd the ſame diſciples, is by Mark, in his 13th chap. ſet down that one of the diſciples ſhew'd him the temple, and that he anſwer'd that one. By this either Matthew makes an enallage of number, or poſſibly one of the diſciples ſhow'd Chriſt the ſtructure of the temple, in the preſence of all the reſt; or the diſciples ſhew'd him the building, and one of them ſaid, Maſter, ſee what manner of ſtones, and what buildings are here. We learn further that one Turnus Rufus, drew a plough ſhare through the foundations of the temple, and, ſo, left not one ſtone upon another, whereby this prophecy was compleated. (Scaliger, H. V.)

What ſhall be the ſign of thy coming?] The coming of Chriſt is a phraſe, pointing out the deſtruction of the Jews. Chriſt may be ſaid to come three ways. In the fleſh to be born among us; at the day of doom, to judge the world; and, thirdly, he may be ſaid to come, partly to take vengeance, and partly to work deliverance upon his ſervants; the firſt being evident in his enemies, and crucifiers; the latter, in the relief afforded the perſecuted Chriſtians. Of this coming of Chriſt it is that Cunœus, and ſome other learned men, interpret the prophecy of Jacob, of the coming of Shilo. For 'tis plain that Judah ſignifies the nation of the Jews, and the ſceptre, their government, which, however, did not depart from them at Chriſt's birth, no, nor at his death, till near forty years after, when the government was entirely taken out of their hands, and never regain'd from that time. 'Tis clear that the coming of Chriſt here muſt refer to the deſtruction of the Jews, by what Chriſt anſwer'd Peter about John, "If I will that "he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?" Now 'tis certain that John out-liv'd this deſtruction. There are paſſages, which might be cited, to prove this coming, to regard the Jewiſh calamities, which we purpoſely omit for the ſake of brevity. The principal objection, and the only one, that has any appearance of reaſon, is this, That the Roman army being the inſtruments, made uſe of to work this deſtruction, and theſe as much enemies to chriſtianity as any other people, being the very nation, who, in conjunction with the Jews, put Chriſt to death, it appears, upon this, very ſtrange, that either thoſe armies, which are call'd abominable, ſhould be called God's armies, or that Chriſt ſhould be ſaid to come, when, in truth, it was Veſpaſian and Titus, that came thus againſt this people. I anſwer to this, that 'tis a common thing in the Old Teſtament, to call the Babylonian, and Aſſyrian armies, who were heathens, his which perform'd his puniſhments upon the Jews, when they rebelled againſt him. It may be ſaid, with good ſhew of reaſon, that Chriſt comes when his miniſters come, that is, when the heathen are made executioners of God's will, and are by him permitted to take vengeance upon his enemies. Nor would it be unworthy of our obſervation, how eaſy, in many particulars, it might be ſhewn, that Chriſt was repreſented by this emperor. As, 1. That it was propheſied of him beforehand, that he ſhould be emperor, according to Joſephus. 2. That an ox broke in upon him, and fell down at his feet, according to Suetonius 3. That he healed the blind with ſpittle, and by the virtue of his touch, according to the ſame author. 4. That he was moſt humble and meek; which is the very characters of Chriſt. 5. That he ſhut the gates of the temple of Janus; and erected a temple in honour of peace, as Joſephus affirms. 6. Becauſe he came out of Judæa, and was governor over the Gentiles, which made Joſephus believe him the Meſſiah. 7. That neither he, nor Titus, would be called Judaicus, for their victory over the Jews, but aſcribed the whole management and ſucceſs to the omnipotence of God. 8. That the Jews themſelves took him for Shilo, or Chriſt, becauſe, at that time, all the progeny of the Aſmonæans were dead. From the conſideration of all theſe particulars, it will not ſeem ſtrange, that Chriſt ſhould be deſcribed there, in the perſon of Veſpaſian, and ſo return, and come again to avenge his crucifixion, and puniſh the Jews who perform'd it. This is not all: We might produce ſeveral other places out of Joſephus that are parrellel between this deſtruction of the Jews, and the paſſages concerning Our Saviour. Some of them we ſhall produce. 1. That the beginning of the Jewiſh miſeries began in Galilee, where Chriſt at firſt diſplayed his miracles. 2. That from mount Olivet the ſiege began, where Chriſt ſeems to have been, when he began to deliver this prophecy againſt them, near which place he alſo was apprehended. 3. That the time of the paſſover was the beginning of the ſlaughter. 4. That the high and low places were made ſmooth for the coming of the Roman army, and the engines. 5. That at the coming of the Baliſtæ, they cried out Filius venit, the ſon cometh, which is the very phraſe now before us. 6. That one was crucified alive before their faces. 7. That Longinus pierced the ſide of a perſon. 8. That Titus deſir'd to ſave the people, in ſpite of the Jews; and many prodigies of the like nature, which might make it more reaſonable, that this prodigious deſtruction ſhould be termed thus, The coming of Chriſt. (H.)

Obdurate Jews! unthoughtful to the laſt,
Weep rivers full, for now ſalvation's paſt;
When ſigns, and wonders, can't o'er faith prevail,
The wound's paſt cure, no med'cine can avail.
Behold the Romans pouring on amain,
Sudden ſee heaps of ſouls untimely ſlain:
But ah! can Jews on Jews with fury prey,
And by their crimes bring on the final day;
That day, proud city, when the flame ſurveys
Thy domes, thy chambers, and thy ſacred ways;
When piteous tears, in vain, ſhall rend the ſkies
Widows and orphans pour a thouſand ſighs;
When direful famine, with a diſmal train,
Of woes, ſhall more remove, than all the ſlain.
This is the coming of the Shilo, told
So oft by prophets in the days of old,
To puniſh monſters for their harden'd crimes,
And ſave a ſinking, tott'ring world betimes,
Convince mankind of his celeſtial pow'r,
E'er bolts of heavenly wrath the globe devour. (Proſp.)

Ver. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. And Jeſus anſwered, and ſaid unto them, Take heed that no man deceive you. For many ſhall come in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt: and ſhall deceive many. And ye ſhall hear of wars, and rumours of wars: ſee that ye be not troubled: for all theſe things muſt come to paſs, but the end is not yet. For nation ſhall riſe againſt nation, and kingdom againſt kingdom: and there ſhall be famines, and peſtilences, and earthquakes in divers places. All theſe are the beginning of ſorrows. Then ſhall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and ſhall kill you: and ye ſhall be hated of all nations for my name's ſake. And then ſhall many be offended, and ſhall betray one another, and ſhall hate one another. And many falſe prophets ſhall riſe, and ſhall deceive many. And becauſe iniquity ſhall abound, the love of many ſhall wax cold. But he that ſhall endure unto the end, the ſame ſhall be ſaved.

The end is not yet.] Chryſoſtom acquaints us what this end is, namely, the end of Jeruſalem, which is the ſame with the coming of Chriſt before, and the end of the age. So ver. 14. Then ſhall the end come, that is, when the Goſpel ſhall have been preached through all the cities of Judæa with inſucceſs, then ſhall the Gentiles receive the Goſpel, and the Apoſtles turn their doctrine to them. The parallel place to this is Mark xiii. 7. So we find in Luke, and Peter, mention made of the end of all things, meaning of the Jewiſh ſtate, in which thoſe of the diſperſion were ſo nearly concerned. And 'tis obſervable, that when that ſad deſtruction happened, there were civil broils among them, entirely owing to the disbelief of the obdurate Jews, and heretical Gnoſticks, againſt the true Chriſtians. Now, from what is ſaid here, That all muſt come to paſs, but the end is not yet, it evidently follows, that the falſe Chriſts, mentioned ver. 5. muſt be ſome perſons, who appeared before that period, which is termed the end here; meaning, before the approach of the Roman army to deſtroy Jeruſalem, ſoon after the aſcenſion of Chriſt. By this deſcription, Theudas, whom Euſebius mentions, in the time of Claudius, was one of theſe falſe Chriſts: But I remind the reader, that this perſon was not he referr'd to by Gamaliel. Such another was the Egyptian, taken notice of in Acts, and mentioned by Joſephus and Euſebius. And ſuch was Deſitheus, according to Origen, who called himſelf Chriſt. But there were ſeveral others of this claſs, beſides the above-mentioned, who pretended to redeem Iſrael from the authority of the Romans; and tho' they did not call themſelves diſtinctly Chriſt, yet in effect did ſo; for the definition of Chriſt, means the perſon who ſhould redeem Iſrael. As for the falſe prophets, they belong to another period of time, which immediately preceded the fatal day. Now from what is mentioned with theſe, we may juſtly interpret thoſe falſe prophets to be the followers of Simon Magus, that is, thoſe Gnoſticks, who, at firſt, with great ſecrecy, complied with the Jews, thereby to avoid their perſecutions. At the time of writing the ſecond epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, theſe hereticks had not proceeded to that height of iniquity, which they diſcovered afterwards, when the Apoſtles left the Jews, and went over to the Gentiles, which was a ſhort time before the Jews received their fatal deſtruction, who came and deſtroyed theſe likewiſe. Moreover, 'tis ſaid, immediately after the mention of theſe falſe prophets, and the perſecutions, which they had wrought, that the Goſpel ſhall be preached to all the world, for a witneſs to all nations; meaning, that the apoſtles ſhall abandon, and leave the Jews to themſelves, and go and preach the doctrines of the goſpel to the Gentiles, and then ſhall the end come, which, what it is, is made evident from the words following, the abomination of deſolation, which ſignifies, Jeruſalem beſieged. As for the falſe prophets, and falſe chriſts, mentioned ver. 24. they are to be ranged under a third period, which immediately followed the great tribulation, ver. 21. when Titus built the wall about the city, which made the famine rage with ſuch terror, and when the ſoldiers ſet the temple on fire, which followed not long afterwards. We are acquainted from Joſephus, that, at this very period of time, there roſe up a falſe prophet, who promiſed, as though he had been ſent from God, deliverance to all ſuch as would aſcend up into the temple; upon which ſix thouſand went up, and were miſerably conſumed to aſhes. But he informs us farther, that there were other falſe prophets, ſet up by the ſeditious, who promiſed aſſiſtance from God, and conjured their countrymen neither to fly, or entertain any thoughts of ſurrendring their city: And though Joſephus takes no manner of notice of the unaccountable actions, which theſe performed by their evil arts; yet 'tis evident from ver. 24. that they actually performed ſome, in order to obtain belief. A company of thoſe perſons ſet up Simon in the wilderneſs, as the moſt proper man to execute the buſineſs; though others adviſed them to go over to John and his faction of Zelots, who kept themſelves within the walls of Jeruſalem. For by theſe very methods their hopes were prolonged, they were kept under a reſtraint from abandoning the city, and, conſequently, ſecured to a fuller meaſure of tribulation and diſtreſs. (H.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. And this goſpel of the kingdom ſhall be preached in all the world, for a witneſs unto all nations, and then ſhall the end come. When ye therefore ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation, ſpoken of by Daniel the prophet, ſtand in the holy place (whoſo readeth, let him underſtand) Then let them which be in Judea, flee into the mountains. Let him which is on the houſe-top, not come down to take any thing out of his houſe: Neither let him which is in the field, return back to take his clothes. And wo unto them that are with child, and to them that give ſuck in thoſe days, But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the ſabbath-day: For then ſhall be great tribulation, ſuch as was not ſince the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever ſhall be. And except thoſe days ſhould be ſhortned, there ſhould no fleſh be ſaved: but for the elects ſake thoſe days ſhall be ſhortned. Then if any man ſhall ſay unto you, Lo, here is Chriſt, or there: believe it not. For there ſhall ariſe falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets, and ſhall ſhew great ſigns and wonders, inſomuch that (if it were poſſible) they ſhall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before.

When ye therefore ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation.] After Chriſt hath acquainted the Jews with the remoter ſigns that ſhould foretel their ruin, he then proceeds to the ſign of the deſtruction it ſelf, which was immediately to follow. Compare Daniel xix. 27. For we grant the Jews that xi. 31. and xii. 11. referr to Antiochus. But the Jews labour in vain to prove that the 19th chapter any way is to be applied to this prince, becauſe the weeks of the days which we find there mentioned, cannot be comprehended; for otherwiſe we ſhould ſtretch the account a great deal farther than when Antiochus reigned, and the weeks of the years would be extended beyond the time of his reign. How then ſhall we fix the account? From what order of the city or temple ſhall we make the commencement. The Jews will acknowledge no other weeks. And, indeed, their countrymen of antiquity referred this place to the days of the Roman government. On granting this, let us ſee the words of the prophet, which may be rendred thus: " And by the expanſion of abominations lay-" ing waſte, and until the end and deſtruction is at hand he ſhall " pour himſelf (either " Chriſt, or the remaining part of theſe weeks" for it may be taken in either ſenſe) " upon him, who is made de-" ſolate." Theſe abominations are ſignified by the engines and other military arms, and enſigns, which the Romans brought along with them. In theſe enſigns they placed the images of the Cæſars, principally, of thoſe who had divine honours given them after their deaths. On account of theſe images theſe enſigns had adoration attributed to them. Titus ſet up theſe ſtandards in a place juſt over againſt the temple, within his camp. And after he became conqueror he fixed them among the ruins of the temple, where the ſoldiers paid ſolemn adoration to them. From hence we have the phraſe abomination of deſolation, becauſe they threatned deſolation not only to the religion of the Jews, but to the temple and city. (G)

Fly to the mountains.] The ſeveral paſſages, which Joſephus gives us, bear exact correſpondence with theſe predictions. We ſhall ſoon diſcern this by making a compariſon, particularly, of this flying to the mountains. When Gallus laid ſiege to Jeruſalem, which he ſoon raiſed, without any viſible cauſe, what an act was it of God's extraordinary providence, to order it ſo, that the Chriſtian Jews, being forewarned by this ſiege, and ſet at liberty, might fly into the mountains, or might withdraw out of Judæa to ſome other place for their ſecurity? This is evident from the following, That, upon Titus's coming, ſome time after, to renew the ſiege, there was not one Chriſtian remaining in it. Euſebius takes notice of this occurrence, and adds, that the Chriſtians, being warned by an oracle, which was revealed to ſome honeſt men among them, and commanded them to go over Jordan, to a city called Pella, removed all thither, and left Jeruſalem, without ſo much as a Chriſtian in it, to feel the weight of the deſtruction. Euſebius refers to this in Joſephus, where the account of it is ſet down. And Epiphanius recites the ſame thing. (H.)

Houſe top.] Chriſt, foretelling the future flight of the Jews, commands them to fly to the mountains. For Titus utterly deſtroyed Jeruſalem afterwards, putting all the Jews to the ſword, daſhing the children againſt the ground, cutting up them who were with child, and blotting out thoſe fighters againſt God, with all manner of cruelty and death. It happened that the city was taken on the ſabbath day, all the people remaining at home to obſerve the ſabbattic reſt, and this too in the winter: whereby not a ſoul could eſcape deſtruction. He, who was on the houſe top ſtrove to conceal himſelf; and preferring the preſervation of his life, before that of his poſſeſſions, would not remove any thing out of his houſe. He, who was in the field, or in the country, did not only not return to his houſe, but fled as far as he could, ſeeing all the time the burning and taking of the city. (Cæſ.)

Ver. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. Wherefore, if they ſhall ſay unto you, Behold, he is in the deſert, go not forth: behold, he is in the ſecret chambers, believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the eaſt, and ſhineth even unto the weſt; ſo ſhall alſo the coming of the ſon of man be. For whereſoever the carcaſe is, there will the eagles be gathered together. Immediately after the tribulation of thoſe days, ſhall the ſun be darkned, and the moon ſhall not give her light, and the ſtars ſhall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens ſhall be ſhaken. And then ſhall appear the ſign of the Son of man in heaven: and then ſhall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they ſhall ſee the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. And he ſhall ſend his angels with a great ſound of a trumpet, and they ſhall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other.

There will the eagles.] To give an explanation of this verſe, two things muſt be conſidered. 1. That the eagle was an enſign in the Roman armies, and though the Perſians had the eagle in their army, yet it was but one, and that in the king's colours, whereas the Romans had two in every legion. Thus 'tis ſaid by the antient writer of the Sybilline oracles, which prophecied of the downfal of the Roman dominion.

Rome, with her conquering eagles, e'er 'tis late,
Shall proudly fall, and feel the ſtrokes of fate.

To which we will add that of Pliny: " Aquilam Romanis legionibus Caius Marius in ſecundo conſulatu ſuo proprie dicavit. " Erat & antea prima, cum quatuor aliis, lupi, minotauri, equi " aprique ſingulas ordines anteibant. Paucis ante annis ſola aquila " portari cæpta eſt, reliqua in caſtris relinquebantur. Marius in " totum ea abdicavit." " Caius Marius, in his ſecond conſulſhip, " appointed the eagle for the Roman legions. Before that time it " had been the firſt, and, in company, with four others, viz. the " wolf, the minotaur, the horſe, and bear, went before the ranks " of the army: But the eagle was only admitted, and theſe four " laid aſide in the camp. Marius wholly left making uſe of them." From whence it is evident, that all the five Roman enſigns were reduced to one, namely, the eagle, and, conſequently, remained ſo till Chriſt pronounced theſe words, and, indeed, were not altered, till Conſtantine introduced the croſs into their armies. 2. That the eagle, as well as the other four, was an emblem of rapacity, which, with their ſagacity to find out, and skill to foretell, ſlaughter, is the other thing I mentioned above, whereon to ground the explanation of this verſe. Job, ſpeaking of the eagle, ſays; " She ſeeketh her prey, and her eyes behold afar of; her young " ones alſo ſuck up blood, and where the ſlain are, there is ſhe." But beſides this, we ſhall add ſome other paſſages out of authors. Phoruntus ſays: " The eagle is a bird conſecrated to Mars, be" cauſe ſuch birds abound, where there are many carcaſſes; and " they are the proclaimers of fights." Thus Philetas in his Iambicks:

The eagle mounts aloft and flies,
With wings expanded through the skies;
With mind divining, aweful goes
'Before armies, and foretels their woes.
But where the carcaſs of the ſlain,
Lies ſtretch'd expos'd upon the plain:
He makes the dreadful ſcene his prey,
Gorges his fill, then wings away.

Artimedorus, likewiſe, acquaints us that the eagles rejoice in dead bodies, and mentioning the ſignification of the ſeveral creatures, among them, reckons theſe eagles, which he calls thieves and plunderers. Now what we have ſaid being put together, it will appear, how reaſonable this interpretation of this verſe is, and how perfectly agreeable to the context in this place; where the laſt thing ſaid is, that the deſtruction of the Jews ſhould happen almoſt in the diſtant places of that nation, which is proved here by this reſemblance, that as the eagles find out the carcaſe whereſoever it is, ſo ſhall the Roman armies find out the Jews, prey, and make ſlaughter of them. (H.) Eagles have naturally a very keen ſmell after carcaſſes: Job ſays; " Her " young ones ſuck up blood, and where the ſlain are, there is ſhe." But this, according to Ariſtotle, ought more fitly to be applied to the Perenopterus, a baſtard kind of eagle, much reſembling a vulture. Tho' Suidas has very ill attributed it to the Perenus, a kind of buzzard, which does not feed upon carcaſſes, but hunts about as other eagles do. The meaning of this verſe agrees with what goes before, Q. d. If any ſhould whiſper in your ear and ſay, That Chriſt lays concealed in this or that place; believe not a word of it. For Chriſt will openly reveal himſelf to all, as the lightning which cometh from the eaſt, and ſhineth unto the weſt. And as the eagles fly immediately to the carcaſs, ſo thoſe of devout minds will haſte thither, when they perceive the enlivening ſmell of Chriſt. 'Tis not out of the way to call thoſe eagles who flock together about Chriſt, ſince none can be united with him, who eats not of his fleſh and blood; Chryſoſtom calls the body of Chriſt a carcaſs, becauſe of his death; and ſpeaking of the Euchariſt, terms the faithful, eagles, " thereby to ſhew " that he who draws near to this body, ſhould mount up aloft, " and deſpiſe all earthly things, wholly renouncing the ſeveral " avocations here below; that he ſhould direct his aims to ſuperior views, and fix his eyes on the ſun of righteouſneſs, and " have his intuition clear and ſhining. (V.)

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42. Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: When his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that ſummer is nigh: So likewiſe ye, when ye ſhall ſee all theſe things, know that it is near, even at the doors. Verily I ſay unto you, This generation ſhall not paſs, till all theſe things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, but my words ſhall not paſs away. But of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only. But as the days of Noah were, ſo ſhall alſo the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entred into the ark. And knew not until the flood came, and took them all away, ſo ſhall alſo the coming of the Son of man be. Then ſhall two be in the field, the one ſhall be taken, and the other left. Two women ſhall be grinding at the mill, the one ſhall be taken, and the other left. Watch therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come.

Even at the doors.] A proverbial ſaying, to ſignify, that the kingdom of God is near at hand, as Luke ſupplies it. meaning, the kingdom of heaven in its full plenitude and peace, which ſhall be revealed after the judgment in the ſaints. A like ſaying is uſed by James in his epiſtle, chap. v. 9, concerning the tremendous judgment of God, behold the judge ſtanding before the doors. Beſides, we meet with a pertinent ſaying to this in the fortieth ſtory of the martyrs, where Melitho the martyr's mother ſays to him, " Fili " pauliſper ſuſtine, ecce Chriſtus ante Januam ſtat adjuvans te." Bear up a little longer my ſon, for lo! Chriſt ſtands before the gate giving you his aſſiſtance. And Chriſt ſays in the Revelations; " Behold, I ſtand at the door and knock;" meaning, I am come home with my ſervants from my employment, in order to account with them. This interpretation Chriſt expreſſes in the ſame chapter. " I will come on thee as a thief, and thou ſhall not know " what hour I will come upon thee." And v. 11. " Behold I come quickly," and it follows. " If any man hear my voice, and " open the door," meaning, if any man ſhall watch till my coming, and immediately open the door to me when I come to judgement, or ſhall receive me with alacrity and love, his hopes ſhall certainly ſecure him. And again Chriſt proceeds, " I will come unto him, " and will ſup with him, and he with me," that is, according to the learned Eſtius, " he ſhall be partaker of my joys." So that nothing elſe is meant in theſe cited places of the Revelations, but what is expreſſed in the end of this, and the following chapter, namely, an exhortation to the faithful to continue always in good works, that when the Lord comes like a thief to judgment, he may find them embolden'd, through their faith and hope, and deſerving to ſit down and ſup with him, that is, be made partakers of his eternal reſt and joy. (V.)

Ver. 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51. But know this, that if the goodman of the houſe had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have ſuffered his houſe to be broken up. Therefore be ye alſo ready: for in ſuch an hour as you think not, the Son of man cometh. Who then is a faithful and wiſe ſervant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his houſhold, to give them meat in due ſeaſon? Bleſſed is that ſervant, whom his Lord when he cometh, ſhall find ſo doing. Verily I ſay unto you, that he ſhall make him ruler over all his goods. But and if that evil ſervant ſhall ſay in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming, And ſhall begin to ſmite his fellow-ſervants, and to eat and drink with the drunken: The Lord of that ſervant ſhall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of; And ſhall cut him aſunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

Shall cut him aſunder.] Tertullian acquaints us, that it was a law for debtors, who were accuſed, and condemned for falſhood, or non-performance of promiſe, or obligation, to their creditors, to be cut aſunder. And this was the caſe, likewiſe, with ſtewards, who performed not the truſt repoſed in them by their maſters. Theſe are placed among the number of hypocrites, or of falſe aud deceitful perſons. Now the meaning of this place ſeems to be this, that they, who, inſtead of ſerving Chriſt in his church, in bringing in believers to him, ſhall, upon the Chriſtians being perſecuted by the Jews, and this vengeance of Chriſt being deferr'd upon that people, begin to join with the Gnoſticks, in their complying with the Jews, or in conforming to the licentious practices, which are obſerv'd among them; I ſay, theſe apoſtate falſe ſervants of Chriſt ſhall pay dearly for it; they ſhall be deſtroy'd by Chriſt, like falſe ſtewards, and be join'd with the Gnoſticks, as well in their abominable practices, as in their deſtruction. (H.)

CHAP. XXV.

The parable of the ten virgins, and of the talents. The deſcription of the laſt judgment.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. THEN ſhall the kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. And five of them were wiſe, and five were fooliſh. They that were fooliſh took their lamps, and took no oyl with them: But the wiſe took oyl in their veſſels with their lamps. While the bridegroom tarried, they all ſlumbred and ſlept. And at midnight there was a cry made, Behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him. Then all thoſe virgins aroſe, and trimmed their lamps. And the fooliſh ſaid unto the wiſe, Give us of your oyl, for our lamps are gone out. But the wiſe anſwered, ſaying, Not ſo; leſt there be not enough for us and you: but go ye rather to them that ſell, and buy for your ſelves. And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came, and they that were ready, went in with him to the marriage, and the door was ſhut. Afterward came alſo the other virgins, ſaying, Lord, Lord, open to us. But he anſwered and ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, I know you not. Watch therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

Then ſhall the kingdom of heaven be likened.] That is, my church, which is compoſed of this world, ſhall be compared to ten virgins. This parable took its riſe from an ancient cuſtom, which was this: A certain number of young men were always appropriated to wait on the bridegroom; and the bride no leſs had her quota of virgins, who, the night the marriage was to be ſolemnized, waited the coming of the bridegroom, nay, went to meet him with lighted tapers, to the end he might conduct them into that apartment, where the nuptials were to be performed. Hence came the Latin phraſe, Ducere uxorem. By theſe ten virgins, are meant all they who profeſs the catholick faith with ſincerity. (V.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. For the kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling into a far country, who called his own ſervants, and delivered unto them his goods: And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one, to every man according to his ſeveral ability, and ſtraightway took his journey. Then he that had received the five talents, went and traded with the ſame, and made them other five talents. And likewiſe he that had received two, he alſo gained other two. But he that had received one, went and digged in the earth, and hid his lords money. After a long time, the lord of thoſe ſervants cometh, and reckoneth with them. And ſo he that had received five talents, came and brought other five talents, ſaying, Lord, thou deliveredſt unto me five talents: behold. I have gained beſides them five talents more. His lord ſaid unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful ſervant; thou haſt been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. He alſo that had received two talents, came and ſaid, Lord, thou deliveredſt unto me two talents: behold, I have gained two other talents beſides them. His lord ſaid unto him, Well done good and faithful ſervant; thou haſt been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord. Then he which had received the one talent, came and ſaid, Lord, I knew thee, that thou art an hard man, reaping where thou haſt not ſown, and gathering where thou haſt not ſtrawed. And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth: lo, there thou haſt that is thine. His lord anſwered and ſaid unto him, Thou wicked and ſlothful ſervant, thou kneweſt that I reap where I ſowed not, and gather where I have not ſtrawed. Thou oughteſt therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, and then at my coming I ſhould have received mine own with uſury. Take therefore the talent from him, and give it unto him which hath ten talents. For unto every one that hath ſhall be given, and he ſhall have a abundance: but from him that hath not ſhall be taken away, even that which he hath. And caſt ye the unprofitable ſervant into outer darkneſs: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

The parable, here mentioned, very much reſembles that of the pounds taken notice of by Luke in his nineteenth chapter, and hath the ſame tendency, tho' ſpoken at another time, place, and occaſion, and ſome circumſtances ſeem to diſagree. (V.)

Ver. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46. When the Son of man ſhall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then ſhall he ſit upon the throne of his glory. And before him ſhall be gather'd all nations; and he ſhall ſeparate them one from another, as a ſhepherd divideth his ſheep from the goats: And he ſhall ſet the ſheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then ſhall the King ſay unto them on his right hand, Come, ye bleſſed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. For I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat: I was thirſty, and ye gave me drink: I was a ſtranger, and ye took me in: Naked, and ye clothed me: I was ſick, and ye viſited me: I was in priſon, and ye came unto me. Then ſhall the righteous anſwer him, ſaying, Lord, when ſaw we thee an hungred, and fed thee? or thirſty, and gave thee dri[illegible] When ſaw we thee a ſtranger, and took thee i[illegible]ked and clothed thee? Or when ſaw we thee ſic[illegible] priſon, and came unto thee? And the king ſhall [illegible], and ſay unto them, Verily, I ſay unto you, [illegible] much as ye have done it unto one of the leaſt o[illegible]ſe my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Then ſhall he ſay alſo unto them on the left hand, Depart from me, ye curſed, into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. For I was an hungred, and ye gave me no meat: I was thirſty, and ye gave me no drink: I was a ſtranger, and ye took me not in: naked, and ye clothed me not: ſick, and in priſon, and ye viſited me not. Then ſhall they alſo anſwer him, ſaying, Lord, when ſaw we thee an hungred, or a thirſt, or a ſtranger, or naked, or ſick, or in priſon, and did not miniſter unto thee? Then ſhall he anſwer them, ſaying, Verily I ſay unto you, In as much as ye did it not to one of the leaſt of theſe, ye did it not to me. And theſe ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſhment: but the righteous into life eternal.

As a ſhepherd divideth his ſheep from the goats.] Chriſt alludes to that of Ezekiel xxxiv. 17. Behold I judge between cattle and cattle, between the rams, and the he-goats. By this Chriſt compares the elect with the ſheep, and the baſe and reprobate with the he-goats. And though there are many qualities that are common between ſheep and ſhe-goats, and not a few names that are equally given to both, yet Theodoret in his celebrated expoſition on Exod. xxiv. ſays, that becauſe the law commands, that the paſchal ſacrifice ſhould be taken out of the ſheep, or ſhe-goats, the intent of that was, that he who had a lamb, ſhould ſacrifice it; and he who had no lamb, ſhould ſacrifice a kid. That Chriſt, in abundance of places, is propoſed to us under the type of a lamb, and nominally, under the type of the paſchal lamb; but not one inſtance is to be produced, in which he is figurately call'd a kid, which, according to Chryſoſtom, is the moſt libidinous creature living, and by which the baſe and reprobate Chriſtians are ſignified in this paſſage. (V).

Then ſhall the king ſay unto them.] Namely, mentally, not vocally; for the whole courſe of that laſt judgment, the accuſation of the wicked, and the commendation of the good, will be mentally performed, for if the actions of every individual were to be laid open by word of mouth, an inconceiveable length of time would be ſpent in this momentous affair. But if any man ſhould imagine a book, written with the tranſactions of all mankind, and according to which the laſt judgment was to be regulated, who could conceive either its bigneſs or length, or the vaſt ſpace of time it would take up in being read over? For the ſame length of time would be required to recite by word of mouth, all the actions of mankind, as would be to peruſe them, ſuppoſing they were entred in a real and material volume. (S. Thomas.)

Come ye bleſſed of my father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you.] All thoſe corporal promiſes, which are made, as rewards, to the Saints in the ſacred ſcripture, are to be taken in a metaphorical ſenſe: as our ſpiritual benefits are frequently mark'd out in the ſcriptures, by corporal enjoyments: that from ſuch ideas as we are acquainted with, we may raiſe ourſelves up, to the deſire of things unknown. Thus by meat and drink is to be underſtood the delight of happineſs, by riches, ſufficiency, and by the kingdom, the exaltation of man, even to a conjunction with God. (Idem.)

CHAP. XXVI.

The counſel of the prieſts againſt Chriſt. His feet are anointed. Judas ſells him. The inſtitution of the ſupper. The denial of Peter. Chriſt is ſorrowful. He is betray'd by a kiſs. He is led to Caiphas. He confeſſes that he is Chriſt. He is condemned and ſpit upon.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. AND it came to paſs, when Jeſus had finiſhed all theſe ſayings, he ſaid unto his diſciples, Ye know that after two days is the feaſt of the paſſover, and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified. Then aſſembled together the chief prieſts, and the ſcribes, and the elders of the people, unto the palace of the high prieſt, who was called Caiphas, And conſulted that they might take Jeſus by ſubtilty, and kill him. But they ſaid, Not on the feaſt-day, leſt there be an uproar among the people.

Paſſover.] Performed by the Jews. Mark, in his xiv. chap. v. 1. ſays, after two days was the feaſt of the paſſover, and of unleaven'd bread. The word Paſcha, which the Engliſh renders Paſſover, is a Chaldee term, as Philo juſtly obſerves in his life of Moſes, book 3. But the Hebrew Peſach, from the radical word Paſach has the ſame import, meaning to paſs over, or paſs by. Hence Joſephus renders Peſach, a paſſing by, and Philo, a paſſing over. Origen, in his 8th book againſt Celſus, uſes it in the ſame ſenſe. And Gregory Nazianzen, in his 43d Oration, calls the feaſt, a paſſing over, and, in his 58th Epiſtle to Helladius, eorten diabaterion. The Lacedæmonians nam'd thoſe ſacrifices, diabateria, which were made pro tranſitu, that is, for the ſucceſsful progreſs of an expedition, without which, the affair was put off to another opportunity. Xenophon and Thucydides make mention more than once, of theſe diabateria. The Hebrew word Peſach, is render'd Paſcha, or Paſſover, in all places of the Greek verſion of the Old Teſtament, except in the ſecond of Chronicles, where it occurs in ten places, and is in every one tranſlated Phaſec, which word being appropriated to Theodotian, ſome perſons juſtly ſuſpect him to be the author of that ſecond book. The vulgar tranſlation, omitting one or two places, conſtantly renders it Phaſe. But this Paſcha is again call'd the paſſing of the Angel over the doors of the Iſraelites, when he ſmote the firſt born of the Ægyptians, and ſaw the poſts dy'd with the blood of lambs. Again, this Paſcha is call'd the feaſt of unleavened bread, in which the paſchal lamb was ſlain, for a remembrance of the abovementioned Angel. Hence Luke xxii. 1. Now the feaſt of unleavened bread drew nigh, which is the paſſover, or Paſcha. Hence ſome call thoſe Paſchalij, who are much devoted to the obſervation of this feſtival. Thirdly, Paſcha is named the paſchal lamb; thus Luke xxii. 7. Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the paſſover muſt be killed. Fourthly, By Paſcha are meant all thoſe ſacrifices which are commonly offer'd, during the ſeven days of the feaſt of unleavened bread. Thus Deut. xvi. 2. Thou ſhalt therefore ſacrifice the (phaſe, or) paſſover unto the Lord thy God, of the flock and the herd. Which place cannot certainly mean, as if the law commanded, that the paſchal lamb ſhould be ſacrificed to God, and other victims of ſheep and oxen ſhould be offer'd at the ſame time; for then Moſes would have expreſs'd himſelf in the Hebrew in this manner, " Thou ſhalt therefore ſacrifice the paſſover, " ſheep and oxen," or " Thou ſhalt ſacrifice the paſſover, ſheep, " and oxen to the Lord thy God," not certainly as 'tis in the the Hebrew, thou ſhalt ſacrifice the paſſover to the Lord thy God, ſheep and oxen, as if the Paſcha was referable to the ſheep and oxen; of which we have ſomething reſembling this in Exod. xx. 24, where the burnt offerings and peace offerings are referr'd to the ſheep and oxen; ſo that in the above cited place of Deuteronomy, the ſheep and oxen, which were generally ſacrificed for peace offerings on the feaſt of the paſſover, had the appellation of Paſcha: And this interpretation ſeems to be ſtrengthned by what follows the place cited above, which ſays, ſeven days ſhalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith, meaning, with the paſſover; now the Jews did not eat unleavened bread with the lamb during ſeven days, but only at that juncture, when it was eaten. Maimonides, in his treatiſe de oblatione paſchatis, chap x. informs us, that paſcha, in the above cited place of Deuteronomy, means that victim, or part of that victim which was cuſtomarily laid on the table with the lamb, the eating of which might be put off to the next day; as we learn of the peace offerings, mentioned Levit. vii. 16. and xix. 6. Now, as the above cited place of Deuteronomy, from the account of the Rabbins themſelves, and the bare looking upon it, ſhews, that every victim, whether of the flock or herd, and accuſtomed to be offered, while the ſeven days of the paſſover continued, was called phaſe, or paſcha, without any further addition; ſo we find in John xviii. 28, that the Jews went not into the judgment hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled, but that they might eat the paſſover. There are they who will have paſcha, in this place, to mean unleavened bread, but neither ſcripture, nor the cuſtom of the Hebrews confirms this opinion. But, that all ſacrifices, uſually offered, during the ſeven days of the feaſt of unleavened bread, were named paſcha, or paſſover, without any further addition, omitting only what we have mentioned above, is corroborated by the authority of the Rabbins; and any one, who is not too ſcrupulous, may ſatisfy himſelf in this, from 2 Cron. iii. 22. xxxv. 7, 8, 9. and from the third book of Eſdras, i. 8, 9. And thus much for the different acceptations of the words paſcha, phaſe, peſach, and phaſec, according to the accounts of the Hebrews. Now to trace the uſe of it among the Chriſtians. The word paſcha, is ſometimes made uſe of to ſignifie any feſtival, inſtituted in honour of Our Saviour. Thus Luke, patriarch of Conſtantinople, under Emanuel Comnenus, in his book De Sentent. Synod. Sentent. 9, upon a certain Grecian nobleman's binding himſelf by oath, every Tueſday, to refrain from eating fleſh, in honour of John Baptiſt, the forerunner of Chriſt; and Chriſtmas day happening to fall on a Tueſday, the emperor of Conſtantinople ask'd the patriarch, whether or no the nobleman was obliged to keep his oath, or celebrate the nativity of Chriſt, which was a paſchal feſtival, with mirth and feſtivity, as it ought to be. The patriarch and ſynod, then preſent, anſwered him, that a paſchal feaſt of Chriſt, was not a day of faſting. The reaſon of returning ſuch an anſwer, ſhould ſeem to refer to the celebration of the Lord's ſupper, ſince Chryſoſtom, in exhorting his flock to come more frequently to the participation of the euchariſt, informs us, in ſeveral places, that the Chriſtian Paſcha occurs pretty often. And ſays, that 'tis a ſacrifice of mirth and praiſe, and not of abſtinence and faſting. But, beſides this account, the paſcha is call'd Quadrageſima, or Lent, by Timotheus, patriarch of Alexandria, and Pelagius, pope of Rome, either becauſe the keeping of Lent diſpoſed Chriſtians to a ſacred celebration of the feaſt of paſcha, or becauſe paſcha was deduced by ſome from the Greek word paſchein, to ſuffer, as if the paſcha ſignified ſuffering, the commemoration whereof, is celebrated during Lent ſeaſon. Thus much for the conſtruction of paſcha, or paſſover, in a Chriſtian ſenſe. But, to return to the text of this goſpel. In order to give the reader an accurate account of the hiſtory of Chriſt's paſſion, he muſt know, that, according to the law, the fourteenth day of the firſt month, was aſſign'd, in ſuch a manner, for the offering of the paſchal lamb, that they, who happened to be unclean that day, or in places ſo far diſtant from Jeruſalem, that they could not get thither time enough; that is, according to the explanation of the Rabbins, they who happened, on the fourteenth day of the month, to be fifteen miles, or more, from Jeruſalem, after the ſun was riſen, or, as Philo explains, in his third book of the life of Moſes, they who were travelling in a country, at a conſiderable diſtance from Jeruſalem, were enjoyn'd not to offer the paſſover, on the fourteenth day of the ſecond month, between the two evenings, which comprehended all the time, from half an hour after twelve at noon, till ſun ſet, in which the ſacrifice was offered, the candles lighted, and the incenſe made: by which it appears, that it was ſafer, to refrain from celebrating the paſſover at the time, than to obſerve it at an improper ſeaſon. Thus, amongſt Jeroboam's crimes, we find this recounted as one, that he celebrated a ſolemn feſtival, at a time which he had deviſed in his own heart. Thus, in the time of king Hezekiah, the celebration of the paſſover, was deferr'd to the fourteenth day of the next month, for this reaſon: There happened not to be ſufficient time, from the firſt year of his reign, which commenced in the firſt month, to purify the temple, which his father Ahaz had prophaned, and cleanſe the Levites and people, before the fourteenth day of the ſame month: for, according to 2. Cron. xix. the conſecration of the temple could not be performed till the ſixteenth day, neither was there a ſufficient number of prieſts ſanctified, nor could the people be got together to Jeruſalem, as appears from 2 Cron. xxx. Whence, they, who are for having Chriſt to have celebrated the paſſover upon a day, different to the reſt of the Jews, give into their hands an opportunity of objecting to Chriſt, that he tranſgreſſed the law, and celebrated the paſſover on a day, which he deviſed in his own heart, which the Jews themſelves, together with all their falſe witneſſes cannot evince. (V.) The connexion of the parts of this verſe depends on a tradition of the Jews, that when any were condemned to death, they were kept from execution till the ſolemn feaſts, whereof they had three, the feaſt of unleavened bread, or the paſſover, the feaſt of weeks, and the feaſt of tabernacles, when all the Jews came up to ſacrifice at Jeruſalem. At theſe times, it was cuſtomary to put their malefactors, eſpecially, rebels and impoſtors, to death, in the preſence, and ſight of all the people, that all Iſrael might ſee and fear. Hence this feaſt of the paſſover was expected by the Jews, and deſigned for the death of Chriſt, as a rebel and impoſtor, accounting him an enemy to Cæſar, a falſe prophet, and a ſeducer of the people. (H.)

Not on the feaſt day, leſt there be an uproar among the people.] The feaſt day here comprehends all the time from the ſlaying of the lamb, to the end of the feaſt of unleavened bread, a ſeaſon vaſtly proper, becauſe of the great concourſe of people, for exciting and ſtirring up ſeditions. I adhere to the opinions of thoſe, who ſeem to ſay, that the ſynedrim, for fear of the multitude, did not keep up entirely to the cuſtom, received among them. For it was cuſtomary, during the time of the ſolemnity, to puniſh malefactors of note, to be an example to the reſt. This is ſufficient to ſhew the ſingular providence of God in this action, who, by an opportunity offered by Judas, made them throw aſide this council, whence it came to paſs, that his ſon's death was attended with more witneſſes, and happened on the paſſover itſelf. (G.) According to the Greek text, theſe are the words of the Jews, but according to the Latin, of the Evangeliſt, aſſigning a reaſon why the Jews would not at firſt put him to death, on the ſolemn feaſt of the paſſover. But this will be no way amazing to thoſe, who only conſider, that the Jews were not half ſo much de[illegible] from putting Chriſt to death, by the ſacredneſs of the f[illegible] by the apprehenſions of the people, from which they w[illegible]red by an opportunity, which Judas threw into their h[illegible]ll this ſeems to have been the reſult of God's provide[illegible] by this means, Chriſt's death was attended with more w[illegible], and the paſſover itſelf happened to be the time of his ſuffe[illegible] thereby to let us underſtand, that Chriſt was ſhadowed out by the paſchal lamb. In conſequence of this, when the evening of the paſſover came, the Jews had no ſooner eaten the paſchal lamb, but with an inſupportable violence they ruſh'd upon Chriſt, being influenced juſt as Judas was, who, the moment he had celebrated the paſſover, in company with Chriſt, put himſelf at the head of that diabolical band, who took him afterwards. Thus Cain's ſacrifice, which he had ſo lately offered, according to ſolemn cuſtom, did not tye up his hands from ſlaying his brother. Thus the adultreſs had ſcarcely conſecrated her victim, and paid her vows to God, but ſhe went again to her adulterous courſe. Zacharias, the ſon of Jehoiada, or Barachias, was ſtoned to death by the Jews, in the very court of the temple, near the altar; and that, if we believe the Jews, on the day of propitiation. The rage of the populace has no bounds, eſpecially when religion's in the caſe, which pretext the Jews laid hold of, to vent their madneſs on Chriſt and his ſervants. Whence that of Chriſt, John xvi. 2. The time cometh, that whoſoevr killeth you will think that he doeth God ſervice, or, according to the Syriac and Arabic, The time cometh, in which whoſoever ſhall kill you, will ſuppoſe that he offers an oblation to God. (V.)

Ver. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Now when Jeſus was in Bethany, in the houſe of Simon the leper, There came unto him a woman having an alabaſter-box of very precious ointment, and poured it on his head, as he ſat at meat. But when his diſciples ſaw it, they had indignation, ſaying, To what purpoſe is this waſte? For this ointment might have been ſold for much, and given to the poor. When Jeſus underſtood it, he ſaid unto them, Why trouble ye the woman? for ſhe hath wrought a good work upon me. For ye have the poor always with you, but me ye have not always. For in that ſhe hath poured this ointment on my body, ſhe did it for my burial. Verily I ſay unto you, Whereſoever this goſpel ſhall be preached in the whole world, there ſhall alſo this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her.

At meat.] The ointment, poured on our Saviour by this woman, was commonly made uſe of in times of feſtivity. And that the Jews were accuſtom'd to have it at their entertainments, is evident from ſeveral places of ſcripture. Thus in Pſalm xxiii. 5. we find, that after the table was prepared, the ointment followed. Thus Pſalm civ. 15. wine is ſaid to make glad the heart of man, oil to give him a chearful countenance, and bread to ſtrengthen him; which are the three parts of an entertainment at a feaſt. Hence, Luke xvi. the ſteward ſums up, amongſt his expences, an hundred meaſures of oil, which had been prepared for the ſervice of theſe entertainments. Thus, in 1 Chron. xii. 40. oil is mentioned amongſt the proviſion of a feaſt. Thus Philo, in his embaſſy to Caius; "Anointings are a deſcription of a more delicate "life." And in Proverbs; Wine and oil are ſigns of one who had liv'd in luxury and delicacy. I have the ſame opinion of the oil of gladneſs, Pſalm xlv. 7. that it refers to that made uſe of at feaſts; and ſo it muſt be underſtood conſequently in Heb. i. 9. that Chriſt found a better reception from God, was treated in a more ſplendid manner, and had abundance of more grace poured on him than any other. By this we may find out what is meant by the unction of the Holy One, 1 John ii. 20. namely, a moſt liberal effuſion, or communication, of grace from the Spirit, which had deſcended upon the Apoſtles. Thus Julius Pollux ſays; Oil is uſed at entertainments. Thus Plutarch; "The young men, who were "free, brought veſſels of oil and myrrh." Thus the ſcholiaſt, on Ariſtophanes: "They who invite to an entertainment bring forth "crowns and ointments." Thus Heſychius, upon the word Exaligyron; "A ſilver veſſel, much reſembling a vial, out of which "the gueſts of an entertainment were anointed with ointment and "myrrh." Whence that luſory epigram of Martial, lib 3.

Unguentum fateor bonum dediſti
Convivis, Hære, ſed nihil ſcidiſti,
Res ſalſa eſt bene olere & eſurire.
Qui non cœnat & ungitur Fabulle,
Hic vero mihi mortuus videtur.

Maſter, I own the ointment very good
You gave your gueſts; but then you carv'd no food.
'Tis pretty, faith! to caſt a pleaſing ſcent,
And yet with hunger have one's belly rent.
For once, Fabullus, take my kind receipt,
The next time you pretend to make a treat,
Beſtow upon your gueſts both oil and meat.

That this ointment was poured upon the head, and that for a perfume, is not only evident from Luke vii. 46. but alſo from the Heathens. But 'tis uſeleſs to multiply teſtimonies of this kind. (H.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iſcariot, went unto the chief prieſts, And ſaid unto them, What will ye give me, and I will deliver him unto you? And they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of ſilver. And from that time he ſought opportunity to betray him. Now the firſt day of the feaſt of unleavened bread, the diſciples came to Jeſus, ſaying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the paſſover? And he ſaid, Go into the city to ſuch a man, and ſay unto him, The maſter ſaith, My time is at hand, I will keep the paſſover at thy houſe with my diſciples. And the diſciples did as Jeſus had appointed them, and they made ready the paſſover. Now when the even was come, he ſat down with the twelve. And as they did eat, he ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, that one of you ſhall betray me. And they were exceeding ſorrowful, and began every one of them to ſay unto him, Lord, is it I? And he anſwered and ſaid, He that dippeth his hand with me in the diſh, the ſame ſhall betray me. The Son of man goeth as it is written of him: but wo unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed: it had been good for that man, if he had not been born. Then Judas, which betrayed him, anſwered, and ſaid, Maſter, is it I? He ſaid unto him, Thou haſt ſaid.

The firſt day of the feaſt of unleavened bread.] Mark elegantly ſays, The firſt day of unleavened bread, when they killed the paſſover: meaning, the Jews. This happened on the fourteenth day of the month Abib, or Niſan, which anſwers to part of our March and April, between the two evenings, which we have taken notice of above. The paſchal lambs, according to the teſtimony of Joſephus, in his ſeventh book and ſeventeenth chapter of the Jewiſh war, were killed from three o' clock in the afternoon, according to our reckoning, to five in the evening, which third hour diſtinguiſhed the former from the latter evening. Hence this paſchal ſupper is referr'd to both days, namely, the fourteenth and fifteenth, becauſe they eat in the cloſe of both days; for part of the ſupper preceded ſun-ſet, and part followed it, being lengthened out into the night. That this was the caſe with our Lord at his ſupper, may be evinced not only from the Apoſtle, who gives us the account, the night of his being betrayed, of his inſtituting the moſt holy ſacrament of the ſupper, but alſo from John xvii. 30. where Judas, having received the ſop, went immediately out, when it was night; which day the ſame Evangeliſt calls ante diem paſcha, before the day of the paſſover, becauſe it preceded the feaſt in ſuch manner, as that it was part of the feaſt itſelf, as a prologue may be ſaid to be part of the play; ſo that the phraſe, before the feaſt of the paſſover, means no other than the beginning of the feaſt. For the paſchal lamb was to be ſlain and roaſted before ſun-ſet, on the 14th day of Niſan, as is clear in Miſna Peſachim, chap. 5. and in Maimonides, De Paſchate, chap 1. and to be eaten at ſun-ſet on the 15th, which was the firſt of unleavened bread. Whence Matthew, Mark, and Luke, refer the ſame paſchal ſupper, which John refers to the eve of the paſſover, to the firſt day of unleavened bread, that is, to the fifteenth day of the month.

They who pretend to ſay, that Chriſt anticipated the day of the paſſover, ſo as that he perform'd it on the 13th day, in oppoſition to the expreſs command of the law, Deut. xvi. 6. throw an handle into the hands of the Jews, to ſtand by their crucifying him as a prevaricator of the law. Some, indeed, ſay that the Jews deferr'd that year, according to a tradition of theirs, the killing of the paſchal lamb, to the fifteenth day of the moon, leſt the firſt day of unleavened bread, and the ſabbath, ſhould immediately follow one another: becauſe the Jews were ſo very ſcrupulous in abſtaining from all manner of labour on their ſolemn days, that they could not obſerve two whole feaſts together, without great diſadvantage. And the Jews, at this day, never obſerve a feaſt of unleavened bread, which either goes before, or immediately follows a ſabbath. For they take care to diſpoſe their new moons in their calendars in ſuch a manner, that a feaſt and a ſabbath may not come together. And, in order to avoid this inconvenience, they have certain canons concerning their feaſts, which they diligently obſerve; as of the paſſover, for example, that it never fall upon a Monday, Wedneſday, or Saturday.

But they, who advance thus much, are in the firſt place refuted, becauſe theſe canons were not in uſe in Chriſt's time. And, beſides, the talmudick books, which were finiſhed in the fifth century, mention, in ſeveral places, feaſts that have join'd to a ſabbath. Whence Aben Ezra ſays, "That both the Miſna and Talmud "prove, that the paſſover has happened on a Monday, Wedneſ"day, and Saturday." But Euſebius informs us, that the paſſover hath fell upon every day in the week. So that the Jews in Chriſt's time had not regulated their new moons, ſo as that the paſſover ſhould not join with a ſabbath. But, to clear this affair a little more, we are to know, that ſo long as the republick of the Jews remained, they regulated their new moons and feaſts, by no other method than the appearance of the moon, as Maimonides very juſtly obſerves, in his treatiſe De conſecratione Neomeniæ, chap. 5. ſect. 2. and 3.

In the ſecond place, theſe gentlemen are refuted, even on ſuppoſing that the Jews, in our Saviour's time, while their ſynedrim and commonwealth were in being, reckoned their paſchal feaſts juſt as the Jews perform them at this time; yet, in this caſe, the paſſover was never allowed to be celebrated, but when the whole nation was preſent. That Jewiſh canon may claim a place here, which ſays, Cum domus judicii, ſeu ſynedrium Neomeniam conſecravit, ſive erret aut in errorem inducat, illa tamen eſt conſecrata: nec quiſquam eſt, qui non teneatur obſervare ſecundum illum diem, licet errorem noverit. "When a new moon is conſecrated by the great coun"cil, or ſynedrim, whether it errs or leads into a miſtake, ſtill it "is a conſecration; and every one is obliged to obſerve that day, "tho' he is ſenſible of the miſtake." For in the caſe of obſerving feaſts at a certain time, the command is not that we follow preciſely the calculations of Aſtronomers, which the common people, for the moſt part, are little acquainted with, but truſt to thoſe definitions, which we find inſerted in the Calendars.

Theſe gentlemen are again refuted, becauſe, if the Jews threw the paſſover, in the year that Chriſt ſuffered, upon a ſabbath, to hinder two feaſts from running on together, they would have found the ſame inconvenience the week following, becauſe the ſeventh day of the feaſt of unleavened bread, which is equally as ſacred as the firſt, would have fallen on the Friday of the following week.

Upon this, ſome pretend to ſay, that Chriſt and the other Jews, the year that our Saviour ſuffered, did not celebrate the paſſover on one and the ſame day, becauſe it was free to celebrate any feaſt two days, when the certain time, that ſuch a feaſt ought to be perform'd in, could not be aſſign'd. And, indeed, the modern Jews, becauſe of the dubious conjunction of the moon with the ſun, perform the paſſover on the fifteenth and ſixteenth days of the month Niſan. Thoſe of antiquity, who liv'd at any diſtance from the metropolis, obſerved two days, becauſe they did not know on which day thoſe of Jeruſalem had decreed to celebrate the new moon of each month, which was the main thing whereon the reſt of the feaſts did depend. This may be ſeen in Maimonides, in his treatiſe De die feſto, chap. 6. ſect. 14.

They are refuted in the fourth place, becauſe Chriſt performed the laſt paſſover at Jeruſalem, where there was no poſſibility of diſagreement; for whatſoever the grand council or ſynedrim determin'd concerning the celebration of the paſſover, or the conſecration of a new moon, it was acceded to by all in general; neither is there any proof to be produced, that, either in Jeruſalem or Judea, the paſſover was performed by ſome at one time, and by others at another. This obſervation makes againſt thoſe, who think that ſome of the Jews determin'd the new moon according to the appearance of the moon; while others of them did ſo according to the conjunction of the moon with the ſun. Both which they contend to prove might legally be done, ſince the law does not determine when a new moon is to commence, whether from the conjunction of the moon with the ſun, or from the appearance only of the moon itſelf. Upon which they tell us, that Chriſt followed thoſe, who began the new moon from the conjunction of the moon with the ſun, and that conſequently thoſe, who fix'd the beginning from the appearance of the moon, went one day before in the performance of the paſſover. But all this is ſaid to no purpoſe, and without any proof of antiquity to countenance it. For the Talmudiſts, ſome of whom liv'd immediately after the Apoſtles, ſay nothing of determining the new moon, from the conjunction of the moon with the ſun, which certainly would not have eſcaped them, had it been in public uſe. Beſides, if the beginning of the new moon was to be fix'd according to the law, from the conjunction of the moon with the ſun, the Iſraelites, conſequently, muſt have been acquainted with the ſcience of aſtronomy, to keep up ſtrictly to the preſcription of the law, whereas we meet with no traces of ſuch a thing among the antient Iſraelites. (V.)

The maſter ſaith, my time is at hand, I will keep the paſſover at thy houſe with my diſciples.] From theſe words we are commanded to learn, that Chriſt anticipated the paſſover, and the reaſon why he did ſo, a circumſtance which, having not been rightly obſerved, hath led many into a miſtake. For the word Poio, I do, means, I will do it, even this very night, Chriſt's reaſon for anticipating the paſſover, was not becauſe the Jews had determin'd to kill and eat it at a time they ought not, but becauſe the time of his death drew near, having no thoughts of living to ſee the legal paſſover performed. Upon this, the Grecians raiſe an objection, that if Chriſt anticipated the paſſover, the law was infring'd by him. To this I anſwer, that there is a diſtinction to be made with regard to the paſſover. For it was of two kinds, the paſſover of the ſacrifice, and the paſſover of the remembrance. The firſt was limitted to a certain place, and could not be celebrated in any other. Beſides, the time of performing it was aſſigned, namely, between the two evenings, viz. the cloſe of the fourteenth day, and the beginning of the fifteenth. This paſſover was not performed by Chriſt this year. But becauſe the people could not meet together in time of war, and more eſpecially after the Babylonian Captivity, inſtead of the paſſover of ſacrifice, they ſubſtituted that of remembrance, which was more the effect of the will, than of any precept of the law. Now as in the paſſover of the ſacrifice, there was a ritual ſupper, which preceded the cuſtomary ſupper; ſo in the paſſover of remembrance, there was a ſort of ſupper which preceded, but without any ſacrifice. So that at this ſupper nothing was eaten but ſome unleavened bread with bitter herbs. And therefore Chriſt did not ſacrifice the paſſover, neither was he able, he himſelf being to be ſacrificed as the true paſſover, on the very day of the paſſover: but he eat the paſſover of remembrance, which, after the manner of the Jews, is juſtly called the paſſover in this place. (G.) Meaning, I have determin'd to eat the paſſover with thee this day, according to the law of Moſes. For the perſons who eat the paſchal lamb, were commanded to meet together at their houſes, and the number of gueſts was neither to be under ten, nor exceed twenty, as appears from Jonathan's paraphraſe of Exodus, xii. and from Joſephus, that every man as he ſtood might have a piece of the victim. 'Tis a hebraiſm, very common in ſcripture, for the intention of the mind to ſignifie the action itſelf which was propoſed, as here, I do the paſſover, is put for I have decreed to do it. Exod. v. 10. I give you no ſtraw, that is, I have determined to give you no more, with ſeveral other inſtances. (V.)

They made ready the paſſover.] That is, the paſchal lamb. For Chryſoſtom and the church inform us, "that Chriſt," the ſame year, wherein he ſuffered crucifixion for us, "perform'd the legal "ſacrifice of the paſſover, before he inſtituted the myſtical "ſupper." Thus ſays Photius in the 116th chapter of his Bibliotheque. Hence, an invincible argument is drawn againſt thoſe, who are pleaſed to aſſert, that Chriſt anticipated the paſſover of the Jews. For the paſchal lamb could not be killed in any other place, but in the court of the temple, where it was cuſtomary to kill all the other victims. And properly ſpeaking, it was no ſacrifice, unleſs the prieſts ſprinkled the blood of the victim about the altar. Then, pray, which of the prieſts would have performed this office for Chriſt, had he celebrated the paſſover, on a day, different to that wherein all the people did? And though the law did not prohibit the common people from ſlaying the paſchal lambs, provided they were clean, yet it does not from thence follow, that they perform'd the parts of the prieſts. Abarbanel, upon Leviticus, ſays, that there are ten things performed in a ſacrifice, five of which belong to the ſacrificators, and five to the prieſts. The ſacrificator muſt lay his hands upon the head of the victim, he muſt kill it, ſkin it, cut it up, and waſh the inwards. The prieſt muſt receive the blood in a baſon, ſprinkle it, light the fire upon the altar, place the wood in order, and direct the parts of the fleſh that are to be burnt. From which it abundantly appears, that the laicks had no more privilege in the offering of the paſchal lamb, than what they had an equal right to in any other ſacrifice. For, as in other ſacrifices, ſo in this of the paſchal lamb, the prieſts took the blood, either from the Levites, or laicks, and ſprinkled it round the altar, which not only the ſcripture witneſſes, but all Jews, even the Caraites, who admit of no other tradition, or conſtitution, but the ſcripture. Beſides, the prieſt burnt the fat of the paſchal lamb's inwards upon the altar, which all the Jews admit. Hence, the prieſts came to know the number of victims that were offerred. And we learn from Joſephus, that Ceſtius, the Roman governor, wanting to know the number, was anſwered, by the Jews, that above five and twenty thouſand had been ſlain, which had been impoſſible, had every one kill'd his lamb, and eaten it, at home.

And what they object, concerning the ſhortneſs of the time, and the narrowneſs of the place, is of no ſervice; namely, that it was impoſſible to kill ſo many thouſand lambs, and offer them at one altar, from half an hour after twelve, at noon, till ſun ſet. For, the two and twenty thouſand oxen, and the hundred and twenty thouſand ſheep, which were ſacrificed by king Solomon, when he conſecrated the temple, are a ſufficient proof of the large dimenſions of the court of the temple. And what Joſephus mentions of the altar of the ſecond temple, witneſſes, that it was extraordinary big; for he ſays, that it was ſquare, the breadth being fifty cubits, and the length the ſame number, which make ſeventy five feet. And yet not all the parts of the paſchal lambs, but only the fat of their inwards, were laid upon this altar, and their blood ſprinkled about its ſides; ſo that, as all the Jews inform us, ſome of the prieſts had four hours reſt upon their hands, if they had a mind to take them: beſides which, Maimonides aſſerts, that all the fat might be burnt in the ſpace of one night.

That which ſome aſſert, from the paſſover, which was celebrated in Egypt, that the people might kill the paſchal lamb at home, is a groſs miſtake. Every one, indeed, there, ſlew his lamb in his own houſe, becauſe they could not do ſo any where elſe, there being no altar, nor any place, to which the people could reſort, in that country. But the caſe was different after their departure thence, for the paſchal lamb could not be ſacrificed in any other place, but in that ſolemn one, which God had choſen, to which he ſo often commanded the Iſraelites to aſſemble, once every year, to perform the ſolemnity of the paſſoveer. And it was upon this, that he built his promiſe of keeping their cities from invaſion; for it frequently happened that they were quite abandoned, by reaſon of the vaſt multitudes that went up to Jeruſalem, to perform the accuſtomed feaſts. Thus, when God had not inſtituted the prieſts out of the people, when they were in Egypt: it was neceſſary that the laicks ſhould ſupply the place of the prieſts, tho' the function was veſted in the father, or eldeſt ſon, of the family, which chiefly prevail'd after their leaving that region. (V.)

He ſat down with the twelve.] The Evangeliſts take notice that Chriſt ſat down at the ſupper, at which he eat the paſſover; which ſeems, at firſt view, to contradict its divine inſtitution, for thoſe, who eat the paſſover, are commanded Exodus xii. 11. to have their loins girded, ſhoes on, their ſtaff in their hand, and to eat it in haſte, which was impoſſible to be done by perſons in a ſitting poſture. But we are to know, that the ſcripture only takes notice of the way of eating the paſſover by the Iſraelites, a little before they left Ægypt, which was by following the particulars above, all which the ſuddeneſs of their journey neceſſarily required. Now theſe circumſtances are not added in the law afterwards, where the ceremony of performing the paſſover is annually commanded. Upon which, both antient and modern Jews unanimouſly inform us, that the precept of ſprinkling the blood on the poſts, of putting on the ſhoes, of girding the loins, of taking the ſtaff, and eating the lamb in haſte, did not extend to the generations, which ſucceeded, but were confin'd to that ſingle night only, in which they left Egypt. Nay, the Talmud, in the treatiſe De paſchate, acquaints us with a very antient tradition, which the Jews had; that they, who were to eat the paſchal lamb, were to do it ſitting; and for a memorial of the liberty, which they had regained. So that Chriſt acted nothing in his laſt ſupper, which was contrary to its divine inſtitution; becauſe he followed exactly the inſtitution of the paſſover, which God himſelf was pleaſed ſhould, at that time, be obſerved (Jun. and Trem.)

Ver. 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. And as they were eating, Jeſus took bread, and bleſſed it, and brake it, and gave it to the diſciples, and ſaid, Take, eat; this is my body. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, ſaying, Drink ye all of it: For this is my blood of the new teſtament, which is ſhed for many for the remiſſion of ſins. But I ſay unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom. And when they had ſung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

Jeſus took bread.] Namely, unleavened; for, during the ſeven days of unleavened bread, which began on the Evening of the fourteenth, and ended on the twenty-firſt, day of Niſan, at evening, the Jews were abſolutely forbidden to eat, or have, any leaven within their houſes, under no leſs puniſhment, than being excluded from the ſociety of the people of God. Suydas, upon the word Zyme, acquaints us, that it was cuſtomary, immediately after the clock had ſtruck twelve, on the fourteenth of Niſan, for a trumpet to be ſounded, to give notice to all Jews who had any leaven, either to burn, or make away with it. What the Greeks object againſt the Latins, in order to prove that Chriſt took leavened bread, is of no force. The ſtreſs of this objection, is laid on the word Artos in the Greek; for Luke xxiv. 30. calls unleavened bread Artos, when he there ſpeaks of the bread, which the Jews uſe on their paſchal ſolemnity. So Lev. xxi. the ſhew bread, which was unleavened, is called by this name in the Greek verſion. Whence it is clear, that the word Artos is taken indifferently, either for leavened, or unleavened bread. "Licet vero dominus," inquit Chriſtianus Lupus, "Euchariſtiam in azymo pane omnino " confecerit, nequaquam tamen hoc ſuum factum fixit nobis in " legem. Reliquit hoc arbitrio ſuorum apoſtolorum & ipſis ſuccedentium epiſcoporum." "Altho' our Lord, ſays Chriſtian " Lupus, made the Euchariſt entirely of unleavened bread, yet he " did not ſtrengthen this action of his, into a law, but left it to " the will of his Apoſtles, and the biſhops, who ſucceeded them." And indeed, moſt of the ſchool divines, after holy Thomas, ſay, that the whole primitive church made uſe of unleavened bread in this myſtery: but, no ſooner was the hereſy of the Ebionites ſtarted, who laid, upon the necks of Chriſtians, a load of ceremonious rites, but leaven was uſed in the whole church; this hereſy being extinguiſh'd, the primitive cuſtom was reſum'd by the eaſtern Chriſtians, which the weſtern had always retained in oppoſition to the Ebionites. But we have no proof of antiquity, which acquaints us with this imitation. The ſchool men, indeed, after Thomas, cite Leo the firſt, and Innocent the third, both pontiffs of Rome; But what they cite, is not to be found, either in Leo, or Innocentius. And what Thomas produces out of Gregory, to prove the uſe of unleavened bread in the Roman church, and leavened in the eaſtetn, is not to be met with in the writings of Gregrory, but ſome ſuch thing is read in the regiſter of Gregory the ſeventh.

Be this as it will, certain it is, that before the year, eight hundred and forty-ſeven, or, before the middle of the ninth century, the uſe of unleavened bread was receiv'd by the eaſtern church, in the Euchariſt. This appears from a letter of Alcuin, to the Faculty of Lions, againſt Syrmond's diſquiſition, concerning unleavened bread, in which he endeavours to confute ſome perſons, who ſtrove for having the bread of the Euchariſt leavened, by this reaſon, " quod panis qui in corpus Chriſti conſecratur, abſque fermento " ullius alterius infectionis debet eſſe mundiſſimus, & aqua abſque " omni ſorde puriſſima," becauſe, "the bread, which is conſe- " crated into the body of Chriſt, ought to be the pureſt, free " from all manner of leaven, and the water, the cleareſt, devoid " of all manner of ſoil." The ſame appears alſo from the writings of Rabanus Maurus, who flouriſhed in the year 819, who ſays, " Panem infermentatum, & vinum aqua mixtum, in ſacramentum " corporis & ſanguinis ſanctificari opportet." Unleavened bread, and wine mixt with water ſhould be conſecrated for the ſacrament of his body, and blood.

Secondly, Syrmond has manifeſtly impoſed upon himſelf in his enquiry, in aſſerting, that Leo the ninth, and Humbert Cardinalis, in their diſcourſing on unleavened bread, have not defended themſelves with the preſcription of a continued cuſtom For Leo, in his letter to Michael Cerularius, patriarch of Conſtantinople, expreſſes himſelf thus, "Who is there that is not " aſtoniſh'd at this thing, that, after ſo many holy and ortho- " dox fathers, for a thouſand and twenty years from Chriſt's " paſſion, you ſhould openly declare your ſelf a new enemy " to the Latin church, excommunicating and perſecuting all who " receive the Euchariſt made of unleavened bread." And again, in an epiſtle to the ſame patriarch, and Leo Acridanus, he ſays, "Lo, now the Roman church begins, after near a thou- " ſand and twenty years from Our Saviour's paſſion, to learn " by your means, in what manner the remembrance of his ſuffer- " ing ought to be kept, as if his preſence, converſation, and daily " inſtitution, or that precious death of the venerable old man, to " whom Chriſt, the ſon of the living God, ſaid, Bleſſed art thou " Simon Bar-jona, becauſe fleſh and blood hath not revealed this " to thee, but my father which is in heaven, I ſay, as if all theſe " were of no importance. Do not you conſider, what an infamy " you throw on God, who is in heaven, in ſaying, that he kept " ſecret, from Peter, the prince of the Apoſtles, the ordinance " and rite of a viſible ſacrifice, by the diſpenſation of his only be- " gotten ſon, to whom the ſame God vouchſafed to make known " the ineffable ſecret of the inviſible divinity of his ſon." Tho' Humbert does not ſay openly, that the uſe of unleavened bread flouriſh'd always in the Latin church, yet he gives us broad hints, that he thinks it a thing not to be doubted.

Thirdly, 'tis certain that Epiphanius did not brand the Ebionites with hereſy in this reſpect, I mean, for uſing unleavened bread in the Euchariſt. This father never once laſhes the uſe of unleavened bread, as he is known generally to do hereſies. But this cenſure falls upon the other part of the ſacrament, namely, the water, which ſome, like the Ebionites, ſimply uſed therein. And beſides, this father, in relating how theſe Ebionites had rejected the eating of fleſh, confutes them by the example of Chriſt, who, when he celebrated his laſt paſſover, eat the fleſh of the lamb and unleavened bread. How could it, then, come into the mind of Epiphanius, to cenſure the Ebionites with hereſy, in an affair, which he himſelf proves to have learned from the example of Chriſt? 'Tis not certain whether Epiphanius cenſured the Ebionites for uſing unleavened bread, in contradiction to the Eaſtern church, wherein they lived; it could not be for their imitation of Chriſt, but for copying the Jews. Indeed, in the time of Philoponus, who flouriſhed about the ſeventh century, the Eaſtern church uſed no other, but leavened bread in the Euchariſt; whence he but ill aſſerts, that Chriſt did not uſe unleavened bread in the firſt inſtitution of the ſacrament. But enough of this. (V.)

This is my body.] By premiſing a few particulars, we may come, perhaps, to the meaning of theſe words, This is my body, which ſeem to carry ſome difficulty. Firſt the paſchal lamb, which the Jews dreſs'd for a feſtival ſupper, was commonly called The body of the paſſover, or, The body of the paſchal ſupper. And ſo in the Talmud and Maimonides. Very probably Chriſt may ſeem to allude to this phraſe of the Jews, when he ſays, This is my body; making himſelf, as he was then on the point of being ſlain by them, the ſame as the paſchal lamb. Thus much for the words, This is my body. Next for the words, This is, or the whole phraſe, This is my body; which Chriſt ſeems to have ſubſtituted in the room of the paſchal form. This is the bread of affliction, which our fathers eat in Egypt, or, This is the unleavened bread, or, This is the paſſover. From which 'tis apparent, that the bread, mentioned here, is not the identical bread, eaten by their fathers in Egypt, but only the tranſcript thereof, being the commemoration of the bondage which they had been deliver'd from in Egypt, and the celebration of the annual feaſt, which was firſt inſtituted in that country. Thirdly, we are to obſerve that the word this is of the neuter, whereas bread is of the maſculine gender, and conſequently this is no relative to bread, or that this bread is my body; but, Take, eat, this is my body, this taking and eating is my body, which Luke more fully expreſſes; "This is my body, which is " given for you, do this in remembrance, or commemoration, of " me." Which words are a little farther improv'd by St. Paul, 1 Cor. x. 16. The cup of bleſſing which we bleſs, meaning, the bleſſing the cup in the ſacrament, and, the bread which we break, meaning, the breaking of the bread which is delivered to us to eat, is it not the communication of the body of Chriſt? where, what Chriſt's words before ſaid was his body, is more evidently ſaid to be the communication of his body; which means, the beſtowing it upon us, which, I apprehend, concludes this ſacrament, according to the nature of ſacraments, to be a ſacred rite, inſtituted by God to communicate to, or confer upon us, the body of Chriſt, that is, the efficacy and benefits of Chriſt's death. Hence Damaſcenus calls this whole action participation, which is the ſame with communication, only the former refers to the receiver, and the latter to the giver; "for thereby, ſays he, we partake of the divinity of Jeſus," of the divine graces, which flow from him. So St. Chryſoſtom, The body of Chriſt is received, that is, as certainly as God entertains us there at his table, ſo as certainly does he communicate to the worthy receiver of the body of the crucified Jeſus. Now if it happen to be ſaid, that this is no ſtrange thing, for God performs the ſame on every act of ſincere repentance, and on every act of ſincere faith, or prayer, or other parts of his divine worſhip worthily executed, without this ſacrament; I anſwer, that the leſs ſtrange it is, the more ought the affirmation of the Apoſtle to obtain belief; and the more certain it is, that he, who being a true penitent, received, upon his firſt repentance, the benefits of the death of Chriſt, hath them likewiſe now declared to him by God, and ſolemnly and ſacramentally conferred upon him, on his worthy coming to this ſacred table, and duly performing this act of worſhip, which Chriſt, upon his leaving this world, was pleaſed to inſtitute in ſo ſolemn a manner, as to be obſerved in his church for ever. But 'tis a miſtake in any one to imagine, that theſe benefits are conferr'd firſt in this ſacrament, and not at any other time before; for in our baptiſm we are acknowledged to receive them. Beſides, he who hath been a conſtant receiver of this ſacrament, without falling off by any wilful ſin, cannot be ſaid every time he ſo received this miſterious ſupper, to have theſe benefits firſt or newly conferred upon him; nay, he who hath repented and performed ſeveral parts of God's worſhip, who hath ſubdued his luſts, and made a conqueſt over his paſſions, hath, no queſtion, the benefit of juſtification conferr'd upon him by God; for it cannot be, that all God's favour ſhould be ſuſpended till the firſt receiving of this ſacrament. Indeed, in the caſe of relapſe, which hath deprived us for ſome time of the favour of God, when we ſincerely repent and reform, and ſo regain God's favour, 'tis then that this ſacrament doth ſolemnly exhibit anew thoſe benefits to us. And though no ſuch relapſe may happen, which may not, therefore, require theſe benefits to be conferr'd again; yet God, nevertheleſs, doth confirm what we have ſufficiently done before.

By this explanation of the words, This is my body, may be likewiſe concluded what are the parts of the ſacrament, namely, two literally, and two ſpiritually; in each, one on God's part, the other on ours. On God's part, literally, is his entertaining and feeding us at his table; and on our part, literally, is our partaking of that table. On God's part, ſpiritually, is his reaching out to us, as by a deed or inſtrument, the broken body of Chriſt, which was promiſed to every believing ſinner; being the benefits of his death, which is the ſum of that fervent form of prayer uſed by the prieſt, and every receiver ſingly, at the minute of receiving the elements in that ſacrament. On our part, ſpiritually, is the annuntiating, or telling the ſacrifice of Chriſt's death, which is now long ſince performed upon the croſs. Thus the bitter herbs are a commemoration of the ſervitude ſuſtain'd by the Jews in Egypt; and the red wine, a memorial that Pharaoh waſhed himſelf in the blood of the children of Iſrael. Thus the precept, given by Moſes, Exod. xiii. 8. is, that they ſhould annuntiate or tell of their deliverance in the paſſover; from whence they call the paſchal lamb Annuntiation, according to Elias Levita in his Thisbi. Now this annuntiation doth not only regard our ſelves, as to our belief, but alſo God, with reſpect to our pleading before him that ſacrifice of his own ſon, and requiring from him the benefits thereof, namely, grace and pardon to be conferred upon us. The two parts of this ſacrament are intimated in the preceding obſervations we have made. The preſentation of the lamb on the table, and ſo of the Chriſtian ſacrifice, the crucified Jeſus, to be eaten by us, points out to us God's annuntiating and atteſting to us the benefits of his ſon's death, and ſo the commemorative paſchal form notes our annnuntiating that death of his to our ſelves and others. Both which are contained in thoſe different phraſes of St. Paul, that “ the broken bread is the communication of his body,” and “ that as oft as you eat this bread, and “ drink this cup, ye annuntiate the death of the Lord,” that is, what God beſtows there upon you, ye annuntiate to him, your ſelves, and others. From both which ariſes the aggravation of guilt of the unworthy receiver, who is here guilty of the body and blood of Chriſt, that is, that Chriſt, who died for him, and is there communicated to him ſacramentally, is utterly loſt, by reaſon of his being unqualified, and unprepared for the receiving the benefits of his death. But it is ſaid further, to eat and drink damnation to himſelf, that is, that as the worthy receiver receives the benefits of Chriſt's death in this feaſt, and, conſequently, eats and drinks ſalvation to himſelf; ſo the unworthy receiver, on the contrary, heaps puniſhments upon himſelf by this means, and if he repent not by ſuch puniſhments, the melancholy burden of damnation. As for the bread and wine, which are the elements in this ſacrament, tho' by offering them to God, and by the prieſt's conſecrating, bleſſing, and calling upon God over them, they become God's, and are, therefore, called the Lord's Supper, in oppoſition to every man's own ſupper, and ſo are changed from common bread and wine; yet ſtill they retain their own nature, nor are really converted into the body and blood of Chriſt, ſave in a ſpiritual and ſacramental ſenſe, according to that of Theodoret: “ The ſymbols of our Lord's body and blood, after the prayer of “ conſecration, are changed, and become different, but depart not “ from their own nature, for they remain in their former eſſence, “ figure, and ſhape, and are viſible, and ſenſible, ſuch as they “ were before.” (H.)

And when they had ſung an hymn.] Maimonides informs us, that every man and woman, the night the paſchal ſupper was celebrated, was obliged to drink four glaſſes of wine at leaſt; that the time of taking theſe glaſſes was to be ſo ordered, that the drinking them might be attended with mirth, ſo that both the wine and the drinker of it was conſidered. Every one of theſe glaſſes of wine had a certain prayer attending the drinking of it: The firſt was uſher'd in with a conſecration of the ſolemn feaſt.: Over the ſecond was ſaid an hymn, or a ſeries of phraſes, which explained the reaſon of their eating the paſchal lamb that night with bitter herbs, and unleavened bread: Over the third glaſs thanks were return'd for the meat they had taken at ſupper: Over the fourth the hymn was ended, and that verſe ſung, “ All thy works confeſs thee, O Lord, and thy ſaints bleſs thee.” After this glaſs, they were prohibited to drink any thing except water, unleſs ſome one amongſt them had a mind to drink a fifth, and ſing the 106th Pſalm with it; “ Praiſe ye the Lord, O give thanks unto the “ Lord, for he is good.” However, this fifth glaſs was no way ſo neceſſary as the other four, and the hymn, Praiſe ye the Lord, might be concluded without the room where they performed the paſſover. Thus much we read in Maimonides; from whence we build a conjecture, that the wine, which our Saviour uſed in his laſt Supper, was mixed with water; otherwiſe Judas would have charged him as a violater of traditions. In the next place we gather, that, as ſoon as the hymn was ended, Chriſt roſe up from the table, which Matthew ſignifies by the words, They went forth, meaning, they roſe up to go out. Nor is it improbable from the particulars which Luke mentions, xxii. and John xiv. that Chriſt and his diſciples continued ſome time at ſupper, and, poſſibly, partook of it in a ſitting poſture. And Chriſt ſeems to have mentioned thoſe particulars taken notice of by John, xv, xvi, xvii. as they went out. Beſides, Chriſt's going out was not any way repugnant to the law, becauſe the Jews were not prohibited to ſtir out of their houſes the night the paſſover was celebrated, unleſs when they were in Egypt, for fear they ſhould meet with the Angel God had ſent to ſmite the firſt-born of the Egyptians. The whole of it was only to acquaint them, that their preſervation conſiſted in keeping themſelves under the tutelage of the blood of the lamb, which was ſhed that their blood might not be ſpilt. Now had they rejected this ſacrament of their ſalvation, they had render'd themſelves, by this very means, unworthy of the grace which was ſignified by that ſign. Thus when the deluge appeared, Noah and his family had no other way left to preſerve and ſecure themſelves, than by going into the Ark; nor Rahab's family, at the deſtruction of Jericho, but in the houſe where the ſcarlet line was ſeen hanging, to which the blood of the paſchal lamb was anſwerable, which the Iſraelites were commanded in Egypt to ſprinkle againſt the threſholds and poſts of their doors: for fear that he, who ſmote the firſt-born, ſhould ſmite them likewiſe, which, according to Maimonides, was not done after their departure from Egypt. Whence we learn, 2 Chron. xxx. and xxxv. that the paſchal lambs were ſlain in the court of the temple, and their blood ſprinkled there; but it no where appears, that any of this blood was conveyed to their houſes, to ſprinkle their threſholds and door-poſts therewith. Beſides, the Jews, according to the ſame Maimonides, had this peculiar to them in Egypt, that, on the tenth day of the firſt month, which was four days before they began to kill, they were, by expreſs command of God, to diſtinguiſh the paſchal lambs by ſome mark, for fear they ſhould be at any loſs to know them amongſt an hoſtile people, ſuch as the Egyptians were. Now there was no room for this apprehenſion of fear in Judea, becauſe the whole nation united its endeavours, that nothing ſhould be wanting to this ſacrifice. Neither was it ſo eaſy a matter for thoſe who came up to Jeruſalem, from places at any diſtance, to take ſo much precaution concerning their lambs before the feaſt. For it was cuſtomary for thoſe who came up to Jeruſalem, not to be there above two or three days before the ſolemnity. And then they commonly purchaſed their lambs of thoſe, who had oxen, ſheep, and doves, to expoſe to ſale, as is clear from John ii. 13, 14. But we are told from Joſephus, though with a ſurprizing miſtake, that the Jews in Egypt continued preparing their paſchal lambs from the thirteenth to the fourteenth day of the firſt month. In ſhort, the Jews in Egypt ſeem to have had it as a thing peculiar to them, to gird their loins, have their ſhoes on, and their ſtaffs in their hands, and eat their paſſover in haſte, as if they had been going to undertake a long and tedious journey two or three hours after in an hoſtile country. But 'tis probable to ſuppoſe, that, after this fatigue was over, they were no longer girded, but ungirded; they no longer ſtood, but ſat down; nor eat in haſte, but ſlowly and quietly. So that the laſt ſupper which Chriſt celebrated, was performed in a ſitting poſture, (V.) We ſhall beg leave to ſubjoin here to what we have already ſaid of the paſſover, a further account of it, which may not be diſpleaſing to the reader, as it will enable him to diſtinguiſh between the ancient and modern way of celebrating this grand ſolemnity. The Jews obſerve the feaſt of the paſſover with all the punctuality imaginable. They prepare the grain which is neceſſary for the unleavened bread at that time, at leaſt thirty days before; and the care they take in the choice and preſervation of it, is very extraordinary. It is never carried, for inſtance, to be ground, on a horſe's back without a ſaddle, for fear it ſhould be heated; and they muſt unrip the ſack, waſh and ſew it up again, in which this grain has lain from one paſſover to another; the examinations of the leaven are almoſt infinite; and the ſcruples they create to Jews, of the leaſt delicacy in religion, are not a few. The ſun is not ſufficient to give light into thoſe creaks and corners of the houſe, where any crumbs of bread may have unfortunately ſlipp'd in. They take a candle, therefore, and if the maſter of the family is the leaſt conſcious that his ſight is weak, and may deceive him; he takes out his ſpectacles, without any more ado, the better to pry into and examine the cracks and creviſes of the walls. This ſearch, tho' thus ſtrict, does not give him entire ſatisfaction; for, after all his endeavours, by night, by day, by the light of the ſun, by candle-light, and the aſſiſtance of his ſpectacles, he beſeeches God to make up the defects of his ſearch; that all the leavened bread, that is in the houſe, as well what he has found, as what he has not, may become as the duſt of the earth, and be reduced to nothing.

The ſabbath, which precedes the paſſover, is called the great ſabbath: On that day they have a ſermon upon the paſchal lamb. Two days, at leaſt, before the paſſover, all their implements of houſhold are cleaned, and very often all, or moſt of them, are new. The Jews are as ſcrupulous, with reſpect to the compoſition of their unleavened bread, as in their ſearch for that which is leavened; and in the preparation of the grain. The water for the paſte of the former is examined and preſerved with all the care imaginable. He who draws it, would do well to lift up his heart to God at the ſame time, and if he ſaid a prayer moderately loud, the water would be the better for it. It would not be amiſs if the maſter of the houſe, or father of the family, ſhould have a hand one way or other in the making the unleavened bread: If he cannot, or muſt not, touch the paſte, at leaſt he ſhould be an eye-witneſs of the pious operation, and encourage thoſe who knead it by his godly exhortations.

She who makes the paſte, takes a lump of it, and therewith makes a cake and burns it; which cake, under the old law, belonged, of right, to the ſacrificator. Care muſt likewiſe be taken, to make the paſte in a place that is no way expoſed to the ſun, and knead it without intermiſſion, for fear it ſhould ferment. This unleavened bread is made flat, and for the moſt part round, is very inſipid, and full of eyes; but the rich, and ſuch as are uſed to indulge their appetites, mingle eggs and ſugar with this bread of affliction.

They burn, in a very ſolemn manner, all the leaven, which, by their ſtrict examination, they could poſſibly find, and the veſſel, in which they put it. This practice is grounded on a paſſage in Exodus.

The table, at which they ſit to eat their paſſover, is covered, and ſet out to the beſt advantage by their women. The maſter of the family ſits down to it with his children and domeſticks. Some unleavened loaves are ſet upon this table, and a plate covered, in which there are three miſterious cakes, one for the high prieſt, one for the Levites, and a third for the people, and a blade bone of a ſhoulder of mutton, or at leaſt ſome part of it. When the ſhoulder is ſerved up whole at this ceremony, they have an hard egg with it. To this they add a diſh of meat, repreſenting the bricks, which their fore fathers were forced to make in Egypt. This meat is a thick paſte, compoſed of apples, almonds, nuts, figs, &c. which they dreſs in wine, and ſeaſon with cinnamon, broke only into pieces, to repreſent the ſtraw they made uſe of, in the making their bricks. In another diſh they have lettice, chervil, creſſes, wild ſuccory and parſley. Theſe are the bitter herbs. And a cruet full of vinegar is ſet on the table near the ſallet.

They are obliged to ſit down to table, like people, whoſe time is very precious, and who are in an hurry. After the conſecration of the paſſover, every one in company, even infants, in their cradle, have a glaſs of wine. They waſh their hands either before, or after conſecration. The maſter of the houſe muſt ſit in an arm'd chair, with his left elbow on the table, the gueſts being in the ſame poſture; this is an air of liberty which they give themſelves, in commemoration of that which their forefathers recover'd, when they departed out of Egypt. The glaſs being empty, each man dips a few of the bitter herbs in vinegar, whilſt the maſter, at the ſame time, repeats a prayer, ſuitable to the ſolemn occaſion. He then breaks the cake of the Levites in two, and conceals one of the pieces under the plate, to intimate the manner in which the Iſraelites eſcaped, when they hid their unleavened bread in a hurry: then he takes the other, and, holding it up with the ſhoulder of the lamb, beſpeaks the family, who are likewiſe to hold their hands upon the ſame diſh, in the words following, "Behold the bread of ſorrow and oppreſſion, which our "forefathers did once eat in Egypt, let him that is hungry draw "near and eat. This is the ſacrifice of the paſchal lamb, &c." The ſhoulder of lamb is, after this, again ſet on the table, and a ſecond glaſs of wine is ſerved all round; but the plate, or basket, where the cakes were, is ſet aſide: this ſhoulder repreſents, they ſay, the powerful arm of the lord, who deliver'd them from the oppreſſion of the Egyptians.

This ceremony ended, the father of the family orders an hymn to be ſung, which conſiſts of a pious recital of the miraculous deliverance of their anceſtors. This hymn is begun by a young child, whoſe buſineſs is likewiſe to ask the queſtions relating to the ceremonies of the paſſover; the particulars whereof the father explains, and gives a reaſon for each reſpective miſtery. When they come to that part of the hymn, which makes mention of the ten plagues of Egypt, they daſh a little wine out of the glaſs with their finger. This is an intimation that they wiſh thoſe plagues may be far removed from them. Immediately they raiſe their voices, which they had before lowered, drink of their wine, and go on with the hymn. The maſter of the houſe now waſhes his hands a ſecond time, takes one of the cakes, and after conſecration, breaks it, and preſents a piece to every one in company; but leaves the other cakes untouched, becauſe, in this night of tears and ſadneſs, they muſt ſit down contented with a morſel of bread. This bread and their bitter herbs muſt be eaten with the paſte above mentioned, after which they fall directly on the lamb; the entertainment being almoſt over, the maſter of the houſe takes one half of the cake, which he had concealed under his plate, eats one bit himſelf, and then breaks off ſmall pieces for the reſt of the family. They muſt eat nothing after this, but they drink a third and a fourth glaſs of wine. At laſt, the maſter taking the glaſs, beſeeches God to pour out his wrath over thoſe nations, who do not acknowledge him. Theſe four times which they drink about, are four miſteries. The Rabbins have, with abundance of precaution, extended theſe obligations, which are ſo proper to keep the vulgar in awe, and ſecure their reſpect. 'Tis obſervable that the Jews make a great difference between the antient and modern way of celebrating the paſſover. Formerly they uſed to eat the lamb roaſted whole. Ever ſince their ſacrifices have been aboliſhed, which could be offer'd no where but at Jeruſalem, they roaſt one part of it, and boil another, nay, ſometimes cut it in pieces. The want of their ſacrifices obliges them at preſent, to ſuppreſs ſeveral hymns, which relate to the paſchal lamb. The diſperſion of the Jews obliges them likewiſe, to beg of God to re-eſtabliſh Jeruſalem, the temple, and its ſacrifices, and to deliver them at this time of day, as he formerly did their forefathers, from the tyranny of the Egyptians. The modern Jews conclude their meal with unleavened bread, but, in former times they ended it with the lamb. They now omit girding their loins, taking a ſtaff in their hands, and pulling off their ſhoes when they eat the lamb, all which was practiced under the antient law; but they take care to preſerve, however, that humility and attention which are due to this religious ceremony. They decline their heads all the time they are eating, and ſuch Jews, as are eminent for their piety, put nothing into their mouths, without meditating on the miſtery, with the utmoſt reſpect, and veneration. (Rel. Cer.)

Ver. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35. Then ſaith Jeſus unto them, All ye ſhall be offended becauſe of me this night: for it is written, I will ſmite the ſhepherd, and the ſheep of the flock ſhall be ſcatter'd abroad. But after I am riſen again, I will go before you into Galilee. Peter anſwer'd and ſaid unto him, Though all men ſhall be offended becauſe of thee, yet will I never be offended. Jeſus ſaid unto him, Verily I ſay unto thee, that this night before thee cock crow, thou ſhalt deny me thrice. Peter ſaid unto him, Though I ſhould die with thee, yet will I not deny thee. Likewiſe alſo ſaid all the diſciples.

Before the cock crow.] Meaning, before the time, which is called the cock crowing, or, the cock ſhall not ſing his ſolemn note, from whence the cock crowing commences, before thou ſhalt deny me thrice. Meanwhile I am under no ſcruple, but that Mark, who was the diſciple of Peter, gives us the very words of Chriſt as he ſpoke them, and as that Evangeliſt learnt them from Peter, namely, "this day, even in this night, before "the cock crow twice, thou ſhalt deny me thrice." It was enough for the other Evangeliſts to relate, what was the principal circumſtance in this hiſtory, namely, that Chriſt not only both foreſaw and foretold this triple denyal of Peter, but alſo mark'd out the very time, which was, that this Apoſtle ſhould deny Our Saviour thrice, before the crowing of the cock, meaning the ſecond time, which is ſimply call only the gallicinium, or cock-crowing; tho' Mark relates it ſomewhat more clearly, and beſides, informs us, that Peter's firſt denyal was before the firſt cock crowing. But poſſibly you will ſay, that, between the firſt and ſecond cock crowing; the fourth diviſion of the night was commonly included, which contain'd the ſpace of three hours: for the nights in Judea, at the time when Our Saviour ſuffer'd, were above eleven hours long; now 'tis hardly poſſible, that the middle diviſion of this ſpace could elapſe between Peter's firſt denyal, as is clear, from Luke xxii. 56, 57, 58. For we find there, that, after Peter had deny'd to the ſervant maid that he knew Chriſt, another, happening to look upon him, ſaid, Thou art alſo of them, meaning, thou art one of Chriſt's diſciples. Hereupon Peter ſays, Man I am not, which was the ſecond denyal. But after the ſpace of about an hour, another confidently affirm'd ſaying, Of a truth, this fellow alſo was with him, for he is a Galilean. This was Peter's third time of denyal, and immediately while he yet ſpake, the cock crew. Now I anſwer, in the firſt place, that the Evangeliſts are commonly very conciſe in their deſcriptions, and it may be alledged of Peter, that, being charged with being one of Chriſt's diſciples, and ſtriving to clear himſelf; it was very poſſible to prolong the time, and that, in talking and diſcourſing about the affair, the hours might ſlide away without any one perceiving it. Beſides, from Luke's words, after a little, it does not follow, that there was no ſpace, or but very little time, between Peter's firſt and ſecond denyal. For John, in his 18th chapter, from the ſeventeenth, to the twenty fifth verſe, informs us of ſeveral things, as tranſacted within that ſpace. And the third denyal, which Luke removes from the ſecond, the ſpace of near an hour, is ſaid by Matthew and Mark to have happened after a little. So that the phraſe after a little, may be extended farther, than is imagined. Thirdly, we may lawfully make ſome addition to Luke's hour, ſince he does not ſay preciſely, that one hour paſt between, but about the ſpace of one hour after, which is the ſame, as if he had ſaid, that near about the ſpace of an hour paſt between. Fourthly, that tho' the fourth diviſion of the night commonly paſt between the firſt and ſecond cock crowing, yet this prov'd not always the ſame, for it very often happened, that cocks crow out of time, and not always at certain ſtated hours. Which Scaliger affirms in his 239th exerciſe upon Cardan. Wherefore 'tis poſſible, that ſome cock or other crow'd a full hour before the uſual time, before this third denyal of Peter. But ſome perſon will perhaps ſay, that when Peter deny'd Chriſt, the ſcribes, prieſts and elders were aſſembled together in the houſe of Caiphas, to inquire into the life of Chriſt, and that Peter waited all the while in the court, expecting how matters would go, and what they would determine concerning his Maſter. And therefore, it no way appears reaſonable that ſuch an aſſembly would continue together to ſuch a late hour of the night. For what man can believe, that ſo many Jews of diſtinction would ſpend a whole night, without retiring to reſt, in deciding an affair, which might as well have been deferr'd to another opportunity.

But this objection ſignifies not a ſtraw, for 'tis beyond queſtion that things were managed ſo. Which will appear evident to thoſe, who do but conſider how many particulars were tranſacted that night, before Peter's third denyal. For, according to the Evangeliſts, as ſoon as it was evening, that is, as the ſun was going down, Chriſt celebrated the paſſover with his diſciples, waſhed their feet, made a pretty long ſermon, inſtituted the holy ſacrament of the euchariſt, compoſed a diſpute which aroſe among his diſciples about precedency, ſung an hymn, which conſiſted of ſeveral pſalms and verſes, if we will credit the Talmudiſts, went into the mount of Olives, came into the village called Gethſemene, withdrew to pray, and after an hours abſence, return'd to his diſciples, whom he found aſleep, and thereupon blam'd them, for not being able to watch one hour. This was repeated a ſecond and a third time. Mean while, Judas and the officers came upon Chriſt; at firſt they lead him to Annas, and from him to Caiphas, in whoſe houſe the ſcribes, prieſts and elders were aſſembled. And Peter had much ado to get into the court, where being known, he deny'd his Maſter. After this Caiphas examin'd Chriſt. And after this was over, Peter deny'd him a ſecond time, and, about the ſpace of an hour after, deny'd him the third time. Now no man, from conſidering all theſe particulars, can have a right notion of things, if he does not immediately acknowledge the impoſſibility of tranſacting all of them, before a very late ſeaſon of the night; and beſides the caſe was very extraordinary, to take meaſures about the life of a man at ſuch late hours. But, without mentioning the feſtival that was ſo near, theſe dignified Jews were exaſperated againſt Chriſt, from their brutality to put him to death. The next thing, that makes towards an agreement of the Evangeliſts, is what Theophylact ſays upon Mark, "What Matthew ſays with " ſome obſcurity, before the cock crows, is interpreted by Mark, " before he ſhall crow twice. Now 'tis cuſtomary with cocks to " crow often, and then ſeem as tho' aſleep; and after ſometime to " begin crowing again. So that what Matthew ſays, before the " cock crows, means, before the cock hath finiſhed his firſt crow- " ing, thou ſhalt deny me thrice."

That what hath been hitherto advanced, concerning the gallicinium, or cock crowing, may be rightly underſtood; it remains now for us to remark, that the time, immediately following the middle diviſion of the night (when the Romans began and ended the day) is called, the inclination of midnight, or the firſt cock crowing: for the cock begins to crow commonly about midnight. After which follows the Conticimum, that is, according to the antient gloſs, the time, which is between the firſt and ſecond cock crowing, when cocks are ſilent. The Conticinium is follow'd by the ſecond cock crowing, or the fourth watch of the night; becauſe the cock is known to rouze up his voice with more ſhrillneſs, and prove more beneficial to men at that time, as he awakens them up to their labour, by this ſecond crowing, and becauſe the time of the ſecond crowing, is diſtinguiſhed by another name, being called, the middle night, or midnight. (V.)

Ver. 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46. Then cometh Jeſus with them unto a place called Gethſemane, and ſaith unto the diſciples, Sit ye here, while I go and pray yonder. And he took with him Peter, and the two ſons of Zebedee; and began to be ſorrowful, and very heavy. Then ſaith he unto them, my ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful, even unto death: tarry ye here, and watch with me. And he went a little further, and fell on his face, and prayed, ſaying, O my Father, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſs from me: nevertheleſs, not as I will, but as thou wilt. And he cometh unto the diſciples, and findeth them aſleep, and ſaith unto Peter, What could ye uot watch with me one hour? Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the ſpirit indeed is willing, but the fleſh is weak. He went away again the ſecond time, and prayed, ſaying, O my Father, if this cup may not paſs away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done. And he came and found them aſleep again: for their eyes were heavy. And he left them, and went away again, and prayed the third time, ſaying the ſame words. Then cometh he to his diſciples, and ſaith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your reſt; behold, the hour is at hand, and the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of ſinners. Riſe, let us be going: behold, he is at hand that doth betray me.

O my father if it be poſſible.] I believe that it was the ſenſe of horror for death which Chriſt conceiv'd, that made him pronounce theſe words about it: we are not to ſuppoſe that any particular eſcap'd him, which he had not weighed in his mind before, or that what he ſpoke before, ought to be regulated by that which he delivered afterwards; ſince 'tis more juſt to ſay, that Chriſt would have expreſs'd at one and the ſame time, tum quid vellet, tum quid velit. See Phil. ii. viii. But how ſquares the phraſe, If it be poſſible with that which follows in Mark, all things are poſſible to thee? To put this in a juſt light, we muſt refer here to that trite diſtinction in the ſchools, of that which is impoſſible of itſelf, and of that which is poſſible by means of this or that being added thereto. But the meaning is this, if thy decrees determine that thy glory, and man's ſalvation be conſulted another way. (G.)

Ver, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54. And while he yet ſpake, lo, Judas one of the twelve came, and with him a great multitude with ſwords and ſtaves from the chief prieſts and elders of the people. Now he that betrayed him, gave them a ſign, ſaying, Whomſoever I ſhall kiſs, that ſame is he, hold him faſt. And forthwith he came to Jeſus, and ſaid, Hail maſter; and kiſſed him. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Friend, wherefore art thou come? Then came they and laid hands on Jeſus, and took him. And behold, one of them which were with Jeſus, ſtretched out his hand, and drew his ſword, and ſtruck a ſervant of the high prieſts, and ſmote of his ear. Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, put up again thy ſword into his place: for all they that take the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword. Thinkeſt thou that I cannot now pray to my Father, and he ſhall preſently give me more than twelve legions of angels? But how then ſhall the ſcriptures be fulfilled, that thus it muſt me?

Kiſſed him.] The Hebrews, not only upon long abſence, or departure, but in ſeveral other caſes, us'd kiſſes. This appears from Luke vii. 45. And 'twas from the Jews that the Chriſtians had this cuſtom. This is the kiſs of love and the holy kiſs, taken notice of ſo many times by St. Paul. (G.)

Ver. 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64. In that ſame hour ſaid Jeſus to the multitudes, Are ye come out as againſt a thief, with ſwords and ſtaves for to take me? I ſat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me. But all this was done, that the ſcriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. Then all the diſciples forſook him, and fled. And they that had laid hold on Jeſus, led him away to Caiaphas the high prieſt, where the ſcribes and the elders were aſſembled. Bnt Peter followed him afar off, unto the high prieſt's palace, and went in and ſat with the ſervants to ſee the end. Now the chief prieſts and elders, and all the council, ſought falſe witneſs againſt Jeſus to put him to death, But found none: yea, though many falſe witneſſes came, yet found they none. At the laſt came two falſe witneſſes, And ſaid, This fellow ſaid, I am able to deſtroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days. And the high prieſt aroſe, and ſaid unto him, Anſwereſt thou nothing? what is it which theſe witneſs againſt thee? But Jeſus held his peace. And the high prieſt anſwered and ſaid unto him, I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us, whether thou be the Chriſt the Son of God. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Thou haſt ſaid: nevertheleſs I ſay unto you, Hereafter ſhall ye ſee the Son of man ſitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven.

Falſe witneſs.] It will not ſeem ſtrange here to find falſe witneſſes againſt Chriſt entertain'd, if we but remember, that, among the Jews, it was lawful, in actions againſt the ſeducers of the people, or againſt falſe prophets, to ſay any thing, whether true or falſe; for no perſon was permitted to urge any thing in their behalf. On the other hand, others, who were to be condemned, had a night and day allowed them, to ſee if they could produce any thing to their advantage; but this favour was denied to falſe prophets and ſeducers of the people. (H.)

Ver. 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75. Then the high prieſt rent his cloaths, ſaying, He hath ſpoken blaſphemy; what further need have we of witneſſes? behold, now ye have heard his blaſphemy. What think ye? They anſwered and ſaid, He is guilty of death. Then did they ſpit in his face, and buffetted him, and others ſmote him with the palms of their hands, Saying, Prophecy unto us, thou Chriſt, who is he that ſmote thee? Now Peter ſat without in the palace: and a damſel came unto him, ſaying, Thou alſo waſt with Jeſus of Galilee. But he denied before them all, ſaying, I know not what thou ſayeſt. And when he was gone out into the porch, another maid ſaw him, and ſaid unto them that were there, This fellow was alſo with Jeſus of Nazareth. And again he denied with an oath, I do not know the man. And after a while came unto him they that ſtood by, and ſaid to Peter, Surely thou alſo art one of them, for thy ſpeech bewrayeth thee. Then began he to curſe and to ſwear, ſaying, I know not the man. And immediately the cock crew. And Peter remembered the words of Jeſus, which ſaid unto him, Before the cock crow, thou ſhalt deny me thrice. And he went out, and wept bitterly.

Rent his cloaths.] 'Tis needleſs to acquaint any, that rending of cloaths was a repreſentation of indignation, zeal and piety, among the Jews, on ſeveral occaſions. Only the main difficulty is this, namely, how rending of cloaths comes to be applied to the high-prieſt in this place, when the prieſts are prohibited to do ſo, Levit. x. 6. xxi. 10. 'Tis upon this that Baronius hath founded his objection. But the anſwer is very eaſy, that the prohibition, in the above-cited places of Leviticus, extends only to the not rending of the ſacerdotal garments, which were only made uſe of in the office of the Prieſt: Agreeable whereto the Jews have a rule, That he who ſhall tear any of the prieſts garments ſhall be beaten. But beſides, it was unlawful indeed to enter with rent cloaths into the court of the Iſraelites in the temple; but this illegality took in any other as well as the prieſt, who, in this matter, was the ſame with others; except in this ſingle particular, that the high-prieſt tore his garment from the bottom to the top, when the prieſts and all others rent it from the top to the bottom. (H.)

C H A P. XXVII.

Chriſt is bound, and ſent to Pilate. Judas hangs himſelf. The wife of Pilate. Barabbas is demanded. Pilate waſhes his hands. Chriſt is crowned with thorns, crucified, and reproached; he delivers up the ghoſt, is laid in a ſepulchre, and guarded by ſoldiers.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. WHEN the morning was come, all the chief prieſts and elders of the people took counſel againſt Jeſus, to put him to death. And when they had bound him, they led him away, and delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor. Then Judas which had betrayed him, when he ſaw that he was condemned, repented himſelf, and brought again the thirty pieces of ſilver to the chief prieſts and elders, Saying, I have ſinned, in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they ſaid, What is that to us? ſee thou to that. And he caſt down the pieces of ſilver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himſelf. And the chief prieſts took the ſilver pieces, and ſaid, It is not lawful for to put them into the treaſury, becauſe it is the price of blood. And they took counſel, and bought with them the potters field, to bury ſtrangers in. Wherefore that field was called the field of blood, unto this day. Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremy the prophet, ſaying, And they took the thirty pieces of ſilver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Iſrael did value: And gave them for the potters field, as the Lord appointed me.

Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremy the prophet.] 'Tis a circumſtance, beyond doubt, that the Jews preſerv'd ſeveral of the predictions of their ancient prophets by tradition, and not in writing, tho' in ſucceeding ages 'tis probable that they committed them to writing. Such is that of Enoch, mentioned by Jude xiv. 15. Beſides we muſt know, that it was common for the ſucceeding prophets to make uſe of the ſame words pronounced by their brethren of antiquity. For example, Zacharias loves to imitate the phraſes of Jeremiah, upon which the Jews ordinarily ſay, Spiritum Jeremiæ fuiſſe in Zacharia, "That the ſoul of Jeremiah was in Zacharias," and conſequently that Jeremiah was the ſame as Zacharias. Wherefore I do not ſee any thing that may hinder, why the phraſe of the thirty pieces of ſilver, which Jeremiah originally made uſe of, and which the Jews preſerved by their tradition, may not be applied as ſpoken by Zacharias, tho' Chriſt cites it here as pronounced by the former, in whoſe writings we no where find it laid down. (G.) Difficulties have been raiſed in the explaining this place, and the reaſon ſeems principally owing to the prophecy, which we find in Zachariah, being ſaid to be pronounced by Jeremiah. Without loading our account with a recital of the different interpretations of various annotators, as being not ſo probable, we will only confine ourſelves to this one conſideration, namely, that we very commonly find the Evangeliſts connecting the opinions of two prophets together, and yet citing them as ſpoken under the name of one of them. Thus, in the foregoing chap. xxi. 4, 5. it is ſaid, "Which "was ſpoken by the prophet, ſaying, Tell the daughter of Sion, "Behold thy king cometh unto thee, meek, and ſitting upon an "aſs;" where the firſt words, as far as "ſitting upon an aſs" excluſively, are to be found in Iſa. lxii. 11. and the reſt in Zachariah, chap. ix. 1. So, in the ſame xxi. chap. that which was ſpoken of by Iſaiah, "My houſe ſhall be called the houſe of "prayer," is connected with theſe words, "but you have made "it a den of thieves:" Whereby it is alluded to the words of Jeremiah, chap. vii. 11. as tho' they had been ſpoken by the ſame Iſaiah. Thus the Evangeliſt Mark, putting two teſtimonies together of Malachy and Iſaiah, under the name of one of them makes his beginning thus, "The beginning of the Goſpel of Jeſus "Chriſt the ſon of God, as it is written in the prophets; (mean"ing the prophet Iſaiah) Behold I ſend my meſſenger before thy "face, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee. The voice of "one crying in the wilderneſs, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, "make his paths ſtraight." Having obſerved thus much, we put the following conſtruction thereupon, that as the potter's field was then purchaſed with the price of blood, and from thence called the field of blood, the completion enſued not only of that which was ſpoken by Jeremiah, chap. xix. but alſo of that ſpoken by the prophet Zacharias, chap. xi. where he ſays, "And they "took the thirty pieces of ſilver." But we put this diſtinction between Jeremiah and the prophet, namely, that the voice of the prophet may not be underſtood of Jeremiah, but of him who ſaid, "And they took the thitty pieces of ſilver." But the paſſage of Jeremiah, to which Matthew alludes, is not in the xxxii. chapter, as ſome erroneouſly ſuppoſe, where the prophet is ſaid, by the expreſs command of God to have ſold a field; becauſe the field, taken notice of there, is the field of bleſſing, and the words mentioned there are pronounced to that end, as is evident from the 15th verſe: Nor is it aſſerted with any ſolidity of reaſon, that the field, ſaid to be ſold there by Jeremiah, is called the potter's field, becauſe Jeremiah is commanded to put the deeds of purchaſe in an earthen veſſel: Neither has this any relation to the field of blood, mentioned by Matthew. But, however, as 'tis certain there was no field, among thoſe which were formerly curs'd, that could compare with the field or valley of Hinnon, as being ſet apart for the execrable and abominable ſervice of Moloch, and which ſtood near the potter's gate, at the foot of mount Moriah Southward, we are of opinion that this potter's field either ſignifies the valley of Hinnon, or the field next adjoining thereto; and that it was called from thence the potter's field formerly, but now the field of blood, or the price of blood, for which it was purchaſed; and that ſo was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremiah the prophet, in his xixth chapter, "Thus ſaith the "Lord, Go and get a potter's earthen bottle, and take of the ancients of the people, and of the ancients of the prieſts, and go "forth unto the valley of the ſon of Hinnon, which is by the "entry of the potter's gate, and proclaim there the words that I "ſhall tell thee; and ſay, Hear ye the word of the Lord, O "kings of Judah, and inhabitants of Jeruſalem, &c. Behold the "days come, ſaith the Lord, that this place ſhall no more be "called Tophet, nor the valley of the ſon of Hinnon, but the "valley of ſlaughter." So that Matthew ſays, That by that which is immediately after mentioned concerning the potter's field, which is called the field of blood, is fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremiah the prophet, namely, that the place which was formerly called the potter's field, on Jeremiah's breaking by command of God the potter's bottle, ſhould in after times be called the field of ſlaughter. Beſides, Matthew adds, That the prophecy of Zachariah was accompliſhed by that which he had mentioned before, concerning the price of Chriſt, when ſold. However, the Evangeliſt cites this prophecy of Zachariah in ſuch a manner, that it may be expounded, either by ſaying that he has made ſome variation in the words, or inſerted ſome particulars of his own. (V.)

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14. And Jeſus ſtood before the governor; and the governor asked him, ſaying, Art thou the king of the Jews? And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thou ſayeſt. And when he was accuſed of the chief prieſts and elders, he anſwered nothing. Then ſaith Pilate unto him, Heareſt thou not how many things they witneſs againſt thee? And he anſwered him to never a word, inſomuch that the governor marvelled greatly.

Jeſus ſtood before the governor.] That is, after the firſt time of Pilate's going out to the Jews, and wiſhing he was delivered to them, to be try'd according to their own law, which they refuſed. And after they had accuſed him of ſubverting their laws, and refuſing to pay Cæſar his tribute, he entered again into the judgment-hall, and called Chriſt, whom he interrogated ſtanding, as it follows, and as Luke and John more copiouſly explain. (V.)

Ve. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. Now at that feaſt the governor was wont to releaſe unto the people a priſoner, whom they would. And they had then a notable priſoner, called Barabbas. Therefore when they were gathered together, Pilate ſaid unto them, Whom will ye that I releaſe unto you? Barabbas, or Jeſus, which is called Chriſt? For he knew that for envy they had delivered him. When he was ſet down on the judgment-ſeat, his wife ſent unto him, ſaying, Have thou nothing to do with that juſt man; for I have ſuffered many things this day in a dream, becauſe of him. But the chief prieſts and elders perſuaded the multitude that they ſhould ask Barabbas, and deſtroy Jeſus. The governor anſwered and ſaid unto them, Whether of the twain will ye that I releaſe unto you? They ſaid, Barabbas. Pilate ſaith unto them, What ſhall I do then with Jeſus, which is called Chriſt? They all ſay unto him, Let him be crucified. And the governor ſaid, Why, what evil hath he done? But they cried out the more, ſaying, Let him be crucified.

Now at that feaſt.] Supply, of the Paſſover. Hence we have a new argument to prove the general opinion, which aſſerts that Chriſt ſuffered Crucifixion on the very Paſſover of the Jews, which is here called the feaſt, or the ſolemn day, when it was cuſtomary for ſome criminal to be delivered from his confinement; and, indeed, the Day immediately preceding is mark'd out by theſe words of John, Before the feaſt of the Paſſover. But Matthew omits taking notice of Chriſt's being ſent to Herod, for the particulars here mentioned were performed after Herod had remanded Chriſt back; (V.) that is, at the feaſt of the Paſſover, which, by way of eminency, is called the feaſt, the governor was accuſtomed to releaſe a priſoner, poſſibly for a memorial of their deliverance out of Egypt. Accordingly Pilate makes a motion to them, that Chriſt may be ſet at liberty, in honour of their feaſt, for he was ſenſible, that what they did proceeded from a motive of envy and maliciouſneſs. (B.)

I have ſuffered many things this day in a dream, becauſe of him.] There are thoſe perſons, who will have the devil to be the author of this dream which Pilate's wife dreamt, in order to hinder Chriſt's paſſion, while many, on the other hand, impute it wholly to God, that Pilate's wife might admoniſh her husband of his duty, and that Chriſt might now be witneſſed of by the Gentiles. (V.) There are ſeveral kinds of dreams, natural, moral, diabolical, and divine. The queſtion is, what kind of dream this was? All agree, that it was not natural; ſome think it was diabolical, and that Satan was in hopes by it to prevent the work of man's redemption by the death of Chriſt. But if ſo, why had not Pilate the dream rather than his wife? Probably this dream was from God, for God is ſaid to order dreams We are to learn from hence, how wonderful the wiſdom and power of God is ſeen in the teſtimony of this woman, concerning the innocency of our Saviour. And 'tis obſervable at his trial, that not one of his countrymen the Jews ſpoke a word in his defence, whereas Pilate and his wife, who were both Gentiles, pronounced him righteous. (B.)

They all ſay unto him, Let him be crucified.] This was accompliſh'd in the paſchal lamb, concerning which we find theſe words in Exodus, And the whole aſſembly of the congregation of Iſrael ſhall kill it. Thus the prieſts, ſcribes, phariſees, and all the people conſpired againſt Chriſt, and with one mouth and mind ſaid, Let him be crucified. For the Jews accuſed our Saviour not only of being a blaſphemer, and an infringer of the eſtabliſhed religion amongſt them, but alſo of being a ſeducer, a diſturber of the common peace, and one who refuſed to pay tribute to Cæſar. Now according to the Roman laws, thoſe who fomented ſeditions or rebellions were puniſhed with crucifixion. (V.) 'Tis obſervable here, how unwilling Pilate was to be the inſtrument of the death of Chriſt; one while he orders the Jews to take him themſelves, and try him according to their own law; another while he offers to ſave Chriſt, in honour of their feaſt, for he was obliged by cuſtom to releaſe ſome priſoner or other at their Paſſover, and this priſoner he deſired might be Jeſus; which not ſatisfying them, he expoſtulates with them about our Saviour's innocency, What evil has he done? Nay, St. Luke ſays, "That Pilate came forth "three times, and profeſſed that he found no fault in him;" tho' he was ſatisfied all the time, that the Jews would not be denied. (B.)

Ver. 24, 25, 26. When Pilate ſaw that he could prevail nothing, but that rather a tumult was made, he took water, and waſhed his hands before the multitude, ſaying, I am innocent of the blood of this juſt perſon; ſee ye to it. Then anſwered all the People, and ſaid, His blood be on us, and on our children. Then releaſed he Barabbas unto them: and when he had ſcourged Jeſus, he delivered him to be crucified.

He took water, and waſhed his hands.] Waſhing of hands, to ſignify innocency, was not peculiar only to the Jews, but accuſtom'd amongſt other nations, becauſe 'tis natural to ſignify purity and cleanneſs by the element of water. (G.) He waſhed his hands, thereby to ſhew the Jews his innocency, with reſpect to the death of Chriſt. However, it appears from Deut. xxi. and Pſalm lxxii. that this was a principal cuſtom of the Jews; for 'tis ſaid in the laſt cited place, "I will waſh my hands amongſt the innocent." Edmund Merill, in his Notes upon Chriſt's paſſion, takes notice, that Pilate, as he was a Roman, did not ſo much conform to the cuſtoms of the Jews as of the Gentiles. The ſcholiaſt of Sophocles informs us, That 'twas common with the ancients, when they committed murder, or drew blood, to waſh their hands in water, to expiate the crime. Thus the Romans, who received this cuſtom from the Grecians, according to Dionyſius Halicarnaſſus, Origen, Servius, and Pliny, upon their ſacrificing, waſhed their hands, and wiped them with a linnen cloth. Thus Clemens Romanus, in his 2d book, chap. 52, writes, That when judges were going to pronounce ſentence of death, they lift up their hands towards heaven, and thereby witneſſed their innocency; and 'tis not improbable, that they waſhed their hands before, to lift them the purer into the air. (V.) 'Tis obſervable, in Pilate's waſhing of his hands, that he pronounced our Saviour's innocency, and was willing thereby to teſtify his own, that he did not conſent to his death, waſhing the hands being an uſual ceremony in proteſtation of a perſon's innocency. (B.)

His blood be upon us.] That is, we will be bound by that Puniſhment, be it what it will, for the ſpilling the blood of this man: But Pilate's waſhing his hands, and the anſwer returned by the Jews, happened after Jeſus was ſcourged, after his being crown'd with thorns, mock'd by the ſoldiers, and interrogated the ſecond time by Pilate. (V.) that is, let the guilt and puniſhment of his blood reſt upon us and our poſterity. A moſt horrid and impious imprecation! the dreadful effects whereof began to come upon them forty years after, in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and have remained upon their poſterity to this day, being near ſeventeen hundred years, the Jews being vagabonds over the earth, abhor'd by all nations whereſoever they come. (B.)

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. Then the ſoldiers of the governor took Jeſus into the common hall, and gather'd unto him the whole band of ſoldiers. And they ſtrip'd him, and put on him a ſcarlet robe. And when they had platted a crown of thorns, they put it upon his head, and a reed in his right hand: and they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, ſaying, Hail king of the Jews. And they ſpit upon him, and took the reed, and ſmote him on the head. And after that they had mocked him, they took the robe off from him, and put his own raiment on him, and led him away to crucify him.

Put on him a ſcarlet robe.] Namely, the worn-out garment of ſome ſoldier. John calls it a purple robe, and Mark only purple, which was a peculiar colour for kings and princes to wear. Whence Ambroſe and Hillary ſuppoſe that the purple was different from the ſcarlet robe, both in colour, and in the kind of the garment; tho' Auſtin will have it to have been the ſame, becauſe ſome purple very much reſembles ſcarlet, as ſufficiently appears from the Tyrian purple, which the poets, and ſome of the hiſtorians, highly commend for its beautiful redneſs, and near ſimilitude to blood. (V.) Chriſt having ſaid that he was the king of the Jews (not a temporal king, to preſide over them with pomp and grandeur, but a ſpiritual one, to reign in the affections of his people) made the Jews expect him to appear with greatneſs and majeſty; but miſſing of their hopes of a temporal king in Chriſt, they looked upon him as an impoſtor, and accordingly treated him as a mock king, putting a crown upon his head, but a very painful and ignominious one; a ſcepter in his hand, but it was a reed; and a robe of purple or ſcarlet, both which were uſed by princes; and bowed the knee before him, as they were wont to do to princes. (B.)

Ver. 32, 33, 34. 35, 36, 37. And as they came out, they found a man of Cyrene, Simon by name: him they compelled to bear his croſs. And when they were come unto a place called Golgotha, that is to ſay, a place of a ſcull, They gave him vinegar to drink, mingled with gall: and when he had taſted thereof, he would not drink. And they crucified him, and parted his garments, caſting lots: that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophet, They parted my garments among them, and upon my veſture did they caſt lots. And ſitting down, they watched him there. And ſet up over his head, his accuſation written, THIS IS JESUS THE KING OF THE JEWS.

Of Cyrene.] Cyrene was a city of Lybia in Africa, beyond Egypt, and at a conſiderable diſtance from Judea; but not of that Lybia, which was properly Africa, but which was a part of the Eaſt contiguous to Africa, according to Auſtin. Tho' there are ſome, who will not have Simon to be of that Cyrene, which, according to Auſtin's cited account, was Lybia, or Pentapolis. Thus Pliny calls the country of Cyrene, from the number of five famous cities that ſtood in it, namely Berenice, Arſinoe, Ptolomais, Apollonia, and Cyrene itſelf; whence comes the Appellation of the country itſelf, which is ſaid to derive its name of Cyrene from the daughter of Hypſeus, ſo named. Tho' others pretend to derive this name from Cyrus, who built it in Cyprus, and from whence the perſon here mentioned had his original. Mark and Luke add theſe words, as he was coming out of a village, thereby to give the world a fuller demonſtration of the cruelty of the Jews, in forcing a perſon, thus fatigued with his journey, to take up and bear the croſs of Chriſt. As to what Mark ſays, That this Simon the Cyrenean was father of Alexander and Rufus, he added it either for the ſake of diſtinguiſhing him, or becauſe theſe two were at that time in great repute. (V.)

Into a place called Golgotha.] The hiſtory of the women, who followed and bewail'd Chriſt, is omitted by Matthew, tho' Luke takes notice of it in chap. xxiii. 27. Golgotha, for the ſmoother pronounciation, is put for Golgoltha, which means a ſkull in Syriac, for ſo was the place nam'd, for the great number of dead men's ſkulls found there, ſpread up and down without any order according to Jerome. But the antient fathers tell us, that the place was nam'd from Adam, our firſt father's head being found there. Which etymology St. Jerome calls, "a tickling the peoples ear with an idle tale. (V.)

Mingled with gaul.] If Mark means by the wine mingled with myrrh, wine mingled with frankincenſe, the gaul may be taken by Matthew for bitterneſs, for the Hebrew word Raſch, which is taken very frequently for a very bitter herb, is tranſlated gaul, by the vulgate, in Pſalm lxviii. 22. and bitterneſs in Hoſea x. 4. But if, on the contrary, the wine mingled with myrrh, is taken for warm wine put into cups, perfum'd with myrrh, in order to receive therefrom a pleaſing odor and ſmell; then it muſt be ſaid, that the wine mingled with myrrh, which was reach'd up to Chriſt, was to give him additional ſtrength; and at the ſame time, that mingled with gaul, or with ſome other bitter Aromatic, was to give him pain in drinking it. But the former interpretation to me ſeems the clearer, and eſpecially for that which we find in the Talmud; and, indeed, 'tis more probable, that Matthew endeavour'd to acquaint us with the bitterneſs of that drink, which was offer'd Chriſt in his laſt agonies, and that Luke ſtrove to inform us with the cauſe of the bitterneſs of the wine, which was from its being mingled with myrrh, or frankincenſe. Now ſuppoſing the thieves, who were crucifyed in company with Chriſt, drunk of this wine thus mingled with myrrh, to protect and harden their bodies againſt the torments they were going to ſuffer, certainly it was not much which they drunk. For, according to Galen, if a pretty large quantity of wine, mingled with myrrh be drunk, it either ſtupifies the ſenſes, or haſtens on the death of him who drinks it. Accordingly, as Dioſcorides, Serapio, and Damir the Arabian acquaint us, he who takes and drinks of a large doſe of wine and frankincenſe mixed together, infallibly runs mad; whereas it appears from the words of theſe robbers thus crucified with Chriſt, that at the time of their crucifixion they were of ſound mind and memory. (V.)

Ver. 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44. Then were there two thieves crucified with him: one on the right hand, and another on the left. And they that paſſed by, reviled him wagging their heads, And ſaying, Thou that deſtroyeſt the temple, and buildeſt it in three days, ſave thy ſelf: if thou be the Son of God, come down from the croſs. Likewiſe alſo the chief prieſts mocking him, with the ſcribes and elders, ſaid, He ſaved others, himſelf he cannot ſave: if he be the king of Iſrael, let him now come down from the croſs, and we will believe him. He truſted in God; let him deliver him now, if he will have him: for he ſaid, I am the Son of God. The thieves alſo which were crucified with him, caſt the ſame in his teeth.

He ſaved others, himſelf he cannot ſave.] Chriſt was the lamb, who, like that of the paſſover mentioned Exodus xii. 3, was taken out of the flock, but, as it is ſaid Deut. xxviii. 15. was taken from amongſt his brethren. The Apoſtle in his epiſtle to the Hebrews, makes this lamb equally ſharer of fleſh and blood with his brethren, and alike to them in all other circumſtances, ſave in ſin. Which the law ſeems principally to point at, in commanding the lamb, deſign'd for the paſſover, to be choſen out of the flock pure and unſpotted. For the Greeks tranſlates it perfect, or immaculate, Exod. xii. 5, to which Peter, in his firſt epiſtle, i. 19, ſeems to allude, where he attributes our redemption to the blood of the lamb without blemiſh, and without ſpot, that is, free from ſin, for ſin is the ſpot of the ſoul. That Chriſt was void of tranſgreſſion is not to be queſtioned; for who will dare to charge him with error or ſin? for he did not ſin, neither was guile found in his mouth. Beſides, Pilate himſelf, who condemned him to the croſs, as guilty, on the petition of the Jews, did yet pronounce him innocent by his own words, and profeſſed before the Jews that he found no fault in him. 'Twas, indeed, abſolutely neceſſary, towards his being our high prieſt, that he ſhould be innocent, unpolluted, and ſeparated from ſinners, who was to offer himſelf by the Holy Ghoſt pure and unſpotted to God; neither, otherwiſe, had he made ſatisfaction for us, who concluded it neceſſary, for the remiſſion of ſins, to offer ſacrifice, as the reſt of the prieſts were wont; neither would the Jews have had an undeſerv'd reaſon to have made that objection, "he ſaved others himſelf he "cannot ſave." But the Jews are under a miſtake, for he had no thought of ſaving himſelf, purely to ſave others, who came into the world to take away our tranſgreſſions, and had no ſin in himſelf, as we read in John chap. iii. v. 5. (G. V.) One of the aggravations of our Lord's ſufferings on the croſs, aroſe from the company with which he ſuffered, namely, the thieves. It had been diſparagement enough for Our Saviour to have been ſorted with the beſt of men, but, to be numbered with the ſcum of mankind, is ſuch an indignity as confounds our thoughts. This was intended by the Jews to diſhonour him the more, and to perſuade the world that he was the greateſt of offenders; but God overuled this, that the ſcripture might be fulfilled, "he was numbred among the tranſgreſſors."

The thieves alſo caſt the ſame in his teeth.] That which is here affirm'd of the thieves, in the plural number, ſeems to be underſtood only of one of them in the ſingular; for Luke xxiii. 39, ſays, that the other pray'd to, and believ'd on him. We may produce out of this book, ſeveral examples of the like form of ſpeech, Chap. xxvi. 8. it is read, "when his diſciples ſaw it, they had in-"dignation," tho' according to John, it was only Judas who was diſpleaſed. So chap. xxi. 2. we read, "looſe them," meaning, the aſs and the foal, when Mark ſays, "a colt tied, looſe him." This form of ſpeech is uſed in all languages by a common figure call'd Syllepſis. Thus John xiii 28. where it is ſaid, that none of thoſe who lay at meat with Chriſt, knew to what purpoſe he ſpoke to Judas, what thou doeſt do quickly; it is not to be imagined that John, who asked, and was told who it was who ſhould betray him, was included in the number of thoſe who knew not. Thus Heb. xi. 37. 'tis ſaid, "they were ſawn aſunder" in the plural, which yet cannot be found to refer to any other but Iſaiah. 'Tis poſſible, indeed, that, at firſt, both thieves might blaſpheme and reproach Chriſt, and that one of them, afterwards, might confeſs to and believe on him. Proſper underſtands the paſſage thus, "when he had railed for ſome time on Jeſus, he was ſud-"denly changed." And ſo Titus Boſtrenſis. "The two thieves "ſpoke, at firſt, as the Jews did, probably thinking by that arti-"fice to obtain ſome help towards procuring their pardon," but being diſappointed of their hopes, and hearing Jeſus pray for his crucifiers, one of them was thereby prevailed upon and converted. And if ſo, then the words here will refer to the former time, and in St. Luke to the latter. (H.) Another aggravation of Our Lord's ſufferings was, that the thieves, who ſuffered with him, reviled him with the reſt, that is, one of them, as Luke has it, or perhaps both of them might do it at firſt, which if ſo, encreaſes the wonder of the penitent thief's converſion. (B.)

Ver. 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50. Now from the ſixth hour there was darkneſs over all the land unto the ninth hour. And about the ninth hour Jeſus cried with a loud voice, ſaying, Eli, Eli, lama ſabachthani? that is to ſay, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? Some of them that ſtood there, when they heard that, ſaid, This man calleth for Elias. And ſtraightway one of them ran, and took a ſpunge and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink. The reſt ſaid, Let be, let us ſee whether Elias will come to ſave him. Jeſus when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghoſt.

From the ſixth hour.] That is, from noon, when the ſun gives the greateſt light. Hence 'tis gathered that Chriſt was crucified at the ſixth hour, as John ſeems to inſinuate, when he ſays, that Pilate brought Chriſt forth about the ſixth hour, and ſat down in the judgment ſeat, in a place, that is called the pavement, where he delivered him up to the Jews, to be crucified. But Mark's words chap. xv 25. "And it was the third hour, and they crucified him." ſeem to oppoſe John's account. But there are two ways to ſolve this ſeeming difficulty, without having recourſe to methods that are improbable. The firſt way is the more common, and that is this. The day may be juſtly ſaid to be divided into four parts, each whereof comprehends three hours, as is evident from the twentieth of Matthew, where 'tis ſaid, that the houſholder went out to hire labourers early in the morning, about the third, ſixth and ninth hour, ſo that conſequently every ſpace of theſe ſeveral three hours, had its appellation from its firſt hour; and thus Mark ſays, that Chriſt ſuffer'd crucifixion at the third hour, becauſe the ſixth was not yet come; for all the ſpace from the third to the ſixth hour was called the third hour. Now, becauſe the ſixth hour was juſt at hand, we therefore collected from John that Chriſt was crucified near about the ſixth hour, or juſt at the end of the three hours, which were called the third hour; and the ſixth hour coming immediately after, the darkneſs followed, of which St. Matthew ſpeaks. The other way of anſwering this difficulty is by ſaying, that it was the third hour, or that the third hour was paſt, ſince Chriſt was nail'd to the croſs, when the ſoldiers divided his cloaths between them, of which Mark ſpeaks; and the other Evangeliſts plainly intimate, that this was after his crucifixion, though they do not determine, what hour preciſely it happened after his crucifixion, ſo that the particle and may be taken for after, which is an hebraiſm very frequent in the ſcriptures, as may be ſeen in Joſhua vii. 25. And ſo Mark does not aſſign the hour of Chriſt's crucifixion, whether it was at the third, or the ſixth hour. (V.)

There was darkneſs.] The ſun was darkened, not by any interpoſition of the moon, as being then at the full, nor by the ſhading of any cloud, but by ſome cauſe, wholly unknown to man. Over all the land muſt be taken in the ſame ſenſe as over all the world, mention'd Luke ii. 1. refers to the Roman empire, or, at leaſt, to the moſt conſiderable part thereof. What God deſigned by this darkneſs, hath been matter of diſpute amongſt many. That interpretation is to be followed, which admits of the greateſt latitude. But, 'tis a receiv'd maxim among all nations, that when ſuch omens happen, 'tis neceſſary to believe that ſome vaſt wickedneſs is pointed out thereby. (G.) Pſendo-Dyoniſius, the Areopagite, in his ſeventh epiſtle to Polycarp, takes notice of this eclipſe, wherein he remarks, that it was quite contrary to an eclipſe of the ſun. Tertullian, Origen, Africanus, Philoponus, and others, inform us, that Phlegon made mention of this darkneſs in his Olympiads. And beſides, theſe fathers cite the authority of this heathen writer to convince the obſtinate Gentiles, and perſwade them to a belief of the ſurpriſing death of Chriſt. Tertullian in his Apology, c. 21. has theſe words: "Eodem momento "quo Chriſtus crucifixus eſt, dies, medium orbem ſignante ſole, ſub-"ducta eſt: deliquium ubique putaverunt, qui id quoque ſuper "Chriſto prædicatum non ſcierunt." "The very moment wherein "Chriſt was crucified, the day was darkned at noon: they who "did not know that ſuch a thing was foretold of Chriſt, took it for "an eclipſe." Oroſius, l. 7. chap. 4. tells us, that this eclipſe was to be met with in the Grecian writings. And Auguſtine, in his 80th epiſtle to Heſychius, that the Romans inſerted it in their Annals: but that envy prevailing at laſt, it was razed out, for fear the world ſhould think that the heavens had mourned the death of ſo divine a perſon as Chriſt. Hence you may find Ruffinus, in his Acts of St. Lucian the martyr, pronouncing this ſolemn ſpeech: "Per-"quirite in annalibus veſtris, & invenietis temporibus Pilati fugato "ſole interruptum tenebris diem." "Look into your annals, and "there you will find in Pilate's days that the ſun was overſhadowed, "and the day involved in darkneſs." (V) The rays of Chriſt's Divinity, and the glory of his Godhead, ſhine forth in the midſt of that infirmity, which his human nature laboured under. He ſhews himſelf to be the God of nature, by altering the courſe thereof. The ſun is eclipſed, and darkneſs overſpreads the earth for three hours, namely, from twelve to three o' clock. Thus the ſun in the firmament becomes cloſe mourner at our Lord's death, and the whole frame of nature puts itſelf into a funeral habit. (B.)

Put it on a reed.] To the end he might reach it up to the mouth of Chriſt. Some imagine this reed to be a ſtalk of hyſſop, becauſe John's words are, They filled a ſpunge with vinegar, and put it upon hyſſop, and put it to his mouth. But they are miſtaken: For in the Greek both of Mark and Matthew, 'tis read calamo. Now calamus does not imply only a reed, but it properly ſignifies a ſtalk of corn, as Heſychius defines it; whence it is appropriated to other uſes. However, 'tis no where to be found in the notion of the ſtem of an herb, which has neither any joints or knots, nor is hollow, as the ſtalk of hyſſop is known to be. Beſides the ſtalk of hyſſop was not ſufficient to perform this, I mean, when the ſpunge was faſtened to it, to reach the mouth of Chriſt, then faſtened to the croſs; for, according to Iſaac Ben Omram, the ſtalk of hyſſop is but a cubit in length at the longeſt. Neither is the reaſoning of thoſe of any ſignification, who alledge that hyſſop, like a muſtard corn, grows into a tree in Judea; becauſe Solomon ſays, that he diſcourſed of every tree, from the cedar to the hyſſop; as if from hence hyſſop was a tree; for the Hebrew word which ſignifies wood is taken for a tree, and the very ſame word is extended to the ſtem of flax. So that we are of opinion, that the hyſſop, mentioned by John, is not to be taken in the dative caſe, as if the ſpunge was faſtened about the hyſſop; but in the ablative, as if the ſpunge full of vinegar was ty'd to the hyſſop, thereby to make the liquor the more ungrateful to taſte, as the acid of the vinegar and the bitterneſs of the hyſſop were mix'd together. (V.)

He gave up the ghoſt.] Supply, from John xix. 30. He bowed his head. Then might truly be ſaid that of the Pſalm, Thou ſhalt give up the ghoſt, and renew the face of the earth. Chriſt gave up the ghoſt, and brought in a new age, by aboliſhing the old. He gave up the ghoſt, and lo! all things put on a new face; the veil of the temple was rent, to diſcover the ending or abolition of the miſteries of the law: the monuments of the dead were opened, to ſhew, that by his death a new life was granted to the dead; the earth was ſhaken, and the rocks ſplit, to let us underſtand, that the ancient hard-heartedneſs of mankind, was to be converted by his paſſion into a new compunction of conſcience, thereby to ſoften their minds: he inſtituted a new covenant, and promiſed a new name to the conqueror; he hath ſanctified a new way for us by his fleſh; he gives us an invitation to a new Jeruſalem; out of two people he has built for himſelf a new man; he is pleaſed to ſerve God in newneſs of ſpirit, and not in the oldneſs of the letter; and that we crucify the old man, and put on the new: Therefore, according to the Apoſtle, if any man be in Chriſt, he is a new creature; old things are paſs'd away, and, behold, all things are become new. Moreover, we are to conſider, that Chriſt died at the ninth hour, which anſwers to our three o'clock in the afternoon, when formerly the paſchal lamb was ſlain between the two evenings, that is, according to Joſephus, from the ninth till the eleventh hour. And as from the days of David the lambs of the paſſover were to be ſlain at Jeruſalem, ſo the true lamb ſuffered there, as he himſelf had foretold, that a prophet could not periſh out of Jeruſalem. (V.) From the words, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? it appears, that Chriſt's ſufferings conſiſted in thoſe of the ſoul, the diſtreſs of his ſpirit being more intolerable than the torments of his body. Likewiſe, from the phraſe, Why haſt thou forſaken me? that he was deſerted for ſome time, and left deſolate of all ſenſible conſolation. And that, from his crying with a loud voice, he gave a miraculous evidence of his Divinity inſtantly before he gave up the ghoſt. This ſhewed, that he did not die according to the ordinary courſe of nature, gradually departing, and drawing on, as we expreſs it. No, his life was whole in him, and nature as ſtrong at laſt as at firſt; ſo that he, who could cry with ſuch a loud voice, In articulo mortis, as he did, could, if he had pleaſed, have preſerved himſelf from death: from whence we learn, that he rather conquer'd, than was ſubdued by death. (B.)

Ver. 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56. And behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent, And the graves were opened, and many bodies of ſaints which ſlept, aroſe, And came out of the graves after his reſurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many. Now when the centurion and they that were with him, watching Jeſus, ſaw the earthquake, and thoſe things that were done, they feared greatly, ſaying, Truly this was the Son of God. And many women were there (beholding afar off) which followed Jeſus from Galilee, miniſtring unto him. Among which was Mary Magdalen, and Mary the mother of James and Joſes, and the mother of Zebedee's children.

And behold the veil of the temple.] Whether it was the exterior veil, which hung over the firſt door, as Origen and Jerome ſuppoſe, or the interior veil, which, like a wall, ſeparated the Holy from the Holy of Holies, as Cyril, Leo, and other ancients imagine, it cannot be defined. That there were two veils in the temple, which Herod put up, we learn from Joſephus, book 5. chap. 5. of his Jewiſh war. Whence we are not to inſiſt on the article in the Greek of Matthew and Mark, when they ſay, the veil, as if they inſinuated that there was but one veil in the temple. (V.)

Earth did quake.] Some imagine this to be the earthquake mentioned by Macrobius, as the greateſt which was ever known in the memory of man, in the reign of Tiberius Cæſar, twelve cities of Aſia being deſtroyed by it. The ſame is mentioned by Pliny. But it doth not appear by the text here, that this earthquake did belong to any other thing, but the temple at Jeruſalem, the parts whereof are mentioned, the veil, and the ground, and the ſtones of the building, and the tombs. And 'tis not improbable that this prodigy was particularly ſhew'd upon this place, to foretell the deſtruction of the temple upon their crucifying of Chriſt. So chap. xxviii. 2. where is mentioned a great ſhaking, it is not to be imagined, that this was a ſhaking of the whole earth, but, at the moſt, of that part where the grave was. Nay, there being no mention of the earth in that place, it is not improbable that ſeiſmos ſhould there ſignify that concuſſion of the air, join'd with thunder, wherewith Angels are wont to deſcend when they appear; for ſo it follows immediately there, For the angel of the Lord deſcended. (H.) Here we have an account of ſeveral extraordinary, and wonderful things, which occur'd about the time that our Saviour died. The veil of the temple was rent aſunder, that is, the hanging which parted the holy from the moſt holy place, to hide the myſteries therein, namely, the ark of the covenant and mercy-ſeat, from the view of the ordinary prieſts. This veil was now rent from the top to the bottom, and did impart theſe myſteries. 2. The earth quaked; as there was an univerſal eclipſe, ſo likewiſe there was an univerſal earthquake at the crucifixion of our Lord, which rouz'd many of the ſaints, who died before his incarnation, out of their dead ſleep. Theſe aroſe both as witneſſes and ſharers of Chriſt's reſurrection. Some conjecture, that thoſe who roſe out of their graves, were ſuch as believed in Chriſt, and died before him, as old Simeon. Accordingly, they underſtand St. John, v. 25. The hour is coming, and now is, that the dead ſhall hear the voice of the Son of man, of this reſurrection here mentioned. And whereas it is ſaid, They went into the holy city, and appeared to many; it is probable they were known to them to whom they ſo appeared; and if ſo, they muſt have liv'd in the time of their knowledge. (B.)

Ver. 57, 58, 59, 60, 61. When the even was come, there came a rich man of Arimathea, named Joſeph, who alſo himſelf was Jeſus diſciple: He went to Pilate and begged the body of Jeſus: then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered. And when Joſeph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth, And laid it in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock: and he rolled a great ſtone to the door of the ſepulchre, and departed. And there was Mary Magdalen, and the other Mary, ſitting over againſt the ſepulchre.

When the even was come.] Supply, from John xix. thus, "The Jews, that the bodies might not remain upon the croſs on the ſabbath, deſired Pilate that their legs might be broken; and, accordingly, one of the ſoldiers pierced the ſide of Chriſt with a ſpear, and immediately there guſh'd out blood and water; but not one of his bones were broken, becauſe he was already dead." (V.)

There came a rich man.] This mention of a rich man is not any way owing to a pretended boaſting of the ſcriptures, to ſhew us that any noble and wealthy perſon was a diſciple of Jeſus, but to acquaint us with the reaſon, that could induce Pilate to ſurrender the body of our Saviour. In another Evangeliſt, Joſeph is called a counſellor; and ſome are ſo fond as to imagine, that the firſt Pſalm, Bleſſed is the man that walks not in the councel of the ungodly, was compoſed of him. Jerome gives into this opinion. (Idem.)

Arimathea.] This is taken to be a city of Judea, near Lydda, between Jeruſalem and Joppa: In this place, Joſeph is ſaid to be of Arimathea, becauſe he was born there, tho' an inhabitant of Jeruſalem. I would have the prudent reader obſerve the difference between that phraſe of Mark, Joſeph came from Arimathea, and that of Matthew, Wiſemen came from the Eaſt, Whether or no the Eaſtern wiſe-men may not be ſaid to come after the very ſame manner, as it is here ſaid of Joſeph of Arimathea. (Idem.)

And laid it in his own new tomb.] For fear, after the reſurrection, ſome other might be impoſed upon the people as having riſen again: None will be ſurpriz'd to think, that Chriſt was buried by Joſeph on the very day of the paſſover. Certainly this was a circumſtance not to be denied, ſince there was no deferring it any longer, becauſe of the near approach of the ſabbath, when it was abſolutely unlawful to perform any manner of buſineſs, nay, not ſo much as to prepare meat; which yet was allowed on the feaſt of unleavened bread. Beſides, tho' the Jewiſh feſtivals took in both day and night, yet greater liberties were allow'd in the night than in the day-time, when only the people were to be aſſembled, and divine worſhip regarded. Whence the Evangeliſt obſerves, that Joſeph, having taken the body down from the croſs, embalmed and buried it, when the even was come. (Idem.) Here we have an account of our Lotd's interment in the grave; concerning which we have theſe things obſervable: 1. The preparatives thereto, namely, the begging and perfuming of his body. 2. The perſons concerned in ſolemnizing his funeral, Joſeph of Arimathea and Nicodemus. 3. The mourners that followed after, namely, the women who followed him out of Galilee, particularly, the two Maries. 4. The grave wherein they interred him, which was in a Garden. 5. The manner of the interment, which was with haſte, by reaſon of the ſtraits of time, the preparation of the paſſover cauſing them to be very expeditious, and the ſabbath approaching, when all manner of buſineſs was poſtponed. (B.)

Ver. 62, 63, 64, 65, 66. Now the next day that followed the day of the preparation, the chief prieſts and Phariſees came together unto Pilate, Saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver ſaid, while he was yet alive, After three days I will riſe again. Command therefore that the ſepulchre be made ſure until the third day, leſt his diſciples come by night, and ſteal him away, and ſay unto the people, He is riſen from the dead: ſo the laſt error ſhall be worſe than the firſt. Pilate ſaid unto them, Ye have a watch, go your way, make it as ſure as you can. So they went and made the ſepulchre ſure, ſealing the ſtone, and ſetting a watch.

The next day that followed the day of the preparation.] John calls it the preparation of the paſſover, not becauſe it was the eve of the paſchal feaſt, but becauſe it was Friday, which was the preparation of the ſabbath, and fell on the very feaſt of the paſſover: Juſt as we call the ſabbath Whitſunday, which happens on the very day of our paſcha; or juſt as we ſay the Equinox of the Spring or Autumn, becauſe it falls in the Spring or Autumn. This preparation is originally named Paraſceve. And Friday in Hebrew is called Erev, or Arouvta, which ſignifies thus much. Now becauſe 'twas unlawful either to kindle a fire, or prepare victuals upon a ſabbath, it was neceſſary that this Paraſceve, or thoſe few hours which preceded the ſabbath, ſhould be devoted to ſuch employments, which were abſolutely of ſervice to the feaſt, as we find it commanded in Exodus xvi. 5, 23. Hence Mark plainly ſays, "It "was the preparation, that is, the day before the ſabbath." And Luke xxiii. 54. "And that day was the preparation, and the ſab-"bath drew on," or was near. And in Bereſchith Rabba, c. 11. we find the days of the week thus named, the firſt of the week, the ſecond, third, fourth, fifth, preparation, ſabbath. (V.)

Command therefore that the ſepulchre be made ſure.] It was not enough for the chief prieſts, ſcribes, and phariſees, to expoſe the Saviour of the world to the miſerable pains of crucifixion; they muſt ſet a watch over his ſepulchre, have a detachment of ſoldiers; they muſt put a ſeal upon the ſtone, and, as much as in them was, endeavour to hinder his riſing again; whereas the diligence they took proved of ſingular ſervice to our faith. For by how much the more they ſtrove to give oppoſition, by ſo much the more was the power of the reſurrection diſcovered: whence alſo he was laid in a new monument, which was hewn out of a rock, for fear, had it been built of ſeveral ſtones, the foundation of the tomb might have been wrought through, and his body privately remov'd. "Quod autem in ſepulchro ponendus eſſet, prophetæ "teſtimonium eſt, (inquit Hieron.) nempe, Eſaiæ, dicentis c. xxxiii. "ſecundum LXX. Hic habitabit in excelſa ſpelunca petræ fortiſſimæ; "ſtatimque poſt duos verſiculos ſequitur, Regem cum gloria videbit." "We have the proof of Iſaiah (ſays Jerome) that he "was to be laid in a ſepulchre, who, according to the verſion of "the Septuagint, ſays, chap. xxxiii. He ſhall dwell in a high cave of "a moſt ſtrong rock; and two verſes below it follows, Ye ſhall ſee the "King with glory.

Sealing the ſtone, and ſetting a watch.] q. d. Two ways they guarded the ſepulchre, firſt by putting a publick ſeal upon it, to prevent any deceit or fraud, either of the ſoldiers or the diſciples; and ſecondly, by planting a band of armed men to guard it. (V.) This laſt paragraph of the chapter acquaints us with the endeavours, which the murderers of Chriſt uſed to prevent his reſurrection. They obtain of Pilate, that his ſepulchre (may be ſtrongly guarded, till after the third day; when, probably, they intended to expoſe his body to the view of the people: And accordingly, a threefold guard is ſet about the grave, the ſtone, the ſeal, and the watch, concluding that Chriſt was ſafe, either for riſing, or being ſtoln away; for the ſtone having the public ſeal upon it, it was under pain of death for any perſon to meddle therewith. This reſurrection had wanted a great deal of evidence, had not the high prieſts and elders been thus induſtriouſly bent on preventing his riſing; for theſe endeavours to obſtruct it have rendered it more certain and indubitable, and the grounds of our faith had not been ſo clear and conſpicuous without them. (B.)

CHAP. XXVIII.

We have an account in this laſt chapter of the reſurrection of Chriſt, and the actions he performed between that and his aſcenſion.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. IN the end of the ſabbath, as it began to dawn towards the firſt day of the week, came Mary Magdalen, and the other Mary, to ſee the ſepulchre. And behold, there was a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord deſcended from heaven, and came and rolled back the ſtone from the door, and ſat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as ſnow. And for fear of him the keepers did ſhake, and became as dead men. And the angel anſwered and ſaid unto the women, Fear not ye; for I know that ye ſeek Jeſus, which was crucified. He is not here; for he is riſen, as he ſaid: come, ſee the place where the Lord lay. And go quickly, and tell his diſciples that he is riſen from the dead; and behold, he goeth before you into Galilee, there ſhall ye ſee him; lo, I have told you. And they departed quickly from the ſepulchre, with fear and great joy, and did run to bring his diſciples word. And as they went to tell his diſciples, behold, Jeſus met them, ſaying, All hail. And they came, and held him by the feet, and worſhipped him. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there ſhall they ſee me.

In the end of the ſabbath, as it began to dawn towards the firſt day of the week.] This expreſs'd in French would run thus, la nuit du Samedy au dimanche, that is, the night of Saturday to Sunday: Becauſe the night or the evening of the ſabbath may be taken two ways, either when it follows the ſixth day, and (according to the cuſtom of the Jews, who date the beginning of the day from ſunſet) makes, with the artificial day of the ſabbath, one entire natural day, or when it ſucceeds the ſabbath. Now, to remove the confuſion and ambiguity which ſeems here, with regard to the night when Chriſt left his earthly manſion, the Evangeliſt has theſe additional words, as it began to dawn towards the firſt day of the week, where he ſpeaks of the dawning of the evening, the night advenientem in prima Sabbati, as if he had ſaid the night which appertained to the firſt part of the ſabbath. So Luke, c. xxiii. 54. after he has given us an entire recital of the ſeveral circumſtances which attended the interment of Chriſt, ſays, And it was the day of preparation, that is, the day before the Sabbath. Theſe particulars the reader is deſired to remark, as they are neceſſary toward the illuſtration of this phraſe of the Evangeliſt. We will now examine the word tranſlated in the end. This, in the original, if we interpret it cloſely, ſignifies evening. Now the diſtinction of morning and evening, as they are known among us, was quite otherwiſe with them, and made the entire parts of a natural day, as may be collected from Geneſis i. Hence the whole Nucthemeron Dan. viii 14. is called in Hebrew the evening-morning. Thus Matthew ſays that the evening or end of the ſabbath was beginning to dawn, meaning, the night was juſt on departing, in order to give place to the dawning of the morn; unleſs you had rather have it that the dawning means the near approach of the morning. Now as to the women going early in the morning to the ſepulchre, it may indifferently be ſaid of them, that they went either in the night, in the morning, or in the day; for as Gellius informs us, l. 7. c. 21. "Tempora duo cum inter ſe oppoſita "ſunt, atque ita cohærentia, ut alterius finis cum alterius initio "miſceatur, non refert utrum per extremitatem prioris, an per "initium ſequentis, locus ipſe confinis demonſtretur When two "ſpaces of time are different in themſelves, yet ſo linked to one "another, that the end of the one may be joined to the beginning of the other, the matter is not much whether the contiguous place be diſcovered by the end of the former, or the beginning of the latter." (V.)

Of the ſabbath.] In the Greek verſion, ſabbaths: by an enallage of number, very frequent with the Greeks, who render the word ſabati, ſabbaths, as is evinced from Exodus xvi. 10. and xx. 10. and in ſeveral other places. Whence the Vulgar tranſlates juſtly of the ſabbaths, twice in this preſent verſe, by the genitive caſe ſingular: Neither is it ſeldom that we read in the Teſtament of events happening on ſabbaths, which were properly performed on one. The ſabbath, which immediately followed our Saviour's crucifixion, is by John xix. 31. called the great day of the ſabbath, becauſe the Jews had no ſolemn day, whereto this epithet might not very well be annexed. In John vii. 37. the great day of the ſabbath is applied to the laſt day of the feaſt of Tabernacles, which yet had nothing peculiar above the firſt day of that ſolemnity. In Iſaiah i. 13. where the Hebrew reads your new moon and ſabbath, and ſolemn aſſembly I cannot bear with, the Greek tranſlates your new moons, and ſabbaths, and great days I cannot away with. Moreover, on this very place of Iſaiah Procopius aſſerts that a great day was called Klētis, from the calling or aſſembling the people together; and places in the number of theſe great days, the firſt and ſeventh of unleavened bread, the feaſt of Pentecoſt, and the tenth day of the month Tiſri; nay, any feaſt was included in the account: So that by this there was no ſolemn day ſet apart for aſſembling the people together, which might not be diſtinguiſhed by the title of a great day; and conſequently every ſabbath might be called great, principally if it happened on any day of the feaſt of unleavened bread, to celebrate which the whole body of the Jews reſorted to Jeruſalem. However, the modern Jews do not call that a great ſabbath, which happens to fall upon the days of the paſſover, but that which immediately precedes them. (Idem.)

To ſee.] Whether they could enter the ſepulchre of Chriſt; for 'tis clear from Mark xvi. 3. where we read of their converſing together, that they wanted very much to enter the ſepulchre. Juvencus has render'd this verſe of the Evangeliſt thus,

> Sydera jam noctis vicino cedere ſoli
> Incipiunt: tumuli matres tum viſere ſeptum.
> The radiant ſtars of night now yielded way
> To the revolving ſun's approaching ray:
> The anxious matrons haſten now to ſee
> The tomb of him who dy'd upon the tree. (Idem.)

The Lord of life was buried upon the Friday, in the evening of that day on which he was crucified; and his holy body reſted in the ſilent grave the next day, and a part of the morning the day following. Thus he aroſe again the third day, neither ſooner nor later; not ſooner, leſt the truth of his death ſhould have been queſtioned, that he did not die at-all; and not later, leſt the faith of his diſciples ſhould have failed. And accordingly, when the ſabbath was paſt, and it dawned towards the firſt day of the week, in the morning very early, before day, Mary Magdalen, and other devout women, go to ſee the ſepulchre, intending with their ſpices and odours further to embalm our Lord's body. (B.)

And ſat upon it.] Matthew and Mark mention but one angel, when Luke and John ſpeak of two. I am no way uneaſy at the different accounts of the Evangeliſts, which ſome pretend they are, becauſe I am ſenſible that, as other writers of annals, ſo the Evangeliſts do not always tie themſelves up to relate firſt what was firſt tranſacted. John ſays that the angels ſat, ſo do Matthew and Mark, whereas Luke ſeems to hint that they ſtood; but this is only a ſeeming: for the Greek word may as well be render'd to come upon. But this is not all. There are ſcruples ſtarted about the place where they ſat. For my part, all the difficulty as to this point ſeems to vaniſh, provided Mark's words be juſtly interpreted, which are, And entring into the ſepulchre they ſaw a young man. But they had not yet entred into the cave; for the angel afterwards ſays to them, Come, behold the place where they laid him. So that by this it appears, that Mark calls the ſepulchre only a part of the garden, which was ſeparated from the reſt by ſome fence or hedge. Now the part in which the monument was, was exempted from human ſervice. But John ſays that the garden was cultivated. And 'tis my opinion, that when the women came into the part which was hedged in, it was there they ſaw the angel ſitting on the ſtone on the right ſide of the monument, where the head of the dead body was laid; and the other angel, ſuppreſſed by Matthew and Mark, ſat on the left ſide of the cave, where the feet of the corpſe was laid. (G.)

And they departed] 'Tis evident from hence that the women went into the monument, as we are informed from Mark xvi. 5. Yet Matthew ſeems to hint the contrary, by ſaying, as if the angel ſat upon the ſtone without the monument, and invited the women to enter in; when Luke remarks, that the women went into the ſepulchre, and there ſaw the angel. The right way of reconciling all this depends upon the model or form of the monument. It appears from the deſcription of Brocard, and from that which the embaſſador of the king of France lately made, that this ſepulchre was in the form of a bed-chamber, almoſt ſquare, and hewn out of a rock, and full ſeven foot in length and height; that the mouth or entrance Eaſtward was very low; that to the right, that is, on the North ſide, there was a bier, reſembling a table, upon which the body of our Lord was laid; that before the cave, or the bed-chamber, there was another dark manſion, of the ſame form and bigneſs, ſeparated from the other by a ſingle wall, in which was the low door, taken notice of above. From theſe premiſes may eaſily be underſtood, that the angel rolled away the ſtone from the mouth of the ſepulchre, yet ſo as to be ſaid, that it was without the monument in which our Lord's body was repoſited; and yet that it was within it, as the ſepulchre contained the outward dark manſion, obſerv'd above. On this ſtone the angel ſat, on the right hand, as a guard over the inner ſepulchre (V.)

Ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Now when they were going, behold, ſome of the watch came into the city, and ſhewed unto the chief prieſts all the things that were done. And when they were aſſembled with the elders, and had taken counſel, they gave large money unto the ſoldiers; Saying, Say ye, His diſciples came by night, and ſtole him away while we ſlept. And if this come to the governor's ears, we will perſuade him, and ſecure you. So they took the money, and did as they were taught: and this ſaying is commonly reported among the Jews, until this day. Then the eleven diſciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jeſus had appointed them. And when they ſaw him, they worſhipped him: but ſome doubted. And Jeſus came, and ſpake unto them, ſaying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt: Teaching them to obſerve all things whatſoever I have commanded you: and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

While we ſlept.] Here is a rare demonſtration of an infatuated people. For, pray, how was it likely that any credit ſhould be given to men aſſerting ſuch and ſuch things happened while they were aſleep? And again, with what aſſurance could men, who were defenceleſs, and fiſhermen, pretend to this? If they thought within themſelves that Chriſt was an impoſtor, why did they expoſe themſelves to hazards for him? And if they were convinced that he was ſent from God, what piece of conſcience put them upon deceit and falſhood? As for any one to ſuffer death for a conceiv'd opinion, in a caſe that happens very ſeldom, but that any one would do this for the teſtimony of an affair, which they knew in themſelves was really falſe, and from which neither they nor any other could poſſibly reap any advantage, muſt ſeem, in the opinions of all unprejudiced perſons, a thing hardly to be believed. (G.)

All nations.] We have remark'd above, in chap. xxiv. what is meant ſometimes by the word nations; namely, that it compriſed the tribes and families of the Jews, and the regions and cities of Paleſtine; and tho' it is not ſo here, excluſive of the other nations of the world, yet neither doth it ſignify the nations of the heathen world in oppoſition to the Jews, but chiefly and primarily the ſeveral parts of Judea, and the Jews themſelves, whereſoever they are diſpers'd; and in the ſecond place, the Gentiles mingled with the Jews; and thirdly, the whole Gentile world, when, on the Jews rejecting the Goſpel, the Apoſtles depart from them, and go to the Gentiles. That this is the meaning of the place, I ſhall uſe two arguments that will make very probable. The firſt is, that when the Apoſtles are commiſſioned, in other places, to preach the Goſpel, and gather diſciples, they are commanded to go firſt to the Jews, and not at-all to the Gentiles. Thus, in their firſt commiſſion, out of which the very Samaritans are excluded, Matthew ſays, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael. And in their ſecond commiſſion, Acts i. 8. altho' the Samaritans are taken in, and the utmoſt parts of the earth, yet 'tis ſtill to the Jews that they muſt firſt direct their preaching. And accordingly we find that the Apoſtles, till the Jews reject and are ready to ſtone them, do not leave them off to go to the Gentiles. But then they foretell them, Acts xiii. 46. what they are to do, for Paul and Barnabas waxed bold, and ſaid, It was neceſſary that the word of God ſhould firſt have been ſpoken to you, (which refers, I ſuppoſe, to the precept of Chriſt, that made it neceſſary) but ſeeing ye have put it from you, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. And when they urge the Lord's command for ſo doing, it is not the parting precept of Chriſt, but one out of the prophet Iſaiah, c. xlix. 6. I have ſet thee to be a light to the Gentiles. And the ſame I conceive upon theſe words, Beware leſt that come upon you (Jews) which is ſpoken of by the prophet, Behold, ye deſpiſers, and wonder, and periſh, for I work a work which you ſhall in no wiſe believe, that is, upon the Jews deſpiſing, and holding out obſtinately againſt the preaching of the Goſpel; where, v. 45. 'twas propheſied, that they ſhould be deſtroyed, and about the ſame time the Goſpel ſhould be remov'd, and preach'd to the heathen world: An incredible thing, which ſhould amaze the Jews, and be matter of great wonder to them. What was thus foretold at Antioch, by St. Paul, is again repeated to the Jews at Corinth; where, upon their reſiſting and blaſpheming he ſhakes his garment, and tells them, from henceforth I will go to the Gentiles; and preſently enters into the houſe of one Juſtus, a proſelyte. This is afterwards moſt fully ſet down to the Jews at Rome, at the concluſion of the Acts, c. xxviii. 28. Be it known therefore unto you, that the Salvation of God is ſent unto the Gentiles, but this likewiſe upon the obdurate temper of the Jews. From all this it ſufficiently appears, that the Apoſtles, after the death of Chriſt, were to preach the Goſpel firſt of all to the Jews, to convince them of their ſin of crucifying Chriſt; yet this not excluſive to the preaching to all nations, and people of the world, as the phraſe is taken in the greateſt latitude, for ſo the words, as they are repeated in St. Mark, muſt neceſſarily ſignify, Go into all the world, and preach the Goſpel to every creature, to thoſe of the ſynagogue firſt, and then to others afterwards. Thus St. Luke hath ſet it down very diſtinctly, That repentance and remiſſion of ſins ſhould be preached to all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem, where Judea, in which Jeruſalem is, is one of the all nations, from whence they are firſt to preach throughout all the other Parts of Judea, to the native and proſelyte Jews, in their ſynagogues and proſeuchæ, before they went to the Gentiles, which, for the moſt part they continued to do, till the time of the deſtruction of that people. The ſecond argument for this rendring of the word nations, ſo as primarily to point to the Jews, is that of St. Paul, Gal. ii. 7. where St Peter is ſaid to be entruſted with the Goſpel of the circumciſion, that is, to preach the Goſpel particularly to the Jews. So in the ſame place it appeareth, that James and John betook themſelves to the circumciſion, that is, to the Jews; and 'tis obſervable how far St. Peter was from underſtanding this precept, in this place, to oblige him at that time to preach to the Gentiles; for, in the affair of Cornelius, 'tis clear, that he did not yet think it lawful to preach to him alone, and for the commiſſion of Chriſt he repeats it thus, "He commanded us to preach to "the people," that is, to the people of the Jews, as the rulers of the people, and rulers of Iſrael are the ſame, and as that nation is called the people, and as all the people means all the Jews. And 'tis manifeſt that, before he would venture to preach Chriſt to this ſingle heathen, God thought it neceſſary to ſend him a viſion, and by that inſtructed him, that the Gentiles were no longer to be look'd upon as prophane, or not to be converſed with, but might equally as well be preached to as the Jews. And this was confirmed by God, by his ſending the Holy Ghoſt down upon theſe firſt fruits of the Gentiles, namely, Cornelius and his company, as he had done upon the Apoſtles, the firſt fruits of the Jews, to witneſs this pleaſure of his from heaven without delay. And, accordingly, the unbelieving Jews were aſtoniſhed when they heard of this; and 'tis ſaid, that the Apoſtles in Judea heard of it, and called Peter in queſtion concerning what he had done, when he is neceſſarily obliged to acquaint them with the viſion, and the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, as a teſtimony that it was ſo to be, whereby they are convinced, but not before [illegible]at time. (H.)

In the name.] Becauſe this phraſe, on account of the Hebraiſm, is liable to ſeveral conſtructions, I think that preferable to the reſt, which comes neareſt to the notion of baptiſm. For to be baptized in any one, or in the name of any one, is to ſubmit to ſuch perſon's authority, to be devoted to him, and to be diſtinguiſhed by his name: Chriſtians are commanded to acknowledge three authors of their doctrine, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, and to admit nothing as neceſſary but what proceeds from them. Before baptiſm the Chriſtian doctrine was conciſe. Before baptiſm two things were required of the candidates, faith, and a purpoſe of amending one's life; both which were commonly attained by queſtion and anſwer. They who are to be admitted to the rite of baptiſm ſhould oblige themſelves by promiſe to ſquare their lives agreeable to the plan or ſyſtem of doctrine left by Chriſt, to which belongs that which Peter calls baptiſm, namely, the asking of a good conſcience. This is term'd a renouncing of the world, with which poſſibly that of St. Paul agrees, to renounce the devil and his worſhip, the pomp, and his angels, or the devil, the pomps of the world, and his works. What ſome perſons object, in order to invalidate this precept of Chriſt, that the Apoſtles were not baptized with this baptiſm, wants foundation, for Chriſt did not command the Apoſtles, who received his heavenly doctrine from his mouth, to be baptized, but to baptize; which they performed. But 'tis certain they were baptized with John's baptiſm, tho' not with this, and why the negative ſhould be put upon the reſt I cannot apprehend. (G.)

Lo, I am with you alway.] With all the Apoſtles, and with their ſucceſſors in the paſtoral office, is this promiſe of Chriſt's perpetual preſence made, according to his providence, and according to his ineffable and inviſible grace. Neither does the difference of places, the death of perſons, or others ſucceeding in their room, make any difference in this power of the miniſtry delegated to the Apoſtles, and by them tranſmitted to their ſucceſſors with the ſame authority; for as Jerome ſays, "Ubicunque fuerit epiſco-
"pus, ſive Romæ, ſive Eugubii, ſive Conſtantinopoli, ſive Rhegii,
"ſive Alexandriæ, ſive Tanis, ejuſdem meriti, ejuſdem eſt ſacer-
"dotii. Potentia divitiarum, & paupertatis humilitas, vel ſub-
"limiorem vel inferiorem epiſcopum non facit. Cæterum omnes
"apoſtolorum ſucceſſores ſunt." "In what place ſoever there
"ſhall be the biſhop, whether at Rome, or at Eugubium, or at
"Conſtantinople, or at Rhegium, or at Alexandria, or at Tanis,
"the merit's the ſame, the prieſthood's the ſame. 'Tis not an "affluent or a poor condition that makes a biſhop either the
"greater or the leſs; for all are the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles."
(V.) As to the words, his diſciples came and ſtole him away, while we ſlept, they apparently diſcover a moſt frivolous excuſe, and a moſt ſelf-evident contradiction; if the ſoldiers were aſleep, how could they diſcover the diſciples ſtealing away the body? if awake, why did they not prevent it? Beſides, how improbable was it, that Chriſt's few and fearful diſciples ſhould attempt to open the ſepulchre guarded by ſoldiers? And as unlikely was it, that the ſoldiers ſhould be all aſleep together, and ſo faſt, that the great ſtone at the mouth of the ſepulchre ſhould be rolled away, and not one of the ſoldiers awaken'd with the noiſe. How ſtrange is it that ſuch a falſhood as this ſhould find belief among the Jews to this day? Then, as to the meeting of our Saviour and his Apoſtles, upon a mountain in Galilee, it was an appointed and general meeting. The mountain is ſuppoſed to be that near Capernaum, where he made the famous ſermon, call'd the ſermon on the mount. And the meeting is ſuppoſed to be appointed at a general rendezvous, for confirming the faith of all his diſciples in the truth and certainty of the reſurrection. Poſſibly our Lord appointed this place in Galilee, ſo far from Jeruſalem, that his diſciples might come thither without danger, to ſee their Saviour alive after his crucifixion. This is judged to be that famous appearance, of which St. Paul ſpeaks, 1 Cor. xv. 16. When he was ſeen of above five hundred brethren at once. Laſtly, from the command, Go ye therefore and teach all nations, we find a three-fold power delegated by Chriſt to his Apoſtles, 1. To congregate or gather a church out of all the heathen nations throughout the world. Before he had confined them only to Iſrael, now they muſt travel from country to country, and proſelyte the heathen nations, which before had been led away by the oracles and deluſions of the devil. Go and teach all nations is a phraſe informing us, that the Apoſtles and firſt planters of the Goſpel had a commiſſion from Chriſt, to go among the pagan Gentiles without limitation, and were not to take up their fixed reſidence in any one nation, but to travel through different regions, inſtructing them in the miſteries of the Goſpel. The ſecond branch of their power was to baptize in the name of the whole Trinity. Where we are to obſerve that all adult perſons are to be firſt taught and inſtructed, before they be baptized. But it follows not from hence, that the children of ſuch parents may not be baptized before they are taught, for the Apoſtles were to baptize all nations, of which children are a chief, if not the moſt principal part. Beſides, they who became proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion, tho' they were circumciſed before, yet were inſtructed in the law of God; and when themſelves were circumciſed, their children were not denied circumciſion at eight days old. In like manner, we have no reaſon to deny the children of baptis'd parents, who are in covenant themſelves, the ſign and ſeal of the covenant, which is baptiſm. God having aſſured his people, that he will be the God of them and their ſeed. If this privilege were denied, the children of Chriſtian parents are in a worſe condition than the children of the Jews, and, conſequently, infants are in a worſe condition, ſince Chriſt's coming, than they were before; and the privileges of thoſe who live under the Goſpel, are more limitted than thoſe who liv'd under the law. The third branch of the power which Chriſt delegated to his Apoſtles, was, by their miniſtry, to preſs upon all their converts, an univerſal obſervance of, and obedience to all his commands. (B.)

Teaching them to obſerve all things whatſoever I command you.] Where we are to remark, 1. That preaching is the ordinary and inſtituted means to convert nations to God. 2. That preaching muſt not only precede, but ſucceed baptiſm: obedience muſt not only be warmly inculcated to thoſe who enter into covenant with God, but they muſt likewiſe diſcover it in their practice, otherwiſe they lie under great condemnation. 3. That preaching the Goſpel, is the chief and moſt conſiderable part of the buſineſs of the miniſter, and no Apoſtle thought himſelf ſuperior to that duty. 4. As the Apoſtles did not, ſo the miniſters of Chriſt ought not to teach any thing but what Chriſt has enjoin'd by his expreſs command. 5. As they are to inſtruct mankind in ſuch things only which our Saviour has commanded, ſo they are under an indiſpenſible neceſſity to teach whatſoever he ſo commands, teaching them to obſerve all things whatſoever I command them. Laſtly, we are to obſerve the promiſe ſubjoin'd, Lo, I am with you always to the end of the world; that is, I am, and will be with you, and your ſucceſſors lawfully called by my power and authority, by the bleſſing and aſſiſtance of my Holy Spirit; I will be with you to uphold my ordinance, to protect, encourage, and reward you, and all your ſucceſſors, in the faithful diſcharge of your truſt; and this not for a day, a year, or an age, but to the end and conſummation of all ages. From whence we may learn, that the miniſtry of the word, and adminiſtration of the ſacraments, are a ſtanding and perpetual ordinance, to continue in the Chriſtian church throughout all ages. 2. That all the faithful miniſters of Chriſt, in what part of the world ſoever God ſhall caſt their lot, and in what time ſoever they ſhall happen to live, may comfortably expect Chriſt's gracious Preſence with their perſons, and his bleſſing upon their endeavours: "Lo, I am with you, I am always with you, and to the end of the "world I will be with you." Thanks be to Chriſt for the gracious promiſe of his ſpiritual and perpetual preſence with his miniſters to the end of the world. May this promiſe cauſe us to gird up the loins of our minds, encreaſe our diligence, zeal, and fervour, accounting no labour too great, no ſervice too much, no ſufferings too ſevere; "ſo that we may but finiſh our courſe with joy, and "fulfil the miniſtry we are engaged in." So that we may but run through the various ſcenes of this life with calmneſs and eaſe, never forgetting the glorious end to which we direct our purſuits, accounting all things as vain and unprofitable, in compariſon of that tranſcendent treaſure of happineſs, which the creator of the univerſe hath from eternity laid up in ſtore for us mortal ſinners. Let us, therefore, relying on this promiſe of Chriſt's being eternally with us, ſo conduct our ſelves, as to be worthy of his company and preſence, of the converſation and communication of him, who is the eternal God, begotten from all ages, coequal with the Father, of the ſame eſſence, ſubſtance, and power, who ſuffer'd the death of the croſs for us, in order to make reconciliation with God for us and our offences, that we might become living veſſels of purity and cleanneſs, and be an acceptable offering to the Father of all mercies, whoſe bounty is everlaſting, and mercy infinite, and whoſe divine perfections fill both heaven and earth; ſo that all the world lives under the ſhadow of his wings, and the ineffable ſplendor of his countenance, which exceeds all brightneſs. (B. Mel.)

The END of St. MATTHEW.

CRITICAL and EXPLANATORY
ANNOTATIONS
St. MARK.

ST. Mark is often mentioned in the Acts of the Apoſtles, and St. Paul's Epiſtles; yet it does not hence follow, that he wrote the Goſpel, altho' St. Jerome believes he did; but rather that St. Mark, of whom St. Peter ſpeaks, at the end of his firſt epiſtle, and whom he calls his ſon.

'Twas this Mark, who founded the church of Alexandria, the ſecond epiſcopal ſee.

The common opinion of the holy fathers is, that he wrote his Goſpel at Rome, at the entreaty of the Chriſtians of that church, according to what he learnt of St. Peter, as we are informed by Euſebius; for having told us in his hiſtory, that St. Peter, when at Rome, preach'd the Goſpel to the Romans with great ſucceſs, he adds, That thoſe who heard him were ſo taken with the love of the truth, that they were not contented to hear him preach the Goſpel, but they would have it written; and therefore they beſought St. Mark, who was St. Peter's diſciple, to leave them in writing the Evangelical Hiſtory, to the end they might have it as a firm and laſting monument of the holy doctrine that had been declared to them; and they ceas'd not renewing their entreaties, till they had obliged St. Mark to write the Goſpel, which to this day bears his name.

St. Chryſoſtom demands, why our Saviour having twelve apoſtles, there were but two of them that undertook to write the Goſpel, and that St. Mark ſhould write it as well as St. Luke, altho' they were only the apoſtles diſciples? To which he anſwers himſelf, That ſuch holy men did nothing through a Deſire of Glory, but guided themſelves in all undertakings, by the motion's of God's Spirit, and by a proſpect of the good of the church. St. Jerome and St. Auſtin, as alſo moſt of the ancient fathers, were of opinion, that St. Mark wrote in Greek, as well as St. Luke and St. John.

This holy Evangeliſt has followed St. Matthew in ſeveral Places, and often epitomiz'd him; yet there are hiſtories which he relates more at length, and of which he deſcribes the particular circumſtances.

St. Mark wrote his Goſpel as he heard it from the mouth of St. Peter, even as St. Luke wrote his chiefly from the information of St. Paul, who was inſtructed from above. For 'tis obſervable, That whatſoever care our Saviour took to teach his apoſtles, during his life, by making them ſpectators not only of his public actions, but moreover of his ſecret and private life, and by diſcovering to them the miſteries and parables which he ſpake in public; yet they have ſaid nothing of our Saviour, and his holy verities, of which they were ſo perfectly inform'd, till they were renew'd by the Holy Spirit, and were become in ſome ſort divine men, as St. Chryſoſtom calls them.

This affords us an excellent leſſon, to wit, That not any thing ſhould be either ſaid or written of the Evangelical truths, but by men in whom dwells the Spirit of God. For ſuch as are in the fleſh cannot ſavour the things in the Goſpel.

St. Mark wrote his Goſpel in the 3d year of Claudius's reign, that is to ſay, the 43d year after the birth of our Saviour, and ten years after his paſſion.

CHAP. I.

John baptizeth. His cloathing, and manner of eating. Jeſus is baptiz'd, is tempted, preacheth the Goſpel, teaches in the ſynagogues, heals a demoniac, &c.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. THE beginning of the goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt the Son of God, As it is written in the prophets, Behold, I ſend my meſſenger before thy face, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee. The voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths ſtraight. John did baptize in the wilderneſs, and preach the baptiſm of repentance, for the remiſſion of ſins.

The beginning, &c.] The meaning hereof is this: I am going to give a narrative of that moſt rejoicing meſſage concerning man's redemption, which Jeſus Chriſt brought into the world. And this I date from John the Baptiſt's preaching, who, as he was call'd by the Evangeliſts the forerunner of our Saviour's coming, was alſo mark'd out by the prophets of old, as the beginning of the Chriſtian æra. (V.) The firſt thing conſiderable in the hiſtory of Chriſt, the Meſſiah, and eternal Son of God, and in the preaching of the goſpel, which he brought with him into the world, was the preaching of John the Baptiſt, as of an herald ſent before him, and conſequently foretold ſo by the prophets of old, under the ſtyle, of the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, that is, the proclamation of an eminent perſon who ſhould go into the wilderneſs and cry, and give warning to the Jews, that, by repentance and amendment of life, they ſhould prepare themſelves for the coming of God, a terrible coming to viſit and puniſh the impenitent. (H.'s paraph.) The word goſpel ſignifies a meſſage of glad tidings, and intimates to us, that the doctrine of the goſpel contains the moſt gladſome tidings, the moſt joyful meſſage, that ever was ſent from God to mankind: happy tidings concerning our reconciliation with God, and ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt. This Goſpel is called the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, becauſe Chriſt, as God, is the author of it. John the Baptiſt, indeed, was the firſt preacher of its doctrine, but Chriſt was the firſt and principal author, and likewiſe the chief ſubject matter of it; for whatever this goſpel teaches, relates either to the perſon or offices of Chriſt, or to the benefits received by him, or the means of thoſe benefits from him. Mark ſtiles Chriſt the Son of God, Matthew, the ſon of David; the former ſets forth the truth of his divine, the latter the reality of his human nature; ſignifying to us, that the true and promiſed Meſſiah was both God and man, in two diſtinct natures, and one perſon for ever. Our Evangeliſt begins his Goſpel with an account of John the Baptiſt's preaching, and declare, that the prophets of old, particularly Iſaiah and Malachi, a conſiderable time before foretold the meſſage and miniſtry of the Baptiſt, that he ſhould go before Chriſt as his harbinger, to prepare the way for him: Where we are to remark, that this miniſterial miſſion is two-fold, extraordinary and ordinary; the former, when God immediately by himſelf calls men to the holy function; the latter, when he uſes the miniſtry of men in order thereto. From the words, Behold, I ſend my meſſenger, to prepare thy way before thee, we learn, that the great deſign and end of the miniſtry of the word is to prepare mankind for entertaining the holy religion of Chriſt in their hearts, and oblige them to walk according to the rules and directions of it in their lives. (B.)

John did baptize in the wilderneſs, and preach the baptiſm of repentance.] This is ſpoken by an Hyſterologia; for baptiſm was not the beginning of John's miniſtry, but, as the Apoſtles afterwards performed, ſo alſo did he preach repentance firſt, Matt. iii. 2. and faith in Chriſt, who was ſacrificed upon the croſs for the ſins of the whole world, John 1. 19. and the deſire of good works, Luke iii. 8. and at laſt, for a mark or teſtimony of his doctrine concerning the remiſſion and forgiveneſs of ſins, that he will come to thoſe who believe in Chriſt, and take away the tranſgreſſions of the world, and will baptize thoſe who ſincerely repent of their crimes, or bring forth fruits worthy of repentance in the name, that is, by confeſſion, and invocation, of God, who is but one in nature, yet three in perſon, by whom he is commanded to give baptiſm, as we read in Luke iii. 2, 3. and John i. 33. Hence, where a right diſtinction and order is preſerved, the preaching of repentance is ſet before the baptiſm of John, as may be ſeen Matt. iii. 1, 2, 3. and Luke iii. 3, 7. (V.) A two-fold account is here given of St. John's execution of his miniſtry and office, his baptizing, and his preaching. John did baptize, that is, admit perſons into the church, by waſhing them with water. John baptized into the name of Chriſt, who was to come; the Apoſtles baptized into the name of Chriſt, who was already come. The ſecond part of his office was preaching; where we are to remark, That preaching of the word and adminiſtration of the ſacraments are to go together, and belong only to the miniſters lawfully appointed. And we are to learn further, that the preaching the doctrine of repentance is abſolutely neceſſary, and the indiſpenſible duty of every miniſter of the Goſpel. John, our Saviour, and the Apoſtles preach'd it. They went out, preaching every where, that men ſhould repent. "The baptiſm of repentance (ſays the learned Lightfoot) "belongs to children, tho' they know not what repentance "means, becauſe it engages them to repentance, when they come "to years to underſtand that engagement; for thus it was with "children circumciſed, they became debtors to obſerve the whole "law, tho' they knew not what the law meant, yet circumciſion "bound them to it, when they came to years of diſcretion. (B.)

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. And there went out unto him all the land of Judea, and they of Jeruſalem, and were all baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confeſſing their ſins. And John was clothed with camels hair, and with a girdle of a skin about his loins: and he did eat locuſts and wild honey: And preached, ſaying, There cometh one mightier than I after me, the latchet of whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to ſtoop down and unlooſe. I indeed have baptized you with water: but he ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt.

But he ſhall baptize you.] Among Greek authors the word baptizein commonly means to dip; but becauſe any thing may be dipt, ſo as to waſh and purify it, the word is taken to waſh, by a metalepſis; ſee Judith xii. 7. Eccleſiaſticus xxxiv. 30. Luke xi. 33. But beſides this, as the uſual ſignification of this word was extended, and, by a metaphor, made to ſignify affliction, or to afflict, becauſe they, who labour'd under affliction, were to uſe the expreſſion, "dipt in the water of their calamities, as may be ſeen, Pſ. xvii. Heb. xviii. 17. and 31. Heb. xxxii. 6, 68. Heb. lxix. 1. 15. and 16. So it was carried from its other meaning, to waſh, to ſignify the gift of the Holy Ghoſt, which, to the end it may wet and waſh the ſoul, is poured upon it like water, according to the expreſſion of Joel, ii. 28. of Peter, Acts xi. 17, and of Paul to Titus, iii. 6. As to John's ſaying, that Chriſt would baptize with the Holy Ghoſt, is purely metaphorically, and only means a foretelling that he would viſibly pour his benefits upon mankind, which accordingly is ſet down by Luke, Acts ii. 3. Moreover, according to the account of Philaſtrius, becauſe John had ſaid, Matt. iii. That Chriſt would baptize with fire, Hermius and Seleucus would not uſe the baptiſm of water. Again, the Paulician Manichees, if we may credit Euthymius, in the ſecond part of his Panoplias, Tit. xxi. becauſe John had advanced, that Chriſt would baptize with the Holy Ghoſt, they would not admit any material thing in the ſacraments, and, rejecting the uſe of water in baptiſm, contented themſelves with the bare pronouncing of theſe words, I am the living water, as the only ſacrament of baptiſm. (V.) John ſhewed the dignity of Chriſt's perſon above his own, in the former verſe; in this he declares the excellency of Chriſt's office, and "the meanneſs of his own: I waſh the body with water, but "Chriſt cleanſes the ſoul by the operation of the Holy Spirit. (B.)

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13. And it came to paſs in thoſe days, that Jeſus came from Nazareth of Galilee, and was baptized of John in Jordan. And ſtraightway coming up out of the water, he ſaw the heavens open'd, and the Spirit like a dove deſcending upon him. And there came a voice from heaven, ſaying, Thou art my beloved ſon, in whom I am well pleaſed. And immediately the Spirit driveth him into the wilderneſs. And he was there in the wilderneſs, forty days tempted of Satan, and was with the wild beaſts, and the angels miniſtred unto him.

Was baptized of John in Jordan.] Let no one under a pretext of any ſanctity, which he may have before baptiſm, deſpiſe the baptiſm of true and natural water, ſuch as the ſcripture acquaints us John and the Apoſtles baptized with. Faith alone and amendment of manners are not ſufficient to obtain man's ſalvation, "Niſi ubi articulus neceſſitatis aquam excluſit non contemptus religionis," unleſs where we cannot get water, and no contempt "of religion is in the caſe;" according to Peter Bleſenſis, after Auſtin, in his 24th ſermon upon the feaſt day of St. James. Although, as Tertullian ſays in his treatiſe of baptiſm chap. 4. "Nulla diſtinctio eſt, mari quis an ſtagno flumine an fonte, lacu

“ an alveo diluatur; neque quicquam refert inter eos, quos Jo- “ hannes in Jordano, & Petrus in Tiberi tinxit:” It avails no- “ thing where a perſon is baptized, whether in the ſea or in a “ lake, in a river or fountain, in ſtanding water or in the ſtream; “ neither is there any diſtinction between thoſe baptized by John “ in Jordan, and thoſe by Peter in the Tiber.” (V.)

Driveth him.] The word ecballein doth not always ſignify in the New Teſtament to caſt out, according to the literal conſtruction; but it hath a ſofter ſenſe, to ſend out, as in Matthew, and ſeveral other places of the Goſpel. It may ſignify to lead away in this place, which is the phraſe uſed in the parallel part of St. Matthew's hiſtory. But beſides theſe expoſitions, the word, in good authors, peculiarly ſignifies to expoſe, as when Ariſtotle ſays of the raven, that “ ſhe (ecballei) expoſes her young ones.” And though our Saviour was now in the deſart at his baptiſm, for John preached, and baptized there, and conſequently there was no peculiar need of any new act of driving or bringing him into the wilderneſs, for the buſineſs of his ſucceeding temptation; yet becauſe Matthew joins the phraſe, he was lead away, to this part of the hiſtory, in order to his temptation; therefore, the ſafeſt way to render this word, is to reconcile it with the phraſe of Matthew, by ſaying, that he was lead up farther into the deſart, and expoſed there. (H.)

The ſpirit like a dove deſcending upon him.] That the ſpirit came upon Chriſt, in the body or ſhape of a dove, cannot, I think, be concluded from this place, nor from the parallel, Mat. chap. iii. 16. but only that the ſpirit deſcended, and came or lighted upon him as a dove uſes to do on any thing, firſt hovering, and overſhadowing it. So in Acts 'tis ſaid the divided tongues, as it were of fire, which doth not denote, that they were of fire, at leaſt, that they had the effects of fire, as burning, &c. but either in the colour or form like that of fire, without defining any ſhape in which the Holy Ghoſt appeared. We need not make any doubt, that the Holy Ghoſt viſibly appeared in this and other places: That in the caſe of Mary, when ſhe conceived Chriſt, we have St. Luke's teſtimony, that he came upon, and overſhadowed her, which is perfectly agreeable here to this of deſcending, as a dove uſes to do, when it comes down and viſibly lights upon any thing; nay, other glorious appearances of God are expreſſed in other places in the ſame manner: As when the bright cloud (i. e. an appearance of ſhining light as broad as a cloud) thus hovered over or overſhadowed them, Matt. xvii. 5. So Mark ix. 7. Luke ix. 34. And accordingly, in the tabernacle were the Cherubims of glory, thoſe officers or miniſters of this appearance of God, overſhadowing or hovering over the propitiatory or covering of the ark, Heb. ix. 5. And ſo 2 Pet. i. 17. this voice at this time delivered, This is my beloved ſon, is ſaid to have come from the magnificent glory (the glory of the majeſtic preſence ſo frequent in the Targum) that is, from this cloud, where the angels were, and wherein Elias and Moſes appeared. And ſo in the third verſe of that chapter glory ſeems to denote the appearing of the Holy Ghoſt; in like manner we find ſpirit and power in other places of the ſame import: So likewiſe do learned men, in interpreting the writings of the Jews, conſtrue God's inhabiting or appearing among us (commonly rendered glory) by the Holy Ghoſt. But by all this there is no more expreſſed, but only the manner of this appearance, or he viſibly was ſeen or appeared to deſcend; but for the ſhape in which the Holy Ghoſt appeared, here is nothing expreſſed. That which ſeems moſt probable is this; That the Holy Ghoſt did not take upon him here any bodily ſhape, but notwithſtanding appeared to be preſent (as God is ſaid to be preſent in any place in the Old Teſtament) by the appearance of angels, which being the courtiers of heaven, where they appear, there God is ſaid peculiarly to be preſent. Hence it is ſaid, that the well Lahairoi, where the Angel appeared to Hagar, Gen. xvi. 7. is by the Jeruſalem Targum, Gen. xxiv. 62. ſtiled Beer the well, where the majeſtic preſence of the Lord, or the preſence of God in majeſty, was manifeſt to her. And ſo the ſanctuary, where, by the Cherubims, God exhibited himſelf, is called by the ſame phraſe, The glory of the majeſtic preſence of God the Lord, Exod. xl. 34. So in the delivering of the law, which the author to the Hebrews, chap. ii 2. ſaith was ſpoken by Angels, God ſaith, Exod. xix. 11. The Lord will come down in the ſight of all the people, and, I have talked with you, chap. xx. 22. Now how thoſe Angels, the good Angels, the courtiers of God, appeared, may be collected in general from their title, Angels of light, in reference to a lucid, ſhining, flaming appearance (as the philoſopher ſaith, that if God would take upon him a body, it would certainly be light) but more diſtinctly from the ſtory of it; his appearance was as lightning, and his garment as white as ſnow, Matt. xxviii. 3. So, Luke ix. 29. 'tis ſaid of Chriſt on Mount Tabor, his cloathing was white, and flaſhing as lightning. So, for the general part, the Hebrew word Shechuiah, which is rendered glory, is by the Jews uſed to ſignify the preſence or appearance of God. So God's promiſe of coming to the people on Mount Sinai the third day, Exod. xix. 11. is thus performed, ver. 16. there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount. And agreeable to this it is, That in that other viſible deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt upon the Apoſtles, “ There were ſeen by them “ tongues parted or divided as of fire, and it ſat, or reſted “ upon every of them.” That which appeared were cloven or divided tongues as of fire, ſeveral flaſhes or beams as of fire, in the ſhape of tongues divided, as it is eaſy to conceive by a flame cleft aſunder in many places, according to the natural notion of flames, of which every part, as it extends itſelf in longitude, grows more pyramidical, and ſo divides from the part next to it, and one of thoſe parts did as it were lick, and ſo reſt upon the head of every of the Apoſtles, according to the Hebrew phraſe or idiom, who, for flame of fire, uſe the tongue of fire, becauſe, ſay they, a flame is of that form. The appearing of Angels in ſcripture hath been ſomewhat reſembling this, ſee Exod. xix. 18. where “ God deſcends on the mount in fire,” ſaith the Jeruſalem Targum “ the glory of the divine preſence in a flame of fire,” which is but the explication, and rendered as the reaſon of what was ſaid before, ver. 16. “ of the lightning and thick cloud “ or darkneſs where God was,” Exod. xx. 21. and therefore, Pſalm civ. 4. his miniſters (that is, Angels miniſtring to him) are ſaid to be a flaming fire. Thus in the firſt mention of it, Gen. iii. 34. the Jeruſalem Targum reads, “ he placed the glory of “ the divine preſence upon two Cherubims,” where, in the Hebrew, we find the two Cherubims, a flame of ſword, that is, of ſeparation, or diviſion; for the Hebrew word, rendered ſword, ſignifies diviſion, as is exemplified by Matt. x. 34. compared with Luke xii. 51. where inſtead of ſword in one, is diviſion in the other; ſo that then the flame of diviſion or partition will be ſomewhat anſwerable to the word divided, mentioned in Acts, in reſpect of the diviſion of the fire in ſeveral branches, but certainly in reſpect of the fire. By all that hath been ſaid, the meaning of the words in this place may be conceived to be thus; the ſpirit of God (himſelf inviſible, and taking no bodily ſhape or form upon him) was ſeen by John to deſcend upon him, as a dove deſcendeth and lighteth on any thing, or as it were a dove, that which appeared ſome way reſembling a dove, with the wings ſpread abroad, and hovering over one, viz. Angels, the token of God's or the Holy Ghoſt's preſence, appeared in a bright ſhining cloud, or a flaſh of lightning in a cloud, and this ſtooped down upon him, and with that lightning thunder, and with that thunder a voice, ver. 17. And this as the ſolemnity of his conſecration, impoſition of hands, as it were, from heaven, by which he received his commiſſion to his prophetic office, which he afterwards communicated to his Apoſtles in a manner much after the ſame nature. (H.)

From Verſe 14 to the end. Now after that John was put in priſon, Jeſus came into Galilee, preaching the Goſpel of the kingdom of God. And ſaying, The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand: repent ye, and believe the Goſpel. Now as he walked by the ſea of Galilee, he ſaw Simon and Andrew his brother, caſting a net into the ſea: (for they were fiſhers. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fiſhers of men. And ſtraightway they forſook their nets, and followed him. And when he had gone a little further thence, he ſaw James the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother, who alſo were in the ſhip mending their nets. And ſtraightway he called them: and they left their father Zebedee in the ſhip with the hired ſervants, and went after him. And they went into Capernaum, and ſtraightway on the ſabbath-day he entred into the ſynagogue, and taught. And they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine: for he taught them as one that had authority, and not as the ſcribes. And there was in their ſynagogue a man with an unclean ſpirit, and he cried out, Saying, let us alone, what have we to do with thee, thou Jeſus of Nazareth? art thou come to deſtroy us? I know thee who thou art, the holy one of God. And Jeſus rebuked him, ſaying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the unclean ſpirit had torn him, and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him. And they were all amazed, inſomuch that they queſtioned among themſelves, ſaying, What thing is this? what new doctrine is this? for with authority commandeth he even the unclean ſpirits, and they do obey him.

And immediately his fame ſpread abroad throughout all the region round about Galilee. And forthwith, when they were come out of the ſynagogue, they entred into the houſe of Simon and Andrew, with James and John. But Simons wifes mother lay ſick of a fever, and anon they tell him of her. And he came and took her by the hand, and lift her up; and immediately the fever left her, and ſhe miniſtred unto them. And at even when the ſun did ſet, they brought unto him all that were diſeaſed, and them that were poſſeſſed with devils. And all the city was gathered together at the door. And he healed many that were ſick of divers diſeaſes, and caſt out many devils, and ſuffered not the devils to ſpeak, becauſe they knew him. And in the morning riſing up a great while before day, he went out, and departed into a ſolitary place, and there prayed. And Simon, and they that were with him, followed after him. And when they had found him, they ſaid unto him, All men ſeek for thee. And he ſaid unto them, Let us go into the next towns, that I may preach there alſo: for therefore came I forth. And he preached in their ſynagogues throughout all Galilee, and caſt out devils. And there came a leper to him, beſeeching him, and kneeling down to him, and ſaying unto him, If thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean. And Jeſus moved with compaſſion, put forth his hand, and touched him, and ſaith unto him, I will; be thou clean. And as ſoon as he had ſpoken, immediately the leproſy departed from him, and he was cleanſed. And he ſtraitly charged him, and forthwith ſent him away; And ſaith unto him, See thou ſay nothing to any man: but go thy way, ſhew thy ſelf to the prieſt, and offer for thy cleanſing thoſe things which Moſes commanded for a teſtimony unto them. But he went out and began to publiſh it much, and to blaze abroad the matter, inſomuch that Jeſus could no more openly enter into the city, but was without in deſert places: and they came to him from every quarter.

The kingdom of God.] The kingdom of heaven, and, of God, ſignifies in the New Teſtament, the kingdom of the Meſſiah, or that ſtate or condition, which is a moſt lively image of that which we believe to be in heaven, and therefore diſtinguiſhed by that appellation. For as the regal power, which God exerciſes in heaven, conſiſts in aſſiſting, defending, and rewarding, all his faithful ſubjects, and in warning, puniſhing, and deſtroying his obdurate enemies, ſo this kingdom of the Meſſiah is an exact image or reſemblance thereof: And being, as 'tis elſewhere affirm'd, not of this world, a ſecular kingdom, but conſiſting chiefly in ſubduing the world to his dominion, which is performed firſt by the deſcent of the ſpirit, and preaching the goſpel, working powerfully in ſome by his word, and bringing them into the faith, and then by his iron rod executing vengeance on others, viz, the contumacious and obdurate, and particularly thoſe of the nation of the Jews, after the crucifixion of Chriſt. And accordingly this kingdom of God will ſignify theſe two together, not only the firſt alone, but, in conjunction with it, the other tragical part thereof. That 'tis uſed ſo here, may be diſcerned, firſt, by that which is ſaid in Malachy, by way of prophecy of John's preaching, c. 4. 5 Matt. that "he ſhould come before the great and terrible day of the lord," before the fatal deſtruction of this perſon, and alſo in Iſaiah, that when he cry'd in the wilderneſs, this was part of his crying, prepare ye the way of the Lord, noting him a forerunner of Chriſt's coming, the ſignification of which has been explain'd in Matt. chap. xxiv. and again, "every valley ſhall be exalted, and every hill brought low," which notwithſtanding it's being ſpoken by the prophets, of bringing back the people from their captivity to their own country, expreſſing it by the former deliverance, and paſſage out of Egypt, through uneven craggy ways in the deſart, which yet by the conduct of God were made paſſable to them, and they at length brought to Canaan: and alſo myſtically of the removing all obſtacles in our way to happineſs and bliſs, yet it may farther be applied to this of the Roman armies coming againſt Jeruſalem, and perhaps be explain'd by that paſſage in Joſephus, De bell. Jud. l. 6. c. 12, that "the high and low places were made plain for "the coming of the Roman army and engines againſt Jeruſa-"lem"; in like manner as when Strabo ſays of the Romans, "They plain'd the ways through the region, cutting down the "hills, and filling up the hollow places," and ſo the verſes of Sybilla Erythrea, ſet down by Auſtin and Proſper, beginning with Judicij ſignum, the ſign of judgment, and E cœlo rex adveniet, the coming of the king from heaven, and that, in carmen, into the fleſh, preſens ut judicet orbem, that being preſent he might judge the world, there follows

Dejicet colles, valles extollet ab imo;
Non erit in rebus hominum ſublime vel altum,
—— Jam equantur campis montes.

The hills by his command ſhall tumble low,
By the ſame word the vales to mountains grow,
In human things all equal ſhall be made,
No high or lofty in the world diſplay'd,
– For now the hills are equall'd with the plains.

And then follows ſoon after,

—— —— Telus confracta per ibit.

The broken earth in ruin ſhall be laid.

Meaning the deſtruction of the earth or land of Judea. (H.)

See thou ſay nothing to any man, but go thy way.] The laſt miracle recorded in this chapter, is his healing of a leper, he came beſeeching Chriſt to heal him, ſaying, "If thou wilt thou canſt make "me clean," where obſerve 1ſt, He doth not queſtion Chriſt's power, but diſtruſts Chriſt's willingneſs to heal him; "Lord, if "thou wilt, thou canſt;" Chriſt's power muſt be fully aſſented to, and firmly believed by all thoſe who expect benefit by, and healing from him. Obſerve 2d, The great readineſs of Chriſt to heal this diſtreſſed perſon, "Jeſus touched him ſaying, I will, be thou "clean." By the ceremonial law the leper was forbidden to be touched, therefore Chriſt's touching this leper ſhew'd him to be above the law, that he was the lord of it, and might diſpenſe therewith; and his healing the leper by the word of his mouth, and touch of his hand, ſhew'd him to be truly and really God. Leproſy, among the Jews, was an incurable diſtemper, called the finger of God, a diſeaſe of his ſending, and of his removing. Our Saviour, therefore, as a proof of his being the true Meſſiah, tells John's diſciples, Matt. xi, 5, "That the lepers were cleanſed, "and the dead raiſed by him," which two being joined together, do imply that the cleanſing of lepers is as much an act of divine power, as the raiſing of the dead. And accordingly, 2 Kings v. 8. 'tis ſaid, "Am I a God, that this man ſends to me to cure a "man of his leproſy." Obſerve 3d, The certainty and ſuddenneſs of the cure, was a proof of Chriſt's divine power, immediately his leproſy was cleanſed, Chriſt not only cured him without means, but without the ordinary time required for ſuch a cure. Thus Chriſt ſhew'd both power and will to cure him miraculouſly, who believ'd his power, but queſtion'd his willingneſs. Obſerve 4th, The cauſe moving our Saviour to cure this leper, "His "bowels were moved with tender pity and compaſſion towards "him," Chriſt's exerciſing acts of mercy and compaſſion with ſuch condolency, and ſympathizing pity, ſhould, by way of example, teach us, to be inwardly moved with tender compaſſion and mercy towards ſuch as are in miſery. We are not only to draw out our bread, but to draw out our ſoul to the hungry. Obſerve 5, A two-fold charge and command, given by Chriſt, to the leper after his cure. 1. To conceal, and "tell it no man," where the great modeſty, humility, and piety of Chriſt is diſcovered, together with the care of his own ſafety: His modeſty in not deſiring his good deeds ſhould be publiſhed and proclaimed: His humility in ſhunning vain glorious applauſe and commendation: His piety in deſiring all honour and glory ſhould redound entirely to God. And the care of his own ſafety appeared, leſt the publiſhing of his miracles ſhould create him untimely danger from the Phariſees. The ſecond part of the charge given to the recovered leper, was "to ſhew himſelf to the prieſt, and offer the gift which Moſes "commanded for a teſtimony unto them," that is, to teſtify to the Jews, that he did not oppoſe the ceremonial law, which required a thank-offering at his hand, and that he was the true and promiſed Meſſiah. Learn thence, that our Saviour would have the ceremonial law punctually obſerved, ſo long as the time for it's continuance did endure, tho' he came to deſtroy that law, yet, whilſt it ſtood, he would have it punctually obſerved. Obſerve 6, Notwithſtanding our Saviour's ſtrict prohibition, the leper publiſhed the fame of this miracle. 'Tis like his intention might be good, in extolling his great benefactor, but his acting contrary to Chriſt's command was a fault, and ſhews the corruption of human nature, in being moſt forward to that which is moſt forbidden. 'Tis a ſin to do any thing againſt the command of Chriſt, tho' with never ſo good a meaning, purpoſe, or intention, to exalt and honour Chriſt. Obſerve laſtly, The inconveniences which attended our Saviour, upon this indiſcreet publication of the miracle, and theſe were two, 1. Our Saviour could no more enter into Capernaum, and other cities, to preach in an open manner, as he had done, by reaſon of the great concourſe of people after him. 2. The fame of this miracle brought the people about him from all quarters, not ſo much to hear as to ſee, not ſo much to hear his holy and heavenly doctrine, which he taught, as to gratify their curioſity with a ſight of the miracles which he wrought. But Chriſt deſired not their flocking after him upon this account, therefore he retires from the breath of a popular applauſe; he would not openly enter into the city, "but was without in de-"ſart places" Great humility! How little did our bleſſed Redeemer regard the applauſe and commendation of men? Conſtantly we find him, as ſoon as his public preaching and working miracles was over, withdrawing himſelf from the multitude, into ſome private place apart. He doth not ſtay in the croud, with his ears open, to liſten how men admire the preacher, and applaud the ſermon, plainly ſhewing that he ſought his father's glory, not his own praiſe, or the people's commendation, leaving his example as an inſtructive pattern to all his miniſters and embaſſadors, to beware of vain-glory, not to affect popularity, or to ſeek the applauſe and commendation of men in what they do, reſolving that man's opinion ſhall be nothing with them, but that the pleaſing of God, and doing their duty to the ſouls of their people, ſhall always be their whole ſcope. (B.)

CHAP. II.

A paralytic, after his ſins are remitted, is healed. The call of Matthew. Faſtings and afflictions are preach'd. The diſciples pull the ears of corn. The ſhew bread.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. AND again he entered into Capernaum after ſome days, and it was noiſed that he was in the houſe. And ſtraightway many were gathered together, inſomuch that there was no room to receive them, no not ſo much as about the door: and he preached the word unto them. And they came unto him, bringing one ſick of the palſy, which was born of four. And when they could not come nigh unto him for the preſs, they uncovered the roof where he was: and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the ſick of the palſy lay. When Jeſus ſaw their faith, he ſaid unto the ſick of the palſy, Son, thy ſins be forgiven thee. But there were certain of the ſcribes ſitting there, and reaſoning in their hearts, Why doth this man thus ſpeak blaſphemies? who can forgive ſins but God only? And immediately, when Jeſus perceived in his ſpirit, that they ſo reaſoned within themſelves, he ſaid unto them, Why reaſon ye theſe things in your hearts? Whether is it eaſier to ſay to the ſick of the palſy, Thy ſins be forgiven thee: or to ſay, Ariſe, and take up thy bed, and walk? But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive ſins [he ſaith to the ſick of the palſy] I ſay unto thee, Ariſe, and take up thy bed, and go thy way into thine houſe. And immediately he aroſe, took up the bed, and went forth before them all, inſomuch that they were all amazed, and glorified God, ſaying, We never ſaw it on this faſhion.

Who can forgive ſins but God only?] Chriſt did not ſay that he would remit the ſins of the man ſick of the palſy. But they were induced to think as much; for the nature of hatred is ſuch, as to draw every thing to it, where there is room to fix its calumny. Before Chriſt performed the miracle of healing the paralytic, he diſcovered a circumſtance of much more wonder and ſurpriſe, when he ſhewed the perſons, who ſtood round him, that he was intimately acquainted with their thoughts; which the holy ſcriptures determine to be as aſtoniſhing a miracle, as to remit a man's tranſgreſſions. (G.)

In the laſt verſe of the foregoing chapter we find how induſtriouſly our Saviour withdrew himſelf from the concourſe of people that flock'd after him from every quarter; and to ſhew how little he affected the commendation of the multitude, he left the cities, and "was without in deſert places;" hereby giving an inſtructive example to ſhun popular applauſe. But now the words before us ſhew, that our Saviour being entered into Capernaum, it is preſently reported that he was in the houſe, and a mighty throng of people are after him, inſomuch that neither the houſe, nor hardly the ſtreets could contain them. Thence learn, that ſuch as leaſt ſeek after applauſe are oftentimes moſt renown'd. Our Saviour was ſo far from ſeeking commendation, that he came into Capernaum without obſervation; but the more he ſtrove to conceal himſelf, the more he was taken notice of. Honour flies from them who purſue it, and purſues them who fly from it. The way to be honourable is to be humble. God ſeldom honours a proud man, by making him either eminently ſerviceable, or ſucceſsful. Obſerve further, the people being come together, our Saviour takes the opportunity to preach; teaching his miniſters, by his example, to embrace all opportunities, in or out of ſeaſon, on the Lord's, and on the week day, to edify their people by their miniſtry, public exhortations, private inſtructions, prudent admonitions, and holy conduct. Here we have the relation of our Saviour's miraculous healing of a paralytic at Capernaum, whoſe diſeaſe, being a weakneſs of the nerves, enfeebles the joints, and confines the perſon to his bed or couch. As a demonſtration of Chriſt's divine power, he was pleaſed to ſingle out the palſy and leproſy, incurable diſeaſes, to work a cure upon ſuch as were afflicted with them; Now this perſon was ſo great a cripple, that he was borne of four. Obſ. 2. The man and his friends had a firm perſuaſion, that Chriſt was cloathed with a divine power, and able to help him, and they hoped in his goodneſs that he was alſo willing to help him. Accordingly, the roofs of the Jewiſh houſes being flat, they uncover ſome part of it, and let the bed down, with the ſick man in it, into the room where Chriſt was. Obſ. 3. No ſooner did they exerciſe their faith in believing, but Chriſt exerted his divine power in healing. And ſee the marvellous efficacy of faith, it obtained not only what was deſired, but more than was expected. They deſired only the healing of the body, but Chriſt heals body and ſoul too. Son, be of good cheer, thy ſins be forgiven thee. Thereby our Saviour ſhews them, that ſin is the original cauſe of all bodily diſeaſes, and conſequently, that in ſickneſs the beſt way to find eaſe and deliverance from pain, is firſt to ſeek for pardon. The ſenſe of pardon in ſome meaſure will take away the ſenſe of pain Obſ. 4. The exception, which the ſcribes took againſt our Saviour, for pronouncing that this man's ſins were forgiven him; they accuſe him of the ſin of blaſphemy, urging, that it is God's peculiar prerogative to pardon ſin. Their doctrine was true, but their application falſe. Nothing more true, than that it is the higheſt degree of blaſphemy, for any mere man to arrogate to himſelf the incommunicable prerogative of God, which conſiſts in an abſolute and authoritative power to forgive ſin. But then their denying this power to Chriſt of forgiving, which he had, as God, from all eternity, and as Mediator, God and Man in one perſon, when here upon earth; this was blaſphemy in them, the challenging it, none in him. Obſ. 5. Our Saviour gives theſe ſcribes a two-fold demonſtration of his Godhead, 1. by letting them underſtand that he knew their thoughts, Jeſus perceiv'd in the ſpirit that they reaſoned among themſelves. To ſearch the hearts, and to know the thoughts and reaſonings of men, is not in the power of angels or men, but the prerogative of God only. 2. By aſſuming to himſelf a power to forgive ſin in his own name, and by his own authority, doth give the world an undeniable proof and convincing evidence of his Godhead, for who can forgive ſin, but God only. Obſ. 3. The effect of this miracle upon the minds of the people; they marvelled and were amazed, but did not believe; they admired our Saviour for an extraordinary man, but did not believe him to be God: Learn thence, That the ſight of Chriſt's miracles is not ſufficient to work faith in the ſoul, without the concurring operation of the Holy Spirit The one way makes us marvel, the other muſt make us believe. (B.)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. And he went forth again by the ſea-ſide, and all the multitude reſorted unto him, and he taught them. And as he paſſed by, he ſaw Levi the ſon of Alpheus ſitting at the receipt of cuſtom, and ſaid unto him, Follow me. And he aroſe and followed him, And it came to paſs, that as Jeſus ſat at meat in his houſe, many publicans and ſinners ſat alſo together with Jeſus and his diſciples: for there were many, and they followed him. And when the ſcribes and phariſees ſaw him eat with publicans and ſinners, they ſaid unto his diſciples, How is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and ſinners? When Jeſus heard it, he ſaith unto them, They that are whole have no need of the phyſician, but they that are ſick: I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance.

He ſaw Levi the ſon of Alpheus ſitting at the receipt of cuſtom, and ſaid unto him, follow me.] The number of our Lord's diſciples not being fill'd up, obſerve what a free and gracious, unexpected and undeſerved choice he makes, Levi, or Matthew, for he hath both names, a grinding publican, who gathered the taxes for the Romans, and was probably guilty, as others were, of the ſins of covetouſneſs, extortion, and oppreſſion; yet is he called to follow Chriſt, as a ſpecial diſciple: Learn thence, that ſuch is the freeneſs of God's grace, that it calls and converts ſinners unto Chriſt, when they neither think of or ſeek him. Matthew a publican, Zaccheus an extortioner, Saul a perſecutor, all theſe are brought home to God, as inſtances of the mighty power of converting grace. Matthew, to ſhew his thankfulneſs to Chriſt, makes him a great feaſt. Chriſt invited Matthew to a diſcipleſhip. Matthew invites Chriſt to a dinner. We do not find that, when Chriſt was invited to any table, he ever refuſed to go: If a publican or a phariſee gave the invitation, he conſtantly went, not ſo much for the pleaſure of the entertainment, as for the opportunity of converſing and doing good. Obſerve next the exceptions which the ſcribes and phariſees made at our Lord's free converſation. They cenſure him for converſing with ſinners; he juſtifies himſelf, telling them that he converſed with them as their phyſician, not as their companion. "They that are whole need no phyſician (ſays "Chriſt) but they that are ſick." As if our Lord had ſaid, "With whom ſhould a phyſician converſe, but with his ſick patients? Now I am come into the world to do the kind office of "a phyſician unto men, ſurely then I am to take all opportunities of converſing with them, that I may help and heal them, "for they that are ſick need the phyſician. But as for you ſcribes "and phariſees, who are well and whole in your own opinions "and conceits, I have no hopes of doing good upon you, for "ſuch as think themſelves whole deſire no phyſician's aſſiſtance." From this aſſertion of Chriſt, theſe truths are ſuggeſted to us; 1. That ſin is the malady of the ſoul, its ſpiritual diſeaſe and ſickneſs. 2. That Chriſt is the phyſician appointed by God for the curing and healing this diſeaſe. 3. That there are multitudes of ſinners ſpiritually ſick, who yet think themſelves ſound and whole. 4. That ſuch, and only ſuch, as find themſelves ſpiritually ſick, are the ſubjects capable of the healing of Chriſt. "They "that are whole need not the phyſician, but they that are ſick; I "come not to call the (opiniatively) righteous, but the (ſenſible) "ſinner to repentance. (B.)

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22. And the diſciples of John, and of the Phariſees uſed to faſt; and they come and ſay unto him, Why do the diſciples of John, and of the Phariſees faſt, but thy diſciples faſt not? And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Can the children of the bride-chamber faſt, while the bridegroom is with them? as long as they have the bridegroom with them they cannot faſt. But the days will come, when the bridegroom ſhall be taken away from them, and then ſhall they faſt in thoſe days. No man alſo ſeweth a piece of new cloth on an old garment: elſe the new piece that filled it up, taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worſe. And no man putteth new wine into old bottles, elſe the new wine doth burſt the bottles, and the wine is ſpilled, and the bottles will be marred: but new wine muſt be put into new bottles.

Why do the diſciples of John, and of the Phariſees, faſt, but thy diſciples faſt not?] Here we have a great difference betwixt John's diſciples, and Chriſt's, in the matter of faſting. John's diſciples imitated him, who was a man of an auſtere life, and much given to faſting; therefore is ſaid to come neither eating nor drinking, Matt. xi. 18. On the other ſide, Chriſt's diſciples followed him, who came eating and drinking, as other men did; and yet though there was a great difference between John's diſciples, and Chriſt's in matter of practice, yet were all of one faith and religion. Thence learn, that there may be unity of faith and religion among thoſe, who do not maintain an uniformity in practice. Men may differ in ſome outward religious obſervations and cuſtoms, and yet agree in the fundamentals of faith and religion. The next obſervation is, that the diſciples of the Phariſees uſed to faſt as well as John's diſciples: From whence we may learn that hypocrites and wicked men may be, and ſometimes are, as ſtrict and forward in the outward duties of religion, as the holieſt and beſt of Chriſtians: They pray, faſt, hear the word, receive the ſacraments; they do, nay, go beyond the ſincere Chriſtians in external duties, and outward performances. The third obſervation ariſes from the defenſative plea, which our Saviour makes for the not faſting of his diſciples; he declares, that it was neither ſuitable to, nor tolerable for them, then to faſt; not ſuitable, in regard of Chriſt's bodily preſence with them; which made it a time of joy and rejoicing, not of mourning, ſorrow, and faſting: nor tolerable, in regard of his diſciples being raw, green, and tender, not fit for auſterities, or to bear the ſeverities of religion, no more than an old garment is able to bear a piece of new ſtiff cloth to be ſet into it, which will make the rent worſe, if the garment comes to a ſtretch; or no more than old bottles can keep new wine. As if our Saviour had ſaid, "My diſciples at preſent are "tender and weak, newly called and converted; they cannot "therefore bear the ſeverities of religion preſently, but e're "long I ſhall leave them, and go to heaven, from whence I "will ſend down my Holy Spirit upon them, which ſhall enable "them to do all the duties which the Goſpel enjoins." Now the intended leſſon of inſtruction from hence is this, That it is hurtful and dangerous for young converts, or weak Chriſtians, to be put upon the ſeverer exerciſes of religion, or to be urged to the performance of ſuch duties as are above their ſtrength: But they ought to be handled with that tenderneſs, which becomes the mild and gentle diſpenſation of the Goſpel. Our Saviour here commands prudence to his miniſters, in treating their people according to their ſtrength, and putting them upon duties according to their time and ſtanding. (Id.)

Ver. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. And it came to paſs, that he went through the corn-fields on the ſabbath-day, and his diſciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn. And the Phariſees ſaid unto him, Behold, why do they on the ſabbath-day that which is not lawful? And he ſaid unto them, Have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was an hungred, he, and they that were with him? How he went into the houſe of God, in the days of Abiathar the high-prieſt, and did eat the ſhew-bread, which is not lawful to eat, but for the prieſts; and gave alſo to them which were with him? And he ſaid unto them, The ſabbath was made for man, and not man for the ſabbath: Therefore the Son of man is Lord alſo of the ſabbath.

He went through the corn-fields on the ſabbath-day.] The opinion of the more orthodox Jews agrees with Chriſt's doctrine in this particular. For tho' they required a ſuperſtitious obſervance of the external part of the ſabbath, yet where the apprehenſion of death was in the caſe, tho' circumſtances were not ſo thoroughly evident, yet they tell us that the ſabbath might be violated and diſpenſed with; nay, made it a more honourable action in him, who proved the quickeſt in infringing the rites of this ſolemn day. Much of this we read in the Talmud, in the treatiſe de ſabbato; and other particulars we find repeated about this affair, in that of circumciſion; for the following phraſe very frequently occurs, The danger of ſouls aboliſhes the ſabbath; that is, the ſabbath may be diſpenſed with when life is in danger. Which Maimonides, after the Talmudiſt, a writer of great credit among the Jews, copiouſly confirms, in his treatiſe of the ſabbath, chiefly in chap. 1. and 2. and in his treatiſe of circumciſion, chap. 1. and ſubjoins ſeveral different examples to illuſtrate this doctrine. (Jun. & Trem.)

Of Abiathar the high prieſt.] What makes Matthew inform us with a circumſtance of an affair, as tranſacted under Abiathar the high-prieſt, which was performed under Abimelech the high prieſt? The moſt probable reaſon that I can find is, that Abiathar's name was more known for the ephod, which he gave David, mentioned 1 Sam. xxiii. 6. and for the long continuance of his high prieſthood under that prince. In like manner Luke, in marking out the time, adds Annas to Caiphas the high prieſt, as a perſon of great reputation. (G.) The notation of the propoſition epi for the time not then preſent, but ſoon after ſucceeding, is remarkable, Matt. i. 11. epi tes metoikeſicis cannot be underſtood or rendred, under the Babyloniſh deportation; for that will not be found true in the hiſtory, Jechoniah being not born under the captivity, but before, and being king, Jer. xxiv. 1. and ſo carried captive into Babylon; epi muſt therefore ſignify next before, as the Latin ſub doth often note; ſub finem libri, a little before the end of the book, and many the like; and ſo 'tis moſt true, Joſias begat Jechoniah next before, or near about, the Babyloniſh deportation. So in like manner here epi ton Abiathar may not be rendred under Abiathar the high- high prieſt, for it was in Abimelech's time, 1 Sam. xxi. 1. who was Abiathar's father, chap. xxii. 20. And the ſtory is known that Abimilech and the reſt of the prieſts, almoſt the whole family, were, by Saul's appointment, ſlain for ſuccouring David at that time, Abiathar here named, peculiarly eſcaping out of this ſlaughter, and ſucceeding in the high prieſthood upon this occaſion, and ſo continuing long under David's reign, being favours for bringing him the ephod, chap. xxx. 7. and he and Zadoc being principal aſſiſtants in his affairs. It is therefore, that what is tranſlated, "In "the days of Abiathar the high prieſt", here, muſt be ſo render'd as to denote the time immediately preceding Abiathar's being high-prieſt. (H.)

CHAP. III.

The withered hand is healed. The Phariſees take counſe with the Herodians. Many are healed with the touch of Chriſt. The devils at the ſight of Chriſt fall proſtrate before him. The twelve Apoſtles. A kingdom divided againſt it's ſelf. Blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt. The parents of Chriſt.

1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. AND he entred again into the ſynagogue, and there was a man there that had a withered hand. And they watched him, whether he would heal him on the ſabbath-day, that they might accuſe him. And he ſaith unto the man which had the withered hand, Stand forth. And he ſaith unto them, Is it lawful to do good on the ſabbath-day, or to do evil? to ſave life, or to kill? but they held their peace. And when he had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardneſs of their hearts, he ſaith unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he ſtretched it out: and his hand was reſtored whole as the other. And the Phariſees went forth, and ſtraightway took counſel with the Herodians againſt him, how they might deſtroy him. But Jeſus withdrew himſelf with his diſciples to the ſea: and a great multitude from Galilee followed him, and from Judea, And from Jeruſalem, and from Idumea, and from beyond Jordan, and they about Tyre and Sidon, a great multitude, when they had heard what great things he did, came unto him. And he ſpake to his diſciples, that a ſmall ſhip ſhould wait on him, becauſe of the multitude, leſt they ſhould throng him. For he healed many, inſomuch that they preſſed upon him for to touch him, as many as had plagues. And unclean ſpirits when they ſaw him fell down before him, and cried, ſaying, Thou art the Son of God. And he ſtraitly charged them, that they ſhould not make him known.

Looked round about on them with anger.] Namely, with an anger that was raiſed within him according to the empire of reaſon, and govern'd by it, nor any way repugnant to his uſual meekneſs, which, as the philoſopher ſays, holds the medium in anger. Anger in us is two-fold, ira per vitium, which puſhes us on to ſeek revenge without having any recourſe to our reaſon, or conſulting what it dictates; this ſort of anger could not dwell in Chriſt. The other is, ira per zelum, which conforms itſelf to the remonſtrances of reaſon, and follows it's dictates; yet tho' it be commendable (for it always ſtrives) to correct and amend what it ſees erroneous in the houſe of God, but provided it's endeavours are vain, it laments and mourns it's diſappointment: This very anger is ſometimes very troubleſome to us, and prompts us to act in contradiction to the wholeſome precepts of our reaſon. (V.)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. And he goeth into a mountain, and calleth unto him whom he would: and they came unto him. And he ordained twelve, that they ſhould be with him, and that he might ſend them forth to preach: And to have power to heal ſickneſſes, and to caſt out devils. And Simon he ſirnamed Peter. And James the ſon of Zebedee, and John the brother of James (and he ſirnamed them Boanerges, which is, the ſons of thunder) And Andrew, and Philip, and Bartholomew, and Matthew, and Thomas, and James the ſon of Alpheus, and Thaddeus, and Simon the Canaanite, And Judas Iſcariot which alſo betrayed him: and they went into an houſe.

He ordained twelve.] As the Jewiſh church aroſe from twelve Patriarchs, ſo the chriſtian church became planted by twelve Apoſtles: The perſon commiſſioning them was Chriſt: None may undertake the work of calling of the miniſtry, but thoſe whom Chriſt appoints and calls. The perſons commiſſion'd were diſciples, before they were Apoſtles, to teach us, that Chriſt will have ſuch as preach the Goſpel to be diſciples, before they are miniſters, train'd up in the faith and doctrine of the Goſpel, before they undertake a public charge. The holy preparative which our Saviour uſes, in order to this election of the Apoſtles, is going up into a mountain to pray on that great occaſion. So ſays St. Luke vi. 12. "He went up into a mountain to pray, and ſpent the "night in prayer to God." And "When it was day he called "his diſciples and of them choſe twelve." In this prayer, no doubt, he pleaded with his father, to furniſh all thoſe, who were to be ſent forth by him, with all miniſterial gifts and graces; whence learn, that as prayer is a neceſſary preparative to all duties, ſo more eſpecially before the public election, and ordination of the miniſters of the church, ſolemn prayer is to be uſed by ſuch as are to ordain and chuſe them; our Lord's practice here is to be a ſtanding rule to all church officers. Obſerve further, Tho' Chriſt called his Apoſtles now, yet he did not ſend them forth now; "He or-"dained twelve, that they ſhould be with him," that is, that they might converſe with him, and be eye-witneſſes and ear-witneſſes of his life, doctrine, and miracles. Having been thus with Chriſt, and fitted and prepared by him for their work, they were ſent forth afterwards. Whence learn, That ſuch as are to take upon them the office of the miniſtry, ought firſt to be fitted and prepared for it, then ſolemnly called to it, before they undertake the execution of it. If the Apoſtles here, who were called and qualified extraordinarily, were to ſpend ſome time with Chriſt, to receive direction and inſtruction from him before they went forth to preach, how much more needful is it for ſuch as are ordinarily called, to be well fitted for the miniſterial function before they undertake it. Obſerve next, How the ſeveral names of the Apoſtles are here regiſtred and recorded; God will honour thoſe who honour him, and are the ſpecial inſtruments of his glory. Of theſe Apoſtles Peter is named firſt, and Judas laſt. Peter is named firſt, becauſe probably elder than the reſt, or becauſe for order ſake he might ſpeak before the reſt, from whence may be inferr'd a primacy, but no ſupremacy; a priority of order, not a ſuperiority of degree. As the foreman of a Jury has a precedency, but no pre-eminency, he is firſt in order before the reſt, but has no authority or power above the reſt. Judas is named laſt, with a brand of infamy upon him, becauſe he was the perſon who betray'd his Lord and Maſter. Whence learn, That tho' the truth of grace be abſolutely neceſſary to a miniſter's ſalvation, yet the want of it doth not diſannul his office, nor hinder the lawfulneſs of his miniſtry; Judas, tho' a traitor, was yet a lawful miniſter: The miſſion of a perſon may be valid, tho' he be not ſanctified. Obſerve laſtly, That our Saviour ſirnamed James, and John, Boanerges, ſons of thunder. St. Jerome ſuppoſes this name was given them, becauſe being with Chriſt in the mount at his transfiguration, they heard the father's voice out of the cloud like thunder: Others think them ſo called, becauſe they were more vehement and earneſt than the reſt in preaching, and did with greater zeal and power ſound forth the doctrine of the Goſpel like thunder. It is very probable that Chriſt gave them this name from a foreſight of the heat, and zeal of their temper, of which they ſoon gave an inſtance, in deſiring fire to come down from heaven to conſume the Samaritans. (B.)

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. And the multitude cometh together again, ſo that they could not ſo much as eat bread. And when his friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him: for they ſaid, he is beſide himſelf. And the ſcribes which came down from Jeruſalem, ſaid, He hath Beelzebub, and by the prince of the devils caſteth he out devils. And he called them unto him, and ſaid unto them in parables, How can Satan caſt out Satan? And if a kingdom be divided againſt it ſelf, that kingdom cannot ſtand. And if a houſe be divided againſt it ſelf, that houſe cannot ſtand. And if Satan riſe up againſt himſelf and be divided, he cannot ſtand, but hath an end. No man can enter into a ſtrong mans houſe, and ſpoil his goods, except he will firſt bind the ſtrong man, and then he will ſpoil his houſe. Verily I ſay unto you, All ſins ſhall be forgiven unto the ſons of men, and blaſphemies wherewith ſoever they ſhall blaſpheme: But he that ſhall blaſpheme againſt the Holy Ghoſt, hath never forgiveneſs, but is in danger of eternal damnation: Becauſe they ſaid, he hath an unclean ſpirit.

He is beſide himſelf] It was thought peculiar to the prophets of old, that when they were actuated by the Spirit, they were beſide themſelves; whence they are ſaid inſanire, or by a milder term alienari. So Seneca, in his book de conſtantia ſapientis, "cum, inquit, ſapientiam negatis inſanire, non negatis & alienari, & parium ſana verba emittere." When, ſays he, you deny that a " wiſe man is mad, you own that he is beſide himſelf, and that he " utters words that betray his weak ſide." Hence 2 Kings chap. " ix. v. 11. The ſon of the prophet whom Eliſha ſent, is term'd mad " by the reſt. So 1 Kings chap. i. v. 18. where the hebrew and " vulgar ſay."The evil ſpirit of God invaded Saul, and he propheſied " The Chaldee paraphraſt tranſlates, and he was beſide himſelf; and again in the 19 chap. it is ſaid of Saul, that " he tore off his " garments and propheſied with the reſt before Samuel, and he " lay naked all day, and all night, which is a plain demonſtration " that Saul was beſide himſelf, and within the power of the Spirit. And we are informed from Epathanes, that the Montainiſts, in order to mimic the prophets, ſpoke in a very dubious and inarticulate ſtrain; and in this paſſage before us the kinſmen and relations of Chriſt ſuppoſed him to be beſide himſelf, and therefore ſtrove to get him out of the multitude to preſerve him. (V.) The word uſed here to ſignify beſide himſelf, doth, in all places of the New Teſtament, but this, and 2 Cor. v. 13. mean being amazed, or aſtoniſhed, ſome ſudden perturbation of mind, which deprives the man of the exerciſe of his faculties. In that place to the Corinthians 'tis ſet oppoſite to ſobriety or being in temper; the ſpeaking magnificently of himſelf, commending his own office or performances, exceeding a little in ſuch ſort of commendations of himſelf, for which he ſaith in another place, that he may be counted a fool by ſome. And thus in the Old Teſtament 'tis variouſly uſed, for exceſſes, or vehemencies or commotions of the mind. Pſalm. xxxi. 23. I ſaid in my haſte, but the vulgar latin hath it, in the exceſs or vehemence of my mind. Agreeably here, I ſuppoſe, it will be moſt fully taken, for a commotion, exceſs, vehemence, tranſportation of mind, acting or ſpeaking in zeal, above that which is commonly called temper and ſobriety, or in ſuch a manner, as they, who are mov'd by ſome extraordinary ſpirit, are uſed to do, as prophets, &c. according to that of St. Chryſoſtom " 'tis peculiar to prophets to be " thus tranſported." In this Chapter Chriſt began to ſhew himſelf in the full luſtre of his office: He cures on the ſabbath day, which the Phariſees conceived unlawful. v. 2. Looks about him with ſome incitation of mind. v. 5. is followed by great multitudes. v. 7. heals the deſceaſed, and is flockt to for that purpoſe. v. 10. is called openly the ſon of God by the demoniacs. v. 11. makes twelve diſciples, and ſends them out to preach and cure. v. 14. And upon this the Phariſees and Herodians take council againſt him. v. 16. Thoſe of their faction ſay, he acts by Beelzebub. v. 22. and is poſſeſt by him, that is, that he was actuated by ſome principal evil ſpirit, and did all his miracles thus, and ſo was not to be followed, but abhorred by men, and they who uttered not theſe blaſphemies againſt him, ſaid that this making of diſciples, was a kind of exceſs, an height, a tranſportation, and this was the conceit of his own kindred; they had a ſpecial prejudice againſt him, chap. vi. 4. and did not believe on him John vii. 5. and, accordingly, hearing this report of his doing theſe high things, came out to get him into their hands, and have him home with them. For they ſaid, that he was guilty of ſome exceſſes. As for that interpretation which renders it of fainting thro' hunger, though it be admitted by learned men, yet it ſeems not to have any ground in the nature of the greek word, nor in any circumſtances of the context, except only the accidental mention of their having no time to eat bread. v. 20. which particular place hath induced ſome to think it of ſo much force. Acts x. 10. as to cauſe them to render the ecſtaſis that fell on St. Peter, no more but aſleep, into which ſuch as faint, and are diſpirited through hunger happen to fall, when the viſion, that is added to it, ſhews that it was a trance into which he was caſt by God. (H.) How truly our Lord's words were verified John iv. 34. My meat is to do the will of him that ſent me, for he and his Apoſtles, going into an houſe to refreſh themſelves in their hunger, the people preſſed upon him ſo faſt to hear the word, that he regards not the ſatisfying of his hunger, but applies himſelf to inſtruct the people. How exemplary was Chriſt's zeal and diligence in preaching the everlaſting Goſpel to a loſt world. The next obſervation, is the raſh cenſure of our Saviour's friends, and kinſmen concerning this action, in neglecting to eat bread, and ſuffering the multitude thus unſeaſonably to preſs upon him. They conclude he is beſides himſelf, out of his right mind, and accordingly went out to lay hold of him; from whence this inferences ariſes, that the forward zeal and diligence of Chriſt and his miniſters, in preaching the Goſpel, is accounted madneſs and frenzy by a blind and infatuated world. But they may ſay with the Apoſtle 2 Cor. v. 13. If we be beſide ourſelves, it is unto God. But who were the perſons, who thus look'd upon our Saviour, as beſides himſelf? truly his own kindred and kinſmen according to the fleſh; from whence we learn, that frequently the ſervants of God meet with the ſtrongeſt temptations from, and are moſt diſcouraged and moleſted by, ſuch as their neareſt relations by blood or alliance. This is a great tryal to find our relations ſetting us back, inſtead of aſſiſting us forward in the ways of religion. The third obſervation flows from the malicious and wicked ſlander, which the ſcribes endeavoured to fix upon our Saviour, namely, that he was poſſeſt of the devil, and, by familiarly converſing with him, caſt forth devils out of others. The fourth obſervation contains our Saviour's anſwer and juſt apology for himſelf, in which is included, 1. A confutation of their calumny. 2. A reprehenſion of the ſcribes for the ſame. 1. To confute this ſlander, our Saviour, by ſeveral arguments, ſhews how abſurd and unlikely it is that the devil ſhould caſt out himſelf, and any ways endeavour to ſeek and deſtroy his own kingdom: As if Chriſt had ſaid: Is it likely that ſatan would lend me his power to uſe it againſt himſelf? Surely ſatan will do nothing to weaken his intereſt, or ſhake the pillars of his kingdom. Now if I have receiv'd my power from ſatan for deſtroying him and his kingdom, then is ſatan like a family, divided againſt itſelf, and like a kingdom divided againſt itſelf, which can never ſtand, but be brought to deſolation. Our Saviour having ſufficiently ſhown, that he did not work his miracles by the power of the devil, but informs them, in the next place, from whence he had that power, even from God himſelf, and, accordingly, compares ſatan to a ſtrong man, well armed with weapons to defend his houſe; and he compares himſelf (cloathed with his divine power) to one who is ſtronger than the ſtrong man. So that the argument runs, that the devil is very ſtrong and powerful, and there is no power but that of God only which is ſuperior. If then, ſays Chriſt, I was not aſſiſted with divine power, I could never caſt out this ſtrong man, who reigns in the bodies and ſouls of men, as in his houſe. For it muſt be a ſtronger than the ſtrong man who ſhall bind Satan; and who is he but the God of ſtrength? learn hence, that Chriſt's divine power is only ſuperior to the ſtrength of Satan. He only can vanquiſh and overrule him at his pleaſure, and drive him out of that poſſeſſion which he holds either in the bodies or ſouls of men. Obſerve again the charge which our Saviour brings againſt the ſcribes and Phariſees, for blaſpheming his divine power in working miracles. He charges them with ſinning the unpardonable ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt. All ſin and blaſphemy ſhall be forgiven, but he that blaſpheme againſt the Holy Ghoſt hath never forgiveneſs. As if Chriſt had ſaid, all the reproaches, which you caſt upon me as man, are pardonable, as when you reproach me with the poverty and meanneſs of my birth, when you cenſure me for a wine-bibber, a glutton, a friend, and companion of ſinners, and the like unjuſt crimes. But when you blaſpheme that divine power, by which all my miracles are wrought, and, contrary to the conviction of your own enlightened minds, maliciouſly aſcribe all my miracles to the power of the devil, which were wrought, indeed, by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, this makes your condition not only dangerous but deſperate; becauſe you reſiſt the laſt remedy, and oppoſe the beſt means for your conviction. For what can be done more to convince you that I am the true, and promiſed Meſſiah, than to work ſo many miracles before your eyes to that purpoſe? Now if, when you ſee theſe, you will ſay 'tis not the ſpirit of God that works them, but the power of the devil, as if Satan would conſpire againſt himſelf, and ſeek the ruin of his own kingdom, there is no way, or means left to convince you, but you will continue in your obſtinacy, and malicious oppoſition to truth, to your unutterable, and inevitable condemnation. (P and B)

Ver. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35. There came then his brethren and his mother, and ſtanding without, ſent unto him, calling him. And the multitude ſat about him, and they ſaid unto him, Behold, thy mother and thy brethren without ſeek for thee. And he anſwered them, ſaying, Who is my mother, or my brethren? And he looked round about on them which ſat about him, and ſaid, Behold my mother and my brethren. For whoſoever ſhall do the will of God, the ſame is my brother, and my ſiſter, and mother.

His brethren, and his mother] Here we are to obſerve the truth and verity of Chriſt's human nature; he had affinity and conſanguinity with men; perſons near in blood to him by the mother's ſide, called here his brethren, that is, his kinſmen; his mother, tho' a woman of exemplary purity and holineſs, yet had her failings and infirmities. It was a fault in her to intercept our Saviour unſeaſonably at this time, when he was preaching to the people; the like we ſee in her at other times, Luke ii. 48. and John ii. 3. No Saint here on earth ever was in a ſtate of pure perfection. We are to obſerve, in the next place, that Chriſt did not neglect his holy mother, or diſregard his poor kindred and relations, but only ſhewed that he preferred his father's work and buſineſs before their company and acquaintance at this time. (V. and B.)

CHAP. IV.

The parable of the ſower. Its explanation. The thorns. The candle. The caſting the ſeed upon the ground. The grain of muſtard-ſeed. Chriſt ſleeps in the ſhip.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. AND he began again to teach by the ſea-ſide: and there was gathered unto him a great multitude, ſo that he enter'd into a ſhip, and ſat in the ſea, and the whole multitude was by the ſea, on the land. And he taught them many things by parables, and ſaid unto them in his doctrine, Hearken, behold, there went out a ſower to ſow: And it came to paſs as he ſowed, ſome fell by the way-ſide, and the fowls of the air came and devour'd it up. And ſome fell on ſtony ground, where it had not much earth, and immediately it ſprang up, becauſe it had no depth of earth. But when the ſun was up, it was ſcorched, and becauſe it had no root, it withered away. And ſome fell among thorns, and the thorns grew up, and choked it, and it yielded no fruit. And other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that ſprang up and increaſed, and brought forth ſome thirty, and ſome ſixty, and ſome an hundred. And he ſaid unto them, He that hath ears to hear let him hear.

He taught them many things by parables.] The manner of our Lord's preaching was by parables, and ſimilitudes, an ancient way of inſtruction among the Jews, and a very convincing way to work upon mens minds, memories, and affections, all at once; making the mind attentive, the memory retentive, and the auditors inquiſitive after the interpretation of the parable. Some are of opinion that our Saviour's parables were ſuited to the employments of the hearers, and accordingly, many of them being husbandmen, that he reſembled his doctrine to ſeed ſown in the field. For thus he ſpeaks, "Hearken, behold, there went out a "ſower to ſow, &c. From whence we learn, that the beſt ground doth not bring forth increaſe alike. Some good ground brings forth more, others leſs; ſome thirty, ſome ſixty, ſome an hundred fold. In like manner a perſon may be a profitable hearer of the word, tho' he doth not bring forth ſo great a proportion of fruit as others, provided he brings forth as much as he can. (B.)

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. And when he was alone, they that were about him with the twelve, asked of him the parable. And he ſaid unto them, Unto you it is given to know the myſtery of the kingdom of God: but unto them that are without all theſe things are done in parables: That ſeeing they may ſee, and not perceive, and hearing they may hear, and not underſtand; leſt at any time they ſhould be converted, and their ſins ſhould be forgiven them. And he ſaid unto them, Know ye not this parable? and how then will you know all parables? The ſower ſoweth the word. And theſe are they by the way-ſide, where the word is ſown, but when they have heard, Satan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was ſown in their hearts. And theſe are they likewiſe which are ſown on ſtony ground, who when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladneſs: And have no root in themſelves, and ſo endure but for a time: afterward when affliction or perſecution ariſeth for the word's ſake, immediately they are offended. And theſe are they which are ſown among thorns: ſuch as hear the word, And the cares of this world, and the deceitfulneſs of riches, and the luſts of other things entring in, choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful. And theſe are they which are ſown on good ground, ſuch as hear the word, and receive it, and bring forth fruit, ſome thirty, ſome ſixty, and ſome an hundred.

And when he was alone, &c.] And being retired from the promiſcuous company of the multitude, they who conſtantly follow'd him, together with the twelve elect or choſen diſciples, deſired him to interpret to them the meaning of the parable. He told them, that the ſecret manner of God's diſpenſing of his grace was given to them to know, which to others was more abſtruſely deliver'd in parables, and in ſuch a manner, that altho' they hear God's word, yet they are not wrought on thereby ſo far as to be converted, or to have their ſins pardoned; and this was a puniſhment brought upon them by their own fault, in holding out againſt God's word, and not embracing it. But as parables are a way of obſcuring doctrine to the careleſs, heedleſs hearers, ſo have they principal energy in them, which actuates with the greateſt ſimplicity, and with ſurpriſing quickneſs, on the hearers who attend thereto with diligence, ſuch as the diſciples are ſuppoſed to be; and therefore 'tis ſtrange you ſhould not underſtand my meaning in this parable, which is an eſſay of what may be expected of you by others hereafter, this being the method I ſhall commonly uſe for the future. (H.)

That ſeeing.] Theſe words, that ſeeing, point out the obſtinacy and obdurate diſpoſition of the Jews or Iſraelites, which God inflicted upon them, upon his deſerting them, as a puniſhment for not making a right uſe of the talents, which he had beſtowed upon them: And conſequently, this verſe is anſwerable and parallel to Matt. xiii. 15. or to the end of that place in Iſaiah, chap. vi. 9, 10. recited and ſet down at large in St. Matthew, but in this place, in Luke viii. 10. and John xii. 40. epitomiz'd and ſum'd up, leſt they ſhould ſee. And therefore, from the importance of the whole place in Iſaiah, and Matthew, the ſenſe of it (here, where 'tis ſhortly recited) muſt be taken thus, namely, that upon their ſhutting their eyes, that is, upon their voluntary obduration of heart againſt God, God withdraws his grace, which he would otherwiſe have beſtowed upon them, and does beſtow upon others. To which it is conſequent, that they ſee not at all. Agreeably to that of Procopius on Iſaiah; "The power of ſeeing "was preſent to them from the grace of him that was ſeen; their "not ſeeing was an accident or conſequent of their ſhutting their "eyes." And ſo in the paſſage here before us, their not being able to ſee, for want of light, the obſcurity of thoſe parables wherein God ſpake to them, was a puniſhment of their winking, and not being able to ſee. (H.)

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24, 25. And he ſaid unto them, Is a candle brought to be put under a buſhel, or under a bed? and not to be ſet on a candleſtick? For there is nothing hid which ſhall not be manifeſted: neither was any thing kept ſecret, but that it ſhould come abroad. If any man have ears to hear, let him hear. And he ſaid unto them, Take heed what you hear: with what meaſure ye mete, it ſhall be meaſured to you: and unto you that hear ſhall more be given. For he that hath, to him ſhall be given: and he that hath not, from him ſhall be taken even that which he hath.

For there is nothing hid which ſhall not be manifeſted.] For the doctrine which is taught you by me, in, or out of parables, muſt be both practiced and publiſhed by you, and therefore, for no other reaſon it is revealed to you, and that by way of parables, which are obſcuring it, that having acquired the underſtanding of them, you may ſet the more value on them for your own practice, and be more induſtrious to communicate them to others. And, therefore, let there be a weight laid on theſe my words, and all others that I ſhall pronounce, and be careful and ſure to repoſit them, ſo as to form your conduct by them accordingly. Moreover, mark diligently, and practice accordingly what you hear: As you deal with God, ſo will he deal with you, and to thoſe amongſt you who ſhall lend an attentive ear to the precepts and other duties pronounced to you for your obſervation, more wiſdom ſhall be revealed. For he who makes uſe of that grace and knowledge which he hath, ſhall extreamly improve, the very uſing his talent well, the exerciſe of chriſtian virtues, and the teaching them to others, is a ſure way of improving it, and, beſides, the bleſſing and grace of God is to him, a great, tho' inſenſible addition likewiſe: And on the contrary, that which is not uſed decreaſes and moulders away, and 'tis juſt with God to withdraw it. (H.) Here our Saviour applies himſelf to interpret the foregoing parable The ſeed is the word, the ſower is the preacher, the ſoil is the ſoul and heart of man. Some hearers are compared by Chriſt to the ground in the highway, in which the ſeed lies uncovered for want of due meditation. Others to ſtony ground, wherein the word has no root or foundation; neither in their underſtandings, neither in their memories, nor in their wills or affections, but they are inſtantly offended, either at the depth or profoundneſs of the word, or at the ſanctity and ſtrictneſs thereof, or elſe at its plainneſs and ſimplicity. Others, again, are compared to thorny ground; whereby is ſignified that worldly and covetous deſires choak up the good ſeed, ſhadow the blade when ſprung up, keep off the influences of the ſun, and draw away the fatneſs of the ſoil from the ſeed. And the like ill effects have worldly affections and covetous deſires in the ſoul of man, rendring the ſeed of the word unfruitful and unprofitable. But the good chriſtian hears the word attentively, keeps it retentively, believes it ſtedfaſtly, applies it particularly, practices it univerſally, and brings forth fruit perſeveringly. We are to obſerve in the next place, the ſcope and deſign of Chriſt, in revealing his word and will to his diſciples, and in communicating to them the light of ſpiritual knowledge: namely, that they might communicate it to others, even as the candle in the houſe diffuſes light to all who come within the reach of it; in like manner ought all chriſtians, and particularly, Chriſt's miniſters, by the light of life and doctrine, to direct perſons in their way to heaven, ſuch as are enlightened, in any meaſure, by God with the knowledge and underſtanding of the word, ought not to conceal this knowledge within themſelves, but to communicate to others, and imploy it for the good and benefit of others. (B.)

Ver. 26, 27, 28, 29. And he ſaid, ſo is the kingdom of God, as if a man ſhould caſt ſeed into the ground, and ſhould ſleep, and riſe night and day, and the ſeed ſhould ſpring and grow up, he knoweth not how. For the Earth bringeth forth fruit of her ſelf, firſt her blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear. But when the fruit is brought forth, immediately he putteth in the ſickle, becauſe the harveſt is come.

So is the kingdom of God] That is, as the holy church is one time or other to reign in heaven with, being reſembled to the gradations of virtue, and the ſeed, which the husbandman ſows in the ground, &c. St. Gregory in his 2d book upon Ezekiel, Hom. 15. gives us a beautiful interpretation and application of this parable “ Man, ſays he, ſows ſeed in the ground, when a good intention “ warms his heart, and after he has ſown the ſeed, he lays down
“ to ſleep, becauſe he reſts quiet with the hope of a good action.
“ However, he riſes both night and day, becauſe his intereſt and “ advantage is increaſing as well in averſe as proſperous times.
“ And the ſeed puts forth, and augments, while he himſelf is a “ ſtranger to the whole proceeding, becauſe, while he is not able
“ as yet to meaſure his increaſe and gainings, virtue when once “ conceived in the heart, conducts him to the height of perfection.
“ And moreover the gronnd produces its fruits voluntarily, be“ cauſe the mind of the man being puſhed on by the grace of God “ arrives at laſt to perfection, and the voluntary enjoyment of the “ laudable work he had ſo ſucceſsfully begun. But this ſame “ ground at firſt brings forth a graſs, then it augments to a ſpike, “ tho' to a full corn in the ſpike or ear. To produce the graſs,
“ is to diſcover the ſimplicity of a good beginning. The ear in
“ the ſpike is produced, when the virtue, conceived in the mind, “ leads the perſon to the ſummit or perfection of the laudable “ enterprize he had undertaken; and the advancement to that full “ ear in the ſpike, is when the man's virtue is grounded on a good
“ baſis or foundation. Aſſoon as the fruits appear ripe, the huſ-
“ bandman puts the ſickle into the harveſt, becauſe it is the ſeaſon
“ to reap. For when God Almighty hath produced the fruits, he “ ſends the ſickle into the corn, and cuts down his harveſt; be“ cauſe, when he has brought any one to a ſtate of perfection, he “ reaps or cuts off his temporal life by a determinative ſenſe, and “ repoſit his grain of corn in heavenly granaries. Thus when we “ imbibe good and laudable ſentiments, 'tis then we may be ſaid to “ ſow our ſeed; and ſo when we begin to purſue juſtice and equi“ table meaſures, 'tis then we may be ſaid, to have ſprouted out
“ to graſs: And ſo when we have made our virtues progreſs to the “ ſummit or perfection of our undertaken enterprize, 'tis then we “ may be ſaid, that we are augmented to the full and perfect ear
“ in the ſpike. (V)

Ver. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41. And he ſaid, whereunto ſhall we liken the kingdom of God? or with what compariſon ſhall we compare it? It is like a grain of muſtard-ſeed, which when it is ſown in the earth, is leſs than all the ſeeds that be in the earth. But when it is ſown, it groweth up, and becometh greater than all herbs, and ſhooteth out great branches, ſo that the ſowls of the air may lodge under the ſhadow of it. And with many ſuch parables ſpake he the word unto them, as they were able to hear it. But without a parable ſpake he not unto them: and when they were alone, he expounded all things to his diſciples, and the ſame day when the even was come, he ſaith unto them, let us paſs over unto the other ſide. And when they had ſent away the multitude, they took him even as he was in the ſhip, and there were alſo with him other little ſhips. And there aroſe a great ſtorm of wind, and the waves beat into the ſhip, ſo that it was now full. And he was in the hinder part of the ſhip, aſleep on a pillow: and they awake him, and ſay unto him, maſter, careſt thou not that we periſh? and he aroſe and rebuked the wind, and ſaid unto the ſea, peace, be ſtill: and the wind ceaſed, and there was a great calm. And he ſaid unto them, why are you ſo fearful? how is it that you have no faith? And they feared exceedingly, and ſaid one to another, what manner of man is this, that even the wind and the ſea obey him?

And there aroſe a great ſtorm of wind, and the waves beat into the Ship.] Our Saviour and his diſciples no ſooner put forth to ſea, but dangers attend, and difficulties accompany them, a tempeſt aroſe, and the ſhip was covered with waves which Chriſt himſelf was in, with his diſciples, from whence we learn, that the preſence of Chriſt himſelf doth not exempt his diſciples and followers from troubles and dangers. The poſture in which our Saviour was, when this tempeſt aroſe, was his being laid aſleep, thereby ſhewing himſelf to be truly and really man, and that he took upon him our human nature, ſo he aſſumed the infirmities of our nature likewiſe, as wearineſs and pain, hunger and thirſt. Obſerve further, the application of the diſciples made to Chriſt, they awaken him with a ſad outcry. Maſter, careſt thou not that we periſh? Here was faith mixed with human frailty; they believ'd that cou'd ſave you, but, being aſleep, conclude he muſt be awakened before they can be ſaved by him; whereas, tho' his human nature was aſleep, yet his divine nature neither ſlumbred nor ſlept. From whence learn, that the prevalency of fear in a time of great and imminent danger, tho' it may argue weakneſs of faith, yet is no evidence of total want of faith: For the diſciples in the midſt of their fears believed Chriſt's power. The next thing obſervable is the double rebuke given by our Saviour, firſt to the minds, next to the fears of his diſciples. He rebukes the winds, and inſtantly they are calm. When the ſea was furious, Chriſt with a ſimple word calms it; From whence learn, that the moſt outragious ſeas, and raging winds, cannot ſtand before the rebukes of Chriſt. Why are ye fearful, ſays Chriſt to his diſciples, firſt he calms their hearts, then he quiets the ſeas. From this inſtance of the diſciples we may gather, that great faith in the habit may appear in act and exerciſe, the faith of the diſciples, in the forſaking all and following Chriſt, was great and extraordinary, but in this preſent act it was weak and impotent, through the prevalency of their fears. Faith and fear will take their turns, and cut their part, whilſt we are upon the ſtage of this world, but e'er long our fear will be vanquiſhed, and our faith will be ſwallowed up in viſion. (B)

CHAP. V.

A demoniac is healed. A devil acknowledges Chriſt. A legion of devils. Enters into the ſwine. The daughter of Jace. The woman is cur'd of her flux of blood.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. AND they came over unto the other ſide of the ſea, into the country of the Gadarenes. And when he was come out of the ſhip, immediately there met him out of the tombs, a man with an unclean ſpirit. Who had his dwelling among the tombs, and no man could bind him, no not with chains. Becauſe that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, and the chains had been plucked aſunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces: neither could any man tame him. And always night and day, he was in the mountains, and in the tombs, crying, and cutting himſelf with ſtones. But when he ſaw Jeſus afar off, he ran and worſhipped him, And cried with a loud voice, and ſaid, what have I to do with thee, Jeſus thou ſon of the moſt high God? I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not. (For he ſaid unto him, Come out of the man, thou unclean ſpirit.) And he aſked him, What is thy name? And he anſwered, ſaying, My name is Legion: for we are many. And he beſought him much, that he would not ſend them away out of the country. Now there was there nigh unto the mountains a great herd of ſwine feeding. And all the devils beſought him, ſaying, ſend us into the herd of ſwine, that we may enter into them. And forthwith Jeſus gave them leave. And the unclean ſpirits went out, and entered into the ſwine, and the herd ran violently down a ſteep place into the ſea (they were about two thouſand) and were choaked in the ſea. And they that fed the ſwine fled, and told it in the city, and in the country; and they went out to ſee what it was that was done. And they come to Jeſus, and ſee him that was poſſeſſed with the devil, and had the legion, ſitting and cloathed, and in his right mind, and they were afraid. And they that ſaw it, told them how it befel to him that was poſſeſſed with the devil, and alſo concerning the ſwine. And they began to pray him to depart out of their coaſts. And when he was come into the ſhip, he that had been poſſeſſed with the devil, prayed him that he might be with him. Howbeit, Jeſus ſuffered him not, but ſaith unto him, Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compaſſion on thee. And he departed, and began to publiſh in Decapolis, how great things Jeſus had done for him: and all men did marvel.

A man with an unclean ſpirit.] What is here affirm'd of a man in the ſingular number, is Matt. viii. 28. ſaid to be two demoniacks. In like manner, in chap. x. 46. where there is mention but of one blind man, Bartimeus, in Matt. chap. xx. 30. there are two blind men, which difference has nothing of weight in it, becauſe Matthew, who names two, ſaying the truth, the other, who names but one, yet not denying that there were more, muſt neceſſarily ſay true alſo. And it being not pretended, that each of the Evangeliſts doth relate what was done by Chriſt, but poſitively affirmed by John xxi. 25. that all that was done was not related by any of them, there is, conſequently, nothing ſtrange in this of Mark who in either place omits the mention of one of them. So when St. Matthew mentions the bringing the aſs and colt, chap. xxi. 7. St. Mark only mentions the foal, chap. xi. 7. Of the ſame pitch it is (viz. matter of very light importance, far from a real exception againſt the authority of this goſpel) that the order of things related is not always the ſame in him and St. Matthew. As when the cure of the Paralytic is mention'd by Mark in the ſecond chapter, and the drowning of the ſwine not till the fifth, Matthew mentions this before the former. And whereas the cure of the withered hand is in Mark chap. iii. and not mention'd in Matthew till chap. xii. in Matthew it falls out to be ſubſequent to many relations; to which Mark makes it antecedent. So the cure of Peter's mother in law is by Mark ſet before that of the leper, and by Matthew after. So the caſting the brokers out of the temple is ſet down by Matthew, chap. xxi. 12. before the curſing of the fig-tree, v. 29. whereas St. Mark, chap. xi. 13. ſets down the ſtory of the fig-tree, and the caſting out the brokers after, v. 15. And perhaps other examples of the like may be found by thoſe who ſhall more diligently compare them; but all theſe and (if there were) many more derogate nothing from the fidelity of the writers, who, undertaking to make ſome relations of what was done by Chriſt, do no where undertake or oblige themſelves to obſerve the order wherein every thing ſucceeded, that being generally extrinſecal, and of no importance to the relations. (H.)

Ver. 21, 22, 23, 24. And when Jeſus was paſſed over again by ſhip unto the other ſide, much people gathered unto him, and he was nigh unto the ſea. And behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the ſynagogue, Jairus by name, and when he ſaw him he fell at his feet. And beſought him greatly, ſaying, My little daughter lieth at the point of death, I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that ſhe may be healed, and ſhe ſhall live. And Jeſus went with him, and much people followed him, and thronged him.

One of the Rulers of the ſynagogue.] What is meant by the chief or ruler of the Synagogue, will the better appear, if we firſt conſider that which here we find, that there were more than one of them; and, therefore, Jairus is called here one of the chiefs or rulers, and that not only in divers, but in the ſame ſynagogue, Acts xiii. 15. For ſynagogue ſignifies here the leſſer Conſiſtory, or that of any particular city (as that is oppoſite to the great Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem) the judgment of twenty three who were now able to puniſh offences, but not capital; to ſcourge and the like, which is, therefore, called ſcourging in their ſynagogues. And tho' among the rulers of this aſſembly there was generally one diſtinguiſh'd and eminent for his learning, and proportionably dignified with authority, who, both here in the goſpel, and in the life of Alexander Severus, and in the conſtitutions of the emperour, is called the head or chief, who impoſed hands upon all thoſe, who were elected or admitted into the conſiſtory; yet becauſe the reſt had power of judicature with, and under him, therefore, not only he, but the reſt alſo are all contained under this common name of rulers of the ſynagogue, both here, and Acts xiii. 15. A difference there is between the rulers of the ſynagogues, and thoſe who are called rulers of the people, but no more than this. The former are thoſe in particular cities; but the latter thoſe of the Sanhedrim in Jeruſalem. Both of them are in other places called ſimply Rulers, as Matt. ix. 18, 23. Luke xviii. 18. ſpeaking of thoſe in particular cities; and in other places, when the context belongs to Jeruſalem, as Luke xviii. 13, 38. John vii. 26, 48. 'tis clear that the rulers called ſo ſimply muſt be thoſe of the great Sanhedrim. For the former of theſe, it muſt be obſerved what Maimonides tells us, that there were two kinds of meetings, in particular cities, among the Jews, Domus congregationum, the houſes of aſſemblies, where they met to pray and hear the law every ſabbath, as they did at the temple in Jeruſalem; and the houſes of information, or expoſition of the law. Theſe were either more private, where any doctor entertained ſcholars, ſuch was the ſchool of Tyrannus, Acts xix. 9. of which ſort 'tis ſaid there were above four hundred in Jeruſalem, and many in Iſrael in all places, or elſe more public, where their conſiſtories ſat to reſolve differences of the law in particular cities. As for the great Sanhedrim, which was in Jeruſalem, that is known to conſiſt of ſeventy two, and was made up of chief prieſts, elders of the people, and ſcribes. 1. The chief prieſts, perhaps the heads of the twenty four courſes. 1 Chron. xxiv. 2. The elders or heads of the families, chief men among their tribes, who were farther choſen, and, by impoſition of hands, received into the Sanhedrim, and ſo made judges there; and theſe are called the elders of the people, Matt. xxi. 23, 26. and xxvi. 47. and of Iſrael, Acts iv. 8. Then, 3. for the ſcribes, thoſe were they who had been taught, John vii. 15. the Grammata, the books, or writings of the law, 2 Tim. iii. 15. the holy writings, or ſcriptures, and inſtructed in the meaning of them; thoſe who had been ſons of the prophets, that is, brought up in their ſchools, but having not obtained the ſpirit or miſſion of prophets at God's hands, were ſometimes thought fit to be choſen into the Sanhedrim. Theſe are called ſcribes and wiſemen, and accordingly the Jews have an ancient ſaying, that after the age of the prophets, that is, when the ſpirit of prophecy was no longer given, ſucceeds the age of the ſcribes. Though ſome of theſe did only keep ſchools, and teach the law, and then were ſimply called ſcribes; whereas the others, who were taken into the great Sanhedrim, are called ſcribes of the people, Matt. ii. 4. And ſo, Jud. v. 9. where the Hebrew hath the governours, the Chaldee paraphraſt hath the ſcribes of Iſrael. By this appears the difference of theſe words ſo frequent in the goſpels, rulers, and rulers of the people, and of the ſynagogue, elders and ſcribes, and ſcribes of Iſrael, and of the people; which being here put together in this place, may be uſeful for the illuſtrating many places of ſcripture. (H.)

Ver. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34. And a certain woman which had an iſſue of blood twelve years, And had ſuffered many things of many phyſicians, and had ſpent all that ſhe had, and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worſe, When ſhe had heard of Jeſus, came in the preſs behind, and touched his garment. For ſhe ſaid, if I may touch but his cloaths, I ſhall be whole. And ſtraightway the fountain of her blood was dried up: and ſhe felt in her body that ſhe was healed of that plague. And Jeſus immediately knowing in himſelf that virtue had gone out of him, turned him about in the preſs, and ſaid, Who touched my cloaths? And his diſciples ſaid unto him, Thou ſeeſt the multitude thronging thee, and ſayeſt thou, Who touched me? And he looked round about to ſee her that had done this thing. But the woman fearing and trembling, knowing what was done in her, came and fell down before him, and told him all the truth. And he ſaid unto her, Daughter, thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace, and be whole of thy plague.

A certain woman which had an iſſue of blood.] As our Saviour was on his way to the houſe of Jairus, a diſeaſed came behind him, touch'd his cloaths, and was preſently healed; the virtue lay not in her finger, but in her faith, or rather in Chriſt, which her faith inſtrumentally drew forth. Her diſeaſe had continued twelve years; ſhe had applied to phyſicians for aſſiſtance, for which ſhe received no blame, tho' ſhe ſpent all ſhe had upon them. Her diſeaſe was unclean by the ceremonial law, and therefore to be ſeparate from ſociety; accordingly, ſhe was aſhamed to appear before Chriſt, but came behind him to touch his cloaths, being firmly perſuaded that he had a power communicated by God, miraculouſly to cure incurable diſeaſes. In reference of Chriſt himſelf, he manifeſted his divine power, in curing, by the touch to his cloaths, ſuch an incurable diſeaſe. Now from thoſe words, virtue went out of Chriſt, it is evident that the virtue which did theſe miraculous cures reſided in Chriſt, and was not communicated to him, and conſequently proves him to be God; for the divine virtue, by which the Prophets and Apoſtles performed their cures, is aſcribed to God; as Acts xix. 11. God wrought ſpecial miracles by the hand of Paul. But the miracles done by Chriſt are aſcribed to the divine virtue reſiding within him; accordingly he ſays here, I perceive virtue is gone out of me. (B.)

Ver. 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43. While he yet ſpake, there came from the ruler of the ſynagogue's houſe, certain which ſaid, Thy daughter is dead, why troubleſt thou the Maſter any further? As ſoon as Jeſus heard the word that was ſpoken, he ſaith unto the ruler of the ſynagogue, Be not afraid, only believe. And he ſuffered no man to follow him, ſave Peter, and James, and John the brother of James. And he cometh to the houſe of the ruler of the ſynagogue, and ſeeth the tumult, and them that wept and wailed greatly. And when he was come in, he ſaith unto them, Why make ye this ado, and weep? the damſel is not dead, but ſleepeth. And they laughed him to ſcorn: but when he had put them all out, he taketh the father and mother of the damſel, and them that were with him, and entreth in where the damſel was lying. And he took the damſel by the hand, and ſaid unto her, Talitha cumi, which is, being interpreted, Damſel (I ſay unto thee) ariſe. And ſtraightway the damſel aroſe, and walked; for ſhe was of the age of twelve years: and they were aſtoniſhed with a great aſtoniſhment. And he charged them ſtraitly that no man ſhould know it: and commanded that ſomething ſhould be given her to eat.

The damſel is not dead but ſleepeth.] Vobis mortua, mihi dormit; ſhe is dead to you, but aſleep to me; not ſo dead, as to be beyond my power to raiſe her to life. Souls departed are under the conduct of angels to their ſeveral regions of bliſs or miſery. 'Tis probable that the ſoul of this damſel was under the guard of angels near her dead body, waiting the pleaſure of God in order to its diſpoſal, either to reſtore it again to the body, or to tranſlate it to its eternal manſion. The words our Saviour uſed at the raiſing of the young woman, were, Talitha cumi, Syriac words, to ſhew the truth of the miracle, not, like a ſorcerer, muttering a charm, in unknown words, to himſelf, and alſo to demonſtrate the greatneſs of it, that he was able to raiſe her by a word ſpeaking. (F. and B.)

CHAP. VI.

Chriſt preacheth, but is contemned by his countrymen and kinſmen. The credulity of the people of Nazareth. The Apoſtles are ſent forth. They caſt out devils, and anoint the ſick. Herod's opinion of Chriſt. The reaſon of John's impriſonment. John is beheaded. Buried. The Apoſtles return from preaching. Chriſt teaches in the wilderneſs. He feeds the people with five loaves. The Apoſtles are diſtreſſed at ſea. The infirm are cured by the touch of Chriſt's garment.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AND he went out from thence, and came into his own country, and his diſciples follow him. And when the ſabbath-day was come, he began to teach in the ſynagogue: and many hearing him were aſtoniſhed, ſaying, From whence hath this man theſe things? and what wiſdom is this which is given unto him, that even ſuch mighty works are wrought by his hands? Is not this the carpenter, the ſon of Mary, the brother of James and Joſes, and of Juda, and Simon? and are not his ſiſters here with us? And they were offended at him. But Jeſus ſaid unto them, a prophet is not without honour, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own houſe. And he could there do no mighty work, ſave that he laid his hands upon a few ſick folk, and healed them. And he marvelled becauſe of their unbelief. And he went round about the villages, teaching.

Of Simon.] The Apoſtle is ſaid, in this place, to be the ſucceſſor of James, the brother of our Lord, in the ſee of Jeruſalem, and not to be the Simon the Apoſtle, ſurnamed Canameus; who ſuffered martyrdom at Perſia, for the faith of Chriſt, in company with Judas the Apoſtle. But Hegeſippus, and Euſebius, will have Simon the Apoſtle to govern the ſee of Jeruſalem after James, and that, when he was an hundred and twenty years old, he ſuffered martyrdom. Some pretend to inſiſt that the Simon, and Judas, mentioned laſt, were not the brothers in law of James and Joſeph. (V.)

And he could there do no mighty work.] That is, he ſhew'd as if he could do no mighty work. Now impotence, ignorance, and the like, are attributed to God or Chriſt according to the ſimilitude of the effect, becauſe when they perform thoſe things, which men are generally us'd to do, they are diſtinguiſh'd by being called ſigns of impotence, ignorance, and the like. See Matthew xiii. 53. where we have an explanation of what is contained in the five firſt verſes of this chapter. We will ſubjoin here Nazianzen's celebrated obſervation of the various acceptations of the words poſſe and non poſſe, to be, and not to be, able, "To be, and not to be able, ſays he in " his 36. Oration, is not to be taken in one conſtruction. The " words are liable to ſeveral interpretations. Sometimes they are " uſed with reſpect to want of ſtrength, to a certain period of " time, and the circumſtances of a perſon; as when a boy is unable " to wreſtle, or a puppy to ſee, or fight with any one of its ſpecies. " Yet 'tis probable that ſome time or other the boy will wreſtle; " and the puppy ſee, and fight with this, tho' it cannot with the " other of its ſpecies. Sometimes theſe words are made to refer to " that which very often happens; for example, 'Tis impoſſible for " a city that is ſet on a mountain to be abſconded. Yet 'tis poſ- " ſible that ſome city may be hidden, by reaſon of ſome mountain " of magnitude obſtructing the view of it. Again, that is call'd " impoſſible, which is no way conſentaneous to juſtice, or agree- " able to reaſon: of this claſs is the following——The children of " the bridegroom cannot faſt, ſo long as the bridegroom is with " them: whether you take this bridegroom for him who was cor- " porally ſeen (for the time that Chriſt converſed amongſt man- " kind was not a ſeaſon for anxiety and vexation) or regard " him as the word? What neceſſity is there for thoſe to faſt, who " are cleanſed by his doctrine? Fourthly, that may be called im- " poſſible which we abhor; of this claſs is this, he could do no " miracles there, for their incredulity or diſbelief. Now be- " cauſe there are two things neceſſary to remove a diſeaſe, name- " ly, that the patient ſhould have faith, and the phyſician ſome " degree of ſkill in curing his diſtemper; it conſequently follows, " that where one is deficient, the other will be found of no ſervice " at all. Tho' I do not know, whether this ſort is to be annexed to " the third claſs, which makes that which is impoſſible to mean " nothing more but that which is no way conſentaneous to juſtice, " or agreeable to equity. Nor, indeed, is it prudent to propoſe " or offer medicines to thoſe, whoſe diſbelief is likely to prove " their greateſt diſſervice. In which claſs we are to place that " phraſe, 'Tis impoſſible for the world not to have hated you; and, " how is it poſſible for you to pronounce good things, whilſt you " yourſelves continue bad? How comes any of theſe things to be

“ impoſſible, unleſs becauſe occaſioned by your refractory and “ obdurate tempers? Again, that is ſaid to be impoſſible, which “ is impoſſible to nature, but poſſible to God if he pleaſes. For ex- “ ample, for a man to be born twice is not poſſible, nor for a “ camel to go through the eye of a needle But what can pre- “ tend to hinder theſe ſeeming impoſſibilities to be made poſſible, “ if the will of God is pleaſed to command it? But beſides all the “ ways here recited, that likewiſe is ſaid to be impoſſible, which “ is impracticable, and no way to be performed.” (V.)

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. And he called unto him the twelve, and began to ſend them forth by two and two, and gave them power over unclean ſpirits. And commanded them that they ſhould take nothing for their journey, ſave a ſtaff only: no ſcrip, no bread, no money in their purſe: But be ſhod with ſandals: and not put on two coats. And he ſaid unto them, In what place ſoever ye enter into an houſe, there abide till ye depart from that place. And whoſoever ſhall not receive you, nor hear you, when ye depart thence, ſhake off the duſt under your feet, for a teſtimony againſt them. Verily I ſay unto you, it ſhall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city. And they went out and preached that men ſhould repent. And they caſt out many devils, and anointed with oil many that were ſick, and healed them.

And anointed.] According to the cuſtom of the ancient Hebrews, who as they were uſed to join impoſition of hands to the prayers which they made for any one, ſo they us'd unction by oil about the ſick for whom they pray'd, in hope to obtain of God eaſe and joy for the patients, which was ſignified by the oil. Which cuſtom the primitive Church voluntarily embrac'd, yet not ſo, as that cures were never performed without this oil. (G.) Hæc unctio non erat ſacramentalis; dabatur enim etiam non baptizatis. This unction was not ſacramental, for it was given to the unbaptized. (Balthaſar Paes.) Power is given by Chriſt to work miracles, for confirming the doctrine of the Goſpel, which his Apoſtles preached; he gave them power over unclean ſpirits, and they caſt out devils, and anointed with oil them who were ſick, and healed them. This power to work miracles was neceſſary to the Apoſtles, partly to procure reverence to their perſons, being poor, and unlearned men, but principally to gain credit, and authority to their doctrine; for the doctrine of faith in the Meſſiah, as now come and exhibited in the fleſh, being a ſtrange new doctrine to the Jews, the truth and certainty thereof was to be extraordinarily ratified by Chriſt, and the miracles of his Apoſtles; ſome of whom were caſting out devils; and by anointing with oil to heal and recover ſick perſons. This gift of healing remain'd ſome time in the church, as appears from St. James v. 14. Is any ſick? anoint him with oil in the name of the Lord. Where obſerve, that the Apoſtles did not uſe oil as the inſtrument or means of healing, for then the cure had not been miraculous, but only as a ſymbol of the cure, or as an outward ſign or teſtimony of miraculous healing: Which outward ſign was for the ſtrengthning of the faith of ſuch as were healed, aſſuring them that as certainly as their bodies were anointed, ſo certainly ſhou'd their health, and ſtrength be reſtored. The papiſts, upon this, ground their extreme unction, but very vainly; for the Apoſtles anointed thoſe who were ſick, as a ſign of their recovery; but the Romaniſts anoint thoſe who have the pangs of death upon them, that their ſins may be blotted out, and the ſnares of the devil avoided. (B.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. And king Herod heard of him, for his name was ſpread abroad, and he ſaid, That John the Baptiſt was riſen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do ſhew forth themſelves in him. Others ſaid, That it is Elias. And others ſaid, That it is a prophet, or as one of the prophets. But when Herod heard thereof, he ſaid, It is John, whom I beheaded, he is riſen from the dead. For Herod himſelf had ſent forth and laid hold upon John, and bound him in priſon for Herodias ſake, his brother Philip's wife; for he had married her. For John had ſaid unto Herod, It is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife. Therefore Herodias had a quarrel againſt him, and would have killed him, but ſhe could not. For Herod fear'd John, knowing that he was a juſt man and an holy, and obſerved him, and when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly. And when a convenient day was come, that Herod on his birth-day made a ſupper to his lords, high captains, and chief eſtates of Galilee: And when the daughter of the ſaid Herodias came in, and danced, and pleaſed Herod, and them that ſat with him, the king ſaid unto the damſel, Aſk of me whatſoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee. And he ſware unto her, Whatſoever thou ſhalt aſk of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom. And ſhe went forth, and ſaid unto her mother, What ſhall I aſk? and ſhe ſaid, The head of John the Baptiſt. And ſhe came in ſtraightway with haſte unto the king, and aſked, ſaying, I will that thou give me by and by, in a charger, the head of John the Baptiſt. And the king was exceeding ſorry, yet for his oath's ſake, and for their ſakes which ſat with him, he would not reject her. And immediately the king ſent an executioner, and commanded his head to be brought: and he went and beheaded him in the priſon, And brought his head in a charger, and gave it to the damſel: and the damſel gave it to her mother. And when his diſciples heard of it, they came and took up his corps, and laid it in a tomb.

It is a prophet, or as one of the prophets.] That is, or as if one of the prophets; the diſtinction or is to be ſupplied per virgulam, that the ſenſe may run, that he is a prophet, who is antonomaſtically called ſo, and who is promiſed by Moyſes, Deut. xviii. Or if this be not that prophet, at leaſt he is no way inferior to the perſons of that appellation. Hence Euthymius, “ In quodam, in- “ quit, exemplo dictio propheta habet articulum ut ſit, propheta “ ille eſt, aut tanquam unus prophetarum.” “ In a certain copy, “ ſays he, the word prophet hath the article ut ſit, he is a pro- “ phet, or as one of the prophets.” They took him for that prophet, promiſed by Moſes, who is Chriſt. (V.)

Sent an executioner.] Expreſſed by the word ſpiculator, which, in the hiſtory of the Roman emperors, ſignifies a ſoldier of the guard; and agreeably, when we read in the hiſtories of Pharaoh, and Nebuchadnezzar, the captain of the guard, the interpreter of the Chaldee paraphraſe generally reads princeps ſpiculatorum. So, the captains of fifties, 2 Kings i. 19. xi. 13. were captains of the king's guards, who being, by the cuſtom of Jews, Egyptians, Chaldeans, and Romans, executioners of thoſe whom the king condemned to death, it is here therefore appointed to one of theſe to go, and behead the Baptiſt, which is accordingly performed. (H.) The hiſtory of John the Baptiſt's death is here recorded by this Evangeliſt, as St. Matthew had done before, chap. xiv. 1, 2. Here we have the character and deſcription of a zealous and faithful miniſter. He is one who deals plainly, and is not afraid to acquaint the greateſt perſons with their faults. Herod, tho' a king, is reproved by the Baptiſt for his inceſt, in taking his brother's wife. The crown and ſcepter of Herod could not daunt the faithful miniſter of God. There ought to meet in the miniſters of God both courage and impartiality, courage in fearing no faces, impartiality in ſparing no ſins. How melancholly a caſe is it, when kings, who ſhould be nurſing fathers to the church, prove the butchers of the prophets of God. The ſevereſt perſecutions, which the prophets of God have fallen under, are uſually occaſioned by their telling great men of their crimes: Men in power are impatient of reproof, and imagine their authority gives them a licence to tranſgreſs. Thus in the caſe of Herod, who, to gratify the requeſt of a young woman for her fine dancing, by a raſh vow proved the occaſion of the Baptiſt's being beheaded. See here not only the folly, but great impiety of raſh vows; eſpecially in ignorant perſons, who think themſelves obliged, whereas it is their duty, firſt to repent of them, and then to break them as faſt as they can. St. Chryſoſtom ſays, Herod might have ſpared the Baptiſt, and yet have kept his oath to Herodias, for he ſware to give her only half of his kingdom, and his head was worth more than his whole kingdom. (B.)

Ver. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44. And the Apoſtles gathered themſelves together unto Jeſus, and told him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught. And he ſaid unto them, Come ye yourſelves apart into a deſart place, and reſt a while: for there were many coming and going, and they had no leiſure ſo much as to eat. And they departed into a deſart place by ſhip privately. And the people ſaw them departing, and many knew him, and ran afoot thither out of all cities, and outwent them, and came together unto him. And Jeſus, when he came out, ſaw much people, and was moved with compaſſion toward them, becauſe they were as ſheep not having a ſhepherd: and he began to teach them many things. And when the day was now far ſpent, his diſciples came unto him, and ſaid, This is a deſart place, and now the time is far paſſed: Send them away, that they may go into the country round about, and into the villages, and buy themſelves bread: for they have nothing to eat. He anſwered and ſaid unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they ſay unto him, Shall we go and buy two hundred penny worth of bread, and give them to eat. He ſaith unto them, How many loaves have ye? go and ſee. And when they knew, they ſay, Five, and two fiſhes. And he commanded them to make all ſit down by companies upon the green graſs. And they ſat down in ranks, by hundreds and by fifties. And when he had taken the five loaves, and the two fiſhes, he looked up to heaven, and bleſſed, and brake the loaves, and gave them to his diſciples to ſet before them; and the two fiſhes divided he among them all. And they did all eat, and were filled. And they took up twelve baskets full of the fragments, and of the fiſhes. And they that did eat of the loaves were about five thouſand men.

By companies.] Of the manner of lying at meat we have formerly ſpoken, and ſo of the cuſtom of eating in gardens, and lying on beds. (See note on Matt. viii.) All that will be needful here to add, is the obſerving of the phraſes of praſiai praſiai, ſymproſia ſymproſia, ana ana; the two former being evidently taken from the Hebrews, who want phraſes of diſtribution, and uſe doubling of words in their ſtead. So duo duo, ver. 7. two two (like Adam, Adam, man man) that is, man by man, one by one, in imitation of which is the one by one, John viii. 9. And for the ana ana, 'tis the very form uſed by phyſicians in their recipe's, to note the like proportions of each ingredient, as here the number of the gueſts, who were ranked or marſhalled together by Chriſt, the maſter of the banquet, or the governor of the feaſt, John ii. 8. who, as the maſter of the feaſt, hath the care of preparing and ordering the feaſt and the gueſts, and ſo ranks them here, an hundred in one rank, and fifty in another. Another phraſe, like this, we have in Luke ix. 14. where it is ſaid, make them lie down fifty in a bed. (H.) This miracle of our Saviour's feeding five thouſand, beſides women and children, with five loaves and two fiſhes, is recorded by all four Evangeliſts. The greatneſs of this miracle is ſurpriſing, they did all eat, and were filled. All who were hungry did eat, and all who did eat were ſatisfied, and yet twelve baskets of fragments remain. More is left than was at firſt ſet on. It is hard to ſay which was the greateſt miracle, the miraculous eating, or the miraculous leaving; if we conſider what they eat, we may wonder they left any thing. (B.)

Ver. 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52. And ſtraightway he conſtrained his diſciples to get into the ſhip, and to go to the other ſide before unto Bethſaida, while he ſent away the people. And when he had ſent them away, he departed into a mountain to pray. And when even was come, the ſhip was in the midſt of the ſea, and he alone on the land. And he ſaw them toiling in rowing: (for the wind was contrary unto them) and about the fourth watch of the night he cometh unto them, walking upon the ſea, and would have paſſed by them. But when they ſaw him walking upon the ſea, they ſuppoſed it had been a ſpirit, and cried out. (For they all ſaw him, and were troubled.) And immediately he talked with them, and ſaith unto them, Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid. And he went up unto them into the ſhip, and the wind ceaſed: and they were ſore amazed in themſelves beyond meaſure, and wondred. For they conſidered not the miracle of the loaves, for their hearts were hardned.

They ſuppoſed it had been a ſpirit.] Venerable Bede acquaints us with the opinion of a certain learned perſon, about Chriſt's walking on the ſea; his words are to the following effect, "He aſſerted that our Lord had no bodily weight with reſpect to the "fleſh, but that he walk'd upon the ſea both without weight and "body. But, on the other ſide, the catholic faith aſſerts, that he "had not only weight with reſpect to the fleſh, and bodily weight "with weight, but alſo that he walk'd upon the ſea with bodily "weight, and yet without covering his feet in water. For Dioniſius, a celebrated perſon among eccleſiaſtical writers, in his "treatiſe of divine names, delivers himſelf thus: We are entire "ſtrangers how he was form'd of the blood after a manner not "according to the courſe of nature, or how he walk'd upon a humid and inſtable element without covering his feet in water, "which were endu'd with bodily weight, and materiality. (Bede upon this place.)

Ver. 53, 54, 55, 56. And when they had paſſed over, they came into the land of Genneſaret, and drew to the ſhore. And when they were come out of the ſhip, ſtraightway they knew him. And ran through that whole region round about, and began to carry about in beds thoſe that were ſick, where they heard he was. And whitherſoever he entred, into villages, or cities, or country, they laid the ſick in the ſtreets, and beſought him that they might touch, if it were but the border of his garment: and as many as touched him were made whole.

As many as touch'd him were made whole.] We have taken notice of the inherent virtue in Chriſt to heal all manner of diſeaſes by only his garment being touch'd, which evidently diſcovered his divinity. This virtue was not communicated, but inherent, to ſhew him really God. Yet after all theſe ſelf-convincing miracles, which one would think might have opened the eyes of the moſt blind, we find the Jews ſo obdurate and incredulous, that not all the force of the ſenſes, of reaſon, or any thing elſe, cou'd induce them to acknowledge his heavenly power. His unwearied diligence and induſtry, in curing and healing whereſoever he went, might have extorted ſome thanks from them, had they been all perſuaded (as no doubt the body of the Phariſees were) that he was an impoſtor, and work'd by ſorcery or faſcination. But not all the calumnies that were raiſed in his time, both againſt his doctrine and miracles, nor all ſince, have been able to ſubvert their authority, and veracity; for his word is foretold to out-laſt all generations, and even ſurvive eternity it ſelf, for heaven and earth are propheſied to paſs away, but his word never. And conſidering all the perſecutions and calamities, to which the profeſſors of this religion have in all ages been expoſed, have not been ſufficient to exterminate it, but, like the Hydra, in the room of one head or member cut off, two have ſprouted up. Nothing in the world can be a better or ſafer argument than this, to prove its author to be from heaven, and the ſtamp it wears to carry the ſignature of a celeſtial hand. (C.)

CHAP. VII.

The Apoſtles are reprehended for eating with unwaſhed hands. The doctrine of the Phariſees concerning waſhings. Who prefers the precepts of man before the commands of God. Parents are to be honoured. What it is that truly defiles a man. A perſon deaf and dumb is healed.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. THEN came together unto him the Phariſees, and certain of the ſcribes, which came from Jeruſalem. And when they ſaw ſome of his diſciples eat bread with defiled (that is to ſay, with unwaſhen) hands, they found fault. For the Phariſees, and all the Jews, except they waſh their hands oft, eat not, holding the tradition of the elders. And when they come from the market, except they waſh, they eat not. And many other things there be, which they have received to hold, as the waſhing of cups and pots, braſen veſſels, and of tables. Then the Phariſees and ſcribes aſked him, Why walk not thy diſciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat bread with unwaſhen hands? He anſwered and ſaid unto them, Well hath Eſaias propheſied of you hypocrites, as it is written, This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. Howbeit, in vain do they worſhip me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. For laying aſide the commandment of God, ye hold the tradition of men, as the waſhing of pots and cups: and many other ſuch like things ye do. And he ſaid unto them, Full well ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition. For Moſes ſaid, Honour thy father and thy mother: and, Whoſo curſeth father or mother, let him die the death. But ye ſay, If a man ſhall ſay to his father or mother, It is Corban, that is to ſay, a gift, by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me: he ſhall be free. And ye ſuffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother: Making the word of God of none effect through your tradition, which ye have delivered: and many ſuch like things do ye.

Defiled.] The Greek word koinos has two ſignifications, polluted, and common; when it means unclean, it muſt not any more be tranſlated common, than when it ſignifies common to be render'd unclean. From the firſt conſtruction, for polluted, is derived the Latin word cænum, a ſink, or mire; and the verb koino, is turned into the old Latin word quino; from whence inquino, to pollute, is now in uſe; which ſhews, that the notion of it, for polluted, is an ancient and primitive, not any metaphorical, or ſecondary, interpretation of it. And 'tis uſed in this ſenſe, for any thing forbidden, by the ceremonial laws of the Jewiſh worſhip, as being oppoſite to clean or lawful. Thus meat which is forbidden by the law, is called polluted. 1 Mac. i. 47. Swine's fleſh, and forbidden, polluted, or unclean cattle. Thus 'tis uſed Acts x. 14. and xi. 8. and Rom. xiv. 14. Heb. x. 19. And from thence, to defile, Matt. xv. 11. and in ſeveral other places, ſo ſay the grammarians, that the word ſignifies abominable, or unclean, that is, ſuch as are made ſo in the repute, and by the prohibition, of the law. Thus, when not ſtrictly by the law of Moſes, but (which was all one among the Phariſees) by the tradition of their elders, or by the injunctions of the Rabbins among them, they were to waſh whenever they eat any meat; hands unwaſh'd, at ſuch a time, are called polluted hands, that is, guilty of the breach of thoſe laws, which, in their opinion, required this conſtant waſhing before meat. So Maimonides on Miſnaioth: "Dicimus non licere homini panem edere, antequam ma-
"nus laverit." "We ſay, a man muſt not eat bread before he
"waſh his hands." And lib. yad. tract. Berachoth. "Quicunque
"comederit panem ſuper quem dicitur benedictio Hammot ſi,
"Benedictus qui producit panem, opus eſt ut lavet manus ante
"& poſt." "Whoſoever eats the bread, over which they recite
"the benediction Hammot ſi, Bleſſed be he who produces bread,
"he muſt waſh his hands before and after." By this may be obſerved, that not all kind of eating is included; for, ſay the Rabbins, "ſuper illud quod non vocatur proprie panis," "over that "which is not properly called bread," as cakes made of honey, and ſugar, and almonds, "they recite not the benediction Hammot
"ſi." And, therefore, 'tis not ſimply eating here, but eating bread, ver. 2. and 3. To this cuſtom refers that of John ii. 6. where the veſſels of water, which were there at the feaſt, are ſaid to be (according to the Jewiſh cuſtom of waſhing) always before meat; that is, ſtood there for that uſe or purpoſe, Now for the manner of waſhing, what it was, is deſcribed here, ver. 3. They waſh their hands to the wriſt. The word pygme is the hand up to the wriſt, and is, indeed, but a part of the cheir or hand, in the critical notion of it. For cheir, in Homer, Hippocrates, and other authors, is taken for the whole arm; and ſo it ſeems to be taken, 1 Mac. xv. 30. Carry the arm (not hand) with the ſhoulder to the city; juſt as in Homer he, who ſtruck one on the ſhoulder with his ſword, is ſaid to have cut off his cheir, which doubtleſs was his arm. Which makes it clear that by pygme is meant the hand with the wriſt, which Theophylact, with leſs exactneſs, renders up to the elbow, for ſo 'tis the manner of the Jews to waſh, with their hands held up, that the water may come down ſo far, to ſuch a part of the wriſt, which they call the elevation of their hands; and ſo the phraſe here ſignifies to waſh with this elevation, being a rite or ceremony uſual in their waſhings, and to waſh thus far. So Maimonides Yad. Tract. Berachoth, aſks the queſtion, "Quouſque pertingat
"manuum lotio?" "How far the waſhing of the hands reacheth? Anſwers, "Uſque ad Perek." "To Perek." Underſtanding, by this word, that joint which ſets on the arm to the hand. So Joſeph Ben Levi and R. Alphes ſay, that, to waſh the hands according to the rite of the ſanctuary, it muſt be "ad eam compaginem
"quæ ad finem manus eſt," "to that joint which is at the end of
"the hand," that is, to the wriſt. So R. Solomo Bar Nathan, before eating bread properly ſo called, requires waſhing of the hands up to the wriſt. Of this uſe of the word pygme we have a clear example in Palladius Lauſiac, where Salvia ſeeing Jubnius take a laver and waſh his hands and his feet, tells him that ſhe was then ſixty years of age, and that except her hands, which was for receiving the holy communion, neither her face, nor feet, nor any other part had ever touched water. (H.)

When they come from the market.] Expreſſed by the word agora in the Greek, which ſignifies any promiſcuous or popular aſſembly. Theſe aſſemblies, ſetting aſide the ſacred aſſemblies, which are otherwiſe expreſſed, are principally of two ſorts, either, firſt, to buy and ſell, or, ſecondly, to have recourſe to for juſtice; and the word here uſed commonly ſignifies both or either of theſe, firſt, a fair or market, ſecondly, a place of judicature, an hall or court of judgment: The queſtion now being, in which of theſe ſenſes this word ſhould be taken in this place, it cannot be decided from the nature of the word, which bears both indifferently; but from the buſineſs in hand, which is the tradition of waſhing among the Jews; which, we know, was upon any legal uncleanneſs, or ſuſpicion of having contracted any ſuch: and to that all promiſcuous aſſemblies were liable, where heathens were uſually intermixed, or poſſibly Jews under ſome legal uncleanneſs. But at this time, when the Jews were under the Roman Procurators, their courts of judicature were moſt eminently ſo, the Procurator, and his band or guard of ſoldiers being always there. On this ground it is diſtinctly ſaid, John xviii. 28. that the Jews would not go in thither, that they might not be defiled, which teſtimony makes it clear, that going in to the agora, in this ſenſe, into the judgment-hall, was by the Jews reſolved to be matter of defilement. And there being not any clearer teſtimony for the other in the ſcripture, as it ſignifies a market, or place of buying and ſelling, it may be thought reaſonable to prefer, in this place, this interpretation of the word for a court-hall, from whence all Jews who came were obliged to waſh themſelves, as from a legal pollution. But what Mr. Pocock conceives is preferable in my opinion, I mean, in reference to agora, as it ſignifies a market, interpreting the place from a rule of the Rabbins, ſet down by Maimonides thus, in Tractat. Berachoth.
"A man ſhall waſh his hands in the morning, ſo that it ſhall ſuffice
"him for the whole day, and he ſhall have no occaſion to waſh
"as often as he eats, which holds, in caſe he do not avert his "mind any other way;" that is, go abroad, or meddle with buſineſs, or go to the market, &c. "but if he do ſo, he is bound to
"waſh his hands as often as there is need of waſhing;" that is, before he eat or pray. And ſo that may well be the meaning of the place, "That the Phariſees eat no meat before they have
"waſh'd their hands." And in caſe after the morning waſhing they go to the market, or fall to any worldly buſineſs, in which there may very eaſily be ſome legal pollution, they muſt waſh their hands again before they dine. (H.)

This people honoureth me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me.] Saſboldin, a pious and learned writer, thus delivers himſelf upon this place of Iſaiah, "Sane qui & hodie legunt
"certas preces, & audiunt ſacrum, & iis abſolutis conferunt ſe ad
"pocula, aut his ſimilia, illi quoque ſunt, qui hic dicuntur labiis
"ſuis honorare Deum, cor autem eorum longe eſſe ab eo, quod
"valde eſt horribile in homine Chriſtiano, & maxime in ſacerdote
"exiſtimante omnia tunc recte ſe habere, quando lectæ ſunt ho-
"ræ, non cogitante interim, ut mens elivetur in Deum, & cor
"ei per amorem jungatur, ut ſit humiliatum & contritum, & res
"fluxas atque mundanas contemnat." "As for thoſe who at this "time of day devote themſelves to the peruſing of certain pray-
"ers, and hearing the holy word, and as ſoon as they are over
"creep into taverns, or the like, they are of the ſame claſs with
"thoſe, who are ſaid here to honour God with their lips, but
"whoſe hearts are far from him; which is exceeding horrible in "any one who calls himſelf a Chriſtian, and eſpecially in the
"prieſt, who imagines that all things go well, when the hours
"of worſhip are over, not reflecting in the mean time, that to "have his mind raiſed up to God, and his heart joined to him by
"love, he muſt humble and mortify himſelf, and endeavour to
"contemn the tranſitory enjoyments of this world." Thus this writer. But what has been advanced is not purely to be confined to perſons of this fluctuating and deceitful caſt of mind, for the Jews and Phariſees entertained true ſentiments of God, when they nominally praiſed him, as is evident from the Phariſee who thus expreſſes himſelf: "God, I return thee thanks, that I am
"not as other men are:" But this is commonly to be aſcribed to thoſe who honour God with their words, but contemn him in their actions. (V. & W.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. And when he had called all the people unto him, he ſaid unto them, Hearken unto me every one of you, and underſtand. There is nothing from without a man that entring into him can defile him: but the things which come out of him, thoſe are they that defile the man. If any man have ears to hear let him hear. And when he was entred into the houſe from the people, his diſciples asked him concerning the parable. And he ſaith unto them, Are ye ſo without underſtanding alſo? Do ye not perceive, that whatſoever thing from without entreth into the man, it cannot defile him, Becauſe it entreth not into his heart, but into his belly, and goeth out into the draught, purging all meats? And he ſaid, That which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man. For from within, out of the heart of man, proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders, Thefts, covetouſneſs, wickedneſs, deceit, laſciviouſneſs, an evil eye, blaſphemy, pride, fooliſhneſs: All theſe evil things come from within, and defile the man.

The things which come out of him, thoſe are they that defile the man.] Chriſt leaving the Phariſees with ſome diſlike, applies himſelf to the multitude, and inſtructs them in a very neceſſary and uſeful doctrine, touching the true original cauſe of all ſpiritual pollution and uncleanneſs, namely, the impurity of man's heart and nature; and that it is not the meat eaten with the mouth, but the wickedneſs of the heart vented by the mouth, which pollutes a perſon in God's account. The heart and ſoul of man alone is capable of ſinful defilement. Nothing can defile a perſon in God's account, but that which defileth the inward man. (B.)

Ver. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37. And from thence he aroſe, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, and entred into an houſe, and would have no man know it; but he could not be hid. For a certain woman, whoſe young daughter had an unclean ſpirit, heard of him, and came and fell at his feet: (The woman was a Greek, a Syrophenician by nation) and ſhe beſought him that he would caſt forth the devil out of her daughter. But Jeſus ſaid unto her, Let the children firſt be filled: for it is not meet to take the childrens bread, and to caſt it unto the dogs. And ſhe anſwered and ſaid unto him, Yes, Lord: yet the dogs under the table eat of the childrens crumbs. And he ſaid unto her, For this ſaying, go thy way, the devil is gone out of thy daughter. And when ſhe was come to her houſe, ſhe found the devil gone out, and her daughter laid upon the bed. And again departing from the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, he came unto the ſea of Galilee, through the midſt of the coaſts of Decapolis. And they bring unto him one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his ſpeech: and they beſeech him to put his hand upon him. And he took him aſide from the multitude, and put his finger into his ears, and he ſpit, and touched his tongue. And looking up to heaven, he ſighed, and ſaith unto him, Ephphatha, that is, Be opened. And ſtraightway his ears were opened, and the ſtring of his tongue was looſed, and he ſpake plain. And he charged them that they ſhould tell no man: but the more he charged them, ſo much the more a great deal they publiſhed it. And were beyond meaſure aſtoniſhed, ſaying, He hath done all things well: he maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb to ſpeak.

Put his hand upon him.] “Quid (inquit Auguſtinus) eſt aliud “manuum impoſitio, niſi oratio ſuper hominem.” “Impoſition of “hands (ſays Auſtine) is nothing but pronouncing a prayer over “the man.” By which words Auſtin will have impoſition of hands to be ſome external ceremony, which whoſoever uſes is ſuppoſed to pray, bleſs, and interceed with God for him, upon whom he puts or impoſes hands. (V.)

And looking up to heaven, he ſighed.] Namely, out of compaſſion: In asking aſſiſtance from his father, he ſhew'd himſelf to be really man, and inferior to the Father with reſpect to his humanity; or according to Gregory, “Suſpiciens in cœlum ingemuit, “non quod ipſe neceſſarium gemitum haberet, qui dabat quod “poſtulabat, ſed nos ad eum gemere, qui cœlo poſſidet, docuit, “ut & aures noſtræ per donum Spiritus Sancti, qui digitus Dei “vocatur in ſcripturis, & lingua per ſalivam, quæ ex capite in “os defluit, id eſt, per ſapientiam acceptam in divino eloquio ſolvi valeat ad verba prædicationis.” “Looking up to heaven he “groaned, not that he had any neceſſity to groan, who gave “what was asked; but he taught us, by his example, to groan to “him, who poſſeſſes heaven, that he would open our ears by the “gift of the Holy Spirit, which is called the finger of God in “the ſcriptures, and looſe our tongues by the ſpittle, which flows “from the head into the mouth, that is, by the wiſdom which “is received in divine diſcourſe, to the words of his preaching.

C H A P. VIII.

The miracle of the ſeven loaves. The Jews demand ſigns. The doctrine of the Phariſees is to be avoided. A blind man is healed. The different opinions of the people concerning Chriſt. The confeſſion of the Apoſtles concerning Chriſt. Our Saviour foretells his death. To ſave and looſe the ſoul.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. IN thoſe days the multitude being very great, and having nothing to eat, Jeſus called his diſciples unto him, and ſaith unto them, I have compaſſion on the multitude, becauſe they have now been with me three days, and have nothing to eat: And if I ſend them away faſting to their own houſes, they will faint by the way: for divers of them came from far. And his diſciples anſwered him, From whence can a man ſatisfy theſe men with bread here in the wilderneſs? And he asked them, How many loaves have ye? and they ſaid, Seven. And he commanded the people to ſit down on the ground: and he took the ſeven loaves, and gave thanks, and brake, and gave to his diſciples to ſet before them: and they did ſet them before the people. And they had a few ſmall fiſhes: and he bleſſed, and commanded to ſet them alſo before them. So they did eat and were filled: and they took up of the broken meat that was left, ſeven baskets, And they that had eaten were about four thouſand, and he ſent them away.

They did eat and were filled, and they took up of the broken meat that was left ſeven baskets] What the uſe of theſe was appears from Nehemiah viii. 10. where 'tis ſaid, “Then ſaid he unto “them, go your way, eat the fat, and drink the ſweet, and ſend “portions” (namely, of the fragments or broken meat that remained) unto him who hath nothing; where the Greek reads, ſend portions to them for whom nothing is prepared. And then, “All “the people went their way to eat, and to drink, and to ſend “portions;” which is ſpoken of the celebration of a feaſt. So that the remaining parts or portions were what were diſtributed commonly amongſt the poor. So Ruth ii 14. She did eat, and was ſufficed, and left; where the Septuagint politely render and was ſatisfied and left. Thus the poor had at all times rich gueſts, namely God, with them: “Grande enim bonum, quod cum fit “in pauperes, redundat in Deum;” ſays a pious and learned doctor of the church, that is, “'Tis an extraordinary bleſſing, “that what is beſtowed upon the poor redounds to God;” becauſe charity is his principal attribute. God is charity, according to the true notion of the ſame gentleman. “Igitur ex Deo quod pro“cedit, in Deum (inquit idem) redundat: Quod in Deum au“tem non redundat, ex charitate non procedit. Ex Deo igitur “proceſſio, & in Deum redundatio, Dei dona ſunt.” “There“fore whatſoever proceeds from God redounds back to God; but “whatſoever does not redound to God does not proceed from “charity. So that both what proceeds from God, and redounds “to God, are the gifts of God.” The fragments here taken notice of were richer and better than the analecta, or ſweepings, gathered at the Roman ſuppers; whence that of the Spaniſh poet, “Colligere longa turpe nec putat cæna analecta quicquid & canes “reliquerunt.” “It was thought no diſhonour to gather up the " crumbs and the leavings of the dogs." Whereas our fragments were preſerved for good people who came in order. So Ruth, of whom we have made mention above, carried ſome of the barley which remained to her mother-in-law. " She brought forth, and " gave to her (ſays the ſacred text) that ſhe had reſerved after ſhe " was ſufficed." This is what the prophet ſeems to refer to in the xviith pſalm, " The ſons are ſatisfied, and leave the reſt of their " ſubſtance to their babes." Where the Greek renders leavings. (Dan. Heinſius exercit. ſacr.)

They that had eaten were about four thouſand.] This chapter begins with the relation of a famous miracle wrought by our Saviour, namely, his feeding four thouſand perſons with ſeven loaves and a few fiſhes. And here we have obſervable, firſt, the tender care which Chriſt took of the bodies of men, to provide all neceſſaries for their ſupport and comfort. He giveth us richly all things to enjoy. The great houſekeeper of the world openeth his hand, and filleth all things living with plenteouſneſs. How careful was our Saviour here, that the bodies of poor creatures might not faint, nor be over-weak and weary by the way: therefore he would not diſmiſs them without refreſhment. In the next place obſerve the original ſource and ſpring, from whence this care that Chriſt had of the multitude did proceed and flow, namely, from that ſympathizing pity and tender compaſſion, which the merciful heart of Chriſt bore towards perſons in diſtreſs and miſery. From whence learn, that the tender pity and compaſſion of Chriſt is not the fountain of ſpiritual mercies only, but alſo of temporal bleſſings, I have compaſſion on the multitude, who have nothing to eat. Obſerve next how the diſciples, not ſeeing any viſible means for the ſupport of the people, conclude it impoſſible for ſo many to be ſatisfied with the little ſupply they had, namely, ſeven loaves, and a few ſmall fiſhes. From whence draw this leſſon, that a weak faith ſoon grows thoughtful, and ſometimes diſtruſtful at the ſight of difficulties. " Whence (ſay the diſciples) can theſe men be ſatisfied with bread ?" Not conſidering that the power of God in bleſſing our food is far above the means of food. It is as eaſy for him to ſuſtain and nouriſh us with a little as with much. Man liveth not by bread, but by the bleſſing of God upon the bread he eats Obſerve again, that tho' Chriſt could have fed theſe four thouſand without the loaves, yet he takes and makes uſe of them, ſeeing they may be had. From whence learn, that Chriſt did not neglect his own appointed ordinary means, nor do any thing in an extraordinary way, farther than was abſolutely neceſſary. Chriſt was above means, and could work without them, and when they failed did ſo; but when the means were at hand, he made uſe of them himſelf, to teach us never to expect that in a way of miracle, which may be come at in a way of means. Obſerve further, from our Lord's example, that religious cuſtom of begging a bleſſing upon our food, before we ſit down to it, and of receiving the good creatures of God with thankſgiving. (B.)

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13. And ſtraightway he entred into a ſhip with his diſciples, and came into the parts of Dalmanutha. And the Phariſees came forth, and began to queſtion with him, ſeeking of him a ſign from heaven, tempting him. And he ſighed deeply in his ſpirit, and ſaith, Why doth this generation ſeek after a ſign? verily I ſay unto you, There ſhall no ſign be given to this generation. And he left them, and entring into the ſhip again, departed to the other ſide.

There ſhall no ſign be given to this generation] Here we have a view of the unreaſonable practice of the Phariſees in asking a ſign of Chriſt, that is, ſome new and extraordinary miracle to be performed by him, to demonſtrate him to be the true and promiſed Meſſiah. But had not our Saviour ſhewed them ſigns enough already? What were all the miracles daily wrought before their eyes, but convincing ſigns of his divine power; but infidelity, mixt with obſtinacy, is never ſatisfied. (B.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. Now the diſciples had forgotten to take bread, neither had they in the ſhip with them more than one loaf. And he charged them, ſaying, Take heed, beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, and of the leaven of Herod. And they reaſoned among themſelves, ſaying, It is becauſe we have no bread. And when Jeſus knew it, he ſaith unto them, Why reaſon ye, becauſe ye have no bread? perceive ye not yet, neither underſtand? have ye your hearts yet hardened? Having eyes, ſee ye not? and having ears, hear ye not? and do ye not remember? When I brake the five loaves among the five thouſand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? They ſay unto him, Twelve. And when the ſeven among four thouſand, how many baskets full of fragments took ye up? and they ſaid, Seven. And he ſaid unto them, How is it that ye do not underſtand? And he cometh to Bethſaida, and they bring a blind man unto him, and beſought him to touch him. And he took the blind man by the hand, and led him out of the town; and when he had ſpit on his eyes, and put his hands upon him, he asked him if he ſaw ought. And he looked up, and ſaid, I ſee men as trees, walking. After that, he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up: and he was reſtored, and ſaw every man clearly. And he ſent him away to his houſe, ſaying, Neither go into the town, nor tell it to any in the town.

I ſee men as trees, walking.] Meaning, I cannot with my ſight diſtinguiſh men from trees, unleſs by their walking; for I do not yet perceive the lineaments of mens members, which diſtinguiſh them from trees. Venerable Bede takes notice that the caſe is the ſame with men at a diſtance, or who look in moon-ſhine. (V.)

He put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up.] The ſame venerable father expreſſes himſelf thus, " Quem uno verbo " totum ſimul curare poterat, paulatim curat, ut magnitudinem " humanæ cœcitatis oſtendat, quæ vix & quaſi per gradus ad lu- " cem redeat, utque gratiam ſuam indicet, per quam ſingula per- " fectionis incrementa adjuvat." " He who could have cured every " part of him at once with a ſingle word, heals him gradually, " thereby to ſhew the greatneſs of the man's blindneſs, who reco- " vered ſight with difficulty, and, as it were, by advances; and " to demonſtrate his favour to us, by which every increaſe of per- " fection is aſſiſted. (Bede.)

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38. And Jeſus went out, and his diſciples, into the town of Ceſarea Philippi: and by the way he asked his diſciples, ſaying unto them, Whom do men ſay that I am? And they anſwered, John the Baptiſt: but ſome ſay, Elias; and others, one of the prophets. And he ſaith unto them, But whom ſay ye that I am? and Peter anſwereth and ſaith unto him, Thou art the Chriſt. And he charged them that they ſhould tell no man of him. And he began to teach them that the Son of man muſt ſuffer many things, and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief prieſts and ſcribes, and be killed, and after three days riſe again. And he ſpake that ſaying openly: and Peter took him, and began to rebuke him. But when he had turned about, and looked on his diſciples, he rebuked Peter, ſaying, Get thee behind me, Satan; for thou ſavoureſt not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men. And when he had called the people unto him, with his diſciples alſo, he ſaid unto them, Whoſoever will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs, and follow me. For whoſoever will ſave his life ſhall loſe it: but whoſoever ſhall loſe his life for my ſake and the goſpel's, the ſame ſhall ſave it. For what ſhall it profit a man, if he ſhall gain the whole world, and loſe his own ſoul? Or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul? Whoſoever therefore ſhall be aſhamed of me, and of my words, in this adulterous and ſinful generation, of him alſo ſhall the Son of Man be aſhamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels.

Get thee behind me, Satan] We have the following remark given by a commentator, as addreſſing St. Mark; " Why do you reſtrain " your pen from acquainting us with ſeveral material circumſtances " of your Maſter's preaching? and only tranſmit to poſterity ſuch " occurrences as are trifling in reſpect of the other? We muſt " neceſſarily ſuppoſe and believe, that ſince one and the ſame " Spirit ſhed its influence upon both, that both would preſerve

" the pureſt harmony and agreement; Peter in inſtructing and " dictating, and you in tranſmitting his words to writing. For as " Peter was ſo generous as to abſtain from giving elogiums and " commendations of himſelf, ſo his true interpreter wav'd the deſcribing ſuch facts, as his Maſter did not inform him of. His " example contributes conſiderably to our edification, that as he " has advanced nothing in exaltation of himſelf, ſo he has delivered nothing that may come under our cenſure and reprehenſion: And, by purſuing this rule of truth and veracity, he " has demonſtrated the ſincerity of his mind ſo much, that he " cannot be ſaid to curry favour with his Maſter in the leaſt particular." (Pet. Damian.) Theſe verſes give us an account of a conference, which Chriſt had with his diſciples, concerning the opinions of them and others of his perſon: Not that our Saviour was ignorant of that which men ſaid of him, or enquired vaingloriouſly after the opinion of the multitude concerning him, but with an intention more firmly to ſettle his diſciples in the belief of his being the true and promiſed Meſſiah. From our Saviour's ſharp reproof of St. Peter we find, that no reſpect of mens perſons, or regard to their piety, muſt cauſe us to flatter them in their ſins, or move us to ſpeak favourably of them. (B.)

CHAP. IX.

The transfiguration of Chriſt. Of Elias and John the Baptiſt. A demoniac is healed. Faith is able to perform all things. Chriſt foretells his death. He who is greateſt among the Apoſtles. Chriſt taketh an infant in his arms. To ſcandalize.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. AND he ſaid unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, that there be ſome of them that ſtand here, which ſhall not taſte of death, till they have ſeen the kingdom of God come with power. And after ſix days, Jeſus taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them up into an high mountain apart by themſelves: and he was transfigured before them. And his raiment became ſhining, exceeding white as ſnow; ſo as no fuller on earth can white them. And there appeared unto them Elias, with Moſes: and they were talking with Jeſus. And Peter anſwered and ſaid to Jeſus, Maſter, it is good for us to be here: and let us make three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moſes, and one for Elias. For he wiſt not what to ſay, for they were ſore afraid. And there was a cloud that overſhadowed them: and a voice came out of the cloud, ſaying, This is my boloved Son: hear him. And ſuddenly when they had looked round about, they ſaw no man any more, ſave Jeſus only with themſelves.

He was transfigured.] The ſubject here is concerning the transfiguration, which was performed by a vaſt external ſplendor and brightneſs. For, according to Matthew's account, his face appeared as ſhining as the ſun, and his garment as white as ſnow: Whereas Luke ſays, that the appearance of his countenance was changed, and his raiment was white and refulgent. But we have no authority to infer from hence, that Chriſt will ſuffer hereafter, in the kingdom of heaven, any mutation or change of his natural form or appearance. Now as the perſon of Chriſt is immutable with reſpect to himſelf, but only to be diſtinguiſhed by ſome ſuperior luſtre, ſo are the juſt alſo, whoſe bodies will be reſemblant to his in clarity and brightneſs, not to be liable to any alteration of form or effigies: Their bodies are only to receive a certain ſplendor or acceſſion of light, which ſplendor or acceſſion of light is, by the Apoſtle Paul, called a change, but transfiguration by the Evangeliſts. (Victor Antiochenus.)

So as no Fuller on earth can white them.] In the phraſe on earth may very poſſibly be ſome meaning, which is not commonly known or taken notice of. The Fuller, whoſe employment is to dreſs and cleanſe cloaths, uſes for that purpoſe a kind of earth, known by the name of fuller's earth, which hath an extraordinary faculty to cleanſe and whiten cloaths before any other thing: This, 'tis poſſible, may be looked on here, in the deſcription of the white appearance of Chriſt's cloaths, to be ſo pure a degree of white, that no fuller, by or with earth, could be able to whiten any thing in ſuch a manner. And tho' the prepoſition on favours not this interpretation, yet when we conſider the promiſcuous and incertain uſe of prepoſitions among ſacred writers, this objection will loſe conſiderably of its weight and importance. In Acts xiii. 6. it is uſed for by, by faith, as by a means. And ſo in 1 Cor. viii. 13. by thy knowledge. In Phil. i. 3. 'tis made to ſignify with, as with every remembrance of you, according to Robert Stephens. Now this rendring likewiſe will agree to this ſenſe; but the truth is, that none of theſe three examples come perfectly home to it, they being in the dative, and this in the genitive caſe: and therefore I leave it as a conjecture, and add only what Theophraſtus advances concerning a niggardly perſon; " He earneſtly intreats the fullers, " that his garment may have a great deal of earth, that it may not " be ſullied immediately." (H.)

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. And as they came down from the mountain, he charged them that they ſhould tell no man what things they had ſeen, till the Son of man were riſen from the dead. And they kept that ſaying with themſelves, queſtioning one with another what the riſing from the dead ſhould mean. And they asked him, ſaying, Why ſay the ſcribes that Elias muſt firſt come? And he anſwered and told them, Elias verily cometh firſt, and reſtoreth all things, and how it is written of the Son of man, that he muſt ſuffer many things, and be ſet at nought. But I ſay unto you, that Elias is indeed come, and they have done unto him whatſoever they liſted, as it is written of him. And when he came to his diſciples, he ſaw a great multitude about them, and the ſcribes queſtioning with them.

Elias verily cometh firſt.) It is beyond queſtion that Malachy, iv. 5. propheſy'd of Elias, that he ſhould come before the great and terrible day of the Lord, that is, the deſtruction of the Jews, on purpoſe to convert and deliver them from it. But let me tell you, John the Baptiſt is this Elias, and he (you know) is come already as well as I, and they have uſed him as Ahab did Elias, who, when he was here on earth, ſtood out obdurately againſt all his threats. And as they have done with him, ſo will they deal with me, perſecute, deſpiſe, and put me to death, according to the predictions of the old prophets concerning the Meſſiah, and as it was intimated by John the Baptiſt, in thoſe words of his, " Behold the " Lamb of God, that taketh away the ſins of the world," meaning, that I ſhould bear your puniſhments as a lamb, be ſacrificed and ſlain by and for you. (H.) A modern commentator frankly confeſſes the difficulty which appears to him in a certain phraſe here, neither knows he how to extricate himſelf out of it. The words are, " And he anſwered and told them, Elias verily cometh " firſt, and reſtoreth all things, and how it is written of the Son " of man, that he muſt ſuffer many things, and be ſet at nought." This modern commentator ought indeed to be pardoned in this particular, ſince the difficulty, appearing on the face of theſe words, hath very much exerciſed both the genius and temper of the ancients; inſomuch that St. Chryſoſtom, according to the teſtimony of Thomas, in his Catena, is of opinion that the phraſe " and they asked him" ought to be underſtood, that " the diſciples asked Jeſus, how it is written, that the Son of man ſhall " ſuffer?" As for Theophylact and Euthymius, they have not found, but only invented the artful queſtion of the reſtoration by Elias, and of the coming of Chriſt. Neither do the learned give us any ſatisfaction in this point, who underſtand the word how in this place, as in that phraſe of our Evangeliſt and of Matthew, " Have ye not read what David did, &c. how he entred into the " houſe of God?" that is, " that he entred." As if he had ſaid, " Have ye not read how it is written?" So that I am ſurpriſed that the word how was not rather thought to ſignify the ſame with that of the Apoſtle, " If by any means I might attain," mentioned Phil. iii. 11. " If by any means I might attain to the reſurrection of the dead." For ſo would mean, " And how it " is written of the Son of man;" that is, " And it is certainly written;" abſolutely and definitely. But there will be no occaſion for laying ſuch an extraordinary ſtreſs upon this place, if we but diſtinguiſh, " And how it is written of the Son of man, " that he muſt ſuffer many things, and be ſet at nought." Nothing more plain and ſimple: " How it is written of the Son of man;" as it is ſaid afterwards, " as it is written of him." And then it follows, " But I ſay unto you, that Elias is indeed come; and they " have done unto him whatſoever they liſted, as it is written of him. Which paſſage hath likewiſe proved almoſt an inſurmountable difficulty to perſons of the moſt diſtinguiſhed parts. For ſince the words which follow " as it is written of him" ſeem to relate to John, it was neceſſary to prove, that the ſacred ſcriptures, that is, the prophets, and the other witneſſes of the Old Teſtament, advanced ſomething concerning the fore-runner, either of his conſummation, death, or peſecutions. Which difficulty that Euthymius might avoid, he ſuppoſes in a few words ſe defunctum, when he writes, "That Iſaiah propheſied of the paſſion or ſuffering of "John." Some indeed have been of opinion, that the hiſtory of Elias and Jezabel, which is to be referr'd to John and Herodias, hath been curtailed. Others, amongſt whom is Robert Stephens, a perſon of ſurpriſing diligence, thus expreſs theſe words, "But I "ſay unto you that Elias is already come (and they have done unto "him whatſoever they liſted) as it is written of him:" In order to ſhew us a notable example of confuſion. Several of which caſes we have remarked in the Goſpel of Matthew, and other places, thereby to diſcover the order of the words; "But I ſay unto you, "that Elias is already come, as it is written of him, and they have "done unto him whatſoever they liſted." And that Elias was to come, is evidently ſet forth by Malachy iv. "Behold I will ſend "you Elias the prophet, &c.) and he ſhall turn the heart of the "fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their "fathers." Which paſſage the angel, Luke i. 17. refers to the other Elias, namely, John, That the whole place may be diſtinguiſhed thus; "And how it is written of the Son of man, that "he muſt ſuffer many things, and be ſet at nought, But I ſay unto "you that Elias is already come, (and they have done unto him "whatſoever they liſted) as it is written of him." Whereby all the difficulty is removed: For if any one imagine that theſe parentheſes are too far ſtrain'd, he muſt neceſſarily ground his ſentiments de Spiritu Sancto, ſince 'tis neither a new nor an uncommon thing to do, which both ancient and modern writers have prov'd by almoſt an infinite number of examples. (Heinſ.) "And as it is, "(or) how it is written of the Son of man, that he muſt ſuffer many "things, and be contemned," may have this meaning annex'd to it: Do you ſuppoſe what the Phariſees imagine to be exactly conformable to the truth of the thing? as for Elias, they confeſs him indeed in their words, but reject him now he is preſent among them, and contemn his preaching and actions. But ſuppoſing they had not the leaſt knowledge of him, it does not follow from thence that you ſhould frame opinions of the kingdom of Chriſt from what they ſay and imagine. For the end of the fore-runner's coming was to reſtore all things before the appearance of the ſpiritual king; but not to reſtore in a worldly notion, which was the real opinion of the Phariſees: For, if this reſtoring is to be taken in this ſenſe, how comes it to be written of the kingdom of Chriſt, that he muſt ſuffer many things? Now if this be the truth, as it is, how can this reſtoring be underſtood in a temporal notion? (Jun. & Trem.)

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. And ſtraightway all the people, when they beheld him, were greatly amazed, and running to him, ſaluted him, And he asked the ſcribes, What queſtion ye with them? And one of the multitude anſwered and ſaid, Maſter, I have brought unto thee my ſon, which hath a dumb ſpirit: And whereſoever he taketh him, he teareth him; and he foameth, and gnaſheth with his teeth, and pineth away: and I ſpake to thy diſciples, that they ſhould caſt him out, and they could not. He anſwered him, and ſaith, O faithleſs generation, how long ſhall I be with you? how long ſhall I ſuffer you? bring him unto me. And they brought him unto him: and when he ſaw him, ſtraightway the ſpirit tare him, and he fell on the ground, and wallowed foaming. And he asked his father, How long is it ago ſince this came unto him? and he ſaid, Of a child. And oft-times it hath caſt him into the fire, and into the waters, to deſtroy him: but if thou can'ſt do any thing, have compaſſion on us, and help us. Jeſus ſaid unto him, If thou can'ſt believe, all things are poſſible to him that believeth. And ſtraightway the father of the child cried out, and ſaid with tears, Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief. When Jeſus ſaw that the people came running together, he rebuked the foul ſpirit, ſaying unto him, Thou dumb and deaf ſpirit, I charge thee come out of him, and enter no more into him. And the ſpirit cried, and rent him ſore, and came out of him? and he was as one dead, inſomuch that many ſaid, He is dead. But Jeſus took him by the hand, and lifted him up, and he aroſe. And when he was come into the houſe, his diſciples asked him privately, Why could not we caſt him out? And he ſaid unto them, This kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and faſting.

How long ſhall I be with you?] Chriſt, who was the perfect pattern of gentleneſs, ſpoke not thus as if tired; for he never open'd his mouth, as a lamb doth before its ſhearer; but he ſpoke after the manner of a phyſician, who, if he finds his patients acting contrary to his commands, ſays, How long ſhall I loſe the induſtry of my art, while I command one thing, and you act diametrically againſt it. (Jerome.)

I believe, Lord.] He was advancing by degrees to that faith, which he had conceiv'd in his mind. This was he who cry'd out at the ſame time, That he believ'd, and yet labour'd under a ſuſpence of unbelief. Hence the diſciples ſaid to Chriſt, Increaſe to us our faith, that what we receiv'd at the beginning may by advances, as it were, arrive in the end at perfection. (Greg. lib. 22. Moral.)

Ver. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37. And they departed thence, and paſſed through Galilee; and he would not that any man ſhould know it. For he taught his diſciples, and ſaid unto them, The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men, and they ſhall kill him; and after that he is killed, he ſhall riſe the third day. But they underſtood not that ſaying, and were afraid to ask him. And he came to Capernaum, and being in the houſe, he asked them, What was it that ye diſputed among yourſelves, by the way? But they held their peace: for by the way they had diſputed among themſelves, who ſhould be the greateſt. And he ſat down, and called the Twelve, and ſaith unto them, If any man deſire to be firſt, the ſame ſhall be laſt of all, and ſervant of all. And he took a child, and ſet him in the midſt of them: and when he had taken him in his arms, he ſaid unto them, Whoſoever ſhall receive one of ſuch children in my name, receiveth me: and whoſoever ſhall receive me, receiveth not me, but him that ſent me.

The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men.] The diſciples had taken up the common opinion, that the Meſſiah was to be a temporal prince, and (as ſuch) to reign here upon earth, and they knew not how to reconcile this, with his being delivered up into the hands of men that ſhould kill him, and yet they were afraid to ask him concerning this matter. It may juſtly ſeem a wonder, that when Chriſt ſo frequently diſcourſed with his diſciples about his ſufferings, they ſhould, at the ſame time, be diſputing among themſelves concerning ſupremacy and preheminency, who of them ſhould be greateſt, the firſt in place, and the higheſt in dignity and honour. But from this inſtance we may learn, That the holieſt and beſt of men are ſubject to pride and ambition, prone to covet worldly dignity and honour, ready to catch at the bait of grandeur, and to affect a precedency before and a ſuperiority over others. (B.)

Ver. 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50. And John anſwered him, ſaying, Maſter, we ſaw one caſting out devils in thy name, and he followeth not us; and we forbad him, becauſe he followeth not us. But Jeſus ſaid, Forbid him not: for there is no man which ſhall do a miracle in my name, that can lightly ſpeak evil of me. For he that is not againſt us is on our part. For whoſoever ſhall give you a cup of water to drink, in my name, becauſe ye belong to Chriſt, verily I ſay unto you, he ſhall not loſe his reward. And whoſoever ſhall offend one of theſe little ones that believe in me, it is better for him that a millſtone were hanged about his neck, and he were caſt into the ſea. And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands, to go into hell, into the fire that never ſhall be quenched: Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off: it is better for thee to enter halt into life, than having two feet, to be caſt into hell, into the fire that never ſhall be quenched: Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye, than having two eyes, to be caſt into hell fire: Where their worm

dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. For every one ſhall be ſalted with fire, and every ſacrifice ſhall be ſalted with ſalt. Salt is good: but if the ſalt have loſt his ſaltneſs, wherewith will you ſeaſon it? Have ſalt in your ſelves, and have peace one with another.

Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.] So Iſaiah lxvi. 24. Their worm ſhall not die, neither ſhall their fire be quenched. Eccl. vii. 19. Fire and the worm are the puniſhment of impious fleſh. Hence Auſtin, in his 21ſt book of the city of God, c ix. ſays, "Potuiſt brevius dici, vindicta impii, cur ergo dictum eſt, carnis impii niſi quia utrumque, id eſt, & ignis & vermis pœna erit carnis." It might have been worded ſhorter: "The puniſhment of the impious, why is it ſaid, the fleſh of the impious, unleſs becauſe both, that is, both the fire and the worm ſhall be the puniſhment of the fleſh." But becauſe we meet with no mention of fleſh, either in the Greek text, or in the Syriac or Arabic verſion, but only in the Latin in the above cited place; Auſtin might have much better prov'd, that both the worm and the fire appertain'd to the body, out of Judith xvi. 21. where we read: "He will ſend the worm and fire upon their fleſh, that they may be burnt, and be ſenſible of pain for ever." Tho' Jerome, in the above-cited place of Iſaiah, acquaints us, that a great many perſons take the worm to be the conſcience of ſuch as are doom'd to puniſhment and miſery. (V.)

Where their worm dieth not.] The worm abandons the carcaſe when it hath eat to the bone; ſo that nothing but a ſkeleton remains: But in hell the worm is different, never relinquiſhing the ſoul upon which it is doom'd to prey: "Vermis ille, inquit Theophylactus, uniuſcujuſque eſt conſcientia, & memoria eorum, quæ in hac vita fœde ſunt acta, quæ quaſi vermis abſumit." "This worm, according to Theophylact, is every man's conſcience, and his remembrance of thoſe things, which have been ill performed in this life, which, like a worm, conſumes them." 'Tis probable the ſame ſignification may be annex'd to the ancient tale of the vultures, who everlaſtingly prey'd in hell upon the liver of Tityus. The ſame may be ſeen in Procopius upon Iſaiah, and in St. Bernard, in his treatiſe De conſideratione, lib. 5. cap. 12. (Idem.)

If thy eye offend thee.] Hence Julius, in his epiſtle to the Eaſtern biſhops, as related by Athanaſius, ſays: "There is no demand to give ſpecimens of eloquence, in matters of religion; for eccleſiaſtical canons are the particulars required; and 'tis a common thing to endeavour to protect the leaſt in the church from offences: for, according to the word of the Goſpel, it is better that an aſs's millſtone be hung to the neck, and the perſon drowned, than for one of theſe little ones to be offended. (Idem.)

Where their worm dieth not.] That immortal worm, which greedily devours for ever, and, without any intermiſſion, exceeds all the pains and torments that can be imagined. This worm is by ſome deſcribed to be an impure and wicked conſcience, for this is that alone which perpetually preys and gnaws upon a ſoul that has been abandoned to ſin, and bury'd in its iniquities; that was always a ſtranger to grace and goodneſs, and put off from time to time the important buſineſs of repentance. So that every wicked man will be his own accuſer; for when he comes ſeriouſly to weigh his ſeveral actions within his mind, which he has performed in his ſtate of mortality, he will then be obliged, in ſpite of himſelf, to own himſelf guilty, being moved to ſuch a confeſſion by the native compunction of his conſcience, and, by an open teſtimony, diſcover how well or ill he has acted his mortal part on the ſtage of this world. 'Tis in this conſtruction, therefore, that this worm is called immortal. Neither is any the leaſt particular mentioned here concerning it, to refer to a ſenſible and tangible worm, which, in hell, preys upon the ſouls of the wicked and impious. (Victor. Antioch.)

And the fire is not quenched.] As this fire (according to the laſt author quoted above) which burns the bodies of ſinners, is called eternal in ſome places; ſo, in this, it is termed inextinguiſhable. There are thoſe perſons who ſuppoſe, by this unquenchable fire, a wicked and polluted conſcience, with the racking reflection which it brings along with it; becauſe this reflection, actuated by this immortal worm, which, like a raging fire, burns in the hearts of ſinners, perpetually preys and feeds upon their internal parts. St. Jerome informs us, in his 18th book upon Iſaiah lxvi. "That the worm which dieth not, and the fire which is not quenched, is taken, by abundance of people, for the conſcience of ſinners, which torments ſuch as are doom'd to puniſhment, who had abandoned the wholeſome precepts of truth and goodneſs in this life, according to what is ſaid, Pſal. xxxi. I was converſant in miſery, whilſt the thorn was fix'd within me. And in Prov. ch. xxv. The moth creepeth to the bone, and as the moth preys upon the cloth, and the worm upon wood, ſo does ſorrow bring low the heart of man" This is no more then a literal copy of the very ſame words found amongſt the homilies of Origen upon different places of St. Matthew. St. Ambroſe, in his ſeventh book upon Luke, chap. xiv. defends the ſame opinion: "He who, ſays he, does not approach the altar of Chriſt in peace and charity, ſhall be taken by the feet and hands, and caſt into outer darkneſs, where there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth. Pray, what is this outer darkneſs? Does it imply any priſon they are to be confin'd in, or any ſtone quarry, in which they are to be doom'd to perpetual labour? No; but what perſon ſoever acts without the commands, which heaven has given him, is truly ſaid to be in outer darkneſs; becauſe God's commands are a light, and he who is without Chriſt, reſides in darkneſs, becauſe the light, which is Chriſt, is in darkneſs. So that the claſhing of teeth, doth not ſignify any claſhing of real teeth; nor the fire that cannot be quenched, any perpetual real fire; nor the worm, any real worm: As diſeaſes and worms are the conſequences of the ill condition and bad ſtate of the human body, ſo is a man's being conſumed with his own fire, and eaten with his own worm, the effect of not regulating his paſſions, and correcting his ſins by ſobriety and abſtinence; whereas adding one error to another, and ſin upon ſin, is the direct road to contract a certain crudity of vices within the ſoul, which throws him into this miſerable condition. Whence Iſaiah ſays, Walk in the light of that flame and fire which you have kindled up; that is, the fire which the heinouſneſs of ſin begets, and that is the worm, when ſin brings ſevere reflections to the mind, and racks the conſcience. Iſaiah ſays, And they ſhall ſee the members of men prevaricating againſt me, and their worm ſhall not die, and their fire ſhall not be extinguiſhed." St. Auſtin favours this, and ſays, that we term hell to be under the earth two ways; firſt, that as the dead body has a place in the earth aſſigned it, ſo have ſouls that are dead with the ſins of the fleſh; or as in corporal things, the more ſad are the more inferior. But this father, in another place, ſeems to retract the foregoing: "I think (ſays he) that I ought much rather to aſſert of hell, that it is under the earth, than to give a reaſon why it may be, or believed to be, under the earth; as if it really was not ſo." Philo the Jew, in his book De congreſſu quærendæ eruditionis, acquaints us, "That God drives a wicked and flagitious ſoul an immenſe ſpace from him, into a place of concupiſcence and iniquity, which more aptly is called the place of the wicked, than the fabulous hell of ſome; for hell, in reality, is no other than the life of an impious man." To this opinion of Philo, adheres Gregory Nyſſ. in his dialogue about the ſoul and the reſurrection, which Baronius calls the Golden treatiſe. In this book, he anſwers the objections that are commonly brought out of ſcripture to prove there being ſubterraneous places for ſouls, which are called the infernal regions. John of Damaſcus ſays: "That the devil, bad ſpirits, wicked men, and ſinners, are doom'd to an eternal, but not a material fire, ſuch as we uſe, but ſuch as is known to God only." Gregory the Great's words are to this effect: "A corporeal fire (ſays he) certainly ſtands in want of corporal nouriſhment, in order to make it ſo. To preſerve it, it muſt have wood and other combuſtibles to feed upon, and is of no ſervice, unleſs it be thus kept up; whereas the fire of hell being incorporeal, yet corporeally burning thoſe who are expoſed thereto, is neither kindled up by man's aſſiſtance, nor fed with wood or other combuſtible materials; but created once, continues for ever, neither wants it to be kindled up, or ſtands in need of any flame." Origen's words are theſe: "The fire and torments of hell, which the ſacred ſcriptures denounce againſt ſinners, are not material puniſhments, but ſuch as rack the conſciences of offenders; for God brings and ſets, as it were, before their eyes, the remembrance of all their paſt errors; ſo that every baſe action of their lives being repreſented thus plainly before them, conſcience ſtrikes them in the face, and the pains of ſorrow for what they have done, extremely torment them." The ſame father, upon the third chapter of the Epheſians, proceeds in this manner: "Let no man deceive you with flouriſhes of words, becauſe there are ſeveral who ſay, there are no puniſhments for ſinners, nor any external torments made uſe of to chaſtiſe offenders; but that conſcience is the only puniſhment for ſin, while the worm never dies in the heart; and a fire is kindled in the mind like a fever, which burns the patient within. Theſe deceitful and flattering words are what Paul calls empty and vain, which ſeem to ſooth ſinners only the more into their wickedneſs; for while they put their confidence in them, they but expoſe themſelves the more to eternal puniſhment." Several of the ſchoolmen were of opinion, that the fire of hell was corporeal, whoſe names are too many here to recite; nor would they be of any advantage to the reader. But there can nothing be drawn out of the ſcriptures, with any ſtrength of reaſon or certainty, to prove that the fire and worm, here ſpoken of, are material. The puniſhments of the wicked, after this life, are ſhadowed out in metaphorical expreſſions, and thoſe, particularly, of hell, are urg'd with extraordinary greatneſs. Let us conclude then with John of Damaſcus, that the fire of hell is only ſuch as is known to God, becauſe, as Auſtin ſays, in what part ſoever of the world, or of nature, this fire of hell is lodged, never did any man yet come to know, unleſs he, perhaps, to whom the Divine Spirit has made the revelation. The above-cited Gregory the Great dare not ſo much as deviſe where hell is, though every thing conſider'd, leaves him at liberty to ſay, he believes it is under the earth. A very ingenious Engliſhman ſays, that the fire of hell cannot be corporeal, for this very reaſon, becauſe whereſoever the devils take their journey, there they carry their own hell along with them; but a great many ſeem to make no doubt at all of this fire being corporeal. Perhaps there may not he much trouble in reconciling their jarring and different paſſages of the fathers, with relation to this point, if that place of Auſtin upon the 57th Pſalm be rightly conſider'd, namely, that the puniſhments to be inflicted after death are of two ſorts. The firſt relates to hell, where the rich man burned, who begg'd a drop of water to cool his tongue from the finger of the poor man whom he had deſpiſed before at his gate. The other, to that diſmal doom which ſinners are to hear, who are to be plac'd at the left hand; Go ye into everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels! From which words, ſome think that the hell fire, to which ſouls that are ſeparated are doom'd, is incorporeal; and that the fire which is term'd everlaſting, and which torments the bodies of the damn'd, is of a corporeal nature; though they aſſert that immaterial ſpirits may be puniſhed with the torments of material fire; for which they aſſign this reaſon; that notwithſtanding an incorporeal ſoul dwells in the body of a living man, yet it ſympathizes and ſuffers with the different ailments and affections of that body. (Vide remarks on the third of Matthew,)

For every one ſhall be ſalted.] God lays a command, Levit. ii. 13. "And every oblation of thy meat-offering ſhalt thou ſeaſon with ſalt; neither ſhalt thou ſuffer the ſalt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat-offering; with all thine offerings thou ſhalt offer ſalt." God laid a threefold command upon the Jews, namely, affirmative, negative, and univerſal, not to offer any thing but what was ſalted. So that Chriſt purſues the ſame ſimilitude of the victims or offerings; q. d. Every one that is ſent into the Gehenna ſhall be ſalted with fire, that is, to the end he may be perpetually tormented, and yet remain incorrupt, he ſhall be ſalted with fire, as with ſalt, as the law enjoined every ſacrifice ſhould be ſalted. We learn from Pliny, l. 31. c. 7. that it was a ſolemn cuſtom to uſe ſalt in the ſacrifices of the falſe gods. He ſpeaks thus in praiſe of ſalt: "Maxime autem in ſacris ejus commendatur autoritas, quando nulla conficiantur ſine mola ſalſa:" "That which recommends him the moſt, is the command given about the ſacrifices; for no ſacrifices are made without a ſalted cake." (V.)

CHAP. X.

A wife to be divorc'd for fornication only. Young children are brought to Chriſt. A rich man asks Jeſus how he muſt obtain eternal life. The Apoſtles leave all to follow Chriſt. Chriſt foretells his death. The petition of the ſons of Zebedee. Bartimæus the blind man is healed.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. AND he aroſe from thence, and cometh into the coaſts of Judea, by the farther ſide of Jordan: and the people reſort unto him again; and, as he was wont, he taught them again. And the Phariſees came to him, and asked him, Is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? tempting him. And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, What did Moſes command you? And they ſaid, Moſes ſuffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, For the hardneſs of your heart, he wrote you this precept. But from the beginning of the creation, God made them male and female. For this cauſe ſhall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; And they twain ſhall be one fleſh: ſo then they are no more twain, but one fleſh. What therefore God hath joined together, let no man put aſunder. And in the houſe his diſciples asked him again of the ſame matter. And he ſaith unto them, Whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, and marry another, committeth adultery againſt her.

What God hath joined together.] Our Saviour, to confute the Phariſees, and convince them of the unlawfulneſs of divorces, uſed by the Jews, lays down the firſt inſtitution of marriage, and ſhews them firſt the author, next the time, and the end of the inſtitution. The Author God; What God hath joined together, &c. Marriage is an ordination of God's own appointment, as the foundation of all ſacred and civil ſociety; the time of the inſtitution was in the beginning; marriage is almoſt as old as the world, as old as nature itſelf; there was no ſooner one perſon, but God divided him into two, and no ſooner were there two, but he united them into one. And the end of the inſtitution of marriage, Chriſt declares was this; That there might be not only an intimacy and nearneſs, but alſo an inſeparable union; whereby the conjugal knot is tied ſo cloſe, that the bonds of marriage, and of matrimonial love, are ſtronger than thoſe of nature; ſtricter is the tye between husband and wife, than that between parent and child, according to God's own appointment; "For this cauſe ſhall a man leave father and "mother, and cleave to his wife, and they twain ſhall be one "fleſh." And whereas our Saviour adds, "What God has join'd "together let no man put aſunder." Wherein two things are intimated to us, 1. That God is the author of the cloſe and intimate union which is betwixt man and wife in a married condition. 2. That it is not in the power of man to untie or diſſolve that union which God has made betwixt man and wife in the married ſtate; yet it is a greater ſin to adviſe any to ſuch a ſeparation. (B.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. And if a woman ſhall put away her husband, and be married to another, ſhe committeth adultery. And they brought young children to him; that he ſhould touch them; and his diſciples rebuked thoſe that brought them. But when Jeſus ſaw it he was much diſpleaſed, and ſaid unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of ſuch is the kingdom of God. Verily I ſay unto you, Whoſoever ſhall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he ſhall not enter therein. And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and bleſſed them. And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Maſter, what ſhall I do that I may inherit eternal life? And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Why calleſt thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God. Thou knoweſt the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not ſteal, Do not bear falſe witneſs, Defraud not, Honour thy father and mother. And he anſwered and ſaid unto him, Maſter, all theſe have I obſerved from my youth. Then Jeſus beholding him, loved him, and ſaid unto him, One thing thou lackeſt: go thy way, ſell whatſoever thou haſt, and give to the poor; and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven: and come, take up thy croſs, and follow me. And he was ſad at that ſaying, and went away griev'd: for he had great poſſeſſions. And Jeſus looked round about, and ſaith unto his diſciples, How hardly ſhall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God! And the diſciples were aſtoniſhed at his words. But Jeſus anſwereth again, and ſaith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that truſt in riches to enter into the kingdom of God! It is eaſier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God. And they were aſtoniſhed out of meaſure, ſaying among themſelves, Who then can be ſaved? And Jeſus looking upon them, ſaith, With men it is impoſſible, but not with God: for with God all things are poſſible.

Put away her husband.] That which is here ſaid convertibly of divorces, the wife putting away the husband, as the husband the wife, muſt not be underſtood, that the wife hath, or ever had, in any caſe power to put away the husband, tho' not to marry again, as, in caſe of fornication, the husband may put away the wife. For there is that difference between the husband and wife, that renders one lawful, and not the other, viz. the dominion of the husband over the wife, which the wife, whoſe part is obedience, hath not back again over the husband; and, accordingly, in the law, tho' there be a liberty given to the man of putting away the wife, in more caſes than Chriſt allows of, yet there is none given the wife to put away the husband in any caſe; and Chriſt, who reſtrained that liberty of man to the only caſe of fornication, cannot be thought (and no where appears) to have enlarged or extended that liberty to the wife. As for the ſeeming appearance of it here in this text, it will ceaſe to be ſo, by obſerving either of theſe two things, firſt, that the only thing here in hand in theſe two verſes is, to ſet down the unlawful and adulterous divorces, viz. thoſe that are attended with marrying ſome other, for ſuch are all thoſe equally, whether committed by the man or the woman; man, and conſequently, there is no occaſion to ſtate here the other queſtion of lawful divorces, which had been made by the Phariſees, ver. 2. and anſwer'd negatively, ver. 3. And, conſequently, all here ſaid is, that the wife, tho' ſeparated from her huſband, may not marry again, not that ſhe may not in any caſe lawfully ſeparate. There are many things of this nature in the ſcripture, which are only ſpoken to prepare for ſomething elſe, and have no farther importance in themſelves, all the ſtreſs lying on the other part to which they are preparative. Secondly, the word that is uſed here, and in other places of the New Teſtament, to ſignify divorcing, falls out to be a word which means not putting away, as it notes any act of authority, but to abſolve, looſe, releaſe from a debt or a bond; and ſo it may be truly ſaid, that 'tis only releaſing, abſolving, not putting away the huſband, only acting what is in her power, but not pretending to more. The Grecians were wont to ſpeak more accurately, calling it, on the man's part, to ſend, or caſt out the wife, but on the wife's part, to leave or forſake the huſband; which tho' practiſed by the heathen ſometimes, yet being but an act of deſertion, it pretends not to any authority over him that is forſaken. (H.)

Defraud not.] That our Saviour reckons up here the ſix laſt precepts of the Decalogue, containing our duty towards our brethren, that is, towards other men under the law, is evident to him who conſiders the words either here, or in Matthew xix. 17. From thence it is clear again, that defraud not is St. Mark's rendring of that commandment. And 'tis obſervable how many ways this commandment is rendred in the Old Teſtament: In Exodus xx. and Deut. v. the Septuagint expreſs it by Thou ſhalt not covet. St. Paul, Romans vii. 7. hath the ſame: But St. Mark here, Thou ſhalt not defraud. And St. Matthew, chap. xix. Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf. From which 'tis farther obſervable what is the meaning of that commandment; that, undoubtedly, which will be the joint and united importance of theſe three phraſes, and not that which might be thought ſufficient to expreſs the meaning of ſome of them, that is, every man to remain ſo ſatisfied with the condition or lot which God hath aſſign'd him, and conſequently to deſire the good of others as well as of himſelf, thereby not to deſire or endeavour to gain any thing to himſelf by the loſs or diminution of any other, but to think his neighbour as fit to enjoy any thing that belongs to him, as himſelf is to enjoy his own; and conſequently, join together theſe two precepts of the heathens, the

in Martial, the perfect complacency with our preſent condition; and the

" Not coveting ſo much as a needle or a pin of another's. (H.)

Hardly.] The thorny ground appears by the parable of the ſower to be very contrary to the good, which is the emblem of the honeſt heart, wherein Chriſtianity was to be planted. By that was meant the mind choak'd with riches, and the cares of the world, which betray and eat out many good ſeeds of grace, which would otherwiſe lift up the ſoul to the purſuit of the one thing neceſſary. And this is the interpretation of the great difficulty of the rich man's being a diſciple of Chriſt, and attaining to his kingdom. Julian, in his epiſtle to Ecebolius, ſpeaks of this in a ſcoffing manner, and ſays that he took away from the Chriſtians all they had, that they might not be deprived of that heavenly kingdom which they hoped for (H.)

Ver. 28, 29, 30, 31. Then Peter began to ſay unto him, Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, There is no man that hath left houſe, or brethren, or ſiſters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my ſake and the Goſpel's, But he ſhall receive an hundred-fold now in this time, houſes, and brethren, and ſiſters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with perſecutions; and in the world to come eternal life. But many that are firſt ſhall be laſt, and the laſt firſt.

Many that are firſt ſhall be laſt.) They who were called and choſen firſt to be diſciples, who, conſequently, ought to have expreſs'd more zeal, more fidelity, and taken more pains in the Apoſtolical office, are here called the firſt, in reſpect of their being called firſt into the vineyard; and ſuch were Peter and John, and the reſt of his preſent diſciples. The laſt were thoſe who were call'd later, as St. Paul, who ſays truly of himſelf, that as he was born out of due time, (not regularly, as the diſciples in Chriſt's time had been, diſciples a long time before they had their commiſſion of Apoſtleſhip) ſo he was in labours more abundant. And they who have written the Itineraries of the Apoſtles have obſerv'd the truth of it, St. Paul having travelled much farther than either St. Peter or St. John, as they have deſcribed the circuit. (H.)

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45. And they were in the way going up to Jeruſalem, and Jeſus went before them; and they were amazed, and as they followed, they were afraid. And he took again the twelve, and began to tell them what things ſhould happen unto him, Saying, Behold we go up to Jeruſalem, and the Son of man ſhall be delivered unto the chief prieſts, and unto the ſcribes; and they ſhall condemn him to death, and ſhall deliver him to the Gentiles; And they ſhall mock him, and ſhall ſcourge him, and ſhall ſpit upon him, and ſhall kill him: and the third day he ſhall riſe again. And James and John the ſons of Zebedee come unto him, ſaying, Maſter, we would that thou ſhould'ſt do for us whatſoever we ſhall deſire. And he ſaid unto them, What would ye that I ſhould do for you? They ſaid unto him, Grant unto us that we may ſit, one on thy right-hand, and the other on thy left-hand, in thy glory. But Jeſus ſaid unto them, Ye know not what ye aſk: can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? and be baptiſed with the baptiſm that I am baptiſed with? And they ſaid unto him, We can. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, Ye ſhall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of; and with the baptiſm that I am baptized withal, ſhall ye be baptized: But to ſit on my right-hand, and on my left-hand, is not mine to give, but it ſhall be given to them for whom it is prepared. And when the ten heard it, they began to be much diſpleaſed with James and John. But Jeſus called them to him, and ſaith unto them, Ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the Gentiles exerciſe lordſhip over them; and their great ones exerciſe authority upon them. But ſo ſhall it not be among you: but whoſoever will be great among you, ſhall be your miniſter: And whoſoever of you will be the chiefeſt ſhall be ſervant of all. For even the Son of man came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter, and to give his life a ranſom for many.

The Son of man came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter.] To the end that our bleſſed Saviour might effectually quench thoſe unhappy ſparks of ambition, which were kindled in his Apoſtles minds, he tells them, That ſupremacy and dominion belong to ſecular princes, not to the miniſters of the Goſpel, who ought to carry themſelves with humility and condeſcenſion one towards another. Not that Chriſt directs to a parity and equality amongſt his miniſters, but only condemns the affection of ſuperiority, and the love of preheminency: From whence learn, That the miniſters of Chriſt ought to be ſo far from affecting a domination and ſuperiority over their brethren, that (in imitation of their Lord and maſter) they ought to account themſelves fellow-ſervants; " The " Son of man came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter. (B)

Ver. 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52. And they came to Jericho: and as he went out of Jericho with his diſciples, and a great number of people, blind Bartimeus, the ſon of Timeus, ſat by the highway-ſide, begging. And when he heard that it was Jeſus of Nazareth, he began to cry out, and ſay, Jeſus thou ſon of David, have mercy on me. And many charged him that he ſhould hold his peace: but he cried the more a great deal, Thou ſon of David, have mercy on me. And Jeſus ſtood ſtill, and commanded him to be called: and they call the blind man, ſaying unto him, Be of good comfort, riſe; he calleth thee. And he caſting away his garment, roſe, and came to Jeſus. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, What wilt thou that I ſhould do unto thee? The blind man ſaid unto him, Lord, that I might receive my ſight. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole. And immediately he received his ſight, and followed Jeſus in the way.

Go thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole.] This chapter concludes with the recital of a famous miracle performed by Chriſt on blind Bartimæus, in the ſight of a great multitude who follow'd him, where note, 1. The blind man's faith in acknowledging Jeſus to be the Meſſiah; for ſo much the title of the ſon of David ſignified. 2. His fervency in crying ſo earneſtly to Chriſt for mercy and healing, Have mercy upon me thou ſon of David. 3. The great compaſſion and condeſcenſion of Chriſt to Bartimæus, He ſtood ſtill, he called him, and enlightened his eyes, a mighty inſtance of Chriſt's divine power: He who can cure the blind with a touch of his finger, and that by his own power, is really God; his touch is an omnipotent touch. (B.)

C H A P. XI.

Chriſt enters Jeruſalem ſitting on an aſs. The fig-tree is curſed. The buyers and ſellers are caſt out of the temple. Our brother's faults are to be pardoned. The prieſts demand by what authority Chriſt performs his miracles. The baptiſm of John, whence.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. AND when they came nigh to Jeruſalem, unto Bethphage, and Bethany, at the mount of Olives, he ſendeth forth two of his diſciples, And ſaith unto them, Go your way into the village over-againſt you; and aſſoon as ye be entred into it, ye ſhall find a colt tied, whereon never man ſat; looſe him, and bring him. And if any man ſay unto you, Why do ye this? ſay ye that the Lord hath need of him; and ſtraightway he will ſend him hither. And they went their way, and found the colt tied by the door without, in a place where two ways met; and they looſe him. And certain of them that ſtood there ſaid unto them, What do ye looſing the colt? And they ſaid unto them even as Jeſus had commanded: and they let them go. And they brought the colt to Jeſus, and caſt their garments on him; and he ſat upon him. And many ſpread their garments in the way: and others cut down branches off the trees, and ſtrawed them in the way. And they that went before, and they that followed cried, ſaying, Hoſanna, bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Bleſſed be the kingdom of our father David, that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hoſanna in the higheſt. And Jeſus entred into Jeruſalem, and into the temple; and when he had looked round about upon all things, and now the even-tide was come, he went out unto Bethany with the twelve. And on the morrow when they were come from Bethany, he was hungry. And ſeeing a fig-tree afar off, having leaves, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon: and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves; for the time of figs was not yet. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto it, No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever. And his diſciples heard it.

Not yet.] That the words are thus literally to be rendred, for it was not a time, or ſeaſon of figs, there is no doubt. What the meaning of the word time or ſeaſon here is, will be the only difficulty. If the time or ſeaſon of the year wherein figs are ripe, ſo that it be here ſaid it was not the time of ripe figs, then many inconveniences will follow; as firſt, that will not be (as this paſſage is deſigned) a reaſonable account why there was nothing but leaves on the tree, for there might be green figs, and conſequently ſomething beſides leaves, tho' the time of ripe figs was not come. Secondly, It is not to be imagined that Chriſt being hungry, and thereupon going out of his way to a fig-tree, in all probability to find ſome food there, ſhould do ſo at a time when he knew fruit was not ripe, green figs, before they are ripe, being as unfit for food as can be imagined. Thirdly, If we conſider the time which is there ſpecified, we ſhall have reaſon to doubt whether, thus interpreting the Greek word kairos, time; there was in reality any truth in the ſpeech, there being great probability that, at this time of the year, figs in Judea were uſed to be ripe. For it was immediately before the paſſover, preſently after the Hoſanna's, both here and in Matthew, and that is about the time of putting the ſickle into the corn, Deut. xvi. 9. and their offering their firſt fruits ſeven weeks before Pentecoſt, Lev. xxiii. 16. by which it is evident that fruits were then ripe in that country. This may be farther confirmed by a paſſage in Ariſtophanes's Birds;

> " Soon as the cuckow ſounds his awful note,
> [Which we know is at the beginning of the ſpring.]
> " All the Phænicians to their fields repair,
> " And joyous reap amain the golden grain.

By the Phænicians are meant the inhabitants of Canaan. But this is not all; for other teſtimonies may be produced to prove that the fruits of trees were gather'd in at the ſame time with their grain, which comprehended their wheat and barley. Philo, in expreſs words, informs us of this in his embaſſy to Caius. In the treatiſe of this writer we read of Petronius, in a letter ſent to this Roman emperor, about erecting the ſtatue of Jupiter in the temple, informing him of the apprehenſions of fear, which he entertain'd, that the incenſed Jews would ſet fire to all the fruits of the ground, for all was now ripe, and therefore care muſt be taken for the collecting in the fruits, not only the corn of the field, but the fruit of the trees. From which circumſtance it comes that Baronius juſtly concludes, that the particular about the dedication of Jupiter's image in the temple fell out at the paſſover, and conſequently was a puniſhment that might recall to the memories of the Jews their ſin in crucifying the Saviour of the world at that conjuncture. As to the Objection, which is ſo apt to deceive many, and which impoſed ſo very much upon St. Chryſoſtom (becauſe this time of Eaſter anſwers not to the time of harveſt in other places; upon which that Father ſpeaking of Pentecoſt, ſays, " That it was the time, when the ſickle " was to be put into the harveſt, and the fruits to be gatheted in") the anſwer is very eaſy, namely, that the difference of the climate between Judea and Greece, and much more, between Judea and England, being ſo great, and the forwardneſs of fruit depending ſo immediately upon this circumſtance, there can be no wonder at all in it. So that for theſe and other reaſons it ſeems improbable, that this ſhould be the meaning of the words. I apprehend there is another notion of the kairos, or time, which will be ſubject to none of theſe, nor any other inconveniences. For the word literally ſignifying a ſeaſonable time, and time being of an extenſive latitude, belonging to any part of time, taking in an age, a year, and part of a year; and tho' an age cannot, yet a year may be applied to this place: The meaning then will be, that " That ſeaſon " was not a time for figs;" that is, that it was not a good fig year, or a year which produced any conſiderable ſtore of figs in that country. And, in this interpretation of the phraſe, the whole paſſage will be very conſpicuous, for Chriſt was hungry, and ſeeing a fig-tree afar off, having leaves, that is, looking very promiſingly, he went out of his way to it, if ſo be he might find any thing, that is, any one or more figs upon it; and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves, not ſo much as one fig, either ripe or otherwiſe; of which this reaſon is given, becauſe it was not a kindly or ſeaſonable year of figs. Upon which Chriſt immediately curſes the tree, for having upon it ſuch a fair and promiſing verdure of leaves, but no kind of fruit, and, conſequently, ſymbolically foretells the fate of the Jews, who were at this time very barren of good works; 'twas a very ill ſeaſon of fruit with them, tho' they made very fair profeſſions to external appearance. Having ſaid thus much, it will not be neceſſary to take notice of the emendation which the learned Daniel Heinſius hath propoſed here, converting it from, for it was not a ſeaſon of figs, into for where he was (that is, in that place) the ſeaſon of figs, that is, it was the ſeaſon of ripe figs. But the objections, which offer themſelves againſt this conjecture, are many, 1. The great change made hereby by this means, even from a negative to an affirmative, from one member of a contradiction to the other, which, ſhould it be allowed upon no better authority than a conjecture, the conſequences would be very dangerous. 2. If conjecture ſhould be admitted in this caſe, the words, in the reading of this gentleman, would diſcover a ſtile very evidently different from all the reſt of the book; for of either of the two forms of ſpeaking, where he was, for in that region or place, ſet as oppoſite to other remote countries, or ſeaſon of figs for it was the ſeaſon of figs, 'twould be difficult to find any example in the New Teſtament. And tho', to reduce an intricate and unuſual form of ſpeech to a perſpicuous and common phraſe, it might be reaſonable to propoſe a conjecture, yet to ſtrain it by this means from an uſual to a ſtrange form, for which there is no example, will not be very reaſonable. Laſtly, there is no occaſion for any change, as already appears; but, on the contrary, if the change was admitted, the verſe would be leſs intelligible than it is at preſent: For the words themſelves are a reaſon, as the particle for aſſures us. Now that which is next before, and to which this is affixed as a reaſon, being thus, That coming to the fig-tree, he ſound nothing but leaves, the words in Heinſius's new reading, for where he was, it was the ſeaſon of figs, cannot be thought a reaſon of that, [the ſeaſon for fruit cannot be the reaſon that there was no fruit] but would be of the contrary; whereas the words in the old reading are a clear reaſon of it; there were no figs, but only leaves to be found, for it was not a ſeaſon of figs. The only thing poſſible to be replied is, that the words, ſo altered, ſhall be a reaſon of Chriſt's going to the tree, to ſee if there were any fruit on it, and not of his finding no fruit. Which if it be ſaid, then I anſwer, that this is prodigiouſly unreaſonable, when the words, in the order they lie, are a regular reaſon of that which went next before; to alter them, upon conjecture or whim, into the direct contrary, and then affix them as a reaſon of what is at a greater diſtance, and with which they have no connection, but might, with equally the ſame reaſon, be plac'd at a remoter diſtance, and join'd to any other place, to which a new conceit or conjecture ſhould aſſign them. (H.) In the chapter before us, we have a famous paſſage preſenting itſelf; but to come to a juſt underſtanding of it, as it ought, we muſt wait for the coming of Elias, an ordinary way of expreſſion uſed by ſome of the ancients, when they had a mind to ſignify ſome extraordinary difficulty. The paſſage runs thus, "And ſeeing a fig-tree afar off, having leaves, he came, if haply he might find any thing thereon, and when he came to it he found nothing but leaves, for the time of figs was not yet." From which words, according to Theophylact, there ariſe ſome difficulties, or hatopa, inconſiſtencies, as thoſe who peruſe them may juſtly obſerve: The principal of which ſeems to be, that our Saviour ſhould require figs of a tree, when it was not the ſeaſon for them. And Chryſoſtom, in the ſame hiſtory as recorded by Matthew, remarks this circumſtance as an exceeding puzzling one, that, when Mark abſolutely avers that it was not the ſeaſon for figs, our Lord ſhould be ſaid to have come up to the tree, purely to find fruit thereupon. But this Father at laſt thus frees himſelf out of this perplexity; he is pleaſed to lay it upon the diſciples, who ſuppoſed that their Maſter curſt the tree, for want of fruit, or becauſe it did not produce any: However, he informs us with other reaſons, in explaining of which he uſes a great deal of time and language; and theſe indeed are ſuch, as rather increaſe than remove the difficulty. Let us turn our eye a little upon the Evangeliſt now before us, who ſays that our Lord ſaw a fig-tree which had leaves, that he came up to it, to ſee if it bore any figs; but that, finding nothing but leaves upon it, becauſe it was not the ſeaſon for figs, he therefore damn'd the tree to perpetual barrenneſs. Pray, how did he damn this tree, for not producing figs, when, at the ſame time, it was impoſſible for it to bear any? Or how comes the Evangeliſt to ſay, that he therefore curſed the tree; becauſe he found nothing but leaves upon it, when neither other fig-trees bore fruit, nor could produce any? Who would not rather have expected to have found him expreſs himſelf thus, "He found nothing but leaves, it was the ſeaſon for figs?" It ſeems, indeed, as tho' ſomebody ſhould ſay, That he curſt a fruit-bearing tree for having no fruit upon it, and for finding it produce none, tho' it was not the ſeaſon for fruit; neither was it poſſible for the tree to produce any at that time. So that we need not wonder, when we find ſome of the ancients confeſs, "That there appears ſo vaſt an inconſiſtency in the words, as to ſurmount all manner of ſolution;" nay, that the mind itſelf is ſtagger'd at this place. So that they find recourſe to I know not what allegorical interpretations. Auſtin, in his book of Sermons de tempore, artfully delivers himſelf; "Hoc factum, niſi figuratum accipiatur, ſtultum invenitur; primo quæſiſſe poma in illa arbore, quando tempus non erat ut eſſent in illa arbore; deinde, ſi pomorum jam tempus eſſet, non habere poma, quæ culpa arboris eſſet?" "If this action be not taken in a figurative ſenſe, 'twill be found abſurd: In the firſt place he ſought for fruit upon this tree, when it was not the time of fruit-bearing: And in the next, if it was not the ſeaſon for producing fruit, and the tree had none upon it, what fault was it of the tree?" Yet when he has gone thus far, he is ſtill at the ſame pains to unlooſe the knot which he has ty'd together. For as to thoſe allegorical interpretations, which the fancy of ſome writers of antiquity has formed, who have pleaſed themſelves in attributing ſome of them to the fig-tree, and ſome to the ſynagogue, I'll ſpare myſelf the labour of inquiring into; for there was never any thing, but what might be capable of being expounded in this manner; nor any caſe of difficulty, but what might be ſolved according as any one thought fit: If any thing is advanced relating to this fig-tree, which agrees not with the accounts before given of it, who will favour us with the literal conſtruction in its full ſtrength? or who will give us the ſenſe entire as to the letter? Which as it reſts on a precarious bottom, 'tis impoſſible the narration ſhould ſubſiſt; ſo that it wants other aſſiſtance to explain it: Wherefore let us firſt ſee the place where, and the time when theſe occurrences happened, which are related by the Evangeliſt. It appears that the ſcene of action was at Bethany, a ſmall diſtance from Bethphage, a little before his paſſion; and in the firſt month, when the paſſover was celebrated. The tree in diſpute is a fig-tree, in arguing about which the ancient doctors of the church place this circumſtance amongſt his principal miracles, that a tree ſo full of ſap ſhould wither ſo ſuddenly, and, as it were, in an inſtant, which yet makes nothing to our purpoſe. We muſt have recourſe to other conſiderations in explaining this paſſage, namely, we muſt refer to the maturity of figs, or to the ſeaſon when they grow ripe; which is found to differ according to the variation of climates. Pliny tells us, that figs in the Eaſt ripen in the firſt month, which anſwers to the Niſan of the Hebrews, and the March of the Romans. And Solomon, a greater author than Pliny, in his Nuptial Song, places green figs among the number of evidences that foretell the ſpring: "The fig-tree diſcovers green figs;" and before ſays, "The winter is paſt." It appears that ſome of theſe figs diſcover'd themſelves ſooner, ſome later. And probably Bethphage took its name from them, becauſe figs were known to grow here in greater abundance, and ripen ſooner than in any other part of the Eaſt: Where nothing was more acceptable than the ſukon prodromos, or fore-runner of the fig; (by which appellation the Grecians diſtinguiſhed the fig that was ripe before its time) which the moment it was diſcover'd was greedily long'd after by every one. And the people of the Eaſt turn'd the ſudden appearance of thoſe præcoces, or untimely fruit, to ſignify the diſappointment of their hopes and expectations. Hear what Iſaiah ſays, chap. xxviii. "And the glorious beauty which is on the head of the fat valley ſhall be a fading flower, and as the haſty fruit before the ſummer (ſukon prodromos) which when he that looketh upon it, ſeeth it, while it is yet in his hand he eateth it up." This haſty fruit is call'd prodromos by Heſychius, which anſwers to a mature and ripe fig; and this, as it immediately precedes and foretells ſummer, is by the eaſtern people placed amongſt their ſummer fruits. So Matthew, xxiv. 32. "Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that ſummer is nigh." The ſcarcity of this fruit made people, doubtleſs, very eager to acquire it; they placed it amongſt their delicacies. Where our Lord was they were found in plenty, I mean near Jeruſalem, and the mount of Olives. Who then doubts but that the Evangeliſt ſhould ſay that figs were ripe where Chriſt then was? and that the tree was therefore curs'd, becauſe, unlike other fig-trees, it diſappointed the hopes of Chriſt who was hungry? The ſenſe of this will appear, by making a very ſmall alteration in the reading, thus; Where he was, it was the ſeaſon of figs; ou gar een, kairos ſukon. For the general part the ancients (as we find in ancient copies) were very remiſs in minding the true accenting and pointing, which very often varied; ſo that this may be no wonder to him who has made but a curſory view in the ancient manuſcripts. (Dan. Heinſius.)

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. And they come to Jeruſalem: and Jeſus went into the temple, and began to caſt out them that ſold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the ſeats of them that ſold doves; And would not ſuffer that any man ſhould carry any veſſel through the temple. And he taught, ſaying unto them, Is it not written, my houſe ſhall be called of all nations the houſe of prayer? but ye have made it a den of thieves. And the ſcribes and chief prieſts heard it, and ſought how they might deſtroy him: for they feared him, becauſe all the people was aſtoniſhed at his doctrine. And when even was come, he went out of the city.

My houſe, &c.] Chriſt cites this place of Iſaiah in three Evangeliſts, when he is repreſented driving the Jews out of the temple who bought and ſold. He openly puts the words of all nations here, tho' Auſtin concludes chiefly from theſe two particles, that the paſſage before us cannot any way refer to, or be underſtood of, the temple of the Jews; becauſe, as that temple was a long time before demoliſhed, it was impoſſible for all nations to reſort thither, for the ſake of prayer or religious worſhip; but, according to the Prophet, and the interpretation of Chriſt, this material houſe is foretold to be an houſe of prayer to all nations, becauſe, after its being rebuilt, after the return from the captivity of Babylon, it was ſo famous and glorious, that ſeveral nations, as Solomon himſelf had propheſied, came up to it to pray. Now as to its being called the houſe of prayer, every particular, regarding the external worſhip of God, is comprehended under that phraſe, but principally ſacrifice; whence that of the woman of Samaria to Chriſt, John iv. "Ye ſay, that in Jeruſalem is the place, where men ought to worſhip;" that is, to ſacrifice, for prayers and ſupplications might be offered up to God in any place without Jeruſalem, lem, neither did the Jews deny this liberty, tho' inveterate enemies, to the Samaritans. But ſince the material temple of the Jews figured out the true temple of God, which is the church, 'tis no wonder, that this prophecy of Iſaiah was more fully accompliſhed in that church, to which almoſt all nations to this day have reſorted. (V.)

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33. And in the morning as they paſſed by, they ſaw the fig-tree dried up from the roots. And Peter calling to remembrance, ſaith unto him, Maſter, behold the fig-tree which thou curſed'ſt is withered away. And Jeſus anſwering ſaith unto them, Have faith in God. For verily I ſay unto you, that whoſoever ſhall ſay unto this mountain, Be thou removed, and be thou caſt into the ſea, and ſhall not doubt in his heart, but ſhall believe that thoſe things which he ſaith ſhall come to paſs, he ſhall have whatſoever he ſaith. Therefore I ſay unto you, What things ſoever ye deſire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye ſhall have them. And when ye ſtand praying, forgive, if ye have ought againſt any: that your Father alſo which is in heaven may forgive you your treſpaſſes. But if you do not forgive, neither will your Father which is in heaven forgive your treſpaſſes. And they come again to Jeruſalem: and as he was walking in the temple, there come to him the chief prieſts, and the ſcribes, and the elders, And ſay unto him, By what authority do'ſt thou theſe things? and who gave thee this authority to do theſe things? And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, I will alſo ask of you one queſtion, and anſwer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do theſe things. The baptiſm of John, was it from heaven, or of men? anſwer me. And they reaſoned with themſelves, ſaying, If we ſhall ſay, From heaven, he will ſay, Why then did ye not believe him? But if we ſhall ſay, Of men, they feared the people: for all men counted John, that he was a prophet indeed. And they anſwered and ſaid unto Jeſus, We cannot tell. And Jeſus anſwering ſaith unto them, Neither do I tell you by what authority I do theſe things.

And when ye ſtand praying, forgive, if ye have ought againſt any.] Jerome upon theſe words ſays, "Septem verſus orationis Dominicæ "Marcus ſuo more in una oratione comprehendit: Is namque cui "dimiſſa ſunt omnia, quod amplius rogabit niſi ut perſeveret in eo "quod obtinuit." "Mark, following his uſual way, comprehends in one period ſeven verſes of our Lord's prayer: For "what buſineſs has he, who is pardoned all his offences, to ſupplicate for any thing farther, than that he may perſevere in "what he has obtain'd." As if this was the ſum of our Lord's prayer; whereas after Chriſt, from Jerome's ſupputation, hath recited the ſeven verſes of Matthew, he repeats one of them, which concerns the remiſſion of ſins, "For if ye forgive men their "treſpaſſes, your heavenly Father will alſo forgive you your treſpaſſes. So that to take in the ſeven verſes, 'tis neceſſary to annex the proeme and epilogue to the account. (D. Heinſ.)

CHAP. XII.

Of the vineyard. Chriſt, the ſtone, rejected by the Jews. Of paying tribute to Cæſar. The Sadducees deny the reſurrection. The firſt precept. To love God and our neighbour is preferr'd to ſacrifice. Chriſt, the ſon of David. The Scribes and Phariſees to be avoided. The poor widow.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. AND he began to ſpeak unto them by parables. A certain man planted a vineyard, and ſet an hedge about it, and digged a place for the wine-fat, and built a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went into a far country. And at the ſeaſon he ſent to the husbandmen a ſervant, that he might receive from the husbandmen of the fruit of the vineyard. And they caught him, and beat him, and ſent him away empty. And again, he ſent unto them another ſervant; and at him they caſt ſtones, and wounded him in the head, and ſent him away ſhamefully handled. And again, he ſent another; and him they killed; and many others, beating ſome, and killing ſome. Having yet therefore one ſon, his well-beloved, he ſent him alſo laſt unto them, ſaying, They will reverence my ſon. But thoſe husbandmen ſaid amongſt themſelves, This is the heir; come, let us kill him, and the inheritance ſhall be ours. And they took him and killed him, and caſt him out of the vineyard. What ſhall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do? he will come and deſtroy the husbandmen, and will give the vineyard unto others. And have ye not read this ſcripture? The ſtone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner. This was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.

And again he ſent unto them another ſervant, and at him they caſt ſtones, and wounded him in the head, and ſent him away ſhamefully handled.] The Evangeliſts are different in their accounts in this paſſage; for what Mark applies to the ſecond ſervant, Luke attributes to the third. The greateſt diſpute ariſing from theſe words, is about the wounding in the head, which, from the word kephalio, is juſtly underſtood to ſignify death itſelf, namely, that they killed him. (Heinſ.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. And they ſought to lay hold on him, but feared the people; for they knew that he had ſpoken the parable againſt them: and they left him and went their way. And they ſend unto him certain of the Phariſees and of the Herodians, to catch him in his words. And when they were come, they ſay unto him, Maſter, we know that thou art true, and careſt for no man: for thou regardeſt not the perſon of men, but teacheſt the way of God in truth: Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæſar, or not? Shall we give, or ſhall we not give? But he knowing their hypocriſy, ſaid unto them, Why tempt ye me? bring me a penny that I may ſee it. And they brought it: and he ſaith unto them, Whoſe is this image and ſuperſcription? and they ſaid unto him, Cæſar's. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto them, Render to Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's; and to God the things that are God's. And they marvelled at him.

Is it lawful to give tribute to Cæſar, or not?] Judas of Galilee, named indifferently the Gaulonite, and the Galilean, was, according to Joſephus, head of a fourth ſect among the Jews, and, having Sadock a Phariſee joined to him, he ſollicited the people to a revolt; telling them, that God was to be their only maſter and prince, and no mortal to be acknowledged ſuch; that the requiring a tax from them, if they paid any, was an evident teſtimony of their ſervitude; and that it was their duty to vindicate their liberty; by which means he raiſed a great ſedition among the Jews, and was the cauſe, under pretence of defending the publick liberty, of innumerable miſchiefs to the nation. Of this ſect, 'tis poſſible, they ſuſpected Chriſt might be a follower, and the rather, for his being counted a Galilean; and that, therefore, they came to him now, and asked him this queſtion. And though he anſwers clearly in favour of the Roman emperor, and ſo much more for the paying than the refuſing to pay tribute; yet becauſe there was ſo much caution in his ſpeech, which made the Phariſees unable to lay hold, or take any advantage of it, it is improv'd into an accuſation againſt him, that he forbade to give tribute to Cæſar. (H.)

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. Then come unto him the Sadducees, which ſay there is no reſurrection; and they asked him, ſaying, Maſter, Moſes wrote unto us, If a man's brother die, and leave his wife behind him, and leave no children, that his brother ſhould take his wiſe, and raiſe up ſeed unto his brother. Now there were ſeven brethren: and the firſt took a wiſe, and dying left no ſeed. And the ſecond took her, and died, neither left he any ſeed: and the third likewiſe. And the ſeven had her, and left no ſeed: laſt of all the woman died alſo. In the reſurrection thereſore, when they ſhall riſe, whoſe wiſe ſhall ſhe be of them? for the ſeven had her to wiſe. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto them, Do ye not thereſore err, becauſe ye know not the ſcriptures, neither the power of God? For when they ſhall riſe from the dead, they neither marry, nor are given in marriage: but are as the angels which are in heaven. And as touching the dead, that they riſe: have ye not read in the book of Moſes, how in the buſh God ſpake unto him, ſaying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob? He is not the God of the dead, but the God of the living: ye thereſore do greatly err.

The Sadducees, which ſay there is no reſurrection.] The doctrine of the Sadducees is, that the ſouls of men periſh with their bodies. And this opinion, with the punctual obſervation of their law, is all that they require to be kept of their fraternity. They hold it honourable and famous to carry on diſputations with the doctors of the Jewiſh law, and ſome indeed ſubſcribe to their opinions, but theſe are few and perſons of dignity, who perform ſeldom any thing that deſerves mention: Yet if they happen to be in employments, 'tis with a great deal of unwillingneſs they comply with the Phariſees, for otherwiſe there would be no ſuch thing as withſtanding the violence of the people. (Joſep.)

Ver. 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34. And one of the ſcribes came, and having heard them reaſoning together, and perceiving that he had anſwered them well, asked him, Which is the firſt commandment of all? And Jeſus anſwered him, The firſt of all the commandments is, Hear, O Iſrael, The Lord our God is one Lord; And thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy ſtrength: this is the firſt commandment. And the ſecond is like, namely this, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf: there is none other commandment greater than theſe. And the ſcribe ſaid unto him, Well, Maſter, thou haſt ſaid the truth: for there is one God, and there is none other but he. And to love him with all the heart, and with all the underſtanding, and with all the ſoul, and with all the ſtrength, and to love his neighbour as himſelf, is more than all whole burnt-offerings and ſacrifices. And when Jeſus ſaw that he anſwered diſcreetly, he ſaid unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God. And no man after that durſt ask him any queſtion.

Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord.] This paſſage, if any other, deſerves animadverſion. How comes our Saviour, when he contracted the law, to uſe theſe words, Hear, O Iſrael? Why called he them a commandment? when the commandment includes what comes after, as ſet down by Moſes and Luke, And thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God, which hath nothing common, unleſs that it is join'd in the context of Moſes, whereas the other Evangeliſts omit it. But they, who have been converſant in the Jewiſh writings, or ſpent any time in peruſing over their ancient commentators, need not be acquainted how that the Jews not only contracted the law, but made ſcrolls of parchment, wherein they inſerted their Tephillin, diſtinguiſhed by certain portions of the law, which they deem'd neceſſary, and theſe they faſten'd to their arms or heads. The paſſage which held the firſt place in this contraction, was this of the Evangeliſt, as ſet down here, Hear, O Iſrael, &c. Deut. vi. 4. This was what the more ſuperſtitious among the Jews judg'd neceſſary here. The Tephillin, in order to give the reader a better illuſtration of the paſſage before us, was divided into four ſections. The beginning of the firſt was extracted from the ſixth chapter of Deuteronomy, which Mark has inſerted here in his Goſpel. From whence it appears what the occaſion was that induced our Lord to ſpeak of the contraction of this law, namely, that he might inform them, that the words contain'd in their ſuperſtitious Tephillin, were not contracted as they ought, nor were all the particulars repreſented in them, which the law ſo contracted ought to contain. In ſhort, what Mark has cited out of Moſes, and ſet down here, are the leading words of the fourth, and run on to the tenth, which make ſix verſes. The beginning of the ſecond is thus; "And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, ſaying, Sanctify unto "me all the firſt-born:" extracted from the thirteenth chapter of Exodus, and beginning at the firſt, and ending at the eleventh verſe; which makes ten verſes. The third is cited from the eleventh verſe of the ſame chapter, and runs on to the ſeventeenth, beginning thus, "And it ſhall be when the Lord ſhall bring thee, &c. This contains ſix verſes. The fourth is taken from the eleventh chapter of Deuteronomy, from the thirteenth to the twenty-firſt verſe, beginning thus, "If you ſhall hearken diligently unto my "commandments." But we want to be inform'd with the reaſon of their ſelecting theſe places of ſcripture above all others, and of faſtening them to their heads and arms. In the firſt place it is ſaid, "And thou ſhalt faſten them as a ſign upon thy hand, and "they ſhall be as frontlets between thy eyes. Thou ſhalt write "them alſo upon the poſts of thy houſe, and upon thy gates." In the ſecond; "And it ſhall be to thee for a ſign and a memorial, "between thine eyes, that the law of God may be in thy mouth, "becauſe the Lord brought thee out of Egypt with a ſtrong hand." In the third, "And it ſhall be as a ſign upon thine hand, and as "frontlets between thine eyes." And laſtly in the fourth; "Place "theſe words of mine in your hearts, and bind them for a ſign "upon your hands, and let them be as frontlets between your "eyes." Theſe are the reaſons why theſe ſections, as neceſſary above all others, were ſuperſtitiouſly faſtened to the head or left arm. In ſpeaking of the third, de primogenito aſini, not a ſyllable is mentioned of the love of our neighbour. Which ſuperſtition our Saviour reproves, as it ought to be. In the fourteenth chapter of Luke he there refutes the Jewiſh doctors, for pretending it as a lawful circumſtance to take an aſs or an ox out of a ditch on the ſabbath, thereby to ſave their lives, and at the ſame time to deny this piece of humanity to man. So that he ſets before them the ſuperſtition of this diviſion, which was the ground of their phylacteries, and diſallows of the legality and truth which they pretended was in it. In the firſt place he diſcovers its prolixity. Whence the true and elegant phraſe of Matthew, to widen their phylacteries, becauſe they amaſſed together a great many words, when the law might have been made more compendious, and becauſe the principal thing, that was moſt neceſſary, was omitted in their Tephillin; "They widen their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders "of their garments" Without ſaying any thing of the word Totaphot, from which they ſuperſtitiouſly deriv'd their number four. So that the wiſdom of God has juſtly annexed to the commandment of loving God, which belongs to the former part of the law, the words of loving our neighbour, which regard the latter, to the end the whole may be contracted. Thoſe words are, "Thou ſhalt love "thy neighbour as thyſelf," which we read in Leviticus; and being join'd with the love of God, exhibit to us the ſum or principal of a neceſſary doctrine. Whence alſo that of Matthew, "On "theſe two hang all the law and the prophets. (Heinſ.)

Ver. 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, while he taught in the temple, How ſay the ſcribes that Chriſt is the ſon of David? For David himſelf ſaid by the Holy Ghoſt, The Lord ſaid to my Lord, Sit thou on my right-hand, till I make thine enemies thy footſtool. David thereſore himſelf calleth him Lord; and whence is he then his ſon? And the common people heard him gladly. And he ſaid unto them in his doctrine, Beware of the ſcribes which love to go in long clothing, and love ſalutations in the market-places, And the chief ſeats in the ſynagogues, and the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts: Which devour widows houſes, and for a pretence make long prayers: theſe ſhall receive greater damnation.

How ſay the ſcribes?] How can there be any conſiſtency in what the lawyers ſay? This queſtion was put to the Phariſees, who, in expounding the prophets, gave great credit to the ſcribes or lawyers. So that Chriſt addreſſes them in this manner, as knowing they would not depart from the authority of theſe ſcribes. (G.)

Widows houſes.] As the female ſex is more prone to ſuperſtition, ſo in this the villany of the ſcribes was fuller detected. Chriſt mentioned widows, becauſe he was willing to expoſe the knavery of thoſe perſons in pillaging the houſes of widows, who were recommended, by the preſcription of the divine law, to their care and protection. (G.)

Ver. 41, 42, 43, 44. And Jeſus ſat over-againſt the treaſury, and beheld how the people caſt money into the treaſury: and many that were rich caſt in much. And there came a certain poor widow, and ſhe threw in two mites, which make a farthing. And he called unto him his diſciples, and ſaith unto them, Verily I ſay unto you, that this poor widow hath caſt more in, than all they which have caſt into the treaſury. For all they did caſt in of their abundance: but ſhe of her want did caſt in all that ſhe had, even all her living.

Two mites.] In running over the names of all the Hebrew coins, and conſidering their value, I find none but the aſſer that contains the eight leſs coins: This aſſer is mentioned by Luke, chap. xii. and Matthew, chap. x. It was equal in value to the fourth part of the drachma, that is, it weighed as much ſilver, as ballanced four corns of barley. It was diſtributed into eight parts, and thereby made the inferior coins called perutoth; each whereof, provided it was of ſilver, was to weigh no more than half a barley-corn; But becauſe of its ſmallneſs and little value it was uſually made of braſs. Now as the aſſer, among the old Jewiſh coins, contained eight leſs, which were called perutoth, that is, the very ſmalleſt, and which could not be divided, the Evangeliſt ſeems, when he ſays that the woman threw in two mites, which anſwer to the octave or farthing, which he there recites, neceſſarily to underſtand the aſſer, which I have mentioned for the ſake of perſpicuity. (Junius.) According to Suidas there are eight mites in the chaleus, and ſix chaleus's in the obolus. According to Seneca there are eight and forty mites in the obolus, ſix obolus's in the drachma, and two hundred and eighty eight mites in the drachma. So that by this computation the widow's gift contain'd the forty-fourth part of one drachma. According to Cleopatra the chaleus comprehended eight mites, and the obolus eight chaleus's: Sixty-four mites were in the obolus, ſix obolus's in the drachma, and three hundred and ſixty-four mites. So that, according to this valuation, the widow's gift contain'd the one hundredth and ninety-ſecond part of the drachma. (V.)

But ſhe of her want.] To diſcover the meaning of the word hyſtereſis, or want, among the writers of the ſcripture, it will not be amiſs to conſider it as it occurs in the New Teſtament. In Ezra vi. 9. it ſignifies that which any one hath need of, and ſo here, and in Luke xxi. 4. it will be render'd, out of her neceſſities, out of that which was neceſſary to her, out of that which ſhe wanted for herſelf, out of her very low ſtate, or extremity (as appears by what follows, namely, all her proviſion) as it is oppoſed to the words, out of that which the others had to ſpare. Thus Phil. iv. 11. "In " reſpect of a very low eſtate (or hyſtereſis)" in which he had no more than abſolute neceſſaries, with which (he ſays) he had learn'd to be content. So, 1. Cor. xvi. 17. "That which you ought to " have done (or your hyſterema) they have ſupplied;" 2 Cor. viii. 14. "Your abundance may be a ſupply to their neceſſities (or hy- " ſterema)" and chap. ix. 12. "The neceſſities or hyſteremata of " the ſaints;" and chap. xi. 9. "My neceſſity (or hyſterema)." So Phil. ii. 30. "Your defect (or hyſterema) of miniſtring to me, or, " that miniſtring to me which was neceſſary," but through diſtance could not be performed on your part. So Col. i 24. "I rejoice " in my ſufferings (or hyſteremata) for you." Thus, or to this ſenſe, Chriſt ſuffered for his church, his body. Nay, Luke xxiv. 26. ſays, "He ought to ſuffer," for there was a neceſſity for it in many reſpects. And ſo, in like manner, by way of correſpondence, it is neceſſary that I, who am a Chriſtian, ſhould ſuffer for you, for the church, which is his body: This now I do, "I in my fleſh " make up (by way of antitype) thoſe neceſſary ſufferings of Chriſt " for his body." All this is caſt up here together, to give one entire view of theſe words in the New Teſtament. (H.)

CHAP. XIII.

Of the deſtruction of the city of Jeruſalem. Perſecutions for the Goſpel. Chriſtianity to be preach'd to all nations. Of the coming of Chriſt to judgment. Watching and praying commanded.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. AND as he went out of the temple, one of his diſciples ſaith unto him, Maſter, ſee what manner of ſtones, and what buildings are here. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto him, See'ſt thou theſe great buildings? there ſhall not be left one ſtone upon another, that ſhall not be thrown down. And as he ſat upon the mount of Olives, over-againſt the temple, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrew, asked him privately, Tell us, when ſhall theſe things be? and what ſhall be the ſign when all theſe things ſhall be fulfilled? And Jeſus anſwering them, began to ſay, Take heed leſt any man deceive you. For many ſhall come in my name, ſaying, I am Chriſt: and ſhall deceive many. And when ye ſhall hear of wars, and rumours of wars, be ye not troubled: for ſuch things muſt needs be; but the end ſhall not be yet. For nation ſhall riſe againſt nation, and kingdom againſt kingdom: and there ſhall be earthquakes in divers places, and there ſhall be famines, and troubles: theſe are the beginnings of ſorrows. But take heed to yourſelves: for they ſhall deliver you up to councils: and in the ſynagogues ye ſhall be beaten, and ye ſhall be brought before rulers and kings for my ſake, for a teſtimony againſt them. And the Goſpel muſt firſt be publiſhed among all nations. But when they ſhall lead you, and deliver you up, take no thought before-hand what ye ſhall ſpeak, neither do ye premeditate: but whatſoever ſhall be given you in that hour, that ſpeak ye: for it is not ye that ſpeak, but the Holy Ghoſt. Now the brother ſhall betray the brother to death, and the father the ſon: and children ſhall riſe up againſt their parents, and ſhall cauſe them to be put to death, And ye ſhall be hated of all men for my name's ſake: but he that ſhall endure unto the end, the ſame ſhall be ſaved.

All theſe things ſhall be.] That the phraſes theſe things, and all theſe things, mean what the Evangeliſt hath mentioned in the words immediately before, there is no queſtion, and conſequently that by them is ſignified the deſtruction of the temple, and alſo what that deſtruction implies and contains, namely, the city and nation of the Jews, and their whole government civil and eccleſiaſtical. Which being the words in which St. Mark expreſſes that which St. Matthew ſets down in other words, (here, "What ſhall be the " ſign when all theſe things ſhall be fulfilled?" there, "What is " the ſign of thy coming, and of the conſummation of the age?") it irrefragably follows from hence, (which has been inſiſted on pretty largely in Matthew xxiv.) that the coming of Chriſt and conſummation of the age ſignify the deſtruction of the Jewiſh temple and nation; of which only, and not of the day of the laſt judgment, the ſigns are here demanded by the diſciples, and given by Chriſt. Which I here add ex abundanti, for the removing of all ſcruple in this matter. To the ſame purpoſe 'tis again obſervable; that tho', at the beginning here, St. Mark doth not any way uſe the phraſe of Chriſt's coming in this manner, yet v. 26. in the room of that, which is in another phraſe in St. Matthew, chap. xxiv. 30. "Then ſhall appear (or be ſeen) the ſign of the Son of man in " heaven," (this ſignal puniſhment, and revenge on the crucifiers, from Chriſt now reigning in heaven) he hath theſe plain words, "Then ſhall they ſee the Son of man coming in the clouds with " great power and glory. (H.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. But when ye ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation, ſpoken of by Daniel the prophet, ſtanding where it ought not (let him that readeth underſtand) then let them that be in Judea flee to the mountains: And let him that is on the houſe top not go down into the houſe, neither enter therein, to take any thing out of his houſe. And let him that is in the field not turn back again for to take up his garment. But wo to them that are with child, and to them that give ſuck in thoſe days. And pray ye, that your flight be not in the winter. For in thoſe days ſhall be affliction, ſuch as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created, unto this time, neither ſhall be. And except that the Lord had ſhortned thoſe days, no fleſh ſhould be ſaved: but for the elects ſake, whom he hath choſen, he hath ſhortned the days. And then, if any man ſhall ſay to you, Lo, here is Chriſt, or lo, he is there: believe him not. For falſe Chriſts and falſe prophets ſhall riſe, and ſhall ſhew ſigns and wonders, to ſeduce, if it were poſſible, even the elect. But take ye heed: behold, I have foretold you all things.

But when ye ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation.] Here we are acquainted with the vaſt and terrible deſtruction of the temple and the ſacred city, with the calamities of the pious, and with the laſt judgment; as it hath been already recited by Matthew, namely, the abomination of deſolation is foretold. "But when ye ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation, ſpoken of by Daniel the prophet, ſtanding where it ought not." For the illuſtrating of which place we need not refer to far-fetch'd conſtructions, or uſe ſuch as others have publiſhed, as we are of opinion. The prophet Daniel, chap. xi. 38. according to the verſion of the Seventy, calls the god of the Romans the god Maozeem, that is, the god of force. Whence, probably, Mazeus was called Jupiter: For the Phrygians (as the devil is known continually to work his ſtratagems in ſuch caſes) formerly worſhipp'd him by the name of Mazeus: "Mazeus the god of the Phrygians," ſays Heſychius, the prince of Greek erudition. But as the ancients derived the name of Rome, and the original of the name, from the firſt founder, ſo there has not been wanting thoſe who believed the name came from Rome, force, or ſtrength, as we are told from a hymn of the poeteſs Erinne to Rome, to which Stobæus gives the title of ſtrength, and which the learned ſay relates to the city of Rome, and its commendation; upon a ſingular argument, as near as I can remember, which is, becauſe ſhe was the daughter of Hares or Mars, as if this could not be ſaid with reſpect to ſtrength, when the poets advance the ſame. But as to the word Hares, or Haras, the Seventy will inform us of the many alterations it ſuffers: Whence then comes Hares to be the Maozeim of the Romans, and the parent of their city? What we are ſpeaking of, the prophet calls "The abomination of amazement." Which paſſage of the xiith chapter, v. 11. as it ſeems to bear analogy to this here, Daniel ſaying "And from the time that the abomination that maketh deſolate ſhall be ſet up." There is ſufficient reaſon to think that the prophet had the other in mind. What Matthew hath already ſaid, "Set up in the ſacred place," Mark beautifully has it, "Where it ought not:" Whereby the ſacred place, that is, the temple, is pointed out, and therein Jerome and others will have Cæſar's image to be put, which opinion is refuted by others. Tho' I am no ſtranger to the idol, which Antiochus, 1 Macch. put upon the altar, being called the "abomination of deſolation," yet we know at the ſame time that the Roman ſtandard was an idol, and conſtantly had extraordinary veneration paid to it in their camps. Whence the eagles are called by Tacitus "numina legionum. Interea pulcherrimum augurium, octo aquilæ, petere ſilvas, & intrare viſæ, imperatorem advertere; exclamat, irent, ſequerentur Romanas aves, propria legionum numina." "The deities of the legions. Mean time an extraordinary occurrence for divination happen'd; eight eagles were obſerved by the emperor to make towards the woods; and enter them, upon which he cry'd out, They ſhould go and follow the Roman birds, the proper deities of their legions." Which may therefore very reaſonably be called abomination, becauſe the Roman ſtandard was either ſet up in the ſacred city, or elſe in that more holy place, the temple of the living God. Some pretend to ſay that Herod, the ſlayer of the infants, erected an eagle upon the great gate of the temple. (Heinſ.)

That your flight be not in the winter.] Becauſe the rigour of the cold deprives people from making journeys; and, according as the law commanded, it was not lawful to walk or travel far upon the ſabbath. Tho', in the caſe where life was endanger'd, this precept was of no validity, yet there are ſome Jews who diſallow of this exception, and a few among the Chriſtians, converted from Judaiſm, who, before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, underſtood themſelves free from this ſabbatical obligation: However, according to holy Thomas, "Obſervantia diei Dominicæ in nova lege ſucceſſit obſervantiæ ſabbati, non ex vi precepti legis; ſed ex conſtitutione eccleſiæ, & conſuetudine populi Chriſtiani." "The keeping of the Lord's day in the new law ſucceeded the obſervation of the ſabbath, not by virtue of any precept of the law, but by the conſtitution of the church, and the practice of Chriſtian people." Of this Auſtin ſpeaks thus, "The Apoſtles and apoſtolical perſons judged the Lord's day therefore to be kept holy, becauſe our Redeemer on that day roſe from the dead. And they called it therefore the Lord's day, becauſe, abſtaining from all worldly purſuits and employments, we devote the major part of our time on that day to religious worſhip, attributing to it both honour and reverence for the hope of our reſurrection, which we have in it. For as our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt roſe from the dead, ſo we likewiſe live in hope of riſing again at the laſt day. And from ſcripture it appears that this was a ſolemn day, for it is the firſt day of the world; in it were formed the elements of the world, in it were the angels created, in it did Chriſt likewiſe riſe from the dead, in it the Holy Ghoſt came down upon the Apoſtles, in it was manna firſt ſhower'd down from heaven. So that upon all theſe accounts the Lord's day is very remarkable. And for that reaſon the ſacred doctors of the church have decreed, that all the veneration attributed to the Jewiſh ſabbath ſhould be transferr'd to it, to the end that what they worſhipped by types and ſhadows we might perform in truth; becauſe then will our reſt and enjoyment prove real, when we have obtained the crown of a glorious reſurrection, and our reward ſhall be perfected both in ſoul and body." (V.)

Ver. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37. But in thoſe days after that tribulation, the ſun ſhall be darkned, and the moon ſhall not give her light: And the ſtars of heaven ſhall fall, and the powers that are in heaven ſhall be ſhaken. And then ſhall they ſee the Son of man coming in the clouds with great power and glory. And then ſhall he ſend his angels, and ſhall gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermoſt part of the earth to the uttermoſt part of heaven. Now learn a parable of the fig-tree: When her branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that ſummer is near; So ye in like manner, when ye ſhall ſee theſe things come to paſs, know that it is nigh, even at the doors. Verily I ſay unto you, that this generation ſhall not paſs, till all theſe things be done. Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away: but my words ſhall not paſs away. But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father. Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is. For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his houſe, and gave authority to his ſervants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye therefore (for ye know not when the maſter of the houſe cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning) Leſt coming ſuddenly, he find you ſleeping. And what I ſay unto you, I ſay unto all Watch.

Not the angels.] Our Saviour is pleaſed by this to acquaint his diſciples, not to aim at knowing things that tranſcend human nature; for in ſaying that the angels themſelves are ignorant when the day of judgment will be, he admoniſhes them of their ſtriving to inform themſelves of that, to which the angels are ſtrangers; and in adding that the Son is unacquainted with it, they are forbid not only to know, but alſo to make farther enquiry concerning it. (Chryſoſtom. & Theophylact.)

Neither the Son.] With regard to his human nature, in a ſtate of exinanition; for as to his divine nature, in a ſtate of exaltation, when he is conſtituted judge, he is no ſtranger either to the day or hour of judgment. Thus the author of the Homilies upon Mark, under the name of Chryſoſtom, ſays, "Qui ante paſſionem neſcit, poſt reſurrectionem novit," "He who knows it not before his paſſion, can tell it now he is riſen again:" Which he proves from that of Acts i. where, being asked after the reſurrection by the Apoſtles, when the kingdom of David was to be reſtored, he does not anſwer that he does not know, but 'tis not your's to know, it ſignifies little to you to know the day of the judgment. (V.) That this whole diſcourſe belongs to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, there can be no doubt to him, who compares it with Matthew xxiv. and Luke xxi. it being the ſubject of Daniel's propheſies, and afterwards of ſome of John's viſions in the Revelations, and, here, of Chriſt's, 'tis moſt certain that God revealed the time of it to this Son of man, and the reſt of his ſervants; and therefore of that, and the particular circumſtances which connect with the laſt point of it, it cannot be underſtood of the phraſe of that knoweth no man. That day and hour therefore, of which the words are to be underſtood, muſt be more nicely interpreted, to mean not the time more looſely, but more ſtrictly, that very point of time, in which this fatal blow was to be given And of this, to remove the curioſity of men, and engage their vigilance, Chriſt is pleaſed to tell them, that no diſpenſation of God, either by man, viz. Daniel, or any other prophet, or by angels, or (which is higheſt) by the Son of man, had commanded us thus to know the times, or the ſeaſons, this being no part of the prophetic office of any man, or within the commiſſion of Chriſt himſelf, to reveal this ſecret to them. What the Agnoetæ taught in this matter, and in which their ſuppoſed miſtake conſiſted, is not obvious to define. According ing to Leontius, theſe Agnoetæ were ſo called, becauſe they defined from this text, "That Chriſt, as man, (agnoei) was ignorant of ſome things," in the ſame manner as we ſay, he ſuffer'd grief. For this, ſays the ſame Leontius, Theodoſius, biſhop of Alexandria, wrote againſt them, but his authority is not great, being himſelf tainted, and deemed an heretick, as appears there; and is accounted ſo by Baronius, and the Theodoſians, or Jacobitæ, his followers. But Eulogius, biſhop of Alexandria, alſo wrote againſt them, and the epitome of his arguments and anſwers we have in Photius, the ſum of them being, That what is here ſaid of Chriſt was ſpoken ſecundum reſpectum, viz. "The human nature, of which he was head, was not without ignorance; as (ſays he) he is ſaid to be made a ſin and a curſe for us, becauſe, the head appropriating to itſelf the things of the body, he thus took upon him the things of the body, viz. of us ſinful men." Yet, after this, tho' he greatly diſlikes that, either according to his divinity, or humanity, ignorance ſhould be attributed to him, he cannot but acknowledge with Gregory Nazianzen, "That he knows indeed as God, but is ignorant as man;" only adding, that the Fathers who acknowledged or admitted ignorance in our Saviour, in reſpect of his humanity, "did not produce it as a doctrine, but made uſe of it to repreſs the Arians." Now of this diſcourſe of Eulogius pope Gregory gives his opinion in his Epiſtles, that he admires "much in it, but diſlikes nothing;" that he had written a great deal to Anatolius, the deacon, to the ſame ſenſe; that what he ſaid of Chriſt's words, that they were to be referred to him, "juxta corpus ejus, nos quod ſumus," "in reſpect of his body, which we are," is moſt true, and that St. Auſtin had often expreſſed himſelf to the ſame ſenſe; adding alſo another interpretation of the words, not that "the Son of man was ignorant of that day", ſed quia hoc ſciri minime permittat, "but that he would by no means permit it to be known." After this, he propoſeth another ſubtlety, as he ſtiles it, That the "only Son being incarnate, and made for us perfect man," in natura quidem humanitatis novit diem -- ſed hunc non ex natura humanitatis novit, "knew the day in his human nature, but not from his human nature, becauſe, being made God-man, he knew it only per deitatis ſuæ potentiam, by the power of his deity." This certainly hath truth in it, but will not eaſily be diſcern'd, how it oppoſeth them, who acknowledging Chriſt God-man to know all things, in this hypoſtatic union, yet affirm of him, in reſpect of his humanity, to be ignorant of ſome things. For 'tis not neceſſary, they ſhould mean any more in thus affirming, than that he hath not this knowledge of all things from his humanity, but from his divinity only. In Gregory's epiſtle one thing is reſolv'd, which may poſſibly give ſome light to this whole matter, viz. That he who is no Neſtorian, cannot be an Agnoeta: If this be true, then we have a competent cauſe of the Agnoetæ being called hereticks; for ſuch the Neſtorians, doubtleſs, were, denying the union of the divine and human nature in Chriſt. But the hiſtory rather inclines us to believe that the Agnoetæ were Eutychians rather than Neſtorians. For Theodoſius was one of the Diakrinonti, who oppoſed the council of Chalcedon, and thoſe who left him, about this point, of Chriſt's being ignorant of ſome things, in reſpect of his humanity, had been, till then, of his communion, and ſo oppoſers of that council. The hereſy of theſe Eutychians conſiſted in this, that they affirmed "ſo cloſe an union between the Word and the human nature, that they became but one nature" And this was that which was refuted in the council of Chalcedon; and the Agnoetæ, being oppoſers of that council, muſt be ſuppoſed to adhere to this hereſy; and then, indeed, it muſt be acknowledged, that they were hereticks, and their hereſy ſo much worſe than bare Eutychyaniſm, as it is blaſphemy to impute neſcience or ignorance to God: For ſuppoſing, as an Eutychian ſuppoſeth, that the divinity and humanity were, by union, become one and the ſame nature, 'twould be prodigious to believe, that this nature was ignorant of any thing. This, therefore, I ſuppoſe to be the ground of defining theſe Agnoetæ to be hereticks; for they were ſuch, if their doctrine was ſuch as repreſented. But for the opinions of thoſe, who firmly adhere to the decrees of all the four firſt general councils, and, conſequently, condemn all hereſies there condemned, particularly that of Neſtorius, dividing the perſons; and that of Eutychius, confounding the natures in Chriſt; and only affirm, that though, as God, he knew all, yet, as man, he was ignorant of ſome things, juſt in the ſame manner as he was paſſable, and ſubject to all human infirmities, which had not ſin in them, and that this is his own expreſs affirmation, that "the ſon of man knew not that day and hour;" which, certainly, is ſo far from hereſy, that, as the ſame Leontius elſewhere informs us, "our Saviour was ignorant of ſome things;" which is unanimouſly aſſerted by all the fathers, to which neither the council of Chalcedon, nor any other, hath taught any thing contrary. For, in his tenth praxis, reſuming this affair of the Agnoetæ, and recounting the anſwer that ſome gave, that thoſe words, neither the ſon, were ſpoken by Chriſt, "by way of prudential œconomy, to avert the diſciples from their enquiries;" he adds, as his own affirmation, "that it is not convenient to ſpeak over curiouſly in this matter; and that, therefore, the ſynod did not make any decree in it." (H.)

But the Father.] That is, But the Father only hath knowledge of that day and hour when the world ſhall be judged. But all that belongs to the Father is the Son's, and all that appertains to the Son is the Holy Spirit's. Cyril of Alexandria, as is uſual with him, beautifully expreſſes himſelf hereupon: "This phraſe, nor the ſon, ſhould not induce us to brand the word of God with ignorance, but excite us to admire rather his pity, in not refuſing, on our account, to deſcend to ſuch humility, as to take upon him all our nature, but eſpecially our ignorance. In ſaying that the Son knoweth not, he ſpoke of himſelf, after the manner of man, and yet derogated nothing from himſelf in reſpect of his Godhead. As God he knew, but as man he was ignorant; and, therefore, he did not add that the Holy Spirit alſo was ignorant, for the Spirit ſearcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God, as we read 1 Cor. ii. 10. Now if the Holy Spirit, which receives from the Son, is not ignorant (for 'tis ſaid in John xvi. 14. He ſhall receive of mine) how ſhall the Son be ſaid to be ignorant, who diſpenſes all things to the Spirit that knows? But as man he was ignorant, and as God he had perfect knowledge of it. As he was pleaſed, in reſpect of his human nature, to ſuffer hunger and thirſt, and other hardſhips of the ſame kind; ſo alſo, as he was man, he was a ſtranger to the time of that day; ſometimes he declared himſelf as God, ſometimes as man, thereby to ſhew that he was very God, and very man. He both knew and knew not when that important day would come; the latter in reſpect of his manhood, the former of his Godhead. So that he was no ſtranger to the day and hour of his coming, ſo far as the word and wiſdom of God was in him. But not to make his diſciples too much uneaſy, who were as yet raw and unexperienced, and wanted to be informed of this particular, he told them truly, that, as man, he knew not; for he took upon him all our infirmities, and, for that reaſon, ſaid, he was a ſtranger thereto. Now ſince he ſpoke this, as man, he ſhewed himſelf in all things to be like his brethren, according to Paul, Heb. ii. 17." Thus Cyril, from the verſion of George Trapezuntius. (V.)

Give authority to his ſervants, and to every one his work.] This is what the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, Epheſians iv. 11. He gave ſome Apoſtles, and ſome Prophets, and ſome Evangeliſts, and ſome Paſtors and Teachers. Hence we learn, that the paſtoral power, and the diſtinction of ſtations, in which every one has his proper employment, and buſineſs allotted, deſcends from a right divine. Hence the ancient church provided, by ſeveral conſtitutions of councils, that the ſeveral miniſters of the word ſhould not go beyond theſe limits,, or apply themſelves to affairs that did not concern them. Vide council of Nic. Oecum. 1. & al. (V.)

CHAP. XIV.

The council of the prieſts againſt Chriſt. A woman pours ointment on the head of Chriſt. The paſſover is prepared. The inſtitution of the ſupper. The captivity of Chriſt. Judas betrays him with a kiſs. He is conducted to Caiphas. Peter denies him.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. AFter two days, was the feaſt of the paſſover, and of unleavened bread: and the chief prieſts and the ſcribes ſought how they might take him by craſt, and put him to death. But they ſaid, Not on the feaſt-day, leſt there be an uproar among the people. And being in Bethany, in the houſe of Simon the leper, as he ſat at meat, there came a woman having an alabaſter-box of ointment of ſpikenard, very precious: and ſhe brake the box, and poured it on his head. And there were ſome that had indignation within themſelves, and ſaid, Why was this waſte of the ointment made? For it might have been ſold for more than three hundred pence, and have been given to the poor. And they murmured againſt her. And Jeſus ſaid, Let her alone, why trouble ye her? ſhe hath wrought a good work on me. For ye have the poor with you always, and whenſoever ye will, ye may do them good: but me ye have not always. She hath done what ſhe could: ſhe is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying. Verily I ſay unto you, Whereſoever this goſpel ſhall be preached throughout the whole world, this alſo that ſhe hath done, ſhall be ſpoken of, for a memorial of her.

Spikenard.] What is meant by alabaſter-box, has been touched upon in the preceding goſpel. But, ſetting aſide what we have hinted before, there are ſome other difficulties in that part of the ſtory, as it is ſet down with ſome variation in this goſpel. As firſt, for the kind of ointment, 'tis here ſaid to be nard, which was not any ſuch dry ointment, as ſhould require a box to put it in, or that the box to be broken for the taking it out, but fit to be poured in and out of a cruize, being moiſt and fluid; whence Nonnius calls it a dewy or watry ſubſtance. This nard is reckoned among the ſtaka, or ointments that diſtil out of reeds, either of their own accord, or when they are cut and bruiſed, and wherewith nothing is us'd to be mix'd, that ſo it may remain a pure, ſimple, liquid, and noble juice. Hence it is called ſpicata narda, ſpikenard, becauſe it thus diſtills ex ſpicis, vel ex ariſtis, out of canes or reeds. And 'tis very poſſible that they may be the ſame importance of the word piſtike, lightly varied from the Latin ſpicata. Some have thought it to come from a place called Biſt, or Piſt; whether that be the metropolis of Carimonia, or of the region of Cabul in India, is hard to determine. Others, that piſtikos, like piſtis, may ſignify ſincere, and unmixed, as the Latin ſincera, ſincere, is ſaid to be made of ſine cera, without mixture of wax, contrary to the cerema, oil and wax together, which the athletæ or wreſtlers uſed; and ſo 'tis commonly called pure nard by Tibullus:

Adown his temple the pure nard diſtills.

Thus Marcellus, in his book De medicamento; and Theophilus calls it, unmixed, faithfully prepared; and the old Gloſſary, balſamma ſine impoſturo, that is, mixtura, without any deceit. So ſays Vadianus, in Epit. de Inſulis Mar. Mediterr. "Dignum cognitu, quod Plinius tradit lib. 13. Scilicet novem herbarum ſpecies eſſe, quæ nardum imitentur, & adulterent, unde intelligimus in tanta fraudis materia uſum loquendi obtinuiſſe, ut piſtica nardus diceretur, quæ ſincera, & ſine vitio eſt, & plane adolos, germana, & nulla arte vitiata." "'Tis worth knowing what Pliny, lib. 13. affirms, that there are nine ſpecies of herbs, which imitate and adulterate nard; whence it comes that, in a matter of ſo great deluſion, Nard is called piſtike, which is ſincere, without fault, deceitleſs, and not vitiated by any art." But that which ſeems to me the moſt probable is, that as there are in the writers of the New Teſtament many Latin words, and thoſe ſomething alter'd by being turn'd into Greek, as litra for libra, &c. ſo here ſpicata may be turned into piſtike, which is, as it were, its anagram, the miſplacing, but yet retaining all the conſonant. This is I find Eraſmus's Opinion of it, whoſe judgment I think proper to recommend to the reader. (H.)

Brake.] The part of this paſſage, expreſs'd by, ſhe brake the box, and poured it upon his head, remains to be explained. That it cannot be interpreted of her breaking the veſſel, I am perſuaded; not only, firſt, becauſe a veſſel of that kind, of marble, is not eaſily broken. For Nonnius renders it a marble veſſel; and if it had been of gold, or ſilver, or other metal, 'twere as hard to be imagined. 2dly. Becauſe there was no need for breaking it. And, 3dly. Becauſe Suidas mentions this very veſſel, or cruize, together with many other famous reliques, as laid up by Conſtantine the Great, but taken away by Theodoſius the Great, which certainly, had it been broken in pieces by the woman, could not well have been laid up by Conſtantine; nor would Suidas have ſaid it was, had he ſo underſtood the word ſyntripſaſa in the Goſpel; at leaſt he would not have called it the cruize, but only ſome pieces of it. And tho' perhaps this relation of Suidas be not infallible authority, that it was kept till Conſtantine's time, which yet is authoriz'd by the durable matter of which it was made, yet an argument may be thus far drawn from thence, that they who affirm'd it to be ſo long preſerv'd, did not believe the woman broke it; and that Suidas, who was a very good grammarian, and thought it not broken, infallibly underſtood ſomething elſe, and not breaking, by the word ſyntripſaſa. But, beſides theſe, I have yet this farther argument, in that it is here ſaid, ſhe poured out of it, which was moſt proper in this affair, it being the manner to pour out ſuch ointments out of the mouth of the veſſel. So Euphemus in Pollux, Open the cruize immediately. And the manner of pouring out the ointment is there expreſſed, by uſing a ſpatula, or rudicula, an inſtrument to put into it firſt, to taſte the ointment before it is poured out, and alſo to ſtir up the thicker parts of it from the bottom, and from the ſieds, that they may come out together. To this purpoſe hath the Syriac interpreted it, ſhe opened it, and the Ethiopic, ſhe opened, and poured it. And for the word ſyntripſaſa in the active, it does not naturally ſignify to break, but rather contundere, conquaſſare, to beat, or ſhake together. Gellius, ſpeaking of a boy who was to pour oil out of a cruize into a ſallad of herbs, the oil not coming out at firſt; Concuſſum vehementius, ſays he, iterum in ollam vertit; "He ſhook, or knock'd it very vehemently," and then "turn'd the mouth of it over the diſh;" or elſe it means to rub or ſcrape. Thus the ſimple word tribo commonly ſignifies to rub, and proſtriko, to rub upon. In a few words, if it ſignifies contundere, or conquaſſare, to knock, or ſhake together, then the meaning will be, that ſhe ſhook the veſſel, or knock'd it againſt the ground, that it might run the more fluently, and the more condenſed parts riſe from the bottom, and then ſhe pour'd it on his head. But if it mean conterere, to rub, then it refers to the ſpatula, an inſtrument common among the Apothecaries, to rub, or ſcrape the inſide of the veſſel, that the ointment ſtick not to it. In one of theſe notions I doubt not its being taken. (H.)

She is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying.] As in this, and ſeveral other paſſages both of the Old and New Teſtament, we find mention made of anointing the dead, waſhing them, of the winding-ſheet, and other veſtments, in which they were wrapp'd, and of ſome other ceremonies perform'd at the ſolemnity of interment, which are entirely contrary to our method, it will not be amiſs to give the reader a deſcription of them here, as they are ſet down by Rabbi Moſes, ſon of Maimon, in the ſecond volume of his works, in the treatiſe De luctu, chap. 4. The following is his opinion of the words: 'Tis cuſtomary in Iſrael, in performing about the dead, and their interment, to ſhut the eyes of the perſon as ſoon as dead; and if his mouth be open, to cloſe that, by tying about his jaws a ſwaith, that it may not open again. Beſides this, they perfume his poſteriors, but not before he is waſh'd. After this he is anointed with ſeveral kinds of ointments, and perfum'd with different aromaticks; his head is ſhaven, and he wrapp'd in linnen of a moderate price, to the end there may be an equality between the rich and poor. The face of the deceaſed, before he is put into the coffin, is covered with an handkerchief, the price of which is not to exceed the fourth part of a ſickle. After this he is plac'd upon the bier, and carried on mens ſhoulders to the grave: but before he is let down, they repeat certain verſes made by their anceſtors to this end, wherein the divine juſtice is commended and praiſed, and the deceaſed's faults laid open, whereby he has merited death; and then they conclude with a prayer to God, ſo to exerciſe the rule of his juſtice, as to ſhew he is ſtill compaſſionate and merciful. After this, the deceaſed, with the bier he was laid upon, is put into the grave, and cover'd with earth. And then they fall to weeping; upon which they repeat ſome verſes of conſolation. Which being finiſhed, every one returns to his particular employment; neither is there any difference obſerved between the rich and the poor, between the noble and ignoble; neither in the interment of the dead, nor in the conſolation of the living. (Jun and Tremel.) According to the modern way: As ſoon as they have cloſed the eyes and mouth of the deceaſed, they wrap him up in a ſheet, cover his face, bend his thumb cloſe to the palm of his hand, and tie it with the ſtrings of his taled: for he goes to the other world with his veil on. The thumb thus bent ſtands in the form of a Shaddat, which is one of God's attributes. The deceaſed, in all other reſpects, hath his hand open, as a teſtimony that he relinquiſhes all his wordly goods: The body muſt be thoroughly waſhed, to denote that the deceaſed purified himſelf from the pollutions of this life by a ſincere repentance, and was ready prepared to receive a better from the hands of the Almighty. Buxtorff ſays, that they burn wine, and put an egg into it, and therewith anoint the head of the corpſe. Some perform this unction at their own houſes, and others at the houſe of the living, that is, in the Hebrew dialect, in the church-yard. He adds, that after this ablution all the pores of the body are ſtopp'd up. The devotees are buried in the cloaths which they wore on the day of Chipur; however, their bodies are dreſs'd in clean white linnen, and put into a coffin with ſome holy earth, as they call it, and a ſtone under the head, or a bag of earth, according to Leo of Modena. Such as in the life-time of the deceaſed omitted to be reconciled with him, muſt touch his great toe and beg his pardon, that the deceaſed may not accuſe them at the tribunal of God; and the corpſe muſt be laid on its back. Buxtorff, who gives us this ceremony, as it is obſerved by the German Jews, ſays, that as ſoon as the coffin is convey'd out of the houſe, a brick, or broken pot is thrown after it, to denote, that they drive away all ſorrow, by ſending the body out of doors. A benediction, or rather a kind of funeral oration, is made for the deceaſed over the grave. Bleſſed be God, ſay they, who faſhioned thee, &c. O ye deceaſed, God knoweth of what number ye are, and one day he will reſtore you to life, &c. After the benediction, and encomium upon the deceaſed, in caſe he deſerve one, the prayer, called The juſtice of the judgment, is repeated. After the coffin is nailed down, ten choſen perſons of the moſt coſiderable relations and friends of the deceaſed turn ſeven times round the coffin, and, all the time, offer up their prayers to God for his departed ſoul. This is the practice in Holland. When the coffin is let down into the grave, they take particular care to place it at ſome diſtance from any other coffin; and as ſoon as it is lodg'd, every one covers it with earth, either with a ſpade, or with their hands. (Rel. Cer.)

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. And Judas Iſcariot, one of the twelve, went unto the chief prieſts, to betray him unto them. And when they heard it, they were glad, and promiſed to give him money. And he ſought how he might conveniently betray him. And the firſt day of unleavened bread, when they killed the paſſover, his diſciples ſaid unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayeſt eat the paſſover? And he ſendeth forth two of his diſciples, and ſaith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there ſhall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him. And whereſoever he ſhall go in, ſay ye to the good-man of the houſe, The maſter ſaith, Where is the gueſt-chamber, where I ſhall eat the paſſover with my diſciples? And he will ſhew you a large upper-room furniſhed and prepared: there make ready for us. And his diſciples went forth, and came into the city, and found as he had ſaid unto them: and they made ready the paſſover.

Firſt day of unleavened bread.] From making a compariſon between Exod. xii. 6, 8. Levit. xxiii. 5. and Numb. xxviii. 16. we find ſome difficulty with reſpect to the beginning of the feaſt of unleavened bread. 'Tis ſaid in Exodus, that on the 14th day of the month Niſan, at even, the paſſover is to be killed, ver. 6. and the fleſh eat that night, ver. 8. and ver. 17, 18. their eating of unleavened bread is to be begun on the fourteenth day of that month at even, and to continue to the twenty-firſt day of that month at even; whereas in Leviticus and Numbers, 'tis diſtinctly ſaid: "In the fourteenth day of the firſt month, at even, is the Lord's ſupper, and on the fifteenth day of the ſame month, is the feaſt of unleavened bread." And agreeably Joſephus, l. 3. "On the fifteenth day, the feaſt of unleavened bread follows the paſſover, and continues ſeven days." Theſe will ſoon be reconcil'd, if we ſuppoſe, firſt, that the fourteenth day of the Jews began at the ſun-ſet of the thirteenth, according to the firſt calculation, Gen. i. "The evening and the morning were the firſt day" and the importance of the word nukthemeron, night, and day, for the natural day. And then, ſecondly, that between that time and the next evening, which was the full time that belonged to the fourteenth day, all was to be performed that appertained to the paſſover, namely, the place prepared where it was to be eaten, the lamb killed, and dreſſed, and eaten about the concluſion of thoſe twenty-four hours, according to that of Moſes, Exod. xii. 8. They ſhall eat the fleſh in that night; not in that night, with which the fourteenth day commenced, but in that night, or evening, which concluded, or ſhut up, the fourteenth day; meaning hereby, they ſhall not defer eating it any longer than that night, they ſhall leave none of it till the next morning, ver. 10. And then, thirdly, that this day of the paſſover being the eve or preparation of the ſeven days feaſt of unleavened bread, they were, that day, before ſun-ſet, that is, before the fifteenth day began, to remove all the unleavened bread out of their houſes, and to eat the paſſover with unleavened, to which St. Paul, 1 Cor. v. ſeems to refer, and then the feaſt of unleavened bread was to begin, and continue ſeven days, that is, from the evening, which concluded the fourteenth, and began the fifteenth day, to the evening which terminated the twenty-firſt, and began the twenty-ſecond day. Agreeable to this is that of Joſephus, Antiq. l. 2. ſpeaking of this feaſt: "We keep this feaſt eight days," beginning from the fourteenth day of the month, wherein, at even, they were to eat unleavened bread, and then to keep the feaſt of unleavened bread ſeven days after. From this explanation of theſe texts in the Old Teſtament, the controverſy, about the time of Chriſt's, and the Jews, keeping this paſſover here in the New, may be decided. And, firſt, the preciſe time, of the firſt day of unleavened bread, be defined. On the Thurſday evening, then, in which the thirteenth day of the month was concluded, and the fourteenth day began, expreſſed here by two characters: 1. The firſt day of unleavened bread, not the firſt day of the feaſt of unleavened bread, or the firſt of the ſeven days, but the preparation of that feaſt, wherein the leaven was put out of their houſes. 2dly. When they killed the paſſover, that is, on the evening which began that paſchal day, at the end of which the paſchal lamb was uſed to be ſlain and eaten; The diſciples ſay unto him, Where wilt thou that we go, and prepare that thou eat the paſſover? For, according to the uſual cuſtom, the Jews, that night and the next morning, were wont to prepare and make ready, clean the houſe, remove all leavened bread out of it, and, at length, lay the cloth, dreſs the meat, and eat the paſſover about the evening, or night after; but the truth was, Jeſus, our paſſover, was to be ſacrificed, that is, crucified himſelf, before the next evening or night, in which the paſchal lamb was uſed to be eaten, and, therefore, he reſolved to keep it ſooner, namely, in the former part of that paſchal nukthemeron. This, ſays the learned Grotius, is the importance of, My time is at hand, Matt. xxvi. 18. and of, Until I keep the paſſover, that is, in reſpect of the ſudden approach of my death, I will keep it preſently; and Luke xxii. 15. I have earneſtly deſired to eat this paſſover with you before I ſuffer; but not by eating the lamb, for that was to be ſlain by the Levites, and ſacrificed in the temple; and that this cuſtom prevailed at this time and afterwards, is evident from the hiſtory of Ceſtius, who learn'd from the prieſts, by this means, the number of lambs that were ſacrificed, and the people who were preſent at a paſſover. Theſe ſacrifices of the lambs were performed on the fourteenth day, at even only, that is, at the concluſion of that day. But there was another paſſover, which was not ſacrificed, but eaten, as a memorial of the afflictions and deliverance out of Egypt; and this conſiſted of nothing elſe but unleavened bread and bitter herbs. Now of that which Chriſt took, the Goſpels make no manner of mention of its being ſacrificed; for 'tis not thuo, I ſacrifice, but only poio, I keep, or embrace, and phago, I eat it. To this purpoſe, it may be obſerved, that as, in John xiii. 1. the time there ſpecified for the ſupper is before the feaſt of the paſſover. Upon which it is added, that Jeſus knew that his hour was come, that he ſhould paſs out of this world unto the Father, that is, that he, our paſſover, ſhould be ſacrificed, and ſo paſs himſelf before the paſſover; intimating, that what he doth now at this ſupper, was upon this conſideration, that he knew he ſhould not live to eat the lamb with them: So, at the time of the eating of this ſupper in John, which is here called this (commemorative) paſſover, the ſolemn paſchal feaſt, by the mention of thoſe things that they have need of, or againſt the feaſt, ver. 19. appears to be yet to come, the diſciples, it ſeems, conceiving that it would not follow in its proper time, as it would, had not Chriſt's death prevented it. They who could not come up to Jeruſalem to ſacrifice, were uſed to obſerve this commemorative paſſover at home, in remembrance of the Egyptian deliverance. And, accordingly, Chriſt, by his approaching death, being hinder'd from the more ſolemn celebration of it, by killing and ſacrificing the lamb, would yet keep this commemoration of it on the ſame day, or nukthemeron, tho' many hours before the cuſtomary eating of the lamb, namely, in the night before expreſſed by the evening; which, that it ſignifies not only the evening, but in ſome places neceſſarily the night, ſee note on Matt. xiv. This method of ſetting down this paſſage, will evidently reconcile all difficulty and ſeeming contradictions in the relations of this matter among the Evangeliſts. (H.)

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. And in the evening he cometh with the twelve. And as they ſat, and did eat, Jeſus ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, One of you, which eateth with me, ſhall betray me. And they began to be ſorrowful, and to ſay unto him one by one, Is it I? and another ſaid, Is it I? And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, It is one of the twelve, that dippeth with me in the diſh. The Son of man indeed goeth, as it is written of him: but wo to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed: good were it for that man if he had never been born. And as they did eat, Jeſus took bread, and bleſſed, and brake it, and gave to them, and ſaid, Take, eat: this is my body. And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them: and they all drank of it. And he ſaid unto them, This is my blood of the New Teſtament, which is ſhed for many. Verily I ſay uuto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God. And when they had ſung an hymn, they went out into the mount of Olives.

This is my blood of the New Teſtament.] The meaning is, that what is contained in this cup is a ſymbol of my blood, by the effuſion of which the New Teſtament is ratified. The New Teſtament is called that promiſe, by which God hath aſſured man to beſtow on him ſpiritual bleſſings by the new Adam; as the Old Teſtament is ſaid to be that compact or covenant, which God, in the days of old, made with Iſrael, on condition, that if they obey'd the law, which he had given by Moſes, he would reward their obedience with an affluent ſtore of the temporal enjoyments of this life. (Auſtin.)

Ver. 27, 28, 29, 30, 31. And Jeſus ſaith unto them, All ye ſhall be offended becauſe of me this night: for it is written, I will ſmite the ſhepherd, and the ſheep ſhall be ſcattered. But after that I am riſen, I will go before you into Galilee. But Peter ſaid unto him, Altho' all ſhall be offended, yet will not I, And Jeſus ſaith unto him, Verily I ſay unto thee, that this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou ſhalt deny me thrice. But he ſpake the more vehemently, If I ſhould die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wiſe. Likewiſe alſo ſaid they all.

I will ſmite the ſhepherd.] Zachar. xiii. 7. 'tis ſaid ſmite the ſhepherd. The Evangeliſts ſeem to introduce God ſpeaking, as if he was going to ſmite his Son the ſhepherd, who feeds his ſheep with his blood: Whereas Zachariah ſeems to intimate only that God ſuffered him to be ſmitten; whence it comes that the ſheep of the flock are diſperſed. Indeed, we may collect the ſame ſenſe, whether it be ſaid ſmite, or I will ſmite. For it was God, who commanded the ſhepherd to be ſmitten for the ſheep; and conſequently, what he permits to be done by others, may juſtly be deem'd to be perform'd by him. Thus we have an example of the very ſame word and phraſe in Iſaiah, who, having inform'd us of the bitter agonies of his paſſion, and acquainted us with the reaſons for waſhing away our tranſgreſſions, thus adds; "And we imagined that God had ſmitten him as a leper," to ſhew us the majeſty and greatneſs of God, in taking puniſhment upon him for our crimes, and in ſmiting his Son who was both God and Man, (V.)

Peter ſaid unto him, altho' all ſhall be offended, yet will not I: And Jeſus ſaith unto him, Verily I ſay unto thee, that this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou ſhalt deny me thrice.] In this, as in ſome other paſſages, when I find any particular rack the enquiries too much of thoſe, who are ever puzzling themſelves in the more abſtruſe places of the ſacred volumes, without giving any ſatisfaction either to their readers or themſelves, I cannot help preferring that moſt ſimple theology, that is, that which adheres the neareſt to the letter, above all other kinds: From which as often as the ancients recede, ſo often do they recommend it to others, eſpecially to thoſe who are to ſucceed them. If any one wants an example of this, let him refer to Auſtin's Agreement, with regard to what each of the Evangeliſts have advanced concerning this triple denial of Peter, and he will ſoon ſee that what I have ſaid is grounded on the greateſt veracity. Let him but peruſe the whole place, to be found in his third book of the Agreement of the Evangeliſts, and there, among other things, he will find: "Sed quia ante primum galli cantum cœpta eſt illa trina negatio, attenderunt illi tres, non quando eam completurus eſſet Petrus, ſed quando futura eſſet, & quando cœptura, id eſt, quia trina, & ante galli cantum: quanquam in animo ejus, & ante primum galli cantum, tota poſſit intelligi. Quamvis enim verbis negantis ante primum cœpta, ante ſecundum autem galli cantum peracta ſit, tota illa trina negatio, tamen affectione animi & timore Petri ante primum tota cœpta eſt." "But becauſe this triple denial commenced before the firſt crowing of the cock, thoſe three took obſervation, not to be informed when Peter would end it, but when it would happen, and when it would begin, that is, becauſe it was to be three times, and before the crowing of the cock: tho' the whole denial may be underſtood by him to happen before the firſt crowing of the cock. And notwithſtanding the denier began the whole triple denial before the firſt, and it was finiſhed before the ſecond crowing, yet through affection of mind and fear Peter began the whole before the firſt." Which we wave mentioning, as being ſentiments of more ſubtlety than edification. Now, in the firſt place, for Matthew, I conceive there can be found no difficulty in him, for, chap. xxvi. 34. he ſays, "Before the cock ſhall crow (phoneſai) thou ſhalt deny me thrice;" not before he crows, but before he ſhall crow, as the words in the Greek evidently demonſtrate, where we have the whole gallicinium, or time of cock-crowing circumſcribed; which the Evangeliſt Mark ſets down in the preceding chap. v. 35. the ſame as what he calls proi, or the morning; "Ye know not (ſays he there) when the maſter of the houſe cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning." Where the alektorophonia, or cock-crowing, ſignifies either both crowings, or only the ſecond. Which the other Evangeliſts have followed, Luke diſtinctly ſaying, "The cock ſhall not crow this day, before that thou ſhalt thrice deny that thou knoweſt me," chap. xxii. 34. And John, "The cock ſhall not crow till thou haſt denied me thrice;" that the phraſe "he ſhall not crow" may be "he ſhall not crow the ſecond time;" which Mark ſpeaks clearly and definitely, "Before the cock crow twice thou ſhalt deny me thrice," that is, before he ſhall crow the ſecond time, as I have already obſerved. And the ſame interpretation is to be put, when they ſay, "And the cock crew," namely, the ſecond time; becauſe the ſecond crowing goes before the conticinium, which by Mark is called to proi, as I have likewiſe taken notice. So that the difference between the Evangeliſts is no more than that between Horace and Juvenal; one ſaying,

> At the ſecond crowing of the cock.

And the other,

> At cock-crowing.

One,

> Sub cantum galli conſultor ubi oſtia pulſat.
> At the ſhrill crowing of the cock, when doubts
> Bring the rich client rattling at the gate:
> that is, before the conticinium.

The other,

> Quod tamen ad galli cantum facit ille ſecundi.
>
> Which, notwithſtanding, he performeth, when the cock
> Soundeth his awful note the ſecond time:
> alſo before the conticinium.

Which is preceded by the ſecond crowing, as by the to proi, which ſeems in Mark to anſwer to the conticinium. Cenſorinus ſays, "Incipiam a nocte media, quod tempus principium & poſtremum diei Romani. Tempus quod huic proximum eſt vocatur De media nocte. Sequitur Gallicinium, cum galli canere incipiunt. Deinde, Conticinium, cum conticuerunt. Tunc, Ante lucem: & ſic Diluculum, cum, ſole nondum orto, jam lucet. Secundum diluculum vocatur Mane, cum lux videtur ſolis." "I will begin from midnight, which is both the beginning and concluſion of the Roman day. The time which follows this is called After-midnight. Then ſucceeds the Gallicinium, when cocks begin to crow. Then the Conticinium, when they are ſilent. Then Before day-light. Then the Dawn, when light appears, before the ſun is riſen. The ſecond dawn is called the Morning, when the light of the ſun is ſeen." Tho' the old gloſſes place the Conticinium, as if it was between the Cock-crowing, the Grecians place the time, which they call the firſt dawn, before the to proi. How comes then the Evangeliſt Mark to ſay, "Before the cock ſhall crow twice?" Becauſe, on the one ſide, he ſpoke more definitely; and, on the other, after the manner of the ancients, who, in terminating the night, generally ſet it down at the ſecond cock-crowing. That Greek verſe is pretty well known, by which they point out the morning ſeaſon: Engliſhed thus,

> Before the cock does crow the ſecond time.

So Ariſtophanes,

> By Jove I ſwear if you ſhall come before
> The cock does crow the ſecond time.

So the author of the Moretum,

> Excubitorque diem cantu prædixerat ales.

Which may very fitly be expounded of the ſecond crowing. As for St. Mark, he had a reaſon for the triple denial, as I have obſerved; becauſe, in expreſſing the mind of our Lord, he would ſpeak more definitely. Wherein there is no difficulty. This is the particular which has ſo much puzzled the great Auſtin, who will needs have the three Evangeliſts to have ſaid, (which a very learned divine has remark'd) that this triple denial of Peter was before the crowing of the cock, becauſe it was both begun and ended before it: as if the phraſe "Thou ſhalt deny me thrice" ſhould be thus addreſs'd to ſome perſon, and run thus, "Antequam cantet gallus, ad me ſcribes epiſtolam, in qua ter conviciaberis: Id enim vere quis dixerit, etiam ſi epiſtola non fuerit abſoluta ante omnem cantum galli, ſed ante cantum galli incepta, ante eum finiatur." "Before the cock crows you ſhall write me a letter, wherein you ſhall abuſe me thrice: For any one will allow this to be true, that if the letter is not finiſhed before the full time of cock-crowing, but is begun before the cock crows, yet it is finiſh'd before it." Which, with regard to Matthew and Mark as it is not true, who ſay, "Before he ſhall crow" not "before he crows," ſo that it but the more confounds than reconciles them; but to leave things that ſeem too far ſtrained. (Dan. Heinſ.)

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42. And they came to a place which was named Gethſemane: and he ſaith to his diſciples, Sit ye here, while I ſhall pray. And he taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, and began to be ſore amazed, and to be very heavy, And ſaith unto them, My ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful unto death: tarry ye here, and watch. And he went forward a little, and fell on the ground, and prayed, that if it were poſſible the hour might paſs from him. And he ſaid, Abba, Father, all things are poſſible unto thee, take away this cup from me: nevertheleſs, not what I will, but what thou wilt. And he cometh, and findeth them ſleeping, and ſaith unto Peter, Simon, ſleepeſt thou? could'ſt not thou watch one hour? Watch ye and pray, leſt ye enter into temptation: the ſpirit truly is ready, but the fleſh is weak. And again he went away, and prayed, and ſpake the ſame words. And when he returned, he found them aſleep again (for their eyes were heavy) neither wiſt they what to anſwer him. And he cometh the third time, and ſaith unto them, Sleep on now, and take your reſt: it is enough, the hour is come; behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of ſinners. Riſe up, let us go; lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand.

Take away this cup from me.] The cup ſignifies the meaſure of the drinkables, as the part or portion denotes the meaſure of the eatables, which the Maſter of the feaſt beſtows on his gueſt. Every thing that is commonly ſet before gueſts to eat or drink is ſignified by both of theſe appellations; and conſequently, by way of metaphor, every thing to which any man has a particular right, as Pſalm xvi. 5. "The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance, (Heb. part) and of my cup," that is, he is to me inſtead of meat, and in him alone I have all things neceſſary to ſuſtain life. But the cup ſometimes means affliction, a ſcourge, or revenge that is neceſſarily to be taken; the metaphor being drawn from the wine of the condemn'd, as Amos ſpeaks, chap. ii. 8. that is, from the generous, delicate, and precious wine, which was uſed among the Hebrews to be drank to the condemn'd by their familiars or acquaintance, to alleviate their ſorrow in ſome meaſure. Villalpandus is of opinion that theſe forms of ſpeech, "to drink the cup," "to take the cup out of the hand of the Lord," &c. derive their original from certain drinking bouts, where the company were obliged to drink a certain quantity, even to the bottom of the cup. And in this each gueſt performed his part with a ſeeming ſort of pride, tho' the conſequence was the impairing both of his body and mind; becauſe this way of drinking at firſt ſeem'd pleaſant, but was found bitter and diſagreeable in the end. For what the thirſt coveted, ſatiety loathed, and nature itſelf ſhrunk back at the thing which it ſaw was ſo obnoxious and offenſive; yet, for all this, the cup was ſtill thruſt into the carouſer's hand, to be drank off. Such is the drink and ſtruggling of ſinners with divine providence. For ſinners will drink the pleaſant wine of voluptuouſneſs, and other worldly gratifications, but refuſe the bottom of the cup, that is, the bitterneſs of pain and hardſhip, tho' 'tis neceſſary they drink it. The cup in the hand of the Lord is full of the mixture of wine, yet the dregs are not wanting, of which all the ſinners of the earth ſhall drink, that is, 'tis neceſſary that all the ſinners of the earth drink the dregs of voluptuouſneſs, that is, experience the bitterneſs of pain and hardſhip, which are the appendixes of pleaſure. Of this cup Chriſt ſays to his Father, "take away this cup from me," for the lees of the cup of pleaſure, which we drink carouzing with the whore of Babylon, and (as it were) in ſtrife with God, was drank to Chriſt, the bondſman of our faith. (V.)

Ver. 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52. And immediately, while he yet ſpake, cometh Judas, one of the twelve, and with him a great multitude, with ſwords and ſtaves, from the chief prieſts, and the ſcribes, and the elders. And he that betrayed him, had given them a token, ſaying, Whomſoever I ſhall kiſs, that ſame is he; take him, and lead him away ſafely. And aſſoon as he was come, he goeth ſtraightway to him, and ſaith, Maſter, maſter; and kiſſed him. And they laid their hands on him, and took him. And one of them that ſtood by drew a ſword, and ſmote a ſervant of the high prieſt, and cut off his ear. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, Are ye come out as againſt a thief, with ſwords and with ſtaves to take me? I was daily with you in the temple, teaching, and ye took me not: but the ſcriptures muſt be fulfilled. And they all forſook him, and fled. And there followed him a certain young man, having a linnen cloth caſt about his naked body; and the young men laid hold on him. And he left the linnen cloth, and fled from them naked.

A young man.] Not John, or James the younger, as ſome have imagined, ſince Mark ſays immediately before, "And they all forſook him and fled, ſo that Cajetan's conjecture ſeems more probable, namely, that ſome one belonging to Gethſemane, a neighbouring village, being rouz'd up at the noiſe of the guards, who took Chriſt as they paſs'd along, jump'd out of bed, and ran to ſee what was the matter. However, the Evangeliſt makes this obſervation, thereby to ſhew that the Apoſtles eſcaped by divine aſſiſtance, ſince the Jews had reſolved not only to apprehend Jeſus, but alſo his diſciples. (V.)

Ver. 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64. And they led Jeſus away to the high prieſt: and with him were aſſembled all the chief prieſts, and the elders, and the ſcribes. And Peter followed him afar off, even into the palace of the high prieſt: and he ſat with the ſervants, and warmed himſelf at the fire. And the chief prieſts and all the council ſought for witneſs againſt Jeſus, to put him to death; and found none. For many bare falſe witneſs againſt him, but their witneſs agreed not together. And there aroſe certain, and bare falſe witneſs againſt him, ſaying, We heard him ſay, I will deſtroy this temple that is made with hands, and in three days I will build another made without hands. But neither ſo did their witneſs agree together. And the high prieſt ſtood up in the mids, and asked Jeſus, ſaying, Anſwereſt thou nothing? what is it which theſe witneſs againſt thee? But he held his peace, and anſwered nothing. Again the high prieſt asked him, and ſaid unto him, Art thou the Chriſt, the ſon of the Bleſſed? And Jeſus ſaid, I am: and ye ſhall ſee the Son of man ſitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven. Then the high prieſt rent his cloaths, and ſaith, What need we any further witneſſes? Ye have heard the blaſphemy; what think ye? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death.

Agreed not together.] This phraſe belongs not to the agreement or diſagreement of their teſtimonies, but to the weight or ſufficiency of them, with reſpect to the matter in hand, of putting him to death, either in regard to the number of witneſſes, but eſpecially of the crimes laid to his charge: The teſtimonies that were look'd for were ſuch as would be ſufficient to put him to death, and that muſt not be but under two or three witneſſes, and for a crime which was made capital by law. Now tho' many falſe witneſſes were brought in to bear witneſs againſt him, yet 'tis probable that their teſtimonies concern'd ſeveral matters, not two or more of them to one particular; and ſo 'tis there ſaid, that they were not ſufficient in the firſt ſenſe, in reſpect of the number of witneſſes. Afterwards, v. 57. the witneſſes agree, more than one in the ſame teſtimony, and tho' it be not ſet down in Matthew and Mark exactly in the ſame words, yet the difference is not real, but verbal, between them, as in many other narrations, and each of them affirm that the witneſſes ſaid the ſame thing. In that verſe therefore the phraſe ouk iſi, not ſufficient, ſignifies, that the teſtimonies were not of any capital crime, or of ſuch importance, as that, allowing them to be true, a man ſhould be put to death for them. And therefore it is that the chief prieſt was obliged to examine him, and at laſt adjur'd him, that he might draw ſomething out of his own mouth to condemn him: For ſo the nature of adjuring was deſign'd, Numb. v. 13. when an accuſation is not ſufficiently prov'd, and there is no witneſs againſt him. And when he concludes, by the anſwer which Chriſt made, that he had ſpoken blaſphemy, he then riſes up and ſays, "What need have we of any further witneſſes? (H.)

The Son of the Bleſſed.] It was a ſolemn cuſtom obſerv'd among the Jews, That whenever the prieſt in the ſanctuary delivered the name of God, the people uſed ſome words of bleſſing or praiſing him, ſuch as theſe, "Benedictum ſit nomen gloriæ regni ejus in ſecula ſeculorum," "Bleſſed be the name of the glory of his kingdom for ever and ever.' So, in Gemara Babylonica, Rabbi ſaid, "When I call on the name of Jehovah, do you magnify our Lord." So ſaid Moſes to Iſrael, Deut. xxxii. 3. "When I mention the name of the bleſſed God, do you magnify." So ſays Solomon Jarchi on the ſame place of Deuteronomy. From this command of Moſes it is, that, after the benediction in the ſanctuary, the people anſwer, "Bleſſed be the glorious name of his kingdom." To theſe forms were afterwards added, "for ever and ever, (or) to age and age," that is, to ages, becauſe of the hereſy of the Sadducees, ſay the Rabbins, who aver there is but one age. So Cod. Berachoth, cap. 9. "In all the concluſions of the benedictions, which were in the ſanctuary, they ſaid, from age, but after the Sadducees had perverted that, and ſaid there was but one age, they decreed that they ſhould ſay, from age to age." Many teſtimonies of this cuſtom may be found in the Old Teſtament; eſpecially in the Pſalms. (H.)

Bare falſe witneſs againſt him.] A falſe witneſs is he who underſtands not the things ſaid to him in the ſame ſenſe as they are ſpoken. For our Lord ſpoke of the temple of his body; "Ego diſſolvam, &c." "I will diſſolve or pull down, &c." Hear what Fulgentius, in his third book to Thraſymundus, ſays, "Quando enim mortuo Chriſto anima deſeruit carnem, tunc ſolutum eſt illud templum, quod fuit ex anima carneque conſtructum, & cum anima reverteretur ad carnem, tunc eſt illud templum die tertia ſuſcitatum, & tamen propter unam Chriſti Dei Hominiſque perſonam, idem mortuus eſt in corpore ſuo, qui ſuſcitavit templum corporis ſui." "When Chriſt was dead, and his ſoul left the fleſh, then was that temple diſſolved, which was compoſed of ſoul and body; and when the ſoul returned back to the body, then was that temple raiſed up on the third day; and yet, becauſe of the one perſon of Chriſt, who was both God and Man, the ſame was dead in his body, who raiſed up the temple of his body. (V.)

Ver. 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72. And ſome began to ſpit on him, and to cover his face, and to buffet him, and to ſay unto him, Prophecy: and the ſervants did ſtrike him with the palms of their hands. And as Peter was beneath in the palace, there cometh one of the maids of the high prieſt. And when ſhe ſaw Peter warming himſelf, ſhe looked upon him, and ſaid, And thou alſo waſt with Jeſus of Nazareth. But he denied, ſaying, I know not, neither underſtand I what thou ſayeſt. And he went out into the porch; and the cock crew. And a maid ſaw him again, and began to ſay to them that ſtood by, This is one of them. And he denied it again. And a little after, they that ſtood by ſaid again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them, for thou art a Galilæan, and thy ſpeech agreeth thereto. But he began to curſe and to ſwear, ſaying, I know not this man of whom ye ſpeak. And the ſecond time the cock crew. And Peter called to mind the word that Jeſus ſaid unto him, Before the cock crow twice, thou ſhalt deny me thrice. And when he thought thereon, he wept.

Thought thereon.] There are many conjectures about this phraſe, expreſſed by the word epiballon in the Greek; one, that may reaſonably ſignify thinking upon it: but this being only affirmed by Caſaubon, but not proved by any grammarian or gloſſary, will, on that account, tho' proper enough to this place, be of leſs authority; and beſides, the phraſe thinking upon it ſeems to have been contained before in Peter's remembring Chriſt's ſaying. But much leſs probable I conceive that of Salmaſius to be, that it ſhould mean putting on his hat, or covering his head: I might add to theſe another conjecture, that the Hebrew cephel being ſometimes rendred epiballo, and that commonly ſignifying to fall down, or proſtrate; and that, as an argument of ſorrow, epiballo may poſſibly mean caſting himſelf down, or proſtrating himſelf. But that which ſeems to me the leaſt ſtrained, and moſt proper to the paſſages ſet down by the other Evangeliſts, and back'd by the judgment of learned grammarians of antiquity, is this, that it ſhould ſignify Peter's looking on Chriſt; caſting his eyes upon him he wept. In St. Luke, chap. xxii. 61. 'tis ſaid, in the point of time ſet down here by Mark, that Jeſus turned, and looked upon Peter. And his doing any thing upon that look of Chriſt's, as it follows there, he remembred, &c. is an infallible argument that St. Peter looked upon him alſo, when he ſaw him look; and that he did ſo, and thereupon wept, is the ſum of this interpretation. And for authority to confirm it, 'tis Phavorinus's gloſs for epiballo to ſignify to look upon any man. (H.) This has made work enough among the learned. A modern interpreter ſays, "And when he was got out he wept;" but the celebrated Caſaubon is not of this opinion, conſtituting the phraſe thinking upon it, in the room thereof. Some have conſtrued the place to mean Peter's putting on his hat, or covering his head: Which ſentiment we owe to Theophylact, when neither of theſe interpretations come up, in my mind, to the true ſenſe of the Evangeliſt. The truth is, he began to cry vehemently. The learned Theophylact above mentioned puts the very ſame interpretation upon it, than which nothing can be more conſonant. "He began (ſays he) to cry," that is, he covered his head; and then adding juſtly, "he began to weep extremely," according to Matthew "he wept bitterly," which is the true interpretation of the place; probably, becauſe in the ſame Evangeliſt we have theſe words, And he went out and wept bitterly, which had led ſome to interpret the word epiballon, he went out. However, the moſt learned conſtruction is, He began to weep, yet the meaning being, that he began to weep bitterly. (Dan. Heinſ.)

CHAP. XV.

The ſufferings of Chriſt under Pilate. Barabbas is preferr'd to Chriſt. Chriſt is delivered up by Pilate to be crucified. He is crown'd with thorns. He is ſpit upon, and derided. Simon the Cyrenæan bears his croſs. He is crucified between two thieves. He is reproach'd. He expires. Joſeph buries him.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. AND ſtraightway in the morning the chief prieſts held a conſultation with the elders and ſcribes, and the whole council, and bound Jeſus, and carried him away, and delivered him to Pilate. And Pilate asked him, Art thou the king of the Jews? And he anſwering ſaid unto him, Thou ſayeſt it. And the chief prieſts accuſed him of many things: but he anſwered nothing. And Pilate asked him again, ſaying, Anſwereſt thou nothing? behold how many things they witneſs againſt thee. But Jeſus yet anſwered nothing; ſo that Pilate marvelled. Now at that feaſt he releaſed unto them one priſoner, whomſoever they deſired. And there was one named Barabbas, which lay bound with them that had made inſurrection with him, who had committed murder in the inſurrection. And the multitude crying aloud, began to deſire him to do as he had ever done unto them. But Pilate anſwered them, ſaying, Will ye that I releaſe unto you the king of the Jews? (For he knew that the chief prieſts had delivered him for envy) But the chief prieſts moved the people, that he ſhould rather releaſe Barabbas unto them.

Thou ſayeſt.] This verſe, And Pilate asked him, Art thou the king of the Jews? and he anſwering ſaid unto him, Thou ſayeſt it, always ſeem'd to me in this place, eſſe contemnentis, non ad animum revocantis. Tho' there is ambiguity in the Hebrew, when they ſay, vel dicis, vel cogitas, either thou ſayeſt, or thou thinkeſt. Thus our Lord, when Judas put the queſtion and asked him, if it was he whom he meant, ſays no more than thou ſayeſt. The Syriac renders it after this manner, tho' the Greeks probably ſtretch the ſaying a little farther, "And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Thou ſayeſt. Which was a very wiſe and diſcreet anſwer. He ſaid, that it was neither he, nor not he. So that what he ſaid was a medium, Thou ſayeſt. Which may have this conſtruction put upon it, as tho' he ſaid, I am: or I do not ſay that, Thou ſayeſt it. (D. H.)

As he had ever done unto them.] The next remark falls upon theſe words, the more modern verſion of which runs thus, "And the multitude crying aloud began to deſire him to do as he had ever done unto them;" which very near agrees with that of Eraſmus. As if the ellypſis was to be ſupplied in this manner, "Mean time the multitude raiſed up a prodigious noiſe, and began to ask him to do to them that which he had been accuſtomed to do before." The old verſion proceeds thus, "And when the multitude were come up (which is owing to a different reading) they began to petition what he always did to them." In the firſt place here is obſcurity, But, as it ſometimes happens in other caſes, we have a very trifling word here that throws a miſt over the reſt, which is that the word as is never uſed in the room of a relative. Of which we may find frequent examples. Thus 2 Chron. xxiv. 9. “ And they made a proclamation through Judah and Jeruſalem, to bring into the Lord the collection that Moſes, the ſervant of God, laid upon Iſrael in the wilderneſs.” The old verſion ſays, “ to bring in to the Lord what Moſes had appointed,” very juſtly. And we find the ſame thing ſometimes repeated in the New Teſtament. Thus Luke v. 14. “ And he charged him to tell no man, but go, and ſhew thyſelf to the prieſt, and offer thy cleanſing, according as Moſes commanded, for a teſtimony unto them, (that is) ſhew thyſelf to the prieſt, and for thy cleanſing offer that which Moſes commanded.” This belongs to the hiſtory of the leper. Now what Moſes commanded is very clearly ſet down by him, namely, two ſparrows, cedar wood, and hyſop. Thus, by expreſſing the word as, he includes theſe, tho' without mentioning the way of offering them. Hear what Luke ſays, chap. i. ver. 1, 2. “ Foraſmuch as many have taken in hand to ſet forth in order a declaration of thoſe things, which are moſt ſurely believ'd among us, even as they deliver'd them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witneſſes and miniſters of the word.” (Dan. Heinſ.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. And Pilate anſwered, and ſaid again unto them, What will ye then that I ſhall do unto him whom ye call the king of the Jews ? And they cried out again, Crucify him. Then Pilate ſaid unto them, Why, what evil hath he done? And they cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him. And ſo Pilate willing to content the people, releaſed Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jeſus, when he had ſcourged him, to be crucified. And the ſoldiers led him away into the hall call'd Pretorium; and they call together the whole band. And they clothed him with purple, and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head. And began to ſalute him, Hail, king of the Jews. And they ſmote him on the head with a reed, and did ſpit upon him, and bowing their knees, worſhipped him. And when they had mocked him, they took off the purple from him, and put his own cloaths on him, and led him out to crucify him. And they compel one Simon a Cyrenean, who paſſed by, coming out of the country, the father of Alexander and Rufus, to bear his croſs. And they bring him unto the place Golgotha, which is, being interpreted, the place of a ſkull. And they gave him to drink wine mingled with mirrh : but he receiv'd it not. And when they had crucified him, they parted his garments, caſting lots upon them, what every man ſhould take.

Clothed him with purple] Many particulars mentioned in their dealing with Chriſt were not from the Jewiſh but the Roman cuſtoms, ſome whereof we have taken notice of in Matthew, and ſuch was, here, putting the purple or ſcarlet robe upon him, which the text before us ſays was done by the ſoldiers ; and Luke, by Herod's ſervants, or elſe the Roman guards, Luke xxiii. 11. And ſo ſays Lazarus Bayſius, That this purple or ſcarlet gown was the Roman faſhion, called toga picta, and was, by way of ſcoff, brought to Chriſt by the ſoldiers, as if it had been ſent by the ſenate and people of Rome to him, who, as the Jews ſaid, pretended to be their king. (H.)

Ver. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39. And it was the third hour, and they crucified him. And the ſuperſcription of his accuſation was written over, THE KING OF THE JEWS. And with him they crucified two thieves, the one on his right hand, and the other on his left. And the ſcripture was fulfilled which ſaith, And he was numbred with the tranſgreſſors. And they that paſſed by railed on him, wagging their heads, and ſaying, Ah, thou that deſtroyeſt the temple, and buildeſt it in three days, Save thyſelf, and come down from the croſs. Likewiſe alſo the chief prieſts mocking, ſaid among themſelves with the ſcribes, He ſaved others, himſelf he cannot ſave. Let Chriſt the king of Iſrael deſcend now from the croſs, that we may ſee and believe. And they that were crucified with him reviled him. And when the ſixth hour was come, there was darkneſs over the whole land, until the ninth hour. And at the ninth hour Jeſus cried with a loud voice, ſaying, Eloi, Eloi, lama ſabachthani ? which is, being interpreted, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me ? And ſome of them that ſtood by, when they heard it, ſaid, Behold, he calleth Elias. And one ran, and filled a ſpunge full of vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink, ſaying, Let alone ; let us ſee whether Elias will come to take him down. And Jeſus cried with a loud voice, and gave up the ghoſt. And the vail of the temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom. And when the Centurion which ſtood over-againſt him ſaw that he ſo cried out, and gave up the ghoſt, he ſaid, Truly this man was the Son of God.

And it was the third hour, and they crucified him.] They who have read St. Auſtin's long expoſition upon this place, in his third book de conſenſu Evangeliſtarum, very well know what pains he has been at to reconcile John, who ſays the ſixth hour, with Mark, who ſays the third. Take a part of it. “ Erat autem hora tertia. Ut quid adjunxit, Et crucifixerunt eum ? Niſi quia voluit aliquid recapitulando ſignificare, quod quæſitum inveniretur, cum ſcriptura ipſa illis temporibus legetur quibus univerſæ eccleſiæ notum erat qua hora Dominus ligno ſuſpenſus ſit ; unde poſſet vel hujuſmodi error corrigi, vel mendacium refutari. Sed quia ſciebat, a militibus ſuſpenſum Dominum, non a Judæis, ſicut Johannes apertiſſime dicit, occulte oſtendere voluit, eos magis crucifixiſſe qui clamaverunt ut crucifigeretur, quam illos qui miniſterium principi ſuo ſecundum officium ſuum præbuerunt. Intelligitur ergo fuiſſe hora tertia cum clamaverunt Judæi ut Dominus crucifigeretur, & veriſſime demonſtratur, tunc eos crucifixiſſe quando clamaverunt, maxime quia nolebant videri ſe hoc feciſſe, & propterea eum Pilato tradiderant, quod eorum verba ſatis indicant ſecundum Johannem.” “ It was the third hour, (to which he adjoins) and they crucified him. What could be the meaning of this, unleſs he had a mind to recapitulate ſomething, and thereby ſignify to us, that he had found what he ſought for ? ſeeing the ſcripture was read in thoſe times, when the whole church was no ſtranger to the hour when our Lord was crucified : whence this error might be amended. But becauſe he knew, that the ſoldiers crucified Chriſt, and not the Jews, as John moſt evidently informs us, he would thereby privately ſhew us, That they who call'd out for his being crucified, were more his crucifiers, than thoſe who actually did it in obedience to the command of their officer. So that 'tis thought to be the third hour when the Jews called out for having him crucified ; and 'tis juſtly ſhewn, that they crucified him when they called out, chiefly becauſe they would not ſeem to have done it, and therefore they delivered him up to Pilate, which, as John ſets down the account, is ſufficiently evident.” Auſtin himſelf ſaw clearly into the precariouſneſs of his own expoſition, when he thus added, “ Atque utinam plures etiam ab aliis inveniantur hujus exitus quæſtionis. Quod donec fiat, utere mecum iſta, ſi placet. Si enim nullus alius exitus potuerit inveniri, ſolus iſte ſufficiet : ſi autem potuerit, cum demonſtratus fuerit, eligemus.” “ But I could wiſh that others would be at the pains to find other ſolutions of this point. 'Till when, pleaſe to uſe this of mine ; but if there can be found no other way to ſolve it, let what I have ſaid ſuffice ; yet provided it can, I ſhall be ready to embrace it, aſſoon as I ſhall have full demonſtration of the truth thereof.” In ſhort, when the learned found they could make nothing to the purpoſe from hence, the laſt ſhift they had recourſe to was to the diviſion of the day into four parts, each of which comprehended the ſpace of three hours. For the confirmation of which they cited a paſſage out of the xxth chapter of Matthew, where, as they are pleaſed to have it, the day is divided into theſe four parts, in compliance to a received cuſtom at that time, there being mention of the third, ſixth, ninth, and eleventh. As if it neceſſarily followed from hence, that the hour which John (following the Hebrews) calls the ſixth, was ſet down by Mark as the third ; or that, in order to reconcile John with Mark, the third hour included the fourth, fifth and ſixth. But I think there is no occaſion for theſe niceties. The author of the Annotations on the Pſalms, which are aſcribed to Jerome, pretends to nothing more, than that the number is corrupted. “ Scriptum eſt, inquit, in Marco, quia hora tertia crucifixus ſit. Hoc videtur eſſe diverſum. Error ſcriptorum fuit. Et in Marco HORA SEXTA ſcriptum fuit : Sed multi epiſemon Græcum ϛ' putarunt eſſe Γ. Scimus enim, quia prima eccleſia de imperitis congregata fuit gentibus.” “ 'Tis written, ſays he, in Mark, Becauſe he was crucified at the third hour." This ſeems to be different. The fault was owing to copiers. And it was written in Mark THE SIXTH HOUR. But many took the Greek ſignature ς' for Γ. We are ſenſible of this, becauſe the church at firſt was compoſed of perſons of no great learning. The particulars which go before this paſſage in Mark are by the other Evangeliſts ſet down, as happening after our Lord's crucifixion; without ſo much as mentioning the time. Firſt, as to the parting his cloaths, Matthew ſays, "And they crucified him, and parted his garments, caſting lots." John, "Then the ſoldiers, when they had crucified Jeſus, took his garments, and made four parts, to every ſoldier a part, and alſo his coat, &c." Mark, "And when they had crucified him, they parted his garments, caſting lots upon them, what every man ſhould take;" adding, "and it was the third hour, and they crucified him." "Quod evenit (inquit) hora tertia, & jam cruci affixerunt eum," is a plain Hebraiſm, very frequently uſed. Read that paſſage, "Send back my ſon, and he will ſerve me;" which the Septuagint, Exod. iv. 23. render "that he may ſerve me." Tho' not in the ſame order, for here is a ſeries of the facts, as they happened, preſerved. Of what we have been ſpeaking we have a famous example in the ſeventh chapter of Joſhua, where, in the fifteenth verſe, God thus pronounces, "And it ſhall be, that he that is taken with the accurſed thing, ſhall be burned with fire, he and all that he hath." After which it follows of Achan, and his puniſhment, in the twenty-fifth verſe, "And all Iſrael ſtoned him with ſtones, and burnt him with fire, after they had ſtoned him with ſtones." Which Hebraiſm, like the other, has given Auguſtine a world of trouble. He endeavours to find how it comes, that, when God had commanded burning, Achan's puniſhment ſhould be ſtoning. He is pleaſed to think that Joſhua (which Andreas Maſius, a very celebrated writer, hath juſtly obſerved) being inſpired by God as a prophet, referr'd God's words concerning fire, either to the puniſhment which was doom'd to Achan in the next world, or underſtood the word fire for the lapidation, or ſtoning, as of fire; becauſe this puniſhment cleanſed the offender from all his ſins and impurities, as if it had been fire: From whence is deducible the expiation of veſſels, concerning which conſult Leviticus and Numbers. Now as it is ſimply ſignified here, that he was burnt by the command of God, we are to allow at all points that the furious and ungovernable mob, through impatience and hatred of the tranſgreſſion, took care to avert the divine wrath from it, by ſtoning him firſt. The Hebrews will clear this ſeeming difficulty for us with wonderful eaſe and facility, who for the phraſe, and they ſtoned him, ſubſtitute after they had ſtoned him. The Targum will remove our doubts, as to this point, without much difficulty: We find therein the very ſame interpretation, after they had ſtoned them with ſtones. So that as the phraſe there, and they ſtoned them, is no other than after they had ſtoned them, in like manner the ſentence here, and they crucified him, means the ſame as after they had crucified him, that is, and it was the third hour ſince he began to be crucified, or, it was now three hours ſince his firſt being nailed to the croſs. In ſhort, where the Evangeliſt ſays, and it was the third hour, and they crucified him, he points out the third hour from the time he was faſtened to the croſs, that is, the third hour of our Saviour's ſufferings; as if it was ſaid, and it was now the third hour of his crucifixion. Whereby the Hebraiſm is excellently expreſſed, not informing us of the time he began to ſuffer, but of the continuation of his pain. And thus will prove true what a modern annotator has ſo ſtrenuouſly urged, That for ſome hours he was expoſed, at one and the ſame time, to mockery and puniſhment. Now let me join with this perſon, and think it far from my buſineſs either to put John's account right, or to alter any thing in Luke. Tho' this annotator, in leaving his opinion of this paſſage to others, ingenuouſly confeſſes, how little ſatisfied he has made himſelf in it. What follows in the ſequel diſcovers no repugnancy, tho' what the author principally adds, of the inſcription, of the thieves, of the diviſion of his garments (as I have already obſerved) and of other particulars, which happened at the time of his crucifixion, are neither referrable to any certain time, nor is any connected order preſerved in the narration we have of them. In ſhort, as the phraſe cited out of the Old Teſtament, and they ſtoned him, is ſubſtituted for after they had ſtoned him, ſo and they crucified him ſignifies and after they had crucified him, not when they faſtened him to the croſs. Neither do the Evangeliſts uſe the phraſe they crucified him in the notion of the conſummation of his pain, but of the pain itſelf, or of its beginning; as is evident from what we have cited out of all four. And after Matthew has ſaid they crucified him, the reſt of the chapter purſues, almoſt to the end, the narration of ſuch circumſtances as attended his crucifixion. (Heinſius.) In St. John, chap. xix. 14. we read it was about the ſixth hour, that is, about ſix a clock in the morning, when Pilate paſſed ſentence upon him, for St. John wrote his Goſpel after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and computes, not after the Jewiſh, but the Roman way of reckoning. But St. Mark here ſeems to relate the time of our Lord's being nailed to the croſs, which he ſays was the third hour, according to the Jewiſh reckoning, that is, about nine o' clock in the morning. And this obſervation removes the ſeeming difference between the Evangeliſts. (Fox.)

Superſcription.] That it was a cuſtom of the Romans to write the crime, for which any man ſuffered death, in a table, and carry it before him to execution, appears from Euſebius's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, l. 5. where it is ſaid of Attalus the chriſtian martyr, That he was led about the Amphitheatre "with a table carried before him," in which was written in Latin, This is Attalus the Chriſtian." So in Suetonius, Domitian, chap. 10. Detractum in arenam canibus objecit, cum hoc titulo, Impio locatus, &c. "He brought him out, and caſt him to the dogs, with this title or inſcription, He ſpake impiouſly." Suetonius, elſewhere, calls this elogium, a way of publiſhing his fault. So does Tertullian, in his Apology, c. 11. And as of other kinds of death, ſo particularly of thoſe that are crucified. This is mentioned by Dio, of a ſervant, "That he was carried to the croſs, with a writing, declaring the cauſe of his being put to death." From theſe words of the Romans appears the propriety of all theſe phraſes in the ſeveral Evangeliſts; The ſuperſcription of the cauſe—The charge written over his head, &c. (H.)

Ver. 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47. There were alſo women looking on afar off: among whom was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the leſs, and of Joſes, and Salome; Who alſo when he was in Galilee, followed him, and miniſtred unto him; and many other women which came up with him unto Jeruſalem. And now when the even was come (becauſe it was the preparation, that is, the day before the ſabbath) Joſeph of Arimathea, an honourable counſellor, which alſo waited for the kingdom of God, came, and went in boldly unto Pilate, and craved the body of Jeſus. And Pilate marvelled if he were already dead: and calling unto him the centurion, he asked him whether he had been any while dead. And when he knew it of the centurion, he gave the body to Joſeph. And he bought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen, and laid him in a ſepulchre which was hewn out of a rock, and rolled a ſtone unto the door of the ſepulchre. And Mary Magdalene, and Mary the Mother of Joſes, beheld where he was laid.

James the leſs.] That the poſitive, micros, is here taken for the comparative, the leſs, or the younger, doth not appear by any circumſtance of this text, or by analogy of other places. Now there were three perſons of the name of James thus known; two being Apoſtles, and the third the brother of our Saviour: ſo that this title of the leſs, in the comparative, could be no character of the third of theſe, to diſtinguiſh him from the other two. That which is moſt probable is, being a kind of cognomen, 'tis an abbreviation of micros te elichia, little in ſtature, the phraſe uſed of Zaccheus, Luke xix. 3. and ſo denotes, that James was about the ſize, or pitch, of Zaccheus, and ſo diſtinguiſhed him from the others of that name, who, it ſhould ſeem, were not ſo. (H.)

Salome.] Some call her Mary, but we read no where of this: They who favour this opinion ſeem to be miſled, in ſuppoſing that Salome is the genitive caſe, and ſo is called Mary of Salome, as Mary of Cleophas, or of James, or of Alpheus. Whence they apply the name Mary, which goes before, to this name: but wrongfully, ſince it appears from the Greek, that 'tis not the genitive, but the nominative caſe, and has no dependance on that preceding word. For 'tis not ſaid tes Salome, as tou Jacebou, but barely Salome, as the word Maria, which goes before. If it was the genitive caſe, the article tes ought neceſſarily to be join'd, eſpecially ſince the word meter had intervened, which can no way be referred to Salome. This is the way all the Grecian commentators have interpreted this paſſage: So that it makes me wonder, when I read the following in the Roman Martyrology: "Hieroſolymis ſanctæ Mariæ Salomæ, quæ in Evangelio legitur circa ſepulturam domini ſollicita." "To holy Mary of Salome at Hieroſolyma; who, as the Goſpel informs us, mourned at our Lord's funeral." Be this as it will, I am firmly of opinion, that this Salome was the mother of Zebedee's ſons: for it appears ſo from comparing Mark with Matthew, who, in his 27th chapter, calls this ſame the mother of Zebedee's ſons. And Baronius, in the Apparatus to his Annals, does not call her Mary, but ſimply Salome, ſhewing ſhe was the ſame perſon with the mother of Zebedee's ſons. (V.)

Counſellor.] What is meant by counſellor here, expreſs'd in the Greek by bouleutes, is matter of ſome queſtion. The moſt probable opinion is, that it ſignifies one of the Decuriones placed by the Romans in their colonies, or provinces. So ſays Fornerius: "Decuriones beulutai dicebantur, quod conſilii gratia allegerentur." "The Decuriones were called counſellors, becauſe they were choſen to give counſel." Now what the Decurio is, we find in the Digeſts, l. 50. tit. 16. "Decuriones dictos aiunt ex eo, quod initio, cum coloniæ deducerentur, decima pars eorum qui ducerentur conſilii publici gratia conſcribi ſolita ſit." "They were called ſo, becauſe when colonies were ſent out at firſt, the tenth part of them was appointed to ſit as a ſtanding council to manage affairs." And ſuch was Joſeph at this time, being a perſon of great eminence. (H.)

CHAP. XVI.

The reſurrection of Chriſt. He appears to Mary Magdalene, and others. He ſends the Apoſtles to preach the Goſpel.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. AND when the ſabbath was paſt, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought ſweet ſpices, that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning, the firſt day of the week, they came unto the ſepulchre at the riſing of the ſun. And they ſaid among themſelves, Who ſhall roll us away the ſtone from the door of the ſepulchre? (And when they looked, they ſaw that the ſtone was rolled away) for it was very great. And entring into the ſepulchre, they ſaw a young man ſitting on the right ſide, cloathed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted. And he ſaith unto them, Be not affrighted: ye ſeek Jeſus of Nazareth, which was crucified: he is riſen, he is not here: behold the place where they laid him. But go your way, tell his diſciples and Peter, that he goeth before you into Galilee: there ſhall ye ſee him, as he ſaid unto you. And they went out quickly, and fled from the ſepulchre; for they trembled, and were amazed: neither ſaid they any thing to any man; for they were afraid.

And very early in the morning, &c.] This verſe has given the learned no inconſiderable trouble to explain it. How comes it to be ſaid by Mark, And very early in the morning they came, &c. ſubjoining in the ſame verſe, at the riſing of the ſun; and by John, when it was yet dark? 'Tis ſatisfactory enough as to Mark, who makes no diſtinction, if we allow they came very early in the morning, and got to the ſepulchre by that time the ſun was riſing. Indeed, what the ſequel preſents us with, affords teſtimony enough what they did at the ſepulchre: "And they ſaid among themſelves, Who ſhall roll us away the ſtone from the door of the ſepulchre." Which particulars ſeem'd to carry ſo much difficulty with them in the eye of ſome of the fathers, that, in order to extricate themſelves out of it, they have had recourſe to a ſurpriſing ſubtlety, every way unaccountable and unwarrantable; this is, as if the ſun, which was eclipſed at our Lord's crucifixion, ſhould now riſe before the light. Hear what Chryſologus ſays, in his eighty-ſecond homily: "Si valde mane, quomodo orto jam ſole? Sic neſcit Evangeliſta quid dicat? Evangeliſta quid dicat ſcit, ſed quid audiat, qui non didicerit, neſcit. Non eſt erroris iſta relatio: veritatis eſt. Nec lapſum patitur ſermonis humani, ſed rei geſtæ cælitus aperit veritatem. Dixerat, ab hora ſexta uſque ad horam nonam, tenebræ factæ ſunt. Ergo ſol, qui præter horam, ut domino compateretur, abſceſſerat, claritate, cum reſurgeret dominus, ante tempus occurrit: Et qui, ut ſuo commoretur autori, ipſam meridianam ſuam mortificaverat claritatem, ut conſurgeret autori ſuo, evictis tenebris antelucanus erupit." "If very early in the morning, how comes the ſun to be already up? Does this then make the Evangeliſt not know what he ſays? No, the Evangeliſt is not guilty of this. What he ſays is not the narration of any miſtake, but of truth: He betrays no lapſe of ſpeech, but diſcovers the veracity of an action performed by the finger of God. He informs us, that there was darkneſs from the ſixth to the ninth hour. So that the ſun, to ſympathize with our Lord, departed from its juſt limits, and, on his riſing again, beſtow'd its refulgent light before his juſt time; nay, to tarry for its great author, put a ſhade over its meridian brightneſs; and, to riſe for him, broke through the darkneſs, and diſplay'd its beams before the light." Some read, "They had bought ſweet ſpices, that they might come and anoint him (and very early in the morning, the firſt day of the week, they came unto the ſepulchre) at the riſing of the ſun;" that the order of the words may be thus: "They had bought ſpices, that they might come and anoint him at the riſing of the ſun;" which was hardly poſſible to be done before the ſun was riſen. But I am under great difficulties to come into this reading. We muſt ſee then what the learned have remark'd in other books, as to this point. They affirm to have found, "the ſun being now riſen," or, "the ſun now riſing." But had it been when the ſun ſhall riſe, greater light had been afforded to this affair. For nothing is more common, both with the Jews and Greeks, than to uſe the preſent for the future: For example, to come, is put for ſhall come, to be born for ſhall be born; this is evidenced from the prophets, who ſpeak of the Meſſiah, as of one preſent. In ſhort, the phraſe, And very early in the morning, ſignifies the time that immediately follows the dawning or break of day, which the Romans call Ante lucem; or, according to that of the poet:

Ubi nox abiit, nec tamen orta dies;

When night is fled, and yet the day not ſeen.

Which Juvencus thus expreſſes:

Sidera jam mœſtis vicino cedere ſole
Incipiunt: tumuli matres tum viſere ſeptum.

The radiant ſtars of night now yielded way
To the revolving ſun's approaching ray.
The anxious matrons haſten now to ſee
The tomb of him who dy'd upon the tree. (Heinſ.)

Ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Now when Jeſus was riſen early, the firſt day of the week, he appeared firſt to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had caſt ſeven devils. And ſhe went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept. And they, when they had heard that he was alive, and had been ſeen of her, believed not. After that, he appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country. And they went and told it unto the reſidue: neither believed they them. Afterward he appeared unto the eleven, as they ſat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardneſs of heart, becauſe they believed not them which had ſeen him after he was riſen. And he ſaid unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the Goſpel to every creature. He that believeth, and is baptized, ſhall be ſaved; but he that believeth not, ſhall be damned. And theſe ſigns ſhall follow them that believe, In my name ſhall they caſt out devils, they ſhall ſpeak with new tongues, They ſhall take up ſerpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it ſhall not hurt them; they ſhall lay hands on the ſick, and they ſhall recover. So then after the Lord had ſpoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and ſat on the right hand of God. And they went forth, and preached every where, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with ſigns following. Amen.

They ſhall take up ſerpents.] This ſeems to be propheſied of by that ſybil, out of which Virgil learnt the ſubſtance of that verſe of his:

Occidet & ſerpens, & fallax herba veneni
Occidet ———

Nor ſerpents, nor ſhall pois'nous herbs prevail. (H.)

It appears from St. Paul, that this promiſe was literally fulfilled; for a viper faſtening upon his hand, he ſhook it off into the fire without receiving any hurt, Acts xxviii. 5. Chriſt, Luke x. 19. promiſes the ſame thing to the Apoſtles, though in words ſomewhat different, which evidently allude to what the Royal Pſalmiſt ſays, Pſal xci. 13. "Thou ſhalt tread upon the lion and adder. (V.)

He was received up into heaven.] "Until the time of reſtitution of all things," as it is ſaid, Acts iii. 21. that is, until the end of the world, when he ſhall return to judge the living and the dead. That Chriſt aſcended into heaven from the top of mount Olivet, appears from this, that he went up ſo far, till the clouds came between him and the ſpectators. 'Tis ſaid, he aſcended far above all heavens, Epheſ. iv. 10. to the end all things might be fulfilled by him. (V.)

And they went forth and preached every where, the Lord working with them.] The induſtry of the holy Apoſtles was incredibly great, yet was their ſucceſs greater than their induſtry, even beyond all human expectation, which will evidently appear, if we conſider the vaſt ſpreading of the Goſpel in ſo ſhort a ſpace of time; for in thirty years after our Saviour's death, it was ſpread through the greateſt part of the Roman empire, and reached as far as Parthia and India. Again, the wonderful power and efficacy, which the Goſpel had upon the lives and manners of men; the generality of thoſe who entertained the Goſpel were obedient to it both in word and deed, becauſe Chriſtianity being an hated and perſecuted profeſſion, no man could have any inducement to embrace it, who did not reſolve to practice it, and live up agreeably to the doctrines it taught. (B.)

The END of the Goſpel according to St. MARK.

CRITICAL and EXPLANATORY

ANNOTATIONS

UPON THE

HOLY GOSPEL

St. LUKE.

ST. Luke (who wrote in the year 36 of the common æra of Jeſus Chriſt, 25 years after the paſſion) was of Antioch, which is the metropolis of Syria. St. Paul informs us, that he was a phyſician, as he himſelf calls him. He was not of the number of the Twelve Apoſtles, no more than Saint Mark, but one of their diſciples: So that he did not write what he ſaw, as St. Matthew and St. John did, but what he learnt from thoſe that were eye-witneſſes, as he teſtifies at the beginning of his Goſpel. For this came to paſs by the wiſe counſel of God, ſays St. Auſtin, that of the four Evangeliſts, two having been Apoſtles, the remaining two ſhould not be ſo; to the end it might not be believed there was any difference in their writings, who ſaw the actions of Jeſus Chriſt with their own eyes, and thoſe that deſcribed them from the faithful relation of thoſe that had ſeen them.

God deſigning in this manner to ſhew us, that the certitude of the Evangelical Hiſtory comes not only from thoſe who have made it, and relate the things which they have ſeen themſelves, which is ordinary in ſeveral hiſtories, whoſe certainty is only human and moral; but that it is grounded on the particular aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, who dictated all their words to the Evangeliſts, as well to St. Mark and St. Luke, who were diſciples to the Apoſtles, as to St. Matthew and St. John, who were Apoſtles themſelves.

For as St. Mark was the diſciple of St. Peter, ſo St. Luke was the diſciple of St. Paul; which occaſioned Tertullian to ſay, That the Goſpel of St. Luke was commonly attributed to St. Paul, and St. Paul gives this excellent teſtimony of St. Luke (as is obſerved by ſeveral Fathers, and eſpecially of St. Ambroſe, when he ſays of him) that he is commended for his Goſpel in all the churches; to which St. Ambroſe adds, What praiſe does he not deſerve, who has received ſo great a commendation from the doctors of all nations?

St. Luke (ſays Euſebius) does himſelf relate, at the beginning of his Goſpel, the motive he had of writing, in ſaying, that ſeveral haſtily undertook to write the evangelical hiſtory, he thought himſelf therefore obliged to do it, after an exact information from thoſe who had been the diſpenſers and miniſters of it; that is to ſay, from the Apoſtles, and eſpecially St. Paul, with whom providence had particularly engaged him, to hinder the word of the Goſpel from being ſophiſticated by the mixture of error and falſhood.

St. Luke's Goſpel is written in a purer ſtyle than that of St. Mark and St. John, he being better acquainted with the Greek tongue, as is obſerved by St. Jerome; which alſo appears in the ſtyle of the Acts of the Apoſtles.

He wrote his Goſpel about the year of Jeſus Chriſt Fifty Six, twenty-five years after his aſcenſion.

The ſame father teſtifies, that St. Luke always remain'd in celibacy, and that he liv'd to the eighty-fourth year of his age; and the church ſays of him, that he continually bore on his body the marks of the croſs; and therefore tho' his death was not honour'd with ſufferings (which ſeveral of the fathers queſtion) yet one may ſay, according to the expreſſion of St. Jerome, that his life has been a continual martyrdom.

CHAP. I.

Luke's preface. Zacharias and Elizabeth. John, what he ſhall be. Zacharias, for his unbelief, becomes dumb. An angel ſalutes Mary, and annunciates to her the nativity of our Lord. Mary viſits Elizabeth. Mary's ſong. Zacharias's ſong of praiſe in ſpeaking of the coming of the promiſed Meſſiah. John's office.

Ver. 1. FOraſmuch as many have taken in hand to ſet forth in order a declaration of thoſe things which are moſt ſurely believed among us.

Moſt ſurely believed.] The Greek word plerophoreo, rendred here moſt ſurely to be believed, has ſeveral interpretations in the New Teſtament. In the firſt place it means no more than to be fulfilled, performed, or done. In 2 Timothy, iv. 5. we find this phraſe fulfill or perform thy miniſtry. So ſays Phavorinus, “fulfill” adding, “as the Apoſtle ſaith, fulfill or perform thy miniſtry.” So, in Nilus, the phraſe to fulfill the deſire, is to do what is deſired. So again, 2 Timothy iv. 17. 'tis ſaid, “That the preaching may be fulfilled,” meaning, that it may be gone through with, that it may alſo be preached to the Gentiles. So in Heſychius we read, “The Old Teſtament did not perfect or compleat the inward man to piety.” And ſo in the place now before us, “A declaration of thoſe things which have been done, performed, or acted amongſt us.” Of which the narration in the ſequel does conſiſt. This is perfectly agreeable to the Hebrew melah, which ſignifies to fulfill, and perform, as well as to fill. Thus the Hebrews have a proverb, “Let a man fulfill his heart,” that is, let him do what he has a mind to. In the Pſalmiſt, “To fill or fulfill all your mind” ſignifies “to grant all your petitions.” In the ſecond place it denotes to fill, and conſequently plerophoria means fulneſs or plenty. In Col. xxii. we read, “the riches of the fulneſs of underſtanding.” And becauſe the Hebrew melah ſignifies a metaphorical, as well as a real filling or infuſing, ſo doth plerophoreo. But this is not yet its largeſt extenſion: ſtill the notion of it is changed, according as the ſubject matter is, to which it is applied. For if it be applied to the heart, which is the principle of action, then it ſignifies to incite a perſon to the undertaking or performing of any action, to embolden him to atchieve any thing: And when it happens that there is any difficulty attending ſuch an undertaking or performance, then it particularly means, “to give courage or confidence, to embolden,” &c. Thus in Acts v. iii. 'tis written, Why hath Satan filled thy heart, that thou ſhould'ſt lie, or deceive the Holy Ghoſt?” that is, How came Satan to incline or embolden thee to perpetrate this villany? Thus we find in Eccleſ. viii. 11. “The heart of the ſons of men is filled to do evil:” meaning, Men are incited by their impunity to perform in this manner. So Heſter, vii. 5. “Who hath filled his heart to do this?” or, “Whoſe heart hath filled him to do this?” where the Greek diſtinctly reads, “Who is it that hath dared?” to ſignify the danger to which the performer expoſed himſelf, and conſequently, the boldneſs of the adventure. Thus this word plerophoreo is uſed commonly to ſignify boldneſs, confidence, and the like. In Hebrews vi. 11. we read “confidence of hope;” and Hebrews x. 22. “confidence of faith;” being the effect of being purified from an evil conſcience in the end of the verſe, and the inſtrument of coming chearfully to God in the beginning. Thus 'tis to be underſtood, Rom. iv. 21. That being confident that God was able, we boldly depended thereon. So, 1. Theſ. i 5. “Our Goſpel has been towards you,” that is, hath been preached to you, “not only in word, but in power, and in the Ghoſt, and that with much confidence;” for ſo the next words “as ye know what manner of men we were among you” are interpreted, chap. ii. 2. “we were confident in our Lord to ſpeak the Goſpel of God to you in much contention.” So Romans xiv. 5. “Let every man have aſſurance in his own underſtanding.” In fine, theſe are the places, where the word is uſed in theſe books, which are in the firſt place put here together on that account. (H. and W.)

'Tis not improbable but that ſome of the Fathers, in the beginning of this Evangeliſt, which reads, “Foraſmuch as many have taken in hand to ſet forth in order a declaration of thoſe things which are moſt ſurely believed among us;” have been at more pains than was neceſſary, in ſhewing that the others, who have endeavoured this way, have rendered their labour abortive. This they pretend the Evangeliſt intimates. And from hence has riſen a very old opinion, that the preface of this Evangeliſt points at falſe Evangeliſts. Hear what St. Ambroſe ſays upon this paſſage: “Sic & nunc in Novo Teſtamento multi evangelia ſcribere conati ſunt, quæ boni nummularii non probaverunt. Unum autem tantummodo in quatuor libros digeſtum, ex omnibus arbitrati ſunt eligendum. Et aliud quidem fertur evangelium, quod Duodecim ſcripſiſſe dicuntur. Auſus eſt etiam Baſilides evangelium ſcribere, quod dicitur ſecundum Baſilidem. Fertur etiam evangelium, quod ſcribitur ſecundum Thomam: Nam aliud ſcriptum ſecundum Matthiam. Legimus aliqua, ne legantur; legimus, ne ignoremus: legimus, non ut teneamus, ſed ne repudiemus, & ut ſciamus in quibus magnifici iſti cor exaltant ſuum.” “Likewiſe in my time have many ſet about to compoſe the Goſpels in the New Teſtament, which yet have not been approved by good judges. There is one indeed which is digeſted into four books only, and this ſeems to have a general approbation. There is another Goſpel, which, according to report, was wrote in twelve. Baſil had the confidence too to compoſe a Goſpel, which is entitled, The Goſpel according to Baſil. Beſides this, there is ſtill another, with this title, The Goſpel according to Thomas. And another, according to Matthias. I peruſed ſome of them, to hinder others from doing the ſame: I read, not to be a ſtranger to their contents: I peruſed them, with no deſign to cloſet them up in my memory, nor to reject them, but to acquaint myſelf in what paſſages theſe eminent men principally exerted themſelves.” And a little after he proceeds thus, “Quoniam multi conati ſunt. Conati utique illi ſunt qui implere nequiverunt. Ergo multos cæpiſſe nec impleviſſe etiam ſanctus Lucas teſtimonio locupletiore teſtatur, dicens, Plurimos eſſe conatos. Qui enim conatus eſt ordinare, ſuo labore conatus eſt, nec implevit, &c.” “Foraſmuch as many have taken in hand. However, they who have thus taken in hand, were not able to finiſh what they deſigned. So that many undertook the employment, and did not perfect it, as St. Luke more copiouſly informs us, when he ſays that many have taken in hand. Now he who goes about to ſet forth in order, takes in hand properly with his own labour, neither does he accompliſh what he intends.” Which, whether it holds always ſo, is not a matter to be told thoſe who underſtand the Greek language. Certain it is, that among hiſtorians 'tis not very frequently ſeen, that he who takes in hand arrives at the laſt point of his undertaking: And, amongſt rhetoricians, he who takes in hand very often falls ſhort of what he aims at, and wants to bring to a concluſion. As to Epiphanius, he does not oppoſe this opinion, but is pleaſed to have Cerinthus and Merinthus underſtood in the text of the Evangeliſt. In this he combats the Allogi; “Siquidem multi ſunt conati: Ut eos qui idem tentarunt, Cerinthum & Merinthum, puta, alioſque ſignificet. Quid autem addit? Viſum eſt mihi, ut ordine ſecutos eos qui inſpectores ipſi & miniſtri doctrinæ fuerunt, eadem exprimerem, atque ad te, præſtantiſſime Theophile, ſcriberem. Sive autem, quod ad quendam tum ſcriberet Theophilum, ita loquitur, ſive quemvis qui Deum amat, eo nomine deſignet. Ut ejus (inquit) qua imbutus es doctrina veritatem agnoſcas. Et inſtitutionem præmiſſam quidem dixit, ut qui ab aliis jam quidem eam accepiſſet, neque tamen ut debebat hauſiſſet. Deinde, ſecundum id quod accurate ab eo præſtitum, narrare incipit: Fuit in diebus Herodis, &c.” “Foraſmuch as many have taken in hand; with a view to inform us who they were that thus took in hand, namely (according to my opinion of the Evangeliſt) Cerinthus, Merinthus, and others. But pray what does he add to this beginning? Even as they have delivered them to us, who were eye-witneſſes and miniſters of the word: it ſeemed good to me alſo to follow them in order, expreſs the ſame things, and write unto thee, moſt excellent Theophilus. Now whether he wrote this to Theophilus, as a particular perſon, or to every one who loved God, is not determined. That thou might'ſt know (ſays he) the certainty of thoſe things wherein thou haſt been inſtructed. He before-hand informed us of his deſign; and that he had received it from others, but had not acted in it ſo juſtly as he ought. At laſt, he begins his narration of thoſe things which he had faithfully performed, thus; There was in the days of Herod, &c. Now there is much more reaſon to fear, leſt, whilſt we argue too cloſely on the phraſe taken in hand, Luke, whom they are pleaſed to call the third writer in order, ſhould be thought to extract ſome particulars from the former Evangeliſts; which he neither did, would, nor ought. (D. H) This Goſpel, together with the Acts of the holy Apoſtles, was written by St. Luke, the beloved phyſician and companion of St. Paul, who wrote, as the other Evangeliſts did, by the immediate direction and inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt. St. Luke dedicates his Goſpel, together with the Acts of the holy Apoſtles, to Theophilus, who was, as ſome think, an honourable ſenator, or, according to others, a renowned and eminent perſon in the church. But many take the word Theophilus not for a proper but a common name, ſignifying every one who loveth God, to whom our Evangeliſt addreſſes his diſcourſe. The firſt four verſes of this chapter are a preface to the following hiſtory, and acquaint us with the reaſons that induced Luke to write, namely, becauſe divers perſons in that age had imprudently and inconſiderately ſet upon writing Goſpels, without direction from the Spirit of God, whoſe miſtakes were to be corrected by a true narrative. Luke declares he was able to make this, having had perfect underſtanding and knowledge of the truth of thoſe things he was about to relate, partly by his familiarity with St. Paul, and partly by his converſation with the other Apoſtles, who, conſtantly attending our Saviour, were eye and ear witneſſes of thoſe things which are the ſubject matter of the enſuing hiſtory. From hence we learn that there were ſome apocryphal writings (or writings which were not of divine authority) relating to the New as well as the Old Teſtament; as the books of Aſher, Gad, and Iddo, are recited in the Old Teſtament, but were never received into the canon of the ſcripture, ſo there were ſome Goſpels, or hiſtorical narrations of our Saviour's life and actions, wrote by perſons which the church never received, as not having the impreſs of God's ordination. (B.)

Ver. 2. Even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witneſſes, and miniſters of the word:

Miniſters] This phraſe will rationally admit of two acceptations, I mean, miniſters of the word. Firſt, o logos, the word, may ſignify, as it doth in ſome other places, the matter or the thing ſpoken of; for in that ſenſe it reads, ver. 4. namely, "the words (that is, the things) wherein thou haſt been inſtructed." So, chap. ii. 15. 'tis ſaid "the word" which means "the thing performed." In this ſenſe of the word logos, the Apoſtles, as thoſe were who belonged to Chriſt, will be inſtruments and officers, who not only were eye-witneſſes of, but performed themſelves the things or the paſſages which are here related. This explanation of the phraſe admits of the plaineſt and cleareſt meaning. But, in the ſecond place, other learned men, among whom is Budæus, embrace a different opinion, that o logos means here, as it generally does throughout the Goſpel of St. John, the Word, that is, Chriſt incarnate. Tho' it appears probable that St. John was not the only perſon, who appropriated this phraſe or title of Chriſt, becauſe the Jews ſeem to have known this ſtile before Chriſt's time. Indeed, the Chaldee Paraphraſt very frequently uſes it, in ſaying, "The word of the Lord:" For example, in Gen. iii. 32 we read, "The Lord ſaid, behold the man, &c." Now the Targum ſays, "And the word of the Lord God ſaid, Adam, whom I have created alone in my age, as I am alone in the higheſt heavens" But for a farther account of this ſee the learned Fagius on the Chaldee Paraphraſt. So Gen. xxvi "The word of the Lord created Adam." So Iſaiah i. 17. inſtead of my ſoul, the Targum hath my word (hateth) and chap. xlv. 17. "Iſrael is delivered, or ſaved by the Lord:" the Targum reads, "by the word of the Lord." So Jer. i. 8. "Becauſe I am with thee;" the Targum reads, "becauſe my word is with thee." And ſo Pſalm cx. i. "The Lord ſaid unto my lord;" the Targum reads, "The Lord ſaid to his word." And to Abraham, Gen. xv. 1. "I am thy ſhield, my word is thy ſhield." So Chriſt is called the Word, in the Alcoran; and therefore Ben Achmet, who wrote a paraphraſe thereof, expounds his word by the Son of man. But farther, it ſeems the heathen had been uſed to this word in the very ſame interpretation here recited, for a great many ages. And Amelius, upon reading the beginning of St. John's Goſpel, thus exclaimed, "Per Jovem barbarus iſte cum noſtro Platone ſentit, verbum Dei in ordine principii eſſe." "This barbarian holds the ſame opinion as our Plato, that the word of God is in the order of principle. Thus Julian, the apoſtate, hath Jeſus, God, Word. But of the full importance and cauſe of this name ſee Solomon Glaſſius. (H.)

Ver. 3. It ſeemed good to me alſo, having had perfect underſtanding of all things from the very firſt, to write unto thee in order, moſt excellent Theophilus.

Excellent Theophilus.] We are at a loſs to know whether the word Theophilus here was the proper name of a particular perſon, or whether it does not rather ſignify, as a counterfeit title, every Chriſtian who loved God, to whom he addreſſes his diſcourſe. Thus Epiphanius ſpeaks, in his 51ſt Hereſy, "Whether he wrote to one Theophilus, when he ſaid this, or whether to every man who loved God;" leaving us in an uncertainty which to follow as the right. Thus Salvian, in his epiſtle to Salonius, prefix'd before his book ad Eccleſ. Cathol. giving him an account, why he did not inſcribe thoſe books by his own name, but by that of Timothy, ſays he followed the example of this Evangeliſt, "Qui in utroque divini operis exordio, Theophili nomen inſcribens, cum ad hominem ſcripſiſſe videretur, ad amorem Dei ſcripſit:" "Who in the beginning, both of his Goſpel and Acts, inſcribing the name Theophilus, and thereby ſeeming to have written for man, he wrote to, or for, the love of God." So in Athanaſius, of the Incarnation, the word bleſſed, and the phraſe lover of Chriſt, are uſed indifferently for Chriſtians. So that then the word render'd excellent will be no appellation of honour, nor ſignify any more than optimus in Latin, which is no other than a bare form of civility only. (H. and W)

Ver. 5. There was in the days of Herod, the king of Judea, a certain prieſt named Zacharias, of the courſe of Abia: and his wiſe was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elizabeth.

Of the courſe of Abia.] Tho' the word ephemeria literally denotes but the ſervice of one day, yet 'tis not to be underſtood ſo in this place, but taken in a greater latitude, for the ſpace of a week. So ſays Titus Boſtrenſis, "You muſt not underſtand the word of daily continuance, and ſerving in the temple, but of a weekly ſpace. (H.) The prieſts were divided by David into twenty-four courſes, 1. Chron. xxiv. 3, 4. One of theſe courſes attended on the ſervice of the temple every week; and there being many in every courſe, it was determined by them who ſhould burn incenſe before the Lord: Each courſe in their turn, according to the order appointed, came in on the ſabbath-day, and went out the ſabbath following. (Fox.) Zacharias was a prieſt who had a courſe in the temple, or a right to officiate there when it came to his turn; for we read in 1. Chron. xxiv. 10. "That David appointed the prieſts, the ſons of Aaron, to miniſter by turns, and divided them into twenty-four courſes;" every one miniſtring in the temple by their weeks. (B.)

Ver. 10. And the whole multitude of the people were praying without, at the time of incenſe.

The time of incenſe.] When the prieſt offered incenſe within the ſanctuary or tabernacle, the people were left alone without, in the atrium Judæorum, or court of the Jews, praying for the pardon of ſins, every man apart for himſelf, till the prieſt came back again, and pronounced the benediction. This is the paſſage that ſeems to be referred to by the half hour's ſilence in heaven, mentioned Rev. viii. 1. which is ſet down there, to point to the time of the prieſt's being gone in to offer incenſe. This is punctually ſet down in Eccleſ. l. where, ver. 15. we are told, "That the high-prieſt Simon, the ſon of Onias, offering the odour of ſweet ſmell, or of incenſe, unto God, Then (ſays he) the ſons of Aaron cried out, and ſounded with trumpets," ver. 18. (As in the juſt cited place of Revelations it immediately follows, "The ſeven trumpets were given to the angels.") And then comes after, ver. 19. "Then all the people together made haſte, and fell on their faces to the ground." And ver. 21. "The people beſought the Lord moſt high in prayer before the merciful, until the miniſtry of the Lord (meaning the incenſe) was performed, and they had finiſhed his ſervice." All which is a diſtinct deſcription of this manner of the people's praying without, while the prieſt offered within. As to the two other parts, firſt, of giving praiſes to God, and ſecondly, of the prieſt's pronouncing the eulogy, or benediction, they are likewiſe ſet down there; the one, ver. 20. "The ſingers ſang praiſes with their voices, &c." And the other, ver. 22. "Then deſcending he lift up his hands over all the congregation of the children of Iſrael, to give bleſſing to the Lord," or "the Lord's bleſſing out of his lips." (H.)

Ver. 17. And he ſhall go before him in the ſpirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the diſobedient to the wiſdom of the juſt, to make a ready people prepared for the Lord.

To the wiſdom.] The difficulties of underſtanding this, will be beſt avoided, and the obvious ſenſe of it more clearly be ſeen, if it be firſt obſerved, that, in the Hebrew language, there are but few propoſitions, in compariſon with the number we find in the Greek tongue. By which means it comes to paſs, that, as our Engliſh tranſlators frequently miſtake and confound the ſenſe of ſcripture, by not obſerving this (as for inſtance, Job ii. 4. where we render skin, for skin, it ſhould be skin, and after skin, that is, one thing that is neareſt to us, after another, yea all that a man hath will he give for his life) So in the writings of thoſe, who, being Jews by birth, write in Greek, that is, in the Greek tranſlation of the Old Teſtament, and writings of the New, the Greek propoſitions are uſed in the latitude that belongs to the Hebrew, and not according to the ſtrict propriety of the Greek idiom in Athenian writers, but far more looſely and promiſcuouſly. This has been already obſerved on occaſion of epi with a genitive caſe, Matt. i. 11. which cannot there ſignify under but before, and ſo in other places. The ſame is often obſerved of en, that it means, beſides the common notion of it, ſometimes within, ſometimes into and for, and this purely becauſe the Hebrew beth is uſed in that latitude. This being thus premiſed, the next thing obſervable is, that the expreſſion of the office of John Baptiſt, and the ſimilitude thereof to that of Elias, is extracted here from Malachi iv. 6. In this prophet we find his preaching of repentance, expreſſed by his turning the heart of the fathers with the children (for beth is to be tranſlated there with, and not to) and the heart of the children with the fathers, that is, converting fathers and children together, and perſuading them to repent, and amend their lives, Matt. iii. 2. Matthew, chap. xvii. 11. and Mark ix. 12. recite this place of Malachi out of the Septuagint, which reads, He ſhall reſtore, or return, all, meaning, all men, the neuter word pauta, all, being frequently taken for the maſculine, as may be ſeen in Matthew xviii. 11. and 18. by thoſe who underſtand the original. Now there is nothing in the Septuagint in the room of the heart of the fathers with the children, &c. but only pauta, all, denoting that that, and nothing more, was the meaning of the phraſe in Malachi, He ſhall convert the heart of the fathers with the children, and of the children with the fathers, and he ſhall preach repentance to the whole Jewiſh nation, denoted by the phraſe, the land, in the concluſion of that verſe in Malachi; which God there threatens to come and deſtroy with a curſe, that is, finally and univerſally, if the preaching of John the Baptiſt, of Chriſt, and of the Apoſtles, do not bring them to repentance. Now what the two Evangeliſts expreſs ſo compendiouſly, He ſhall reſtore, or return, all, is more copiouſly repeated in this place out of the words of Malachi, to convert the hearts of the fathers. Whence 'tis evident that the prepoſition epi muſt be taken in the ſame notion as the Hebrew beth, which belongs to the above-cited place of Malachi, and, conſequently, is not to be render'd to, but with the children. To this clear ſenſe, John Baptiſt ſhall go before Chriſt, as his herald, to prepare his way in mens hearts, by preaching repentance. The firſt part of this period being thus explained, the ſecond, which is not taken from Malachi, but is a kind of gloſs or paraphraſe to explain the obſcure prophetic expreſſion, will more eaſily be interpreted, if we obſerve firſt the ſignification of the word phronein in the New Teſtament, which commonly ſignifies to mind, to deſire, to like, to look after with an appetite, from the noun phrenes, which is uſed for affections, appetite, &c. Thus 1 Cor. xiv. 20. Children in appetites, or deſigns, or inclinations, expreſſed by phrenes in the original. Thus Rom. viii. 6, 7. The minding (or phronemata) of the fleſh, and of the ſpirit, that is, thoſe appetites which the fleſh on one ſide, and the ſpirit on the other, incline men to, or, as Theophylact moſt fully expreſſes it, "The deſire and purſuit either of carnal, or ſpiritual things." Now if the word phronein is to be taken in this ſenſe, 'tis "the minding of juſt things," and being applied to that which went before, namely, turning the hearts of the fathers unto the children, it will perfectly agree with it. He ſhall bring men to repentance, and the moſt diſobedient to the minding of juſtice and righteouſneſs, that is, of all good things But 'tis ſtill poſſible that the above-mentioned Greek word is taken here for that practical virtue of prudence (as it is at large defined by the Moraliſt) the practical knowledge of thoſe things, which are truly eligible; the knowledge that will bring men to the true juſtice; the judging of what is, or what is not to be done, according to the rules of juſtice. And 'tis poſſible, again, that the word dikaion, of the juſt, ſhould be the maſculine gender, and ſo the phraſe render'd, the prudence, or practical wiſdom of juſt men. And then it will alſo be anſwerable to the text in Malachi, thus, That he ſhall convert the Jews, even the moſt vicious of them, to that practice of all moral virtues which denominates men juſt, that is, that this ſhould be the deſign of John's preaching, to make them ſuch, to work ſuch a general reformation among the Jews. As for the prepoſition en, that, as has been ſaid, is commonly uſed for eis, or epi, to, or elſe it will be hard to find out any ſenſe of theſe words. (H. and W.) St. John Baptiſt did, in many things, reſemble Elias, and, therefore, is not improperly called by his name. Did the latter expreſs a mighty zeal for the glory of God? ſo did the former. Did Elias reprove wickedneſs, even in the greateſt perſons, as Ahab and Jezabel? the Baptiſt did the ſame in Herod and Herodias. Did the one live in a corrupt age, and apply himſelf to reform the vices of the times? ſo did the other. Was Elias a man of a ſtrict life? ſo was the Baptiſt. Was the former perſecuted by Ahab and Jezabel? the latter was perſecuted by Herod and Herodias. It is not, therefore, without reaſon that he is called by our Lord Elias. (F) It was foretold of John the Baptiſt, that He ſhould drink neither wine, nor ſtrong drink, that is, that he ſhould be a very temperate and abſtemious perſon, living after the manner of the Nazarites, tho' he was not ſeparated by any vow of his own, or of his parents, but by the ſpecial deſignation and appointment of God only: He ſhall be filled with the Holy Ghoſt from his mother's womb, that is, he ſhall be furniſhed abundantly with extraordinary gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, which ſhall very early appear in him. His high and honourable office is declared, namely, that He ſhould go before the Meſſiah, as his forerunner, with the ſame ſpirit of zeal and courage againſt ſin, which was found in the old prophet Elias, whom he did ſo nearly reſemble. The great ſucceſs of his miniſtry being foretold, that He ſhould turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the diſobedient to the wiſdom of the juſt, that is, the hearts of the Jews to the Gentiles, according to the opinions of ſome; that he ſhould bring men, according to thoſe of others, even the moſt diſobedient and rebellious Phariſees and Sadducees, Publicans and Sinners, unto repentance, unto the minding of juſtice and righteouſneſs, and all moral duties: And thus he made ready a people for the Lord," by fitting men to receive Chriſt upon his own terms and conditions, namely, faith and repentance. From the whole note, that thoſe, whom the Almighty deſigns for eminent ſervice in his church, he furniſhes with endowments ſuitable to their employments; and when he calls to extraordinary ſervice, comes in with more than ordinary aſſiſtance. Here was the Baptiſt extraordinarily called, and furniſhed for his office and miniſtry. (B.)

Ver. 18. And Zacharias ſaid unto the angel, Whereby ſhall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife well ſtricken in years.

Whereby ſhall I know this?] Zachary being ſlow to believe ſo ſtrange a meſſage, asks the angel by what ſign he ſhould know that this thing, ſo far above the ordinary courſe of nature, ſhould come to paſs The angel anſwers, that he was diſpatched by God, as a meſſenger extraordinary, to declare this good news to him. And ſeeing he was ſo hard to believe it, and required a ſign, he ſhould have it; but ſuch an one, as ſhould be a puniſhment of his unbelief, as well as a ſign to confirm his faith, namely, he ſhould thenceforward, to the birth of the child, be dumb and deaf, as the original word ſignifies, becauſe he had not hearkened to the ſpeech of the angel, he was ſtruck deaf, and becauſe he gainſay'd it, he was made dumb. Learn hence, that the word of God, in the mouth of his meſſengers, is God's own word, and as ſuch to be received and believed. That not believing their word, is a ſin which God will ſeverely puniſh. It is all one not to believe God, and not to believe the meſſengers of God ſpeaking from him. Some expoſitors will have this dumbneſs of Zachary to be prefigurative. The prieſt, at the diſmiſſion of the people, when the ſervice of the temple was finiſhed, was to pronounce the bleſſing recorded Numb. vi. 24, 25. which when Zachary was about to do, he is ſtruck dumb, and cannot perform it, ſignifying thereby, that the ſilencing of the levitical prieſthood was now at hand, that they muſt expect another kind of worſhip, and that he who was to bleſs indeed, namely, the Meſſiah, was near at hand. Obſerve laſtly, that tho' Zachary ceaſed to ſpeak, yet he did not ceaſe to miniſter; he takes not his dumbneſs for a diſmiſſion, but ſtays out the eight days of his courſe, knowing that the ſervice of his heart and hand would be accepted of that God, who had bereaved him of his tongue. Thoſe powers which we have we muſt make uſe of in the publick ſervice of God, who will accept us according to what we have, pardoning our infirmity, and rewarding our ſincerity. (B.)

Ver. 22. And when he came out, he could not ſpeak unto them: and they perceived that he had ſeen a viſion in the temple: for he beckned unto them, and remained ſpeechleſs.

He beckned unto them, and remained ſpeechleſs.] Some interpret the phraſe He beckned unto them, as if Zachary diſcovered by his nodding the viſion which he had ſeen. Theophylact ſays, "Zachary beckned to the people, who probably wanted to know the reaſon why he could not ſpeak: he diſcovered it was owing to the Spirit." Juvencus ſays,

> Egreſſus trepide, numen vidiſſe ſupernum
> Nutibus edocuit, miſeræ & diſpendia vocis.

Trembling he iſſu'd forth, and by his nods
Diſcover'd he had ſeen a viſion ſtrange,
Nor leſs diſplay'd the ſilence of his tongue. (D. H.)

Ver. 23. And it came to paſs, that aſſoon as the days of his miniſtration were accompliſhed, he departed to his own houſe.

Miniſtration.] The Greek word leitourgein, which is the firſt time of meeting with it here, may deſerve a little of our notice. The original of it among grammarians, from leia, ſpoils, ſeems remote, and out of the way. We may find out another way much better, from Heſychius, by changing the punctation of a few words in him thus, leitourgeon, leitourgein, liturgein: this ſignifies publick ſervice, publick officiating. Nay, the word is of the ſame import with leiton, from laos, people, which ſignifies publick, or belonging to the people. Thus is the king called leitourgos Theon, the officer of God for publick adminiſtration, Rom. xiii. 6. Hence then is the prime importance of the word for any publick ſervice. Of which ſort, becauſe the office of the prieſt, and the ſacrifices, &c. of the temple, were the chief, among both Jews and heathens, the word comes to ſignify any ſacred office. Of this we have ſeveral footſteps in the grammarians. Thus the word is uſed in this place by St. Luke, for the executing the office of the prieſt; and ſo, Phil. ii. 17. thuſia and leitourgeia are joined together, ſacrifice, and ſacred office, or ſervice; and Heb. viii. 6. he hath obtained a more excellent miniſtry, that is, he has obtained a more excellent prieſtly ſervice, in oppoſition to the office of the prieſt on earth. So Hebrews ix. 21. "The utenſils of the prieſt." And Hebrews x. 11. "He was daily attending on the prieſt's office." From hence it is brought down to the ſervice of the Chriſtian church, or any Chriſtian office, as Acts xiii. 2. "While they miniſtred unto the Lord," that is, were about the daily offices, praying and faſting, &c. and ſo, Romans xv. 16. "That I might be a miniſter of Jeſus, employed in ſacred offices. This word, tho' it comes from leitos, publick, doth not yet belong ſo much to publick employments, but that it ſignifies domeſtick alſo (and ſimply ſerving, ſays Phavorinus) eſpecially that office of the ſteward, which is moſt publick of any in the family, having the adminiſtration of the whole domeſtick affair belonging to it. Hence leitourgein ton oikon in Pollux ſignifies to perform the ſteward's office over the houſe. Now becauſe, as Chriſt ſays, it is the ſteward's office to give every man his portion of food in his ſeaſon, and becauſe the diet in an houſe or family belongs to all, is every man's portion, tho' in ſuch a manner, that the ſteward aſſigns it differently to every one, as he thinks fit to diſpenſe it (and thence in the grammarians leitoarkoi are they who are ſet over the diet) therefore in the ſcripture ſtile leitourgia is often uſed for the buſineſs of the collecta, or offertory, for the diſpenſing of the oblations, and relieving the poor Chriſtians out of them. Thus 2 Cor. ix. 12. "The adminiſtration of this liberality;" which was to ſupply the wants of the ſaints, as it follows there, and is all one with liberality of communicating, ver. 13. And ſo Phil. ii. 30. "The relieving the Apoſtle;" and ſo ver. 25 "The relieving of my want." So Rom. xv 27. "miniſtring to them in carnal things" is interpreted, ver. 26. "liberality to the poor ſaints." And ſo perhaps when the Angels are called, Heb. i. 7. "His miniſters," and ver. 14. "miniſtring ſpirits," it may bear the ſenſe of ſerving, ſo as to feed, and relieve, and provide for us. But becauſe the office of the ſteward is to govern the family, as well as thus to give meat in due ſeaſon, therefore agreeably to this, as the word is ſometimes uſed by Chriſtian writers peculiarly for the Lord's ſupper, in reference to the feaſt provided there in the agapi anciently, and ſtill in the offertory, for the uſe of the poor, ſo alſo 'tis ſometimes uſed to ſignify the whole ſervice of the church, or exerciſe of the prieſt's office, and ſometimes peculiarly the government of the church, as in Euſebius, "Generally when one biſhop dies, another (ſays he) undertakes the office, or adminiſtration, or government of it." As Pius, biſhop of Rome, l. 4. c. 11. and in the ſame chapter, Celadion, biſhop of Alexandria. (H.)

Ver. 25. Thus hath the Lord dealt with me, in the days wherein he looked on me, to take away my reproach among men.

To take away my reproach among men.] The prieſts, during the time of their adminiſtration, had their lodgings in buildings that belonged to the temple. Zachary, having ended his adminiſtration, leaves his lodgings, and returns to his houſe, where his wife Elizabeth conceiving, ſhe hides herſelf, that is, retires from company, partly to prevent the diſcourſe of people, until it was out of all doubt that ſhe had conceived; and partly to give herſelf opportunity of returning her thankful acknowledgments unto God, who had given her this miraculous mercy, and had thereby taken away the reproach of barrenneſs, which was ſo heavy and inſupportable among the Jews. Now we are to note here two things, firſt, how piouſly Elizabeth aſcribes this mercy to the power of God. "Thus has the Lord dealt with me." 'Tis God who keeps the key of the womb in his own hand, and makes the fruit of it his reward: and therefore children are to be owned as his ſpecial gift: ſecondly, how great a reproach the barrenneſs of the body is in the ſight of men, but not ſo great as ſpiritual barrenneſs in the ſight of God. For this is at once a reproach to God, a reproach to religion, a reproach to profeſſors, and to ourſelves. (B.)

Ver. 28. And the angel came in unto her, and ſaid, Hail thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: bleſſed art thou among women.

Highly favoured.] For the finding out the full importance of the word kecharitomene in this place, 'twill be neceſſary firſt to examine the ſeveral notions of charis the noun, from whence the verb charitoo comes; firſt, it ſignifies the matter of the Goſpel, and the preaching or promulgating it. Again, it ſignifies charity and liberality. And beſides theſe, a reward, either of good words or thanks, as we call it, or elſe farther of ſome real return. Heſychius ſays, "a retribution for a good turn." And ſo 'tis often uſed, Luke xvii. 9. "Will he thank or reward that ſervant?" So Luke vi. 32, 33, 34. "What thanks or reward is due to you?" for which there is ſet down reward, ver. 25. So 1 Peter ii. 19. "This ſhall be, or ſhall yield a reward, all one with honour the reward of an heroic action, ver. 20. Fourthly, it ſignifies favour or mercy, in this chapter, to Mary, "Thou haſt found favour with God," ver. 30. and in ſome other places; and, in effect, in all thoſe, where it means the Goſpel in oppoſition to the law, that being named ſo, becauſe there is ſo much of God's favour, and undeſerved mercy diſcernable in it, contrary to boaſting or debt. Laſtly, it is taken for virtue or goodneſs in the latitude, without reſtraint to any particular kind of it, and that both of the body and of the mind. The word gracious ſignifies either good or handſome; for that univerſal goodneſs of the mind it ſeems to be taken, 2 Pet. iii. 18. "Grow in grace," that is, all kind of goodneſs, "and in the knowledge," that is, practical knowledge of our Lord, &c. and ſo mentioned in ſeveral other places. Now from which of all theſe notions the word is to be taken; or, becauſe there are but two that can be competitors for it, whether, as it ſignifies favour or goodneſs, it is not ſomewhat incertain. If it be taken from charis, favour, mercy, &c. as it ſeems to be, Epheſ. i. 6. then it will agree with the phraſe, "Thou haſt found favour with God," ver. 30. And ſo Theophilus expounds it. When he had firſt ſaid, "thou who art favoured," he adds by way of interpretation, "for thou haſt found favour, &c." But there are ſome arguments that prefer the other notion, firſt, Heſychius renders good or gracious, by diſtinctly pitching on that notion of it; and perhaps where we read, "an excellent lovely perſon, who doeth all things with a grace," it may be falſly printed. Secondly, in Pſalm xviii. 26. where the Septuagint reads, "with the merciful thou ſhalt be merciful," the Greek Scholiaſt reads, "with the gracious thou ſhalt deal graciouſly. Thirdly, this word is uſed once in the Son of Syrach, c. xviii. 17. and juſtly rendred by us a gracious man. Fourthly, the word here is not only tranſlated by the vulgar Latin gratia plena, full of grace or goodneſs, but in like manner by the Syriac alſo. And in this notion of charis we have a gracious woman, Prov xi. 16. as perhaps on the contrary, 2 Tim. iii. 1. full of grace, or goodneſs; which phraſe in Syriac or Chaldee ſignifies no more than very good or gracious. So Acts ix. 33. pleres agathon ergon means a very good woman, one diligent and laborious, one who wrought many good works; as among the Hebrews "full of beauty" ſignifies very handſome, ſo Rom. xv. 14. "full of goodneſs" is very good. And the phraſe in Philo, "a man full of wiſdom" means a very wiſe man; and Acts vi. 5. "an eminent believer." And if the word be thus rendred, 'tis then a fit form of a ſalutation, ſuch as, "O moſt excellent Theophilus," ver. 3. (H.)

Lord, &c.] The Angel delivers this ſpeech in form of a ſalutation, and ſo the words that immediately follow being part of the ſalutation, ſeem moſt fully rendred by way of prayer or benediction, "The Lord be with thee, bleſſed art thou." Thus we generally uſe the phraſe, "The Lord be with you," and "Grace be with you," and the like forms of Chriſtian ſalutation. (H. and I.) In this hiſtory of our Saviour's miraculous and immaculate conception, we have ſeveral things obſervable; firſt, the meſſenger ſent from heaven, to publiſh the news of the conception of the Son of God, was an Angel: An evil Angel was the firſt author of our ruin; a good Angel could not be the author of our reſtoration, but is the joyful reporter of it. Secondly, the Angel's name, Gabriel, which ſignifies the power of God. The ſame Angel, who had many hundred years before declared to the prophet Daniel the coming of the Meſſiah. Thirdly, the place which the angel is ſent to is Nazareth, an obſcure place, and little taken notice of; nay, a city in Galilee, out of which ariſes no prophet; even there doth the God of prophets condeſcend to be conceived. No blind corner of Nazareth can ſcreen the virgin from the ſearching eyes of the angel. The favours of God will find out his children, whereſoever they are withdrawn. Fourthly, the perſon to whom the angel is ſent is to a virgin eſpouſed, whoſe name was Mary. For the honour of virginity, Chriſt choſe a virgin for his mother; and for the honour of marriage, a virgin was eſpouſed to an huſband. Fifthly, the meſſage itſelf, "Hail thou that art highly favoured. The Lord is with thee. Bleſſed art thou among women." Where note, that the angel ſalutes the virgin as a ſaint; he doth pray to her as a goddeſs. The church of Rome idolatrouſly uſe theſe words, as a prayer to the holy virgin, ſaying ten Ave-Maries for one Pater-noſter; whereas they are only a ſalutation, declaring that ſhe, above all women, had the honour freely conferred by God upon her, to be the mother of the Meſſiah. The original word ſignifies, not full of grace, but freely beloved. Compare Mary with other renowned women, and what had ſhe, beſides this favour, more than they? Had ſhe the ſpirit of prophecy? ſo had they. Had ſhe the ſpirit of ſanctification? ſo had they. And ſhe had no more immunity and freedom from ſin and death than they. Accordingly, ſays the angel, "Bleſſed art thou among women:" He doth not ſay, Bleſſed art thou above women. Let the church of Rome be as copious as it will in the commendation of the mother, ſo they do not derogate from the glory of the ſon: but how ſenſeleſs are they, firſt, in turning a ſalutation into a prayer: ſecondly, in the making uſe of theſe words upon every occaſion, which were ſpoken by an Angel upon a ſpecial occaſion! Thirdly, in applying theſe words to her now in heaven, which agreed with her only, when ſhe was here upon earth, ſaying, Full of grace, to her, who is full of glory; and, The Lord is with thee, to her that is with the Lord? Sixthly, The effect which the ſight and ſalutation of the Angel had upon the holy virgin, ſhe was afraid. If Zachary before her was amazed at the ſight of the Angel, much more reaſon had the Virgin, her ſex ſubjecting her to fear, all paſſions, but particularly the paſſion of fear, diſquiets the heart, and makes it unfit to receive the meſſage of God. Therefore the Angel inſtantly ſays to her, Fear not, let joy enter into thy heart, out of whoſe womb ſhall come ſalvation. Thus the fears of holy perſons do terminate in comfort. Joy was the errand which the Angel came upon, and not terror. What little cauſe ſhe had to fear the perſence of an Angel, who was ſo highly favoured of him, at whoſe preſence the Angels tremble? But we ſee the holieſt perſons on earth cannot bear the preſence of an holy Angel, much leſs the preſence of an holy God, nor ſtand before the manifeſtations of his favours. How aſtoniſhed then will the wicked be at the great day, to ſtand before the manifeſtation of God himſelf? If the ſight of an holy Angel now makes the beſt of ſaints to quake and tremble, what will the ſight of an infinitely holy and juſt God then do, when the wicked ſhall be ſlain by the brightneſs of his preſence? Laſtly, The character which the Angel gives of the perſon, who ſhall be born of the Virgin, He ſhall be great, and called the Son of the Higheſt. Great, in reſpect of his perſon; great, in reſpect of his offices; great, in reſpect of his kingdom; for God would ſettle him upon a ſpiritual kingdom, of which David's earthly one was a type, which ſhall never be aboliſhed, tho' the adminiſtration of it, by the word and ſacraments, ſhall ceaſe at the day of judgment, when he ſhall deliver up the kingdom (in that reſpect) to his Father. All other kingdoms have had, or ſhall have, their periods; but the church of the Goſpel, which is the kingdom of Chriſt, ſhall continue till his kingdom of glory ſhall be revealed. (B)

Ver. 34. 35. Then ſaid Mary unto the Angel, How ſhall this be, ſeeing I know not a man? And the Angel anſwered and ſaid unto her, The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee: therefore alſo that holy thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God.

Then ſaid Mary unto the Angel, &c.] Theſe are the words of one in doubt. Thus did the progenitor and parent of the faithful, after iſſue was promiſed delivered himſelf, Mary made this anſwer concerning the manner; ſhe no way doubted of the fact: "Domine Jehova, quomodo cognoſcam illud: "Lord Jehovah, how ſhall I know that?" Where the ancient theologiſts elegantly ſay; "She put her truſt in God? When and how did ſhe enquire? Her doubts were not concerning the words that were ſpoken to her, but ſhe was ſcrupulous rather about that which was not ſpoken." Whence ſhe learned from the Angel what ſhe wanted to know. St. Ambroſe ſpeaks upon this paſſage to the following effect: "Cum dixit, quomodo fiet iſtud? non de effectu dubitavit, ſed qualitatem ipſius quæſivit effectus." Item "Bene quæſivit, quomodo fieret, legerat enim, quod virgo generarat, non legerat, quomodo generarat." "On her ſaying, how ſhall this be? ſhe did did not doubt of the effect, but ſhe enquired after the quality of that effect." Again, "Twas well ſhe enquired, how it ſhould be? for ſhe had read, indeed, that a virgin ſhould conceive, but had not read, how ſhe ſhould conceive." The Angel preſently anſwered her, as it there follows, "The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee." In which verſe the ancients do not ſeem as yet to have acquitted themſelves with ſufficient honour. Theophylact is pleaſed to have the metaphor drawn from birds: "Ut enim avis (inquit) pullos obumbrat ſuos, quæ totis alii circundat eos ita virtus Dei totam circumdedit virginem: quod obumbrare dicitur." "As a bird overſhadows (ſays he) her young, and covers them over with all her wings, ſo the virtue of God, which covered all the virgin, is ſaid to overſhadow her." This father explodes the opinions of others, particularly one, among a great many others, which is taken from painters, who firſt lay the colours; and when they add the colours, are ſaid to go about finiſhing the piece." Hear a paſſage about Moſes: "Neque poterat Moſes ingredi tabernaculum eccleſiæ, quia habitabat ſuper illud nubes & gloria Jehovæ replevit tabernaculum." "Neither was Moſes able to enter the tabernacle of the church, becauſe a cloud lodged upon it, and the glory of Jehovah filled it." The Septuagint ſays, "Becauſe a cloud overſhadowed it, and it was full of the glory of the Lord." The Rabbins, when they treat of this glory of the Lord, I mean, of the uſe of it, generally remark, that ſomething corporally is taken from God. The Apoſtles uſe the word ſeat, or habitation, which expounds the Hebrew of the preſence of the Spirit. Paul follows this more than once: "If ſo be the Spirit of God dwell in you, ſays he, Rom. viii. 9, ſo know ye not that you are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwells in you." 1 Cor. iii. 16. The fathers, in diſputing about the miſtery of this conception, accuſe Neſtorius of a fact which he denies, "That the Son of God dwelling in his mother the virgin, took his humanity there;" when 'tis diſtinctly ſaid, "That the Holy Spirit ſhall come upon thee, and the power of the Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee." Which is that dwelling of the Spirit, of which the Son of God was conceived. Thus the author of the Apocalypſe: "And ſitting upon his throne, he veil'd it;" but a more modern interpreter: "Umbraculo protegit eos;" "He will overſhadow them;" but not ſo cloſe to the author's ſenſe, if I judge not amiſs. How much better is the old tranſlation: "Habitabit ſuper illos;" He will inhabit upon them." Which expreſſes that great and ſtupendous dwelling. The fathers frequently uſe the Hebrew word ſhebin, of the conception, among whom Damaſcenus, in his book of Orthodox faith, chap. 4. ſaith; "We ſay that Chriſt was born and called the Son, and the Word of God,, by whom he was overſhadowed in the womb of the holy virgin. (D. H.)

Ver. 67. And his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and propheſied, ſaying.

Propheſied.] To prophecy is a word of a large extenſion; for, beſides the foretelling of future events, which is the common notion of it, it ſignifies to work miracles, as when it is ſaid of Eliſha's body, that, being dead, it propheſied, Eccleſ. xlviii. 4. referring to the miracle it wrought, in raiſing the dead body, that was put into Eliſha's grave, 2 Kings xiii. 21. Thirdly, it ſignifies to declare the will of God to any, by revelation, or miſſion, from him. Thus Sybilla, l. 1. "I will prophecy all things that are paſt, preſent, and to come;" adding, and "firſt God commands me to ſay;" profeſſing to do it from God. So the author of the Synopſis propheticanus: "Any one who receives knowledge from God of things paſt, is called a prophet. So Chryſoſtom: "A prophet is no more than an interpreter of God." And grammarians have obſerved, that the word naturally ſignifies no more, than this, of ſpeaking from, or in the ſtead of another;" that is of God, as a proconſul is he who ſupplies the place of the conſul. So the prophets were ſaid to be the prophets of the Muſes, as in Pindar:

> Let the choice muſe the lofty theme inſpire,
> Prophetic raptures ſhall my boſom fire.

And in Theocritus:

> The ſacred prophets of the tuneful Nine.

Who ſpeak under them, or as they are inſpired, and directed by them.. In which ſenſe, as Chriſt's prophetic office conſiſted in revealing the will of God to the world, ſo all who have, in any degree, performed the like, are diſtinguiſhed by the name of prophets; all who have taught men their duties towards God and man. Thus, among the heathens, the divines, who told men what they ought to do, were called vates, prophets. And even their poets, who reprehended their vices, are called by St. Paul, their own prophets, Titus i. 12. For tho' it be true of Epimenides, that the Heathens commonly call him a divine man, and a prophet, and that his book is called Oracles, or Prophecies; yet this is rather a confirmation of the uſe of the word prophet for thoſe who teach men their duty; for Diodorus Siculus in his fifth book, ſays of this Epimenides, that he was a divine; and Plutarch, in Solon, "that he was excellently verſed in religion." But Ariſtotle, in the third book, chap. 17. of his Rhetoric, informs us, "that he propheſied not of things to come." And thus Glaucus (among the ancient miſtical writers) who directed men in the way of their navigation, and taught, "how they were to order their voyages," was by mariners called the ſea-prophet. Thus when in Exod. vii. 1. "God ſaid to Moſes, I have made thee a God to Pharaoh, and Aaron thy brother ſhall be thy prophet." The meaning is, that what God had, or ſhould command Moſes, Moſes ſhould (as God to a prophet, and the Oracle to the ſpeaker under it) deliver to Aaron concerning Pharaoh, and Aaron ſhould go as a prophet ſent from God, and deliver it to Pharaoh, He ſhall be thy ſpokeſman, he ſhall be to thee inſtead of a mouth, Exod. iv. 16. Fourthly, It ſignifies to expound or interpret ſcripture, as 1 Cor. xiv. 1. Deſire ſpiritual gifts, but ſpecially that ye may prophecy; and ver. 3. He that propheſieth, ſpeaketh to edification. Fifthly, 'Tis ſometimes ſet to ſignify wild, raving, and mad behaviour, or pronouncing ſuch things, as the enthuſiaſts, among the Heathens, men poſſeſs'd with diabolical furies, were wont to uſe. So when the evil ſpirit came upon Saul, he propheſied in the midſt of the houſe, 1 Sam. xviii. 10. and in the ſame rage, or fury, caſt the javelin at David, ver. 11. The reaſon of this is clear, ver. 12 becauſe prophets did commonly both ſpeak and act in a manner far diſtant and remote from the ordinary practice of other men; they uſed ſtrange language, ſtrange motions and agitations of the body, and, accordingly, were by many who looked on them, thought to be mad. So the prophet ſent by Eliſha to anoint Jehu is called, This mad fellow, 2 Kings ix. 11. Sixthly, It ſignifies ſinging and praiſing God, forming of divine hymns, and ſinging them to God. So 1 Sam. x. 5. Thou ſhalt meet a company, a college, or convent of prophets, coming down from the high place with a pſaltery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp before them, and they ſhall propheſy (where the Chaldee paraphraſe reads, ſhall ſing) and the Spirit ſhall come on thee, and thou ſhalt prophecy (where the Chaldee hath, and thou ſhalt praiſe with them.) So 1 Chron. xxv. 1. David ſeparates the ſons of Aſaph, Hamen, and Jeduthun, who ſhould prophecy with harps and pſalteries, and cymbals. And ſo 'tis poſſible it may be, Numb. xi. 25. where 'tis ſaid of the Seventy, that they propheſied, and did not ceaſe. For as 1 Sam. x. 6. Saul's propheſying was to be an effect of the Spirit of God coming upon him, and was a ſign of his being ſet apart by God for the regal office, and endowed with abilities for it, which is called turning him into another man. So Numb. xi. 15. God takes of the ſpirit that was upon Moſes, that is, the ſpirit of government, wherewith he was endued, and gave it unto the Seventy; and when the Spirit reſted upon them, they propheſied. Whereas the other circumſtances agree, the giving them the Spirit, and fitting them for their office by that means; ſo the evidence of it, their propheſying may alſo agree, tho' wherein their propheſying conſiſted, is no where defined in ſcripture. This only is unqueſtioned, that it was ſome extraordinary act, a teſtimony that the Spirit of God reſted upon them in ſome extraordinary manner, and, as ſuch, was diſcernible to all (in like manner as was Saul's ſtripping off his cloaths, and lying down naked, 1 Sam. xix. 24.) and, conſequently, able to authorize them in the eyes of others, as by a miracle, and to declare to all that they were aſſumed to this office. And to this notion of propheſying muſt this place be interpreted, Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and propheſied; he was ſtirred up, in an extraordinary manner, by the Spirit of God, to compoſe this divine hymn following, the Benedictus, ſaying, Bleſſed, &c. And ſo, 1 Cor. xi. 5. Every woman praying, or propheſying. Where, ſpeaking of the church, wherein the woman is not permitted to ſpeak, chap. xiv. 34. 'tis apparent that propheſying cannot be taken for interpreting of ſcripture; and ſo it remains, that it ſignifies this of ſinging hymns in the church, which is fitly joined with praying. What is here ſaid of his being filled with the Holy Ghoſt, as before of Elizabeth, ver. 51. is no more than being endued with the Spirit of God, being incited by ſomething higher than his own ſpirit; the Spirit of God enabling him to make this hymn. So when the Spirit deſcended with the gift of tongues, they were filled with the Holy Ghoſt, Acts ii. 4.

Ver. 69. And hath raiſed up an horn of ſalvation, for us in the houſe of his ſervant David.

Horn of ſalvation.] The word horn has ſeveral meanings in the ſcripture: Firſt, it ſignifies power or ſtrength, becauſe the horns being the weapons of beaſts, their ſtrength, or power of hurting others, is ſaid properly so conſiſt in them. So Lam. ii. 3. "He hath cut off all the horns of Iſrael, and ſet up the horn of thine adverſaries." So Jer. xlviii. 25. "The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken;" the horn being the beſt defence of the beaſt, as the arm is of the man. So Mic. iv. 13. "I will make my horn iron, and thou ſhalt beat in pieces many people;" that is, I will give thee great power. So Ezechiel xxix. 21. "I will cauſe the horn of the houſe of Iſrael to bud forth;" that is, they ſhall have ſome conſiderable ſtrength again. So the horns of the wicked and the righteous, Pſalm lxxv. 10. ſignify their power and authority. Secondly, it means honour, glory, triumph, &c. as when the horn is ſaid to be lifted up, or exalted, Pſalm lxxv. 4. lxxxix. 24. cxii. 9. Thirdly, from the union of both of theſe it ſignifies regal power, the honour and power of a king. So Zach. i. 18. Dan. vii. 7, 8. and Rev. xiii. 1. the four, and the ſeven, and the ten horns are confeſſedly ſo many kings. And this ſeems to be the importance of the word in this place, where the houſe of David being the regal family, and the word Saviour denoting him who is the ruler or leader, or prince of the people (thou gaveſt them ſaviours, Neh. ix. 27. that is, rulers or judges; and "Saviours ſhall come up," Obad. xxi. and "the kingdom ſhall be the Lord's") the horn of ſalvation in the houſe of David will denote the kingdom of Chriſt, that ſpiritual kingdom which is not of this world, or rather Chriſt in concreto under the notion of a king. Thus Pſalm xviii. 2. among the titles given to God (upon his delivering David from the hands of his enemies, as here, for the redeeming us from the hands of all that hate us, ver. 71.) this is one, "The horn of my ſalvation;" that is, my king and ſaviour: And this is agreeable alſo to the other part of the period, "He has raiſed up to or for us." Now this raiſing up belongs to perſons advanced by God to any office of king or prophet, particularly of Chriſt to his kingdom, Acts ii. 30. "God had ſworn that he would from the fruit of David's loins, according to the fleſh, raiſe up Chriſt to ſit on his throne;" which is diſtinctly parallel to this. (H.)

In this evangelical hymn, there is a prophetical prediction, both concerning Chriſt and concerning John; concerning Chriſt he declares, That God the Father had ſent him of his free mercy and rich grace, yet in performance of his truth and faithfulneſs, and according to his promiſe and oath which he made to Abraham, and the fathers of the Old Teſtament. Where note, he bleſſes God for the comprehenſive bleſſing of the Meſſiah, "Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, who hath viſited his people," namely, in his Son's incarnation. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in the fulneſs of time, made ſuch a viſit to this ſinful world, as men and Angels admired at, and will admire to all eternity. Note further, the ſpecial fruit and benefit of this gracious and merciful viſitation, and that was the redemption of the world; He hath viſited and redeemed his people. This implies that miſerable ſlavery which we were under to ſin and Satan, and expreſſes the ſtupendious love of Chriſt, in purchaſing our lives with his blood, and both by price and power reſcuing us out of the hands of our ſpiritual enemies. Note thirdly, the character given of this Saviour and Redeemer, He is an horn of ſalvation, that is, he is a royal and glorious, a ſtrong and powerful Saviour to his church and people. The horn in ſcripture ſignifies glory and dignity, ſtrength and power; as the beauty, ſo the ſtrength of the beaſt lies in its horn. Now Chriſt being ſtiled an horn of ſalvation, intimates, that he himſelf is a royal and princely Saviour, and that the ſalvation which he brings is great and plentiful, glorious and powerful; God hath raiſed up an horn of ſalvation for us in the houſe of his ſervant David. Note fourthly, the nature and quality of that ſalvation and deliverance, which the Son of God came to accompliſh for us. Not a temporal deliverance, as the Jews expected, from the power of the Romans, but ſpiritual, from the hands of ſin and Satan, death and deſtruction. His deſign was to purchaſe a ſpiritual freedom and liberty for us, "that we might be enabled to ſerve him without fear;" that is, without the ſervile and offending fear of a ſlave, but without the dutiful and ingenuous fear of a child, and this in holineſs and righteouſneſs, that is, in the duties of the firſt and ſecond tables, all the days of our life. Learn hence, that believers, who were ſlaves of Satan, are by Chriſt made the free men of God. Secondly, that as ſuch they owe God a ſervice, a willing chearful and delightful ſervice, without fear, and a conſtant perſevering ſervice, "all the days of their life," that we being delivered out of the hands, &c. Note fifthly, the ſource and fountain from whence this glorious Saviour and gracious ſalvation did ariſe and ſpring, namely, from the mercy and faithfulneſs of God; "To perform the mercy promiſed to our forefathers, and to remember his holy covenant, the oath which he ſware to our father Abraham." Learn hence, That Chriſt, the mercy of mercies, was graciouſly promiſed, and faithfully performed by God to his church and people; Chriſt was a free and full mercy, a ſuitable, a ſeaſonable, and a ſatisfying mercy; an incomparable, unſearchable, and everlaſting mercy, which God graciouſly promiſed in the beginning of time, and faithfully performed in the fulneſs of time. Thus far this hymn of Zachary reſpects the Meſſiah. (B.)

Ver. 70. As he ſpake by the mouth of his holy prophets, which have been ſince the world began.

The world.] The Hebrew word for this ſignifies an age, and is uſed moſt commonly in the New Teſtament in a general ſenſe, not for the age of a man, nor again for an hundred years, but for an age of the world, or ſome eminent part in the diviſion of it. Now the world is divided two ways, either into the age which preceded the Meſſiah, and the age of the Meſſiah, or into the age of this world, and of the world to come after the day of doom. Accordingly, the Hebrew word is ſometimes uſed for the firſt part of the firſt diviſion, or for the firſt eſtate, the beginning of the commencement of the world, and reaching to the end of the Jewiſh commonwealth. Thus in the phraſe a ſeculo, commonly uſed to mean that general age from the beginning of the world, of which the Jewiſh ſtate was an eminent part, and under which God had allowed the gift of prophecy to this people. And it being reſolved by the Jews, that there was to be another age beſides the firſt, which they call the age of the Meſſiah, or the age to come, they were wont to uſe the phraſes, to age and yet farther, or, to age and afterwards, or, to age and to age, meaning thereby both theſe ages, the then preſent, and the other to come, or the age of the Meſſiah. Thus have we interpreted the word age, Matt. xxiv. 3. in a different ſenſe from that which belongs to it, Matt. xxviii. 20. In the former we have made it ſignify the Jewiſh ſtate; in the latter the ſtate of the world under the Meſſiah. And in that notion I ſuppoſe it is, that the Goſpel of Chriſt is called, Rev. xiv. 6. "The Goſpel of that age of the Meſſiah," meaning the Chriſtian faith, which was to endure to the end of the world, Matt. xii. 32. Sometimes again the word age ſignifies the firſt number of the ſecond diviſion, or "this world from the creation till the day of doom," as Luke xx. 34. "The children of this age, the men of this world, oppoſed to thoſe who are allowed to participate of the other, &c. And ſo in many other places. In like manner for the ſecond part of the ſecond diviſion, or the ſtate after this life; that of another world, commonly called the world to come: and that world or age is often alſo ſimply diſtinguiſhed by the name of age; as John vi. 51, 58. "He ſhall live for ever, or to that age to come," which is eternal. And from this notion of the word age it peculiarly comes, that aiomos commonly means eternal, including both this world and that to come. This eternal future ſtate was it ſeems denied by the Sadducees, and thereupon it is the obſervation of the Jews, that after Ezra's time it was appointed, that at the end of benediction in the temple, the phraſe in ſeculum ſhould be changed into "from age to age," that is, from this age to the next. So we find in chap. 9. of Cod. Berachoth. &c. "In all the concluſions of benedictions they were wont to ſay, from age, but when the Sadducees perverted the form of ſpeech, and ſaid there was but one age, they appointed that the form ſhould be, from age to age." And tho' this latter form be before the time of Ezra to be met with in the Hebrew writings, yet it ſeems 'twas not in their forms of benediction in the publick ſervice, and probably it was inſerted there on that occaſion. And 'tis the abſtract of that form which the Chriſtians have delivered to them by Chriſt, Matt. vi. 13. "Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory;" the preſent and the future, which we, according to the ſenſe, render "for ever and ever;" that is, for this world (which is one for ever) and one for the next (which is another for ever.) This is more largely ſet down by the Apoſtle, Gal. i. 4. "To the ages of ages," but yet more amply in the ancient church, which added that ſecond verſicle to the Doxology, "As it was in the beginning, from the age, from the beginning of the world, is now and ever ſhall be, world without end;" that is, now, in this world, and to that world which ſhall never end. (H.)

Ver. 74. That he would grant unto us, that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, might ſerve him without fear.

Without fear.] That the word apobos, without fear, refers to our enemies, in whoſe power before we were, appears by the diſtinct mention of them in the next words, and therefore it cannot with any ſenſe be applied to the excluding that fear of our danger, which is founded only in ourſelves, in our negligences or miſcarriages. And that 'tis to be joined with the phraſe being delivered, and not with the word ſerving, is not only apparent by many ancient copies, and by Irenæus, l. 3. c. 11. reading it, "We being delivered without fear, to ſerve him in holineſs." And Titus Roſtrenſis, "Becauſe very often ſome are delivered from the hands of enemies, but with fear, therefore he ſaith, that he gives us to be delivered without fear, adding, for the coming of Chriſt cauſed us to be delivered without fear, for we did not apprehend the treachery of our enemies; but he preſently ſnatch'd us out, and transferr'd us from them into his own lot and portion, which lays us under the obligation to ſerve him in holineſs and righteouſneſs, &c." But alſo by the nature of the word aphobos, without fear, in the tranſlators of the Old Teſtament, in that only place where 'tis uſed, Prov. i. 33. "He ſhall reſt without fear from all evil;" which is an explanation of the dwelling ſafely, that immediately preceded. And thus, according to the notion of phobos, fear, among ſacred writers, who ſet it down not for the paſſion itſelf, but for the object of it, as 1 Pet. iii. 14 "Fear not their fear," where the word ſignifies any formidable object, which ver. 13. the malicious perſons can bring upon them. So alſo in human writers, in Lucian, the word ſignifies danger. And ſo in Alex. Aphrodiſ. "the phobos, or terrible things, threatned by the tyrant. So in Menander:

> The fair, whoſe tongue is with perſuaſion bleſs'd,
> Danger (phobos) ſits there ———

That is, is very much to be feared is a great danger. So Iſaiah viii. 12. whence that place of St. Peter is taken, where the Greek has phobos autou, his fear, or terror, the Hebrew hath the formidable object, not which ſignifies the paſſions. And preſently it follows, The Lord ſhall be thy fear. Thus aphobos, or without fear, will be directly all one with a kind man without danger, as Wiſd. xvii. 4. to preſerve ſafe, or aphabos. And ſo 1 Cor. xvi. 10. where the Apoſtle ſpeaking of Timothy, bids them ſee, that he may be ſafely with them, or peaceably. The ſame thing is expreſſed by the tranſlators of the Old Teſtament, by elpis, Pſal. iv. 8. Prov. i. 33. not as it denotes hope, or expectation of any future good, but as it is oppoſite to our preſent notion of phobos, and imports ſafety. And this obſervation might be extended to many other words in the ſcripture, which ſeem to denote, action, affection, or faculty, but are uſed for the objects of them, as the will of God, 1 Theſſ. iv. 3. means the ſame things which God wills, hope, Romans viii. 24. the things hoped for; faith, Romans iv. 14. and in many other places, where it ſignifies the doctrine of the Goſpel, and the thing to be believed. I ſhall only add, that, by analogy of ſcripture, it no way appeareth, that fear is to be excluded from our ſerving of God, but rather that it is a good and powerful motive thereto, and ſo is called the beginning of wiſdom, and a kind companion of it; and therefore we are commanded to work out our ſalvation with it. (H.)

Ver. 78. Through the tender mercy of our God; whereby the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited us.

Day ſpring from on high.] That Anatole is here the title of Chriſt, there is no queſtion, whether it be to be render'd the Eaſt, or the Riſing of the ſun, that Sun of Righteouſneſs, Mal. iv. 2. And this title ſeems formerly to have been beſtowed upon him, Zach. iii. 8. and vi 12. Behold the man whoſe name is the Eaſt, or Riſing of the ſun, as Juſtin Martyr cites it, in his dialogue with Trypho. For which we commonly have, whoſe name is the branch. The Hebrew word ſignifies to riſe or ſpring, and that may be applied to a branch that ſprouts out of a tree, but at the ſame time it belongs to the riſing ſun, and accordingly means alſo to ſhine. And Heb. i. 12. The brightneſs is in the Syriac Tſemack of his glory. And if anatole in Zachary be not a quite diſtant thing from the ſame word here in this other Zachary, it muſt then neceſſarily be in this other ſenſe; for that it is ſo here, is evident from what follows, both of viſiting, and giving light to them that ſit in darkneſs. And ſo it may well be read out of that prophet, chap. vi. 12. not he ſhall grow, or branch up (referring to the word branch, but) he ſhall riſe up, or, he ſhall ſhine out from under him. Hence it is, that where anatole, eaſt, is uſed in other places of ſcripture, ſome of the Greek ſcholiaſts have ſtill apply'd it to Chriſt. As Bar. iv. 36. Look toward the eaſt, that is, ſaith Olympiodorus, to the Sun of righteouſneſs, our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. And Jeremy xxiii. 5. I will raiſe up unto David the righteous Eaſt. Severus renders it, Chriſt the Sun of righteouſneſs. And from hence it is that Tacitus, Hiſt. l. 5. at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ſays, that "ſome, on that occaſion remember'd the ancient writings of the prieſts;" which foretold, "that at that very time it ſhould come to paſs, that the eaſt ſhould prevail;" meaning all this while by the eaſt, that orient or riſing Sun, and not the point from whence he riſeth. To which purpoſe may alſo be applied that of Philo: "The Father of all things ſent him forth (in the word from whence the original anatole comes) his moſt ancient Son, or Firſt-born" (H.) "Through the tender mercy of God, whereby the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited us;" where the old tranſlation reads, Oriens exalto. But let thoſe who are pleaſed to have the eaſt ſignify a branch, take notice what anſwer the Evangeliſt will make them, when he adds, To give light to them that ſit in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death. The Evangeliſt, by uſing theſe words, alludes manifeſtly to that place of Iſaiah, A people ſitting in darkneſs, beheld a great light; and upon them who ſat in the ſhadow of death, a radiant light ſhone. For which Matthew ſays, a light ſhone upon them. Matthew likewiſe interpreted this paſſage. Now what man will pretend to ſay, that a branch gives light to them who ſit in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death," which evidently belongs to the ſun? Neither can I ſee why the phraſe, the Eaſt of the ſun, may not be conſtrued the Riſing ſun itſelf, ſince he ſpeaks of the ſame thing as Iſaiah does, chap. lx. 20. The ſun ſhall no more go down. Which Chryſoſtom, citing it out of Photius, informs us is agreeable to both natures of our Saviour. "Hic igitur oriens, ex alto ortus eſt; & e terra: ex alto, quod ad divinitatem, e terra, quod ad humanam naturam." "This eaſt, therefore, roſe from on high, and from the earth; from on high, in reſpect of his divine nature; from the earth, in reſpect of his human nature." By the word ſun, ſome are pleaſed to have hope and expectation denoted by it. Now to thoſe who ſeem to be without hope, or reduced to a deplorable condition, the ſun is ſaid to fall, an expreſſion very frequently uſed by the prophets. The fathers, in their writings, call our Lord the Eaſt: for inſtance, when Thanmaturgus ſays, "Stella quæ prælucebat, eos qui e terra longimqua, ad verum venerunt orientem ſignificabat." "The ſtar which ſhone, ſignified thoſe who came from a diſtant land to the true eaſt." Let me add to this, that in that divine prophecy of Iſaiah, chap. lx. than which there is not a more illuſtrious one about the Meſſiah, I have found the word eaſt in three ſucceſſive verſes, as the context is there diſtinguiſh'd. The Hebrew reading is ſomewhat different from that of the Septuagint: "Ariſe, ſhine (Jeruſalem) for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is riſen upon thee; for behold the darkneſs ſhall cover the earth, and groſs darkneſs the people; but the Lord ſhall ariſe upon thee, and his glory ſhall be ſeen upon thee; and the Gentiles ſhall come to the light, and kings to the brightneſs of thy riſing." Now 'tis highly probable that Luke had this prophecy in his eye. In the prophet Zachary a Hebrew ſirname frequently occurs, which the Seventy render Eaſt. The Cabaliſts upon the ſame place underſtand the Meſſiah. (D. H.)

Ver. 79, 80. To give light to them that ſit in darkneſs, and in the ſhadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace. And the child grew, and waxed ſtrong in ſpirit, and was in the deſerts till the day of his ſhewing unto Iſrael.

Shadow of death.] The beſt way to find out the meaning of this figurative ſpeech, the ſhadow of death, will be by comparing it with Pſal. xxiii. 4, where 'tis ſaid, though I walk through the valley of the ſhadow of death, &c. The Pſalmiſt makes God there his ſhepherd, and compares himſelf to a ſheep, which ſometimes feedeth on the hills, ſometimes in the valleys, and may be ſuppoſed to be in danger of wolves, or elſe to be free from that danger. Now the hills being the higheſt, they have all the light and warmth of the ſun upon them: But the valleys, on the other hand, that are ſhaded by the hills, have much leſs of that warmth, or light, and being alſo more ſubject to the incurſion of wolves, than the hills were, where their coming would be more obvious to the eye; this is the meaning there of the valley of the ſhadow of death, namely, a gloomy vale of danger of the utmoſt evil. Proportionably here, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, the ſhadow of death, is a ſtate of ſin, and ignorance, want of light, or knowledge, and want of warmth, or grace; the deſcription of the ſtate under the law, which afforded neither of thoſe in any proportion to what is now done by Chriſt, and, conſequently, left men in a very dangerous condition, till Chriſt was thus pleaſed to ſhine upon them, and reſcue them, by that means, therefrom. (H.)

CHAP. II.

The whole world is taxed by Auguſtus Cæſar. Chriſt is born in Bethlehem. The ſong of the Angels. Chriſt is circumciſed. The purification of Mary. Simeon takes Chriſt in his arms. Simeon's ſong. Anna the propheteſs. Chriſt, a child, diſputes with the doctors.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AND it came to paſs in thoſe days, that there went out a decree from Cæſar Auguſtus, that all the world ſhould be taxed. (And this taxing was firſt made when Cyrenius was governor of Syria) And all went to be taxed, every one into his own city. And Joſeph alſo went up from Galilee, out of the city of Nazareth, into Judea, unto the city of David, which is called Bethlehem (becauſe he was of the houſe and lineage of David) To be taxed with Mary his eſpouſed wife, being great with child. And ſo it was, that while they were there, the days were accompliſhed that ſhe ſhould be delivered.

All the world.] It may be evinced, from Acts xi. 28. that oikomene does not always ſignify the whole world. In that place we read of the prophecy of the famine through the whole world, which, to all appearance, ſeems to belong to the ſame which was foretold by Chriſt, Matt. xxiv. 7. and conſequently to refer to Judæa only; for a farther account of which conſult the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Euſebius, l. 2. c. 11. Thus Luke, xxi. 26. hath this phraſe, "the things that come upon the world;" which ſeems to belong only to thoſe things that were coming on Judæa. And thus 'tis commonly ſaid, that Jeruſalem is ſituate in the middle of the earth, that is, of Judæa, as Delphi is ſaid to be the "navel of the world, that is, of Greece;" and as Minos calls Crete, over which he was king, his orbis or world, as ſet down by Ovid:

Certe ego non patiar Jovis incunabula Creton,
Qui meus eſt orbis, tantum conſtringere monſtrum.

Jove's nurſing Crete I wiſhfully diſdain,
Where potent Minos doth in greatneſs reign,
A world it is, ſo vaſt a monſter to reſtrain.

So in l. 12. c. 12. of Pliny's Natural Hiſtory, the word orbis is uſed for a region. But here the word belongs to the Roman empire, which is very frequently diſtinguiſhed by that appellation;

Orbem jam totum victor Romanus habebat.

The conquering Roman all the world enjoy'd.

Hegeſippus ſays in his Antiquities, "The world which ſhuts up and terminates the Roman dominions." The ſame we read in Spartian, Lampridius, and Marcellinus Antoninus, in his reſcript to Endæmon of Nicomedia, ſays, "I am lord of the world." So Ulpian, from a conſtitution of Antoninus, "They who inhabit in the Roman world affect to call themſelves Roman citizens." And Bartolus pronounces, that he is an heretick, who refuſed to ſay that the emperor was "dominus & monarcha totius orbis," lord and monarch of the whole world. Suidas, upon the word apographe, ſays, "That Auguſtus diſpatched to all the regions of thoſe who were ſubject to him, officers, by whom he made the enrollings. And on the words Auguſtus Cæſar, "That he determined to number by head all the inhabitants of the Romans:" and reciting the number, his ſtile is, "There were found ſo many myriads inhabiting the dominions of the Romans. (H.)

Taxed.] The Greek word apographe means literally here deſcriptio, a deſcription, and ſignifies no exacting of tribute, or taxation, but a ſetting down or enrolling all perſons, according to their families or eſtates. The meaning of it in Heſychius is, "the numbring of the people, or declaring how many, and what kind of people they are." Phavorinus underſtands it thus, "when each man is ſent for, to make known what and how much he hath, and by what means he came to the poſſeſſion of his eſtate." This is it that the Greek and Latin gloſs in Henry Stephens hath expreſſed by apographe, cenſus, profeſſus, profeſſio; the word profeſſio being the proper Latin word for this matter, and therefore the vulgar Latin very fitly hath it, ver. 3. of this chapter, ibant profiteri, they went to tell what they were worth. Suidas indeed, upon this word, mentioning this of Auguſtus, ſaith it was calculated to another end, of bringing into his treaſury a ſufficient proportion. And that therefore it was called the firſt taxing, the firſt of this kind, by way of equal and moderate diſtribution, becauſe they who were veſted with authority before him, commonly took away what they thought fit, acting juſt as their inclinations induced them. But tho' Suidas have the character of being an excellent grammarian, yet his authority is of no great validity in point of hiſtory; and 'tis certain, that the ſubjects of the Roman empire paid their vectigalia, or certain taxes, before this, and that the publicans were the collectors of them. The words of Caſſiodorus ſeem to point in ſome meaſure to that of taxing, tho' they do not refer to the cauſe which Suidas aſſigns, but becauſe "Mens dominions or poſſeſſions were put into a very uncertain and confuſed condition, by means of the civil wars;" therefore this cenſus or tax was appointed, together with a ſurvey and diviſion, "ut poſſeſſio ſua nulli haberetur incerta, quam pro tributorum ſuſceperat ratione ſolvenda:" "That every man might have his poſſeſſion certain, and that his tax ſhould be alſo certain in like proportion." Learned men are of opinion, nay, they affirm it, particularly Caſaubon upon Baronius, p. 105. That this decree of enrolling was an effect of the curioſity of Auguſtus; that it was owing to no avaritious deſire of enriching his treaſury, neither to reform the extravagancies and immoral lives of thoſe before him; and all this, according to St. Chryſoſtom, was over-ruled by the ſpecial providence of God, that this emperor might ſerve as an inſtrument to the preſerving the record of the birth of Chriſt; whoſe name and his mother's, as well as Joſeph's, were enrolled at this time. Now this is a farther evidence of the nature of this apographe, that it was not a tax, for that would not have belonged to women and infants, but, as hath been obſerved by Caſſiodorus, to the poſſeſſors only. In this very ſenſe Suidas underſtands it upon the word Auguſtus, "That he decreed to number by head all the inhabitants of the Romans," being willing to know "how great the multitude was." Which muſt take away all his authority to the contrary. This enrolling is moſt amply defined by Florus, "Ut omnia patrimonii, dignitatis, ætatis, artium, officiorumque diſcrimina, in tabulas referentur:" "That all the differences of patrimony, dignity, age, craft, and office, might be recorded." Now concerning this particular enrolling, or cenſus, here mentioned, 'tis obſervable what Sepulcreda and Gerandenſis have related, That ſeven and twenty years before the birth of Chriſt, Auguſtus appointed that there ſhould be an enrolling of the whole empire, and publiſhed a proclamation concerning it in Tarracon, a city in Spain, after he had reduced to his authority the Cantabri and other nations, who had revolted from him. For he ſuppoſed then that all the parts of the empire were quiet and peaceable, and therefore thought it a fit opportunity to take a ſurvey of his people Velleius Paterculus ſeems to agree in this relation, making mention of a remarkable peace, that is, of quiet and reſt from the troubles of war, and this about the twentieth year of Auguſtus; which being ſaid by him to be about the twentieth year, if it be determined to have been exactly the ſeventeenth, it will fall directly on the ſeven and twentieth year before the nativity of Chriſt, that being in the forty-fourth year of his reign. But upon, or very ſoon after this proclamation, Auguſtus was alarm'd with commotions and rebellions in other parts, upon which he deferred his reſolution to another time, which ſhould be more quiet; and this happened to be the point of time of our Saviour's birth. Hence it is that the ancient Spaniards obſerved an æra (which is a word made up of the firſt letters of annus erat regni Auguſti, the year of the reign of Auguſtus) different from all other Chriſtians, to wit, ſeven and twenty years before them, reckoning from this firſt proclamation in Tarracon, and reckoning the apographe, or enrolling, here in St. Luke, to have been at that time. By conſidering maturely this paſſage of the hiſtory, we ſhall find materials for the niceſt obſervation, concerning God's wiſe diſpoſal of all things, particularly in this of the birth of Chriſt, which, if Auguſtus's firſt decree and proclamation, in the ſeventeenth year of his reign, had ſtood, in all probability could not have been in Bethlehem, as the prophets foretold it ſhould. For if that had gone on in the ſeventeenth, there had been no uſe of this in the forty-fourth year of his reign. Had not this been in the forty-fourth, Joſeph and Mary would have had no occaſion to come at that time up to Bethlehem from Nazareth, where they dwelt. Had they not done ſo, Chriſt had not been born there; from whence the providence of God appears, in changing the reſolution of Auguſtus, by the breaking out of new troubles, and transferring this time of full peace, and ſo of enrolling, to this very point of time, in which Mary, being ſo near her time, and going up to Bethlehem to be enrolled, ſhould there fall in labour, and bring forth, that ſo the ſeed of David, and the branch of Jeſſe, as Chriſt is called, that was conceived in Nazareth, ſhould be born in Bethlehem, where Jeſſe lived, and David was born. Now whereas 'tis added, that this was the firſt enrolling, that is, to diſtinguiſh it from another, Acts v. 37. the ſame which Joſephus and Euſebius mention, and place under Cyrenius. As for Cyrenius having rule over Syria at this time, that is to be taken in a looſer, and not in a ſtricter ſenſe; that Cyrenius at this time was not the ſtanding governour under the Romans, but ſent, by the emperor particularly on this occaſion, to take an inventory of this part of his empire. For ſo ſays Suidas upon the word apographe out of ſome ancient author, "That Cæſar Auguſtus, deſiring to know the ſtrength and ſtate of his dominions, ſent twenty choſen men into all his dominions, one into one part, another into another, to take this account; and P. Sulpitius Quininius had Syria for his province:" not to have any ſettled dominion there, but to perform this work for which he was extraordinarily ſent, Sentius Saturninus being then preſident of Syria. (H.)

Ver. 7. And ſhe brought forth her firſt-born ſon, and wrapped him in ſwaddling-cloaths, and laid him in a manger, becauſe there was no room for them in the inn.

Manger.] Expreſſed in the Greek by the word phatne. Iſaac Caſaubon upon Baronius tells us, that it ſignifies a ſtable where cattle ſtand; as alſo the manger, the place where their meat is put. So præſepe in Latin, Virgil. Æn. 7.

——— In præſepibus urſi ſævire
Stabant tercentum nitidi in præſepibus altis.

——— The roaring bears in order at their ſtalls
Three hundred ſtood, all ranged in their ſtalls.

And to this the ſtory beſt agrees, which gives the reaſon of their laying him in the phatne, "becauſe there was no room (not in the ſtable, but) in the inn." (H.) They laid him in a manger, becauſe there was no room for them in the inn. Now if thoſe repreſentations which painters give us are true, and what the learned believe from the opinions of the ancients, that the moſt holy virgin and mother of Chriſt, laid the child in a manger, it ſhould have been ſaid not en te phatne, but en phatne. He who pretends to deny this, I'll venture to affirm of him, that he does not ſufficiently underſtand what it is to ſpeak in Greek, neither what the meaning of phatne is, as it is oppoſed to kataluma, which happens to be in this paſſage. Thus the Seventy, with tolerable reaſon, have rendred the Hebrew word into a Greek one, ſignifying a ſtable where cattle ſtand; which the Rabbins frequently uſe. We read of Solomon having four thouſand ſtables, each juſt able to contain ten horſes: tho' the Hebrews uſe another word there, yet of the ſame import. In Heb. iii. 17. we have this phraſe, there ſhall be no herd in the ſtalls. Varro, de re Ruſtica, l. 1. ſays, "Illic laudabatur villa, ſi habebat culinam ruſticam bonam, præſepias laxas." "The country-houſe was praiſed, for its good conveniences, and wide ſtalls." Nonnus ſays, "Præſepia, non tantum quibus veterina pabulantur animalia, ſed & loca tecta & clauſa." "That the præſepia ſignify not only thoſe places wherein cattle are fed, but alſo places covered and ſhut up," from the ſtalls of the cattle. In fine, as Varro uſes the word præſepia in his country-houſe, ſo does Luke conſider the word phatne in the inn; in which, becauſe there was no room in the inn, our Lord was laid. But pray what are theſe præſepia? places in the ſtable covered and ſhut up Whoever will be at the pains to conſider this hiſtory as it ought, will eaſily ſee, that our Lord was not laid in a manger, becauſe there was no room in the ſtable, but that he was repoſited ſomewhere elſe in the ſtable, becauſe there was no room in the inn. (D. H.) The concluſion of the former chapter acquainted us with the birth of John the Baptiſt. The beginning of this chapter relates the birth of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, and the remarkable circumſtances which attended it. The place of his birth was not at Nazareth, but at Bethlehem, according to the prediction of the prophet Micah, chap. v. 2. "And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, art not the leaſt amongſt the princes of Judah, for out of thee ſhall come a governour, that ſhall rule my people Iſrael." We may ſuppoſe that the virgin little thought of changing her place, but to have been delivered of her burden at Nazareth, where it was conceived: her houſe at Nazareth was honoured by the preſence of the angel, nay, by the overſhadowing of the Holy Ghoſt. That houſe, therefore, we may ſuppoſe was moſt ſatisfactory to the deſire of the virgin. But he, who made choice of the womb, where his Son ſhould be conceived, was at liberty to chuſe the place where he ſhould be born. And this place, many hundred years before Chriſt's nativity, was foretold to be Bethlehem. How remarkable the providence of God was, in bringing the virgin from Nazareth to Bethlehem, that Chriſt, as it was propheſied of him, ſhould be born there! Auguſtus, the Roman emperor, to whom the nation of the Jews was now become tributary, put forth a decree, that all the Roman empire ſhould have their names and families enrolled, in order to their being taxed. This edict required, That every family ſhould repair to that city, to which they belonged, to be enrolled and taxed there. Accordingly, Joſeph and Mary, being of the houſe and lineage of David, have recourſe to Bethlehem, the city of David, where, according to the prophecy, the Meſſiah was to be born. How the wiſdom of God over-rules the actions of men, for higher or nobler ends than what they aimed at! The emperor's aim by this edict was to fill his coffers; God's end was to fulfill his prophecies. How readily Joſeph and Mary yielded obedience to the decree of this emperor! It was no leſs than four days journey from Nazareth to Bethlehem; how juſt an excuſe might the virgin have pleaded for her abſence? What woman ever undertook ſo hazardous a journey, who was ſo near her time of deliverance?

and Joſeph, no doubt, was ſufficiently unwilling to draw her forth into ſo manifeſt a hazard. But as the emperor's command was peremptory, ſo was their obedience exemplary. We muſt not plead difficulty for withdrawing our obedience to ſupreme commands. How did our bleſſed Saviour, even in the womb of his mother, yield homage to civil rulers and governours! The firſt leſſon which Chriſt's example taught the world was loyalty and obedience to the ſupreme magiſtrate. After many weary ſteps the virgin comes to Bethlehem, where every houſe is taken up, by reaſon of the great confluence of people that came to be taxed; and there is no room for Chriſt but in the ſtable: The ſtable is our Lord's palace, and the manger his cradle. What an early indication was this, that the kingdom of Chriſt was not of this world! Yet ſome are pleaſed to obſerve a myſtery in all this: an inn is domus publici juris, not a private houſe, but open and free for all paſſengers, and the ſtable is the commoneſt place in the inn; to mind us, that he who was born there ſhould be a common Saviour to high and low, noble and baſe, rich and poor, Jew and Gentile, and called therefore ſo often the ſon of man; the deſign of his birth being the benefit of mankind. (B.)

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. And there were in the ſame country ſhepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. And lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord ſhone round about them; and they were ſore afraid. And the angel ſaid unto them, Fear not: for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which ſhall be to all people, For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Chriſt the Lord And this ſhall be a ſign unto you; Ye ſhall find the babe wrapped in ſwaddling cloaths, lying in a manger. And ſuddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly hoſt, praiſing God, and ſaying.

Keeping watch.] 'Tis ſufficiently known, that the night was diſtinguiſh'd into ſeveral watches, the evening and mid-night, cock-crowing and morning; the firſt ending at nine in the evening, the ſecond at twelve, the third at three, and the fourth at ſix in the morning, as the day is divided into the third, and ſixth, and ninth, and twelfth hours. Now the ſhepherds, or inhabitants, of theſe countries, which lay chiefly upon feeding cattle, diſtributed theſe watches among them in ſuch a manner, that ſuch a number of them might continue in the field, and watch abroad ſo many hours in the night; and when that watch ended, ſo many other freſh men might come and ſucceed to that care. And this the form of ſpeech in the Greek doth import (being render'd literally) "watching the watches of the night over their flocks." (H.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Glory to God in the higheſt, and on earth peace, good-will towards men. And it came to paſs, as the angels were gone away from them into heaven, the ſhepherds ſaid one to another, Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and ſee this thing which is come to paſs, which the Lord hath made known to us. And they came with haſte, and found Mary and Joſeph, and the babe lying in a manger. And when they had ſeen it, they made known abroad the ſaying which was told them concerning this child. And all they that heard it, wondred at thoſe things which were told them by the ſhepherds. But Mary kept all theſe things, and pondred them in her heart. And the ſhepherds returned, glorifying and praiſing God for all the things that they had heard and ſeen, as it was told unto them.

On earth peace, good-will to ---] The concurrence of ſo many ancient copies, and readings, for this of eudokia, makes it requiſite to give an account of that phraſe, if it be read ſo, God's favour or acceptance (an argument and proof of the ſincerity of the chriſtian heart, which is ſo approved, or accepted by him) is literally the notion of eudokia, good liking, that is, God's good liking, or well-pleaſedneſs. So when, in the higheſt degree, 'tis ſaid of Chriſt, in whom I am well pleaſed. So when 'tis ſaid of Noah, that he found grace in the eyes of the Lord, Gen. vi. 8. Accordingly, anthropi eudokias are ſuch as theſe, whoſe uprightneſs of heart, and ſincerity, though mix'd with much frailty, and ſome ſin, for which there is no way of pardon but in Chriſt, hath approved them to God; and to theſe, and none but theſe, this peace on earth belongs. And ſo this reconciliation of God to all penitent ſinners, all ſincere, faithful, and new creatures, thoſe whom God ſees, and owns as ſuch, as it is the full importance of peace upon earth toward men of his good liking; ſo is it, next the glory of God, mentioned in the former words, the principal deſign of Chriſt's coming into the world. (H.) Let us hear now the famous ſong of the Angels, Glory to God in the higheſt, and on earth peace; where, before I proceed to the other particular, I cannot but inform the reader, that ſome of the ancients remark, that, inſtead of the phraſe, and on earth peace, it ſhould be read, epi ges gar eirene, for on earth peace; that the meaning may be quia ſalus, and pax in terra. Zonaras ſpeaks thus: "In ſacris enim reperitur literis, copulativum, & interdum non ut copulativum uſurpari conjunctionem, ſed ut cauſalem, nam pro enim uſurpatur: Ut cum dicitur, gloria in excelſis Deo, & in terra pax. Quia cauſam cur laudandus ſit Deus, hoc ſcriptura ponit, quod in terra pax ſit, cum to & pro eo quod eſt enim poſitum." "We find in the ſacred writings a copulative, and ſometimes a conjunction uſed not as a copulative: As when it is ſaid, Glory to God in the higheſt, and on earth peace; becauſe the ſcripture lays down the reaſon why God is to be praiſed, becauſe peace is on earth." The Hebrews commonly interpret the word peace, ſalvation; which conſtruction I favour. And this to the end they may ſay, "Glory to God in the higheſt, becauſe ſalvation is conferred on men on earth. It muſt be confeſſed, that the beginning of this Doxology has no little weight in it; and 'tis ſurprizing how the ancients have laboured in it. However, all ſeem to prefer this; "Glory to God in the higheſt, and on earth peace;" a known Hebraiſm. Why is God praiſed? Becauſe between God and man peace is made. Glory ought to be attributed to God, and peace deſired by man on earth, becauſe between him and mankind peace was cemented; and becauſe that peace, and Shilo its author, a name long expected, was come. From whence it neceſſarily follows, "Good liking among men;" which as it could not happen without an appeaſed God, ſo being obtained by the Son, it ought wholly to be attributed to him. The Angels, in this doxology, ſeem to allude to theſe words of the Pſalmiſt, Give unto the Lord the glory due to his name, as the Seventy ſets it down. (D. H.) Altho' the birth of Chriſt was publiſhed by one Angel, yet it is celebrated by an hoſt of Angels: a whole choir of Angels chaunt forth the praiſes of Almighty God, upon this great and joyful occaſion. Obſerve, firſt, the ſingers; ſecondly, the ſong itſelf. The ſingers of this heavenly anthem, are the holy Angels; called an hoſt, partly for their number, and partly for their order. Where learn, firſt, the goodneſs and ſweet diſpoſition of theſe bleſſed ſpirits, in whoſe boſoms the uneaſy paſſion of envy has no place: If it had, there was never ſuch an occaſion to ſtir it up as now: But heaven admits of no ſuch paſſion: Envy is a native of the infernal regions; 'tis the ſmoke of the bottomleſs pit, the character and temper of the apoſtate ſpirits: Theſe grieve at the happineſs of man, as much as the Angels rejoice. Ye Angels, what did theſe tidings concern you, that ruined mankind ſhould be taken again into favour; whereas thoſe of your own hoſt, who fell likewiſe, remained ſtill in the gulph of perdition, into which their ſin had plunged them, without either hope of mercy, or poſſibility of recovery: The leſs we repine at the good, and the more we rejoice at the happineſs of man, the more like we are to the holy Angels, nay the more we reſemble God himſelf. Learn, ſecondly, Did the Angels thus ſay and rejoice for us? Then what joy ought we to expreſs for our ſelves? Had we the tongue of Angels, we could not ſufficiently chaunt forth the praiſes of our Redeemer; eternity itſelf will be too ſhort to ſpend in the rapturous contemplation of redeeming mercy. The anthem, or ſong itſelf, which begins with a doxology, Glory be to God in the higheſt, that is, let God in the higheſt heavens be glorified by the Angels who dwell on high. The angelical choir excite themſelves, and all the hoſt of Angels, to give glory to God for theſe wonderful tidings; as if they had ſaid, Let it be acknowledged and revered by all the hoſt of heaven, for ever and ever. Next to the doxology, follows a gratulation, Glory be to God in the higheſt, for there is peace on earth, and good will towards men. The birth of Chriſt hath brought a peace of reconciliation between God and man upon earth; and alſo a peace of amity and concord betwixt man and man; and, therefore, to be celebrated with acclamations of joy. (B)

Ver. 21, 22, 23. And when eight days were accompliſhed for the circumciſing of the child, his name was called JESUS, which was ſo named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb. And when the days of her purification, according to the law of Moſes, were accompliſhed, they brought him to Jeruſalem to preſent him to the Lord, (As it is written in the law of the Lord, Every male that openeth the womb ſhall be called holy to the Lord)

And when eight days were accompliſhed.] Two things are here obſervable; our Saviour's circumciſion, and the name given him at his circumciſion. There was no impurity in the Son of God, and yet is he circumciſed and baptized alſo, tho' he had neither filth, nor foreſkin, which wanted either the circumciſing knife, or the baptiſmal water; yet he condeſcends to be both circumciſed and baptized, thereby ſhewing, that as he was made of a woman, ſo he would be made under the law, which he punctually obſerved. And, accordingly, he was not only circumciſed, but circumciſed on the eighth day, as the ceremonial law required. And thus our Lord fulfilled all righteouſneſs. Obſerve, in the ſecond place, the name given at our Saviour's circumciſion, His name was called Jeſus, that is, a Saviour, he being to ſave his people from their ſins. The great end of Chriſt's coming into the world, was to ſave mankind from the puniſhment and power of their ſins. Had he not ſaved us from our ſins, we muſt have died in our ſins, and for our ſins, and that eternally. Never then let us ſit down deſponding, either under the guilt, or under the power of our ſins, and conclude, that they are either ſo great, that they cannot be forgiven, or ſo ſtrong, that they can never be overcome. (B. and J.)

Ver. 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33. And to offer a ſacrifice according to that which is ſaid in the law of the Lord, A pair of turtle-doves, or two young pigeons. And behold, there was a man in Jeruſalem, whoſe name was Simeon; and the ſame man was juſt and devout, waiting for the conſolation of Iſrael: and the Holy Ghoſt was upon him. And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghoſt, that he ſhould not ſee death, before he had ſeen the Lord's Chriſt. And he came by the ſpirit into the temple: and when the parents brought in the child Jeſus, to do for him after the cuſtom of the law, Then took he him up in his arms, and bleſſed God, and ſaid, Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant depart in peace, according to thy word. For mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation: Which thou haſt prepared before the face of all people: A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Iſrael. And Joſeph and his mother marvelled at thoſe things which were ſpoken of him.

A pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons.] The virgin here performs a two-fold act of obedience, namely, two ceremonial laws, the one concerning the purification of women after childbirth, the other concerning the preſentation of the male-child before the Lord. The law concerning the purification of women, we have recorded Levit. xii, where the time mentioned for the purification of the woman is ſet down, namely, after a male-child, forty days, after a female, fourſcore days; after which time ſhe was to bring a lamb of a year old, for a burnt-offering, in caſe ſhe was a perſon of ability; or a pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons, in caſe of extreme poverty. Now as to the purification of the virgin, no ſooner was ſhe able and allowed to walk, but ſhe goes to the temple, where, note, ſhe viſits the houſe of God at Jeruſalem, before her own houſe at Nazareth. Another act of Mary's obedience to the ceremonial law, was her preſenting Chriſt at Jeruſalem to the Lord. But how durſt the virgin carry the babe to Jeruſalem, into Herod's mouth? It was but a little before, that Herod ſought the young child's life to deſtroy it; yet the virgin ventures, in obedience to the command of God, to carry him to Jeruſalem. Learn hence, that no apprehenſion of danger, either eminent or approahing, either at hand, or afar off, onght to hinder us from performing our duty to Almighty God: We ought not to neglect a certain duty to eſcape an uncertain danger. As the obedience, ſo the humility of the virgin in ſubmitting to the law for purifying uncleanneſs. For thus ſhe might have pleaded; What need have I of purifying, who conceived not in ſin? Other births are from men, but mine is from the Holy Ghoſt, which is purity itſelf. Other womens children are under the law, mine is above the law; but, like the mother of him whom it behoved to fulfil all righteouſneſs, ſhe dutifully fulfils the law of God without murmuring or diſputing. In fine, as the exemplary humility, ſo the great poverty of the holy virgin; ſhe has not a lamb, but comes with her two doves to God. Her offering declares her penury. The beſt are ſometimes the pooreſt, ſeldom the wealthieſt: Yet none are ſo poor, but God expects an offering from them; he looks for ſomething from every one, but not from every one alike. It is the providence of God that makes difference in perſons abilities; but his pleaſure will make no difference in the acceptance; "Where there is a willing mind, it ſhould be accepted according to what a perſon hath." 2 Cor. viii. 2, 12. (B.)

Ver. 34, 35, 36. And Simeon bleſſed them, and ſaid unto Mary his mother, Behold, this child is ſet for the fall and riſing again of many in Iſrael; and for a ſign which ſhall be ſpoken againſt: (Yea, a ſword ſhall pierce through thy own ſoul alſo) that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed. And there was one Anna a propheteſs, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Aſer; ſhe was of a great age, and had lived with an husband ſeven years from her virginity.

Behold this child is ſet, &c] We have the ſign mentioned in the ſeventh chapter of Iſaiah, ver. 11. in the hiſtory of Achaz; there it follows, "Ask thee a ſign of the Lord thy God, &c." and a little below, "therefore ſhall the Lord himſelf give you a ſign." The ſame prophet attributes the ſign to the Meſſiah in another paſſage of his book. The other paſſage ſeems to be drawn from the fourth of Hoſea, according to the Septuagint, where, ver. 4. it is ſaid, "Yet let no man ſtrive, nor reprove another, for thy people are as they that ſtrive with the prieſt;" where it immediately follows, "therefore ſhalt thou fall in the day, and the prophet alſo ſhall fall with thee in the night, and I will deſtroy thy mother." The ancients underſtood this paſſage of the deſerted houſe of Iſrael, or of the king and prophet that was to proceed from the poſterity of David, till He, of whom we are now treating, was come. This is what the ancient Chaldeans witneſs. In chap. iii. ver. 4, 5. of the ſame prophet we find, "For the children of Iſrael ſhall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a ſacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim. Afterward ſhall the children of Iſrael return, and ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king, and ſhall fear the Lord and his goodneſs in the latter days;" that is, they ſhall ſeek the worſhip of their Lord, and pay obedience to Chriſt, the ſon of David, his king. Where we have diſtinctly the word Meſſiah. Now it can ſcarce be doubted but ſome holy men came to the ſight of theſe paſſages by the help of interpreters. To the ſame effect is that verſe in Jeremiah, chap. xv. 10. according to the Septuagint, "Woe to me, my mother, that thou haſt borne me a man of ſtrife, and a man of contention to the whole earth: I have neither lent on uſury, nor men have lent to me on uſury, yet every one of them doth curſe me." So the "ſign that ſhall be ſpoken againſt" and the "prieſt who ſhall be ſpoken againſt," to which it is oppoſed. It was the buſineſs of the prieſt to inſtruct and reprehend the people, but now the people aſſumed authority to reprehend the prieſt, as Kimchius informs us. Which inſult ſometimes happened to the high prieſt himſelf, and the Arch-prophet: Of whom yet it was ſaid, Hear him. (D. H.) There can be nothing more evident, from the whole tenour of the New Teſtament, as well as from many particular texts, than this truth, That the deſign of the coming of Jeſus Chriſt into the world was for the ſalvation of mankind: How then, may it be ſaid, are theſe words of good old Simeon, inſpir'd by the Holy Spirit, to be underſtood? I anſwer, That tho' the ſalvation of men was what our Lord had in view by his coming, yet to many, through unreaſonable prejudices againſt his perſon and doctrine, and from an unwillingneſs to forſake their ſins and amend their lives, the event and conſequence of his coming was their falling into a worſe condition than that they were in before. And it is no way inconſiſtent with the divine perfections to deny mercy and ſalvation to thoſe who refuſe to accept thereof, on the reaſonable and neceſſary conditions it is offered to them upon, namely, faith, repentance, and ſincere obedience; or to puniſh them for their refuſal. But theſe can have no reaſon to complain, the fault not being in God, but in themſelves. And this is conformable to the account the Holy Scriptures give of this matter. "This is the condemnation (ſays our Lord, John iii. 19.) that light is come unto the world, and men loved darkneſs rather than light, becauſe their deeds were evil." It was mens diſobedience that made them ſtumble at the word, 1 Pet. ii. 8. We cannot therefore wonder, that our Lord was a "ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence, and that many refuſed to believe his doctrine, which condemned thoſe courſes they were reſolved to follow, and thereby fell into a worſe condition than they were by nature. (Fox.) Two things are here obſervable, Simeon's bleſſing, and Simeon's prediction, "he bleſſed them," that is, the parents and the child Jeſus, not authoratively, but prophetically, declaring how God would bleſs them: His prediction is two-fold, firſt, concerning Chriſt, ſecondly, concerning his mother. Concerning Chriſt Simeon declares, That he ſhould be for "the riſe of many in Iſrael," namely, all ſuch as ſhould embrace and obey his doctrine, and imitate and follow his example, and "for the fall of others," that is, ſhall bring puniſhment and ruin upon all obdurate and impenitent ſinners; and "a ſign to be ſpoken againſt," that is, he ſhall be as a mark to obſtinate tranſgreſſors to ſet themſelves againſt. Chriſt himſelf, when here in the world, was a “ ſtone of ſtumbling,” and a “ rock of offence ” to the men of this world, “ enduring the contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf,” both the violence of their tongues, and the violence of their hands. Doubtleſs God's firſt deſign, in ſending his ſon into the world, was, “ That through him the world might be ſaved,” John iii. 16. But to ſuch perſons, whoſe minds had no reliſh for ſpiritual things, he became accidentally a ſtone of ſtumbling, and a rock of offence. Secondly, concerning the mother of Chriſt Simeon declares, That the ſight of her ſon's bitter ſufferings would “ like a ſword pierce her heart,” for tho' he might be born, yet ſhould he not die without the pains of his mother; as if the throws ſuffered by other women at the birth were reſerved for her to endure at the death of her ſon: The ſufferings of Chriſt upon the croſs were as a ſword or dagger at the heart of the virgin; and ſhe ſuffered with him, both as a tender mother, and as a ſympathizing member of his body, nay, ſuffered martyrdom after him, ſays Epiphanius. (B.)

Ver. 37, 38, 39, 40, 41. And ſhe was a widow of about fourſcore and four years: which departed not from the temple, but ſerved God with faſtings and prayers night and day. And ſhe coming in that inſtant gave thanks likewiſe unto the Lord, and ſpake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jeruſalem. And when they had performed all things according to the law of the Lord, they returned into Galilee, to their own city Nazareth. And the child grew, and waxed ſtrong in ſpirit, filled with wiſdom; and the grace of God was upon him. Now his parents went to Jeruſalem every year, at the feaſt of the paſſover.

Served God with faſting, &c.] Of this Hannah 'tis the teſtimony of Cyril of Jeruſalem, cat. 10. that ſhe was engcrates, eylabeſtate, and eſchetria. The firſt title refers to her continence and widow-chaſtity for ſo many years (having lived with an huſband but ſeven years after marriage, he in all probability dying in that time.) The ſecond to her devotion, and ſtrict obſervance of religious worſhip. The third not to a ſolitary menial life, as the Latin interpreter falſly renders it, but to ſuch a ſtrict obſervance of all that auſterity, in faſting ſo often every week, and attending publick and private prayers ſo often every day, and all this for the whole ſpace of her enſuing life, as was anciently obſervable amongſt devout perſons. Thus did ſhe take herſelf up from the cares and ſollicitudes of the world, to the end ſhe might be at abſolute liberty for the ſervice of God. She daily frequented the temple at the hours of prayer, not that ſhe denied herſelf the bleſſings of eating and ſleeping, or that in any reſpect ſhe could be ſaid to dwell always there, but that ſerving God at all the ſet times of prayer, and to prayer adding the weekly obſervance of faſting alſo, ſhe returned from thoſe performances to her own houſe, and there properly inhabited; and this is enough to own that expreſſion here, That ſhe departed not from the temple, that is, forſook it not, but kept cloſe to it at the ſet times, tho' ſhe was at her houſe at other times, as the Apoſtles, chap. xxiv. 53. are ſaid to be continually in the temple, and Acts i. 13. continuing there, which yet doth not evince that they were never out of it, but, as it follows, “ they continued unanimouſly conſtant in prayer and ſupplication;” not that they never gave a relaxation to prayer, but that they were conſtant in the frequent daily performances of that duty, at the hours appointed for it. (H.) Simeon is ſeconded by Hannah a propheteſs; ſhe alſo declares that the child Jeſus was the promiſed and expected Meſſiah, and thus Chriſt was proclaimed in the temple by two heralds of different ſexes. Concerning this aged woman it is ſaid, that “ ſhe departed not from the temple night nor day;” not that ſhe lived or lodged there, but by her never departing from the temple we are to underſtand her daily repairing to the temple. That which is often done is ſaid in ſcripture to be always done. We are ſaid to do a thing continually, when we do it ſeaſonably. Thus we pray continually, when we pray as often as duty requires it of us. Learn hence that ſuch duties as a Chriſtian performs out of conſcience, he will perform with conſtancy and perſeverance: Nature will have her good moods, but grace is ſteady. The devotions of a pious ſoul, like Hannah's, are as conſtant, but more frequent than the returns of day and night. (B.)

Ver. 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48. And when he was twelve years old, they went up to Jeruſalem, after the cuſtom of the feaſt. And when they had fulfilled the days, as they returned, the child Jeſus tarried behind in Jeruſalem; and Joſeph and his mother knew not of it. But they ſuppoſing him to have been in the company, went a day's journey; and they ſought him among their kinsfolk, and acquaintance. And when they found him not, they turned back again to Jeruſalem, ſeeking him. And it came to paſs, that after three days they found him in the temple, ſitting in the midſt of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them queſtions. And all that heard him were aſtoniſh'd at his underſtanding and anſwers. And when they ſaw him they were amazed: and his mother ſaid unto him, Son, why haſt thou thus dealt with us? behold, thy father and I have ſought thee, ſorrowing.

They went up to Jeruſalem after the cuſtom of the feaſt.] The perſons making this early journey to Jeruſalem are Chriſt himſelf and his parents. Joſeph is called the father of Chriſt, but he was not his natural father, for Chriſt had no father upon earth; but Joſeph was his reputed and ſuppoſed father, his nurſing father, who, by the appointment of God, took a fatherly care of him, and his father-in-law being huſband to Mary; ſecondly, Mary the mother of Chriſt went up to Jeruſalem, with her huſband and her ſon: God commanded only the males to go up to Jeruſalem; the weaker ſex were excuſed, but the holy virgin well knowing the ſpiritual profit of that long journey, would not ſtay at home. Such as will go no farther than they are dragged in religious exerciſes are ſtrangers to the piety and devotion of the virgin. Thirdly, the child Jeſus goes up in his minority with his parents to this holy ſolemnity, thereby intending, no doubt, our inſtruction, when we are young to give God an early poſſeſſion of our ſouls, to conſecrate the virgin operations of our minds to him, and in our youth to keep cloſe to the worſhip and ſervice of God, when we are ſo importunately courted by the world. Fourthly, this holy family came not to look at the feaſt and be gone, but they duely ſtaid out all the appointed time. Joſeph's calling, and the virgin's houſhold affairs, could neither keep them at home, nor haſten them home before the publick duties in the temple were diſpatched and ended. All worldly buſineſs muſt give way to religious offices, and we muſt attend the ſervice of God to the end, except we will depart unbleſs'd. Laſtly, the conſtant returns of their devotion, “ they went up to Jeruſalem every year:” No difficulties, nor no diſcouragements, could hinder their attendance. Tho' 'tis no certain evidence of the truth of grace, to frequent the publick aſſemblies, yet it is an infallible ſign of the want of grace cuſtomarily to neglect them. (B.)

Ver. 49, 50. And he ſaid unto them, How is it that ye ſought me? wiſt ye not that I muſt be about my father's buſineſs? And they underſtood not the ſaying which he ſpake unto them.

My father's buſineſs.] En to iſton patros ſeems to refer to the place where they found him, that is, in the temple; and ſo ta idia in the neuter, his own, John x. 27. ſignifies his own houſe, as, Eſther v. 10. and vi 12. beth, houſe, is render'd ta idia, his own. Thus the Syriac reads it, and thus Theophylact, “ in his temple.” So Chryſoſtom, Hom. 52. in Gen. ſpeaking of Abimelech driving Iſaac out of his country, asks, “ Whither driveſt thou the righteous man? Do'ſt thou not know that whitherſoever he ſhall happen to depart, 'tis neceſſary he ſhould be in his father's houſe, that is, within his providence.” And Dyoniſius Alexandrinus ſays, “ They found me in my houſe, ſaith he by the prophet, but in the Goſpel, I muſt be in thoſe of my father, that is, in his houſe likewiſe.” So Titus Boſtrenſis, “ Being in the temple of God he ſaid, knew ye not that I muſt be in my father's houſe?” (H.) Chriſt does not blame his parents for their ſollicitous care of him, but ſhews them how unable he was to live without any dependancy upon them and their care, and alſo lets them underſtand, that higher reſpects had called him away; that as he had meat to eat, ſo he had work to do, which they knew not of: for ſays he, “ Wiſt ye not that I muſt be about my father's buſineſs?” as if he had ſaid, Altho' I owe reſpect to you as my natural parents, yet my duty to my heavenly Father muſt be preferred: I am about his work, promoting his glory, and propagating his truth. We have alſo a Father in heaven. 'Tis exceeding good to leave our earthly diſtractions, that we may employ ourſelves immediately in his ſervice, that when the world makes enquiry after us, we may ſay as our Saviour ſaid before us, “ Wiſt ye not that I muſt be about my Father's buſineſs?” (B.)

Ver. 51, 52. And he went down with them, and came to Nazareth, and was ſubject unto them: but his mother kept all theſe ſayings in her heart. And Jeſus increaſed in wiſdom and ſtature, and in ſavour with God and man.

And was ſubject unto them.] The moſt material paſſage of our Saviour's life for the firſt twelve years is here recorded, namely, his diſputing with the doctors in the temple. How he ſpent the next eighteen years, namely, till he was thirty, the ſcripture doth not mention. It is here ſaid, that he lived with and was ſubject to his parents, obeying their commands, and (as 'tis believed) following their employment, working at the trade of a carpenter, as was obſerved, Mark 6. iii. Doubtleſs he did not live an idle life, and why ſhould he, who did not abhor the virgin's womb, a ſtable, and a manger, be ſuppoſed to abhor the works of an honeſt vocation? Now obſerve what a ſingular pattern is here for children to follow and imitate, in their ſubjection to their parents. If the greateſt and higheſt of mortals think themſelves above the commands of their parents, our Saviour did not ſo; he paid homage to the womb that bare him, and to his ſuppoſed father who provided for him. Let a perſon be ever ſo high above others, he is ſtill below and inferior to his parents. Jeſus dwelt with his parents, and "was ſubject to them." In fine, a farther evidence of the humanity of our Saviour, with reſpect to his human nature, which conſiſted of body and ſoul, ariſes from this; he did grow and improve his body in ſtature, his ſoul in wiſdom, and every day he became a more eminent and illuſtrious perſon in the eyes of all, "being highly in favour both with God and man." Vain then is the concluſion of the Socinians from this text, that Chriſt could not be God, becauſe God cannot grow ſtrong in ſpirit, or increaſe in wiſdom, as Chriſt is here ſaid to do, for God's perfections are infinite, and will admit of no increaſe. Whereas it is plain, that this increaſe here attributed to Chriſt, in age and ſtature, reſpects his humanity; the wiſdom, and endowments of his human mind were capable of increaſe, tho' his divine perfections were abſolutely perfect: ſo glad are theſe men of the leaſt ſhadow of a text, that may cloud the divinity of the Son of God. (B.)

C H A P. III.

John exhorts to repentance. His teſtimony of Chriſt. Herod at length puts him in priſon. Chriſt is baptized. A catalogue of the anceſtors of Chriſt.

Ver. 1. NOW in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæſar, Pontius Pilate being governour of Judæa, and Herod being tetrarch of Galilee, and his brother Philip tetrarch of Ituræa, and of the region of Trachonitis, and Lyſanias the tetrarch of Abilene.

Governour.] There may be ſome queſtion made, what is here meant by the word governour. But James Cujacius, the learned lawyer, hath cleared it. "Rectius vetus interpres Lucas, i. 1. procurante Pilato, quam alii, præſide; præſes enim Syriæ tum fuit Vitellius, vir conſularis, procurator Pilatus, eques Romanus. Cujus rei authores habeo Tertullianum, Tacitum, Joſephum." "The ancient interpreter Luke, i. 1. renders it more truly, Pilate being procurator, than others, Pilate being preſident or governour: For Vitellius was then governour of Syria, one who had been conſul, but Pilate, a knight of Rome, was procurator. So I learn from Tertullian, Tacitus, and Joſephus. (H.)

Tetrarch of Iturea.] That which is here ſaid of Herod's brother Philip being tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis, is thus far confirmed by Joſephus. Antiq. l. 18. c. 7. That this Philip died in the twentieth year of Tiberius, having for the ſpace of ſeven and thirty years been præfect of Trachonitis, and Gaulanitis, and Batamea; where inſtead of Gaulanitis the truer reading is Auranitis, of which we have mention in the ſame Joſephus, Antiq. l. 15. c. 13. as a part of the province of Zenodorus, Trachonitis and Batamea being mentioned as the other parts of it, the latter of which (or elſe that and Auranitis together) is certainly the Iturea here. As for the word tetrarch, it denotes a principality of a fourth part, and when Herod, who is called ſo, is elſewhere called king Herod, the word king is to be taken in that latitude, as to ſignify no more than what tetrarch here doth, one placed by the Romans over this region of Galilee, with regal power, and for life, and thereby differing from the governour, ſuch as Pilate here, with commiſſion for ſo many years, a deputy of the ſupreme, and as a ſteward in a family, diſpenſing it under him. (H.)

Ver. 2. Annas and Caiaphas being the high prieſts, the word of God came unto John the ſon of Zacharias, in the wilderneſs.

High prieſts.] Concerning the two high prieſts in this place, and the reconciling it with the Old Teſtament, where there was to be but one at a time, one of the ſons of Aaron, Exod. xxix. 30. Levit. xvi. 32. and he to continue not for a year only, but for his life; whereas here it ſeems to be otherwiſe. Many things have differently been ſaid by learned men. Without giving the reader a recital of their ſeveral conjectures, I ſhall firſt think it worth obſerving, that in the books of Samuel, when certainly there was but one high prieſt, Abimelech, the ſon of Ahitab, being ſlain, and Abiathar ſucceeding him in the office of high prieſt, 1 Sam. xxii. there is yet, after that, frequent mention of Zadoc and Abiathar together, 2 Sam. xv. 35. "Zadoc and Abiathar the prieſts." And chap. xvii. 15. and xix. 11. and xx. 25. and 1 Chron. xv. 11. every-where we read, "Zadoc and Abiathar prieſts;" and Zadoc conſtantly placed before Abiathar, as Annas before Caiaphas in this paſſage. The meaning of which is probably this, becauſe tho' Zadoc was not actually high prieſt in David's time, yet being the ſon of Ahitab, 2 Sam. viii. 17. (not that Ahitab, the father of Abimelech, 1 Sam. xxii. 11. who was of Ithamar's line, 1 Chron. xxiv. 2. but another, 1 Chron. vi. 8. and 53. the lineal ſucceſſor of Eleazar, ver. 4. and 50.) to him the high prieſthood regularly belonged, and ſo after the expulſion of Abiathar, the laſt of Eli's, and ſo of Ithamar's line, 1 Kings ii. 26, 27. was reſtored to him, 1 Kings ii. 35. And Abiathar being in David's time the high prieſt of Eli's, and ſo of Ithamar's line, to which it ſeems it was changed from Eleazar's, and continued in that line for ſome time, Zadoc being a principal perſon, and in great authority with David, a prieſt, and regularly heir to the high prieſthood, is conſtantly joined with, and ſet before the high prieſt Abiathar. Agreeable to this example it is, that Annas, father-in-law to (the high prieſt of that year) Caiaphas, a moſt eminent perſon himſelf, and one who had alſo been high prieſt, and I ſuppoſe the chief of the race of Aaron's ſons then alive, as Zadoc was, is here ſet before and joined with Caiaphas, and called archiereus, high prieſt, tho' punctually he did not execute the office of high prieſt. This being ſaid by way of preparation, the main of the difficulty may perhaps be removed by obſerving three things. Firſt, that at this time the land being under the Roman emperor, whoſe name, and the year of his reign, is ſet down at the beginning of the verſe, as alſo his procurator of Judæa, Pontius Pilate, and the tetrarchs of other places, the ſucceſſion of the high prieſts was now changed, the one being lineal deſcendant in the family of Aaron, which was to continue for life; the other being not permitted to ſucceed, but ſome other, whom he pleaſed, named to that office by the procurator every year, or renewed as often as he pleaſed. To which purpoſe is that of Theophylact, "They who were at that time high prieſts of the Jews invaded that dignity, bought it, and ſo deſtroyed the law:" which preſcribed a ſucceſſion in the family of Aaron. Secondly, that there was at this time, after the Roman conqueſt, and before the deſtruction of the temple, when they made no king of Judæa, but only ſent a procurator there, the place and title of naſiarchon tou laou, ruler of the people, and with it ſome part of the ſovereign power allowed unto the Jews, or at leaſt ſomewhat proportionable to it. This Naſi was he who had at any time the chief power of that people within themſelves; that is, what degree of power ſoever remained in the Jews at any time, by the indulgence of their conquerors, it was principally in him. So long as they were not ſubject to ſtrangers, their power was abſolute and ſupreme, and therefore in the Law, and in Ezekiel, the Naſi, or the ruler, ſignifies the king; but when they came under the dominion of other nations, their power was ſubordinate, ſuch as was allowed them by thoſe who exerciſed rule over them, but yet that ſupreme authority lodged among themſelves, for the deciding of all controverſies ariſing from and determinable by their law, tho' generally without power of life and death, to enforce the ſentences of their judicatures. Such are the chief of the captives that returned from Babylon. Zorobabel, the ſon of Salathiel, Hag. ii. and Zach. iv. being of the tribe of Judah, Matt. i. 12. Luke iii. 37. at the ſame time when Joſhua the ſon of Joſedech is high prieſt, Zach. ii. and therefore they two together are called the anointed one, chap. iv. 14. and named in the front of the captives, Ezra ii. 2. And after him his poſterity, till the time of the Maccabees. According to that of St. Baſil in his Epiſtles, "The ſucceſſors of Salathiel and Zorobabel governed the people after a popular manner, and after their time forward the principality fell to the prieſthood," to wit, in the time of the Maccabees. As for Nehemiah, and the governours mentioned by him, chap. v. 14. it ſeems by his commiſſion, and the Babyloniſh name, that he had his power from the king of Perſia, not from the Jewiſh nation, or from the right yet remaining in them, under their conquerors, of living according to their own laws. After the manner of what was thus done in Palæſtine, the like was generally put in practice in the ſeveral countries, whither the Jews were diſperſed, that is, not only in Babylonia, but alſo at Alexandria, ſaith Philo in his embaſſy to Caius, to the Naſi whereof all the multitude of Jews in Egypt were ſubject: a million, ſays Philo, in his time.

And

And therefore, ſaith Joſephus, Antiq. l. 20. c. 4. that the ethnarchs of the Jews being dead, the emperor Claudius "did not forbid them to ſet rulers of the nation over them," but conſented that all ſhould be ſubject to them, according to their own cuſtoms, and not be compelled "to tranſgreſs the religion of their fathers." The like is reported of Auguſtus by Philo ad Flaccus, calling theſe rulers Ethnarchs, as Joſephus had done before, and others of the Heathen writers. Thirdly, this office of the Naſi generally fell on ſome perſon of the greateſt authority among them, for skill and knowledge in their law. And it will not be improbable that that ſhould be ſome prieſt, ſuch being moſt carefully brought up in that knowledge; and then, tho' it be not neceſſary to ſuppoſe that he was the high prieſt lineally deſcended, as ſuch, there being no ſuch, perhaps, left in the land; yet it will be eaſy to conceive, that a prieſt, the chief of one of the ranks, eſpecially of the firſt rank of the prieſts, and he poſſeſs'd with ſo great authority as that of the Naſi, the greateſt now left among them ſhould be ſtiled archiereus, chief, or high prieſt. And ſo, I conceive, it was at this time, ſomething after the manner of what the Maccabees had formerly been, who were, in a manner, both kings and prieſts; that is, being prieſts, were alſo, one after another, leaders, and rulers of the Jews; proportionable to the Naſi, of which I now ſpeak, the only rulers which they had then with any image of regality upon them. That this may be more diſcernable, 'twill not be amiſs to ſet in ſhort the beginning and progreſs of them. Upon the prophanation committed by Antiochus upon the law, and worſhip of God among the Jews, there aroſe Matathias, the ſon of John, the ſon of Simeon, a prieſt in Modin, of the ſons of Joarib, that is, of that family, which had the firſt courſe of the four and twenty aſſigned to them by lot, 1 Chron. xxiv. and ſo of a family next to that of the high prieſt, Aaron's ſucceſſor. This Matathias not pretending any right to the high prieſthood, it being not affirmed that he was chief of that family of Joarib, but a branch of one of the ſons, that is, one of that courſe. And beſides, Onias, the laſt of the high prieſts of the ſucceſſion of Aaron, was not, as appeareth, gone as yet into Egypt, but merely as a zealot, began to kill the prophaners; after which he went into the mountains with as many after him as he could procure; and at laſt, when he had gathered an army, he left Judas, as the mightieſt of his ſons, tho' not by ſucceſſion again, as the eldeſt of them, to be general of it, 1 Macc. i. 66. And he, under the name of Judas Maccabeus, did conduct them, and was, as it were, their king (the only one they had) and ruler at that time, and fought their battles illuſtriouſly, cleanſed the ſanctuary, built a new altar, and being at laſt ſlain, 1 Macc. ix. 18. it follows, ver. 29. that Judas's friends, namely, thoſe who had continued with him in all his actions, came to chooſe Jonathan, a brother of Judas, to be their prince, or captain, in his ſtead, to fight their battles, and ſo he took the government on him, ver. 31. And, upon a treaty of league between Alexander, the ſon of Antiochus Epiphanes, and him, Alexander ordains him to be high prieſt of his nation, 1 Macc. x. 20. And, accordingly, after that, he is diſtinguiſh'd by that appellation, v. 69. Thus the dukedom and high prieſthood continued to his ſucceſſors, his brother Simon, and Hyrcanus, Simon's ſon, and ſo on, till the race of the Aſſamonei, or Maccabees, were extinct alſo, by the killing of Ariſtobulus, and depoſing of Hyrcanus. After which the high prieſthood went among the prieſts, at the will of the governors appointed by the Romans, as Jonathan and the Aſſamonei had been by the kings, who then had power over them, but yet uncertainly, not by ſucceſſions, as among the Aſſamonei they did. Now ſome ſucceſſors, as it were, to the office of the Aſſamonei, as far as they were rulers of the people, not as by the king appointed to be the high prieſts, that is, ſome particular perſon among the Jews, ſet up by themſelves to be chief among them, I ſuppoſe to have been continued at this time, after Herod the Great. And this not the lineal ſucceſſor of Aaron, for after the flight of the laſt Ornias into Egypt, where he built a temple in imitation of that at Jeruſalem, that line of Aaron vaniſhed, or was interrupted in Judea; but, like Matathias, ſome other prieſt of great reputation and authority among the people; and ſuch was Annas, or Ananias, or Ananas, at this time, a man of greateſt value and authority among them, ſaith Joſephus, who, tho' he differed from the high prieſt, who was put in by the procurator, as Moſes did from Aaron, yet being a prieſt and Naſi at this time, it will be eaſy to believe, that he ſhould be called high prieſt, or chief prieſt, being a prieſt and ruler of the people, both here, and Acts iv. 6. and, as I ſuppoſe, Acts xxiii. 5. where, by what is ſaid of him by St. Paul, it is acknowledged that he was prince, or ruler of the people. Accordingly, the hiſtory of the Goſpel, John xviii. 13. mentions the carrying of Chriſt to Annas firſt, as to an officer of principal authority among them, who ſent him bound to Caiaphas, who was the Pontifex Maximus that year, and of the Romans putting in, and ſo continued all the time of Pilate's procuratorſhip. If this, which hath been ſaid of the Naſi, be ſufficient to ſhew that Annas might paſs for one of the high prieſts here; and high prieſt he is called that's clear, and as clear, by what is ſaid of him by Joſephus, and the Goſpels, the greateſt man at that time among the Jews, to whom the malefactors were firſt brought, John xviii. 14. which proves him to be the Naſi alſo; then the other part of the difficulty, as to Caiaphas, will ſoon be cleared: for 'tis evident, that at this time the Roman Prefect did, ad libitum, when he would, and that ſometimes once a year put in whom he pleaſed into the Pontificate, to officiate in Aaron's office, inſtead of the lineal deſcendant from him: and that is it, of which Joſephus ſo frequently makes mention. After the race of the Aſſamonei, Jeſus the ſon of Phebes was put in; then he being put out, Simon is put in his ſtead. This Simon is excluded, and Matthias ſubſtituted in his room, Antiq. l. 17. c. 6. Then Matthias put out by Herod about the time of the birth of Chriſt, and Joazar put in his ſtead, Antiq. l. 17. c. 8. Then Joazar put out by Archelaus, and Eleazar put in, c. 15. and he again put out, and Jeſus the ſon of Sia, put in. Then in the firſt of Quirinus there is mention again of Joazar, the ſon of Boethius, l. 18. c. 1. who, it ſeems, was put in, and ſo turned out again by Quirinus the ſame year, and Ananus, the ſon of Seth, put in his ſtead, who was the Annas here mentioned by St. Luke. Then Gratus, at the beginning of the reign of Tiberius, put out Annas, and put in Iſmael, and in his ſtead Eleazar, the ſon of Annas; then in his room Simon, and after his year, Caiaphas, mentioned here, who continued from that, all his and Pilate's time, till the reign of Vitellius, who diſplaced him, and put Jonathan, another ſon of Annas, in his ſtead; and in his room, a year or two after, Theophilus, another ſon of Annas, whom Agrippa again diſplaced, Antiq. l. 19. c. 5. and put in Simon, and, turning him out the ſame year, put in Matathias, a fourth ſon of Annas, in the beginning of the reign of Claudius, about nine years after the death of Chriſt, and ſo on removing him, put in Elioneus, c. 7. Then, it ſeems, Cantharus was put in, for Herod put Joſeph in his place, l. 20. c. 1. and, in his ſtead, about fifteen years after the death of Chriſt, Ananias, the ſon of Nebedeus, c. 3. After him, we find Jonathan, then Iſmael, then Joſeph, then Annas, another ſon of Annas, then Jeſus the ſon of Damneus, then Jeſus the ſon of Gamaliel, then Matathias, in whoſe time the Jewiſh war began. Theſe, whom I have thus named, make up the number of eight and twenty, which, ſays Joſephus, l. 20. c. 8. held the pontificate from the time of Herod to Titus burning the temple, that is, were the men who were put into it by the Roman preſidents, and Caiaphas is one of them, and ſo is he mentioned Matt. xxvi. 3. and 57. and John xi. 49. Caiaphas, high prieſt of that year; and John xviii. 13, 14, 24. referring to the yearly change of this office at that time, tho', as appears by Joſephus, it was continued in Caiaphas for ſome ſpace. But now to return to Annas again, it is obſervable from Joſephus, that beſides this ſeries of the chief prieſts, Ananias is ſet down as high prieſt in the very ſame time, when Jeſus Damnæus is ſaid to have been put into that other line, l. 20. c. 8. And this appears to be the Annas here; for, having ſpoken of him in the beginning of the chapter, and affirmed him to be "the happieſt of all men, as having five ſons advanced to the dignity of high prieſt, (viz. Eleazar, Jonathan, Theophilus, Matathias, and Annas) after he himſelf had enjoyed it to his contentment," he now adds, that "Ananias became daily more famous, and beloved; and for his liberality honoured by all, obliging daily with preſents Albinus the procurator, and the Summus Pontifex, and preſently he mentions Eleazar, as ſon of this Ananias, whom before we have ſet down as ſon of this Annas." This being thus evident, it will be more than a probable conjecture, that by Annas's or Ananias's pontificate, now ſpoken of, is meant his being the Naſi, or ruler of the people at Jeruſalem, as I ſaid before, he being a perſon of ſo much authority among the Jews. And ſo theſe two, the Naſi, and the Summus Sacerdos, being the two chief men among the Jews, it being affirmed by Joſephus in the end of the eighth chapter of lib. 20. Antiq. that the pontifices were placed at the top of the commonwealth, after the reign of Herod and Archelaus, the government being brought to an optimacy, may very well be reſolved upon, to be theſe two here named, as the high prieſts at that time, tho' it fell out that they continued for ſome years together. All which being put together, will be able perhaps to anſwer any objection which can be brought againſt this conjecture. This Annas is afterwards, Acts iv 6. called Annas the high prieſt, or chief prieſt, and without doubt is the phraſe Ananias the high prieſt, Acts xxiii. 5. and Acts xxiv. 1. being called ſo by Joſephus, as even now appeared. Of him St. Paul, Acts xxiii. ſays, I knew not that he is high prieſt. 'Tis juſtly wondered how Paul ſhould be able truly to ſay, that he did not know him to be high prieſt, being ſo well acquainted with the Jewiſh nation and cuſtoms: But if we take notice of the words of the by-ſtanders, v. 4. Revileſt thou God's high prieſt? It is firſt certain, that Ananias was not God's high prieſt, nor, indeed, any man elſe at that time among them, the lineal ſucceſſion having been a long time interrupted. And to that St. Paul anſwers in thoſe words, that he did not know that he was, meaning thereby, I ſuppoſe, the lineal deſcendant from Aaron. Secondly, there being at this time another high prieſt, to whom that name more properly belonged, than to Ananias it could, namely, the Summus Pontifex, or he who was put into the place of the prieſthood of Aaron by the Roman Præfećt, this might truly be ſaid by him again, I knew not that he was high prieſt. However, knowing him at that time to be the Naſi, he retracted his haſty and ſharp ſpeech, as having ſpoken ſomewhat againſt the ruler of the people, who was not by the law of God to be evil ſpoken of. That which is commonly ſaid of theſe two high prieſts is, that one was the high prieſt, and the other his ſagan or vicar, ſuch as Zephaniah called the ſecond high prieſt, Jer. lii. 24. Of this ſagan, it is clear, that tho' he was chief or principal of the ordinary prieſts, who miniſtred to the high prieſt, and, in the day of expiation, ſupplied his place in officiating, if any thing fell out which hinder'd him from being able to do it himſelf, and upon this he was called the chief of the ordinary prieſts, and the ſecondary prieſt, and the other prieſt; and in Joſephus, partaker of his office, namely, when he officiates for him, or in that he is appointed his vicar, yet he is never the high prieſt. What he was, you may plainly ſee, Cod. Joma. chap. 1. ſect. 1. where, having ſpoken of the high prieſt, who is to officiate on the day of expiation, it follows, they appoint unto him another prieſt, under him, if by chance any pollution, or prophanation (which hinders the high prieſt from officiating himſelf) do beſal him, as in Joſephus, Antiq. l. 17. c. 8. when Matthias the high prieſt was unclean, Joſeph the ſon of Eilam, was his proxy or vicar to officiate for him, but this only for the ſpace of one day, as he ſays there (the great day of expiation, as the Gloſs of Joma clears it). by which it appears, that he was under the high prieſt, as his ſubſtitute, once a year for a day, not for a year, or any long time, but never his colleague, or equal to him. Thirdly, 'tis evident, that this of the ſagan cannot be applied to this matter: For I ſhall demand, to which of theſe two the office of ſagan belonged at this time, to Annas or Caiaphas? To Annas it could not, becauſe if it did, he muſt be acknowledged inferior to the high prieſt; whereas Annas, in all paſſages of ſcripture where he is named with Caiaphas, hath the priority, and never appears to be inferior to Caiaphas, and, therefore, it muſt belong to Caiaphas, or to neither of them; and to Caiaphas it cannot, becauſe it is manifeſt, both that Annas was not the Pontifex Maximus at this time, and that Caiaphas was by the ſeries of them, even now ſet down from Joſephus. Fourthly, the office of the ſagan, as vicarius to the high prieſt, extended no farther than to the officiating in the temple, for from that only was the high prieſt excluded by pollution, ſo as to need a ſubſtitute to officiate for him. Or if it could be conceived that the ſagan was to ſupply the high prieſt's place in judicature, when he was hindered by ſickneſs or indiſpoſition; yet of Annas here that cannot be affirmed; for 'tis apparent, that his authority continued to him, John xviii. 13. when Caiaphas was in health, and ačted as high prieſt, ver. 28. And ſo alſo Ačts iv. 6. they both met in council together. For theſe reaſons, I ſay, that common way of reconciling this difficulty, by that of the ſagan, may not juſtly be allowed, being not applicable to either of theſe, who are both named here as perſons of authority among the Jews, next to the emperor and his procurator, and appear at the apprehending of Chriſt as magiſtrates, and perſons of civil juriſdiction, which the Naſi and high prieſt were; but the ſagan, as ſuch, cannot be pretended to have been. Another account, I acknowledge, is given of this matter, by Euſebius, l. 1. c. 9. namely, that Chriſt is here ſaid to have begun and accompliſhed his whole time of preaching under Annas and Caiaphas, high prieſts, which, ſays he, notes the compaſs of four years, and that he began his preaching when Annas was high prieſt, and ended it when Caiaphas was high prieſt: For about this time, ſays he, the Roman Præfećts having changed the Moſaical courſe, they who were conſtituted high prieſts by them, continued not above a year therein. And he brings a ſucceſſion out of Joſephus, thus: Valerius Gratus, putting Annas out of the high prieſthood, put Iſmael in his ſtead; then, after a while, removing him, he put Eleazar the ſon of Annas in his ſtead, and at the end of the year he gives it to Simon, and at the end of that year, Joſeph, called Caiphas, alſo ſucceeded him, and all thoſe within leſs than four years; and ſo, ſaith he, Caiaphas was high prieſt at our Saviour's paſſion. This might ſound, at firſt hearing, as a probable conječture, but if examined, will ceaſe to be ſuch: For, firſt, the thing in hand, Luke iii. 1. is not to ſet down the ſpace of the continuance of the preaching of Chriſt, but the year of the beginning of John's preaching punčtually, naming that fifteenth year of Tiberius. And, ſecondly, that which Joſephus ſaith, Antiq. l. 18 c. 3. is this, that at the beginning (not at the fifteenth year) of the reign of Tiberius, Valerius Gratus was ſent preſident into Judea; that he continued ſo eleven years; that, in that time, probably in the three firſt years of his government, he changed the high prieſt yearly; that Caiaphas was the laſt of them, who continued the reſt of Gratus's time, and all Pilate's ten years, and was not removed till the time of Vitellius, who ſucceeded Pilate, and put Jonathan, the ſon of Annas, in his ſtead, l. 18. c. 9. By which 'tis clear that Euſebius was miſtaken, in applying that, which Gratus did, in the beginning of Tiberius's reign, to the four years of Chriſt's preaching, and crucifixion, which was certainly under Pilate, all whoſe time Caiaphas was continued in the high prieſthood. And ſo that cannot be the way of ſolving this difficulty. There is only a third way that I have met with, that Annas having been high prieſt long ſince, was now a kind of conſulary man, and, as ſuch, being father-in-law to Caiaphas, the high prieſt of the year, is ſtiled high prieſt alſo. But to this the anſwer is clear, that there were many other ſuch pontifical men alive, ſuch as had been pontifices in their times; and, therefore, there was nothing in that peculiar to Annas, or which could put him in the pontifical Faſti, as the high prieſt of that year, without ſome other addition of dignity, peculiar to him, from thoſe others, ſuch as I ſuppoſe that of the Naſi, and cannot imagine that of being father-in-law to Caiaphas, or any ſuch extrinſical relation to be. (H.)

Ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins; As it is written in the book of the words of Eſaias the prophet, ſaying, The voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, Prepare ye the way of the Lord make his paths ſtraight. Every valley ſhall be filled, and every mountain and hill ſhall be brought low; and the crooked ſhall be made ſtraight, and the rough ways ſhall be made ſmooth; And all fleſh ſhall ſee the ſalvation of God. Then ſaid he to the multitude, that came forth to be baptized of him, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?

O generation of vipers.] St. Matthew, chap. iii. 7. ſays, that the Baptiſt ſpeaks theſe words to the Phariſees and Sadducees, whom he gives firſt a quick and cutting compellation, O generation of vipers; then a ſharp and ſevere reprehenſion, Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? And laſt of all, a ſeaſonable exhortation, Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance. As if he had ſaid, O you Phariſees, and worſt of men, I perceive by your coming hither that ſome-body hath alarmed you with the notices of that dreadful vengeance that is coming upon this generation; to prevent which, you pretend repentance of your ſins; but let me ſee by your ačtions, that are not only demure, but ſincere penitence: let me ſee the fruits of your repentance by the daily courſe of your converſation. Learn hence, that the condition of proud Phariſees, and pretending and falſe-hearted hypocrites, tho' very dangerous, yet is not ſo hopeleſs or deſperate; and their ſalvation, tho' the worſt of men, muſt not be deſpaired of. St. John reproves them for their ſin, but yet encourages their repentance; that ſincere repentance is not a barren thing, but does conſtantly bring forth fruits anſwerable to its nature; as faith without works, ſo repentance without fruits is dead alſo. The genuine fruits of repentance, are humility of heart, and holineſs of life. Obſerve, laſtly, the cautionary direčtion which he gives to theſe hypocrites, not to reſt in their external privileges; Think not to ſay within your ſelves, We have Abraham to our father; glory not in this, that you are the only viſible church that God has upon earth, for God can, out of the obdurate Gentile world, raiſe up a people to himſelf, take them into covenant with himſelf, and caſt you out. Learn hence, firſt, that men are exceeding apt to boaſt of their external privileges, and to place religion in thoſe things in which God places it the leaſt. How did the Jews glory in their being deſcendants from Abraham, as if God was tied to Abraham's line, and could have no people, if he had not them for his people. Secondly, that 'tis a vain thing to expećt exemption from the judgment of God, becauſe of outward privileges enjoyed by us. If we be not born againſt the ſpirit, it will avail us nothing to be born of Abraham's fleſh: if the faith of Abraham be not found in our hearts, it will be no advantage to us, that Abraham's blood is running in our veins, Think not to ſay, We have Abraham for our father. (B.)

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not to ſay within your ſelves, We have Abraham to our father: for I ſay unto you, that God is able of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children unto Abraham. And now alſo the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down, and caſt into the fire. And the people asked him, ſaying, What ſhall we do then? He anſwereth and ſaith unto them, He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewiſe. Then came alſo publicans to be baptized, and ſaid unto him, Maſter, what ſhall we do? And he ſaid unto them, Exact no more than that which is appointed you. And the ſoldiers likewiſe demanded of him, ſaying, And what ſhall we do? And he ſaid unto them, Do violence to no man, neither accuſe any falſly, and be content with your wages.

Accuſe any falſly.] Tho' the Greek word ſychophantein hath a proverbial ſignification to amuſe, and by that means to flatter thoſe, to whom ſuch accuſation is conveyed by whiſpers, and had its original from a paſſage about figs, as Phavorinus and the grammarians commonly expreſs it, yet it is uſed in a greater latitude for wronging, taking away any thing by force from any, according to the latitude of the Hebrew word ſheph, which ſignifies both to calumniate, and to uſe violence, and accordingly is render'd, in the Old Teſtament, oppreſſing by force. From this uſe of it in the Old Teſtament, the ſenſe of it muſt be fetch'd in the New. So when Zaccheus, chap. xix. 8. ſays of himſelf, "If I have taken any thing from any by falſe," &c. which is the only other place where the word is uſed, it belongs clearly to wrong dealing, violence, injuſtice, taking by force from others, which was common for the publicans to do.

All liv'd by rapine, all made force their gain.

ſays Zeno the comedian, and ſuch was Zaccheus here, and therefore his penitent heart vows ſatisfaction, which the law requires for theft, "reſtitution four-fold." The word belongs to any kind of injuſtice, or extortion, and ſo here to that which is common among ſoldiers, rapine, plundering, ſays Heſychius, that is, forcible invaders. And that is farther expreſs'd here by that which follows, "and be content with your opſonia," that is, thoſe ſtipends that are publickly appointed the ſoldiers, that are kept together in bands for publick uſe, as in Vopiſcus, "Armona ſua contentus ſit, non de lachrymis provincialium vivat," that is, "Let them not oppreſs thoſe countrymen where they are quartered, but reſt ſatisfied with the allowance of victuals that is allowed them." (H.)

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38. And as the people were in expectation, and all men muſed in their hearts of John, whether he were the Chriſt or not; John anſwered, ſaying unto them all, I indeed baptize you with water; but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to unlooſe: he ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire. Whoſe fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and will gather the wheat into his garner; but the chaff he will burn with fire unquenchable. And many other things in his exhortation preached he unto the people. But Herod the tetrarch being reproved by him for Herodias, his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done, Added yet this above all, that he ſhut up John in priſon. Now when all the people were baptized, it came to paſs that Jeſus alſo being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened: And the Holy Ghoſt deſcended in a bodily ſhape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which ſaid, Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleaſed. And Jeſus himſelf began to be about thirty years of age, being (as was ſuppoſed) the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Heli, Which was the ſon of Matthat, which was the ſon of Levi, which was the ſon of Melchi, which was the ſon of Janna, which was the ſon of Joſeph, Which was the ſon of Mattathias, which was the ſon of Amos, which was the ſon of Naum, which was the ſon of Eli, which was the ſon of Nagge, Which was the ſon of Maath, which was the ſon of Mattathias, which was the ſon of Semei, which was the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Juda, Which was the ſon of Joanna, which was the ſon of Rheſa, which was the ſon of Zorobabel, which was the ſon of Salathiel, which was the ſon of Neri, Which was the ſon of Melchi, which was the ſon of Addi, which was the ſon of Coſam, which was the ſon of Elmodam, which was the ſon of Er, Which was the ſon of Joſe, which was the ſon of Eliezer, which was the ſon of Jorim, which was the ſon of Matthat, which was the ſon of Levi, Which was the ſon of Simeon, which was the ſon of Juda, which was the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Jonan, which was the ſon of Eliakim, Which was the ſon of Melea, which was the ſon of Menan, which was the ſon of Mattatha, which was the ſon of Nathan, which was the ſon of David, Which was the ſon of Jeſſe, which was the ſon of Obed, which was the ſon of Booz, which was the ſon of Salmon, which was the ſon of Naaſſon, Which was the ſon of Aminadab, which was the ſon of Aram, which was the ſon of Eſrom, which was the ſon of Phares, which was the ſon of Juda, Which was the ſon of Jacob, which was the ſon of Iſaac, which was the ſon of Abraham, which was the ſon of Thara, which was the ſon of Nachor, Which was the ſon of Saruch, which was the ſon of Ragau, which was the ſon of Phalec, which was the ſon of Heber, which was the ſon of Sala, Which was the ſon of Cainan, which was the ſon of Arphaxad, which was the ſon of Sem, which was the ſon of Noe, which was the ſon of Lamech, Which was the ſon of Mathuſala, which was the ſon of Enoch, which was the ſon of Jared, which was the ſon of Maleleel, which was the ſon of Cainan, Which was the ſon of Enos, which was the ſon of Seth, which was the ſon of Adam, which was the ſon of God.

Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleaſed.] Anciently in the room of theſe words were ſubſtituted thoſe of the ſecond Pſalm, "Thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee." St. Jerome, in his treatiſe of the Agreement of the Evangeliſts, is of the ſame opinion; he writes there, "Illud vero, quod nonnulli codices habent, ſecundum Lucam, hoc illa voce ſonuiſſe, quod in Pſalmo ſcriptum eſt, Filius meus es tu, ego hodie genui te: quanquam in antiquioribus codicibus Græcis non inveniri perhibeatur, tamen ſi aliquibus fide dignis exemplaribus confirmari poſſit, quid aliud intelligendum eſt, quolibet verborum ordine de cœlo ſonuiſſe?" "That which ſome copies have according to Luke, is ſuppoſed to be the ſame mentioned in the Pſalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; tho' in the more ancient Greek copies nothing of that kind can be found, yet if it could be confirmed by ſome copies of authority and credit, what muſt we conſequently underſtand of both, that both were delivered out of heaven?" This is no more than the opinion of Hillary, Methodius, and Laudantius, who, in the room of theſe words, which we read in the other Evangeliſts, ſubſtitute theſe, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee:" not to omit Juſtin Martyr, another follower in this matter. Let none be ſurpriſed that copies ſhould vary ſo frequently. A little after it follows, "And Jeſus himſelf began to be about thirty years of age, being, as was ſuppoſed, the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Heli." In which paſſage there are many particulars that deſerve our conſideration, to the end that thoſe, who have not conſidered every circumſtance, may come to the knowledge of the reſt. They took extraordinary pains to argue, among other things, concerning its juſt diſtinction. Neither is it ſimply true what they imagine, and what ſome of the ancients were pleaſed to lay as the foundation of this paſſage, that Joſeph, in the opinion of mankind, was no other than the father of our Lord, whereas, according to the Law, as Cornelius Bertram, a very learned author, has proved a long time ago, pater eſſet. Neither if Luke had diſcovered a contrary opinion, who ſays being, and then ſubjoins as was ſuppoſed, when he might without any difficulty have ſaid, "Suppoſing him to be the ſon of Joſeph, had it been ſufficient. Now if he thought otherwiſe, what occaſion for Joſeph's genealogy, if Joſeph's was no way anſwerable to Chriſt. Tho' I know what anſwers others will give concerning Mary's pedigree. The following queſtion was moved about very warmly formerly, How came Joſeph's pedigree to be ſet down, when he was not the father of Chriſt? They who are of this opinion do not imagine how ſollicitouſly, and not without reaſon, they have made our Lord the ſon of Joſeph according to the Law; who was God bleſſed for ever, which is approved by Luke. Add to all this, that the more eaſily to obtain credit in this affair, the Jews themſelves will aſſiſt us, who believed long ago that the Meſſiah ſhould be the ſon of Joſeph. Which the moderns have fooliſhly oppoſed. Galataunus proved this to a into the place of the prieſthood of Aaron by the Roman Præfect, this might truly be ſaid by him again, I knew not that he was high prieſt. However, knowing him at that time to be the Naſi, he retracted his haſty and ſharp ſpeech, as having ſpoken ſomewhat againſt the ruler of the people, who was not by the law of God to be evil ſpoken of. That which is commonly ſaid of theſe two high prieſts is, that one was the high prieſt, and the other his ſagan or vicar, ſuch as Zephaniah called the ſecond high prieſt, Jer. lii. 24. Of this ſagan, it is clear, that tho' he was chief or principal of the ordinary prieſts, who miniſtred to the high prieſt, and, in the day of expiation, ſupplied his place in officiating, if any thing fell out which hinder'd him from being able to do it himſelf, and upon this he was called the chief of the ordinary prieſts, and the ſecondary prieſt, and the other prieſt; and in Joſephus, partaker of his office, namely, when he officiates for him, or in that he is appointed his vicar, yet he is never the high prieſt. What he was, you may plainly ſee, Cod. Joma. chap. 1. ſect. 1. where, having ſpoken of the high prieſt, who is to officiate on the day of expiation, it follows, they appoint unto him another prieſt, under him, if by chance any pollution, or prophanation (which hinders the high prieſt from officiating himſelf) do befal him, as in Joſephus, Antiq. l. 17. c. 8. when Matthias the high prieſt was unclean, Joſeph the ſon of Ellam, was his proxy or vicar to officiate for him, but this only for the ſpace of one day, as he ſays there (the great day of expiation, as the Gloſs of Joma clears it). by which it appears, that he was under the high prieſt, as his ſubſtitute, once a year for a day, not for a year, or any long time, but never his colleague, or equal to him. Thirdly, 'tis evident, that this of the ſagan cannot be applied to this matter: For I ſhall demand, to which of theſe two the office of ſagan belonged at this time, to Annas or Caiaphas? To Annas it could not, becauſe if it did, he muſt be acknowledged inferior to the high prieſt; whereas Annas, in all paſſages of ſcripture where he is named with Caiaphas, hath the priority, and never appears to be inferior to Caiaphas, and, therefore, it muſt belong to Caiaphas, or to neither of them; and to Caiaphas it cannot, becauſe it is manifeſt, both that Annas was not the Pontifex Maximus at this time, and that Caiaphas was by the ſeries of them, even now ſet down from Joſephus. Fourthly, the office of the ſagan, as vicarius to the high prieſt, extended no farther than to the officiating in the temple, for from that only was the high prieſt excluded by pollution, ſo as to need a ſubſtitute to officiate for him. Or if it could be conceived that the ſagan was to ſupply the high prieſt's place in judicature, when he was hindered by ſickneſs or indiſpoſition; yet of Annas here that cannot be affirmed; for 'tis apparent, that his authority continued to him, John xviii. 13. when Caiaphas was in health, and acted as high prieſt, ver. 28. And ſo alſo Acts iv. 6. they both met in council together. For theſe reaſons, I ſay, that common way of reconciling this difficulty, by that of the ſagan, may not juſtly be allowed, being not applicable to either of theſe, who are both named here as perſons of authority among the Jews, next to the emperor and his procurator, and appear at the apprehending of Chriſt as magiſtrates, and perſons of civil juriſdiction, which the Naſi and high prieſt were; but the ſagan, as ſuch, cannot be pretended to have been. Another account, I acknowledge, is given of this matter, by Euſebius, l. 1. c. 9. namely, that Chriſt is here ſaid to have begun and accompliſhed his whole time of preaching under Annas and Caiaphas, high prieſts, which, ſays he, notes the compaſs of four years, and that he began his preaching when Annas was high prieſt, and ended it when Caiaphas was high prieſt: For about this time, ſays he, the Roman Præfects having changed the Moſaical courſe, they who were conſtituted high prieſts by them, continued not above a year therein. And he brings a ſucceſſion out of Joſephus, thus: Valerius Gratus, putting Annas out of the high prieſthood, put Iſmael in his ſtead; then, after a while, removing him, he put Eleazar the ſon of Annas in his ſtead, and at the end of the year he gives it to Simon, and at the end of that year, Joſeph, called Caiphas, alſo ſucceeded him, and all thoſe within leſs than four years; and ſo, ſaith he, Caiaphas was high prieſt at our Saviour's paſſion. This might ſound, at firſt hearing, as a probable conjecture, but if examined, will ceaſe to be ſuch: For, firſt, the thing in hand, Luke iii. 1. is not to ſet down the ſpace of the continuance of the preaching of Chriſt, but the year of the beginning of John's preaching punctually, naming that fifteenth year of Tiberius. And, ſecondly, that which Joſephus ſaith, Antiq. l. 18 c. 3. is this, that at the beginning (not at the fifteenth year) of the reign of Tiberius, Valerius Gratus was ſent preſident into Judea; that he continued ſo eleven years; that, in that time, probably in the three firſt years of his government, he changed the high prieſt yearly; that Caiaphas was the laſt of them, who continued the reſt of Gratus's time, and all Pilate's ten years, and was not removed till the time of Vitellius, who ſucceeded Pilate, and put Jonathan, the ſon of Annas, in his ſtead, l. 18. c. 9. By which 'tis clear that Euſebius was miſtaken, in applying that, which Gratus did, in the beginning of Tiberius's reign, to the four years of Chriſt's preaching, and crucifixion, which was certainly under Pilate, all whoſe time Caiaphas was continued in the high prieſthood. And ſo that cannot be the way of ſolving this difficulty. There is only a third way that I have met with, that Annas having been high prieſt long ſince, was now a kind of conſulary man, and, as ſuch, being father-in-law to Caiaphas, the high prieſt of the year, is ſtiled high prieſt alſo. But to this the anſwer is clear, that there were many other ſuch pontifical men alive, ſuch as had been pontifices in their times; and, therefore, there was nothing in that peculiar to Annas, or which could put him in the pontifical Faſti, as the high prieſt of that year, without ſome other addition of dignity, peculiar to him, from thoſe others, ſuch as I ſuppoſe that of the Naſi, and cannot imagine that of being father-in-law to Caiaphas, or any ſuch extrinſical relation to be. (H.)

Ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. And he came into all the country about Jordan, preaching the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins; As it is written in the book of the words of Eſaias the prophet, ſaying, The voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, Prepare ye the way of the Lord make his paths ſtraight. Every valley ſhall be filled, and every mountain and hill ſhall be brought low; and the crooked ſhall be made ſtraight, and the rough ways ſhall be made ſmooth; And all fleſh ſhall ſee the ſalvation of God. Then ſaid he to the multitude, that came forth to be baptized of him, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?

O generation of vipers.] St. Matthew, chap. iii. 7. ſays, that the Baptiſt ſpeaks theſe words to the Phariſees and Sadducees, whom he gives firſt a quick and cutting compellation, O generation of vipers; then a ſharp and ſevere reprehenſion, Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? And laſt of all, a ſeaſonable exhortation, Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance. As if he had ſaid, O you Phariſees, and worſt of men, I perceive by your coming hither that ſome-body hath alarmed you with the notices of that dreadful vengeance that is coming upon this generation; to prevent which, you pretend repentance of your ſins; but let me ſee by your actions, that are not only demure, but ſincere penitence: let me ſee the fruits of your repentance by the daily courſe of your converſation. Learn hence, that the condition of proud Phariſees, and pretending and falſe-hearted hypocrites, tho' very dangerous, yet is not ſo hopeleſs or deſperate; and their ſalvation, tho' the worſt of men, muſt not be deſpaired of. St. John reproves them for their ſin, but yet encourages their repentance; that ſincere repentance is not a barren thing, but does conſtantly bring forth fruits anſwerable to its nature; as faith without works, ſo repentance without fruits is dead alſo. The genuine fruits of repentance, are humility of heart, and holineſs of life. Obſerve, laſtly, the cautionary direction which he gives to theſe hypocrites, not to reſt in their external privileges; Think not to ſay within your ſelves, We have Abraham to our father; glory not in this, that you are the only viſible church that God has upon earth, for God can, out of the obdurate Gentile world, raiſe up a people to himſelf, take them into covenant with himſelf, and caſt you out. Learn hence, firſt, that men are exceeding apt to boaſt of their external privileges, and to place religion in thoſe things in which God places it the leaſt. How did the Jews glory in their being deſcendants from Abraham, as if God was tied to Abraham's line, and could have no people, if he had not them for his people. Secondly, that 'tis a vain thing to expect exemption from the judgment of God, becauſe of outward privileges enjoyed by us. If we be not born againſt the ſpirit, it will avail us nothing to be born of Abraham's fleſh: if the faith of Abraham be not found in our hearts, it will be no advantage to us, that Abraham's blood is running in our veins, Think not to ſay, We have Abraham for our father. (B.)

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, and begin not to ſay within your ſelves, We have Abraham to our father: for I ſay unto you, that God is able of theſe ſtones to raiſe up children unto Abraham. And now alſo the ax is laid unto the root of the trees: every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down, and caſt into the fire. And the people asked him, ſaying, What ſhall we do then? He anſwereth and ſaith unto them, He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and he that hath meat, let him do likewiſe. Then came alſo publicans to be baptized, and ſaid unto him, Maſter, what ſhall we do? And he ſaid unto them, Exact no more than that which is appointed you. And the ſoldiers likewiſe demanded of him, ſaying, And what ſhall we do? And he ſaid unto them, Do violence to no man, neither accuſe any falſly, and be content with your wages.

Accuſe any falſly.] Tho' the Greek word ſychophantein hath a proverbial ſignification to amuſe, and by that means to flatter thoſe, to whom ſuch accuſation is conveyed by whiſpers, and had its original from a paſſage about figs, as Phavorinus and the grammarians commonly expreſs it, yet it is uſed in a greater latitude for wronging, taking away any thing by force from any, according to the latitude of the Hebrew word ſheph, which ſignifies both to calumniate, and to uſe violence, and accordingly is render'd, in the Old Teſtament, oppreſſing by force. From this uſe of it in the Old Teſtament, the ſenſe of it muſt be fetch'd in the New. So when Zaccheus, chap. xix. 8. ſays of himſelf, " If I have taken any thing from any by falſe," &c. which is the only other place where the word is uſed, it belongs clearly to wrong dealing, violence, injuſtice, taking by force from others, which was common for the publicans to do.

All liv'd by rapine, all made force their gain.

ſays Zeno the comedian, and ſuch was Zaccheus here, and therefore his penitent heart vows ſatisfaction, which the law requires for theft, " reſtitution four-fold." The word belongs to any kind of injuſtice, or extortion, and ſo here to that which is common among ſoldiers, rapine, plundering, ſays Heſychius, that is, forcible invaders. And that is farther expreſs'd here by that which follows, " and be content with your opſonia," that is, thoſe ſtipends that are publickly appointed the ſoldiers, that are kept together in bands for publick uſe, as in Vopiſcus, " Armona ſua contentus ſit, non de lachrymis provincialium vivat," that is, " Let them not oppreſs thoſe countrymen where they are quartered, but reſt ſatisfied with the allowance of victuals that is allowed them." (H.)

Ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38. And as the people were in expectation, and all men muſed in their hearts of John, whether he were the Chriſt or not; John anſwered, ſaying unto them all, I indeed baptize you with water; but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to unlooſe: he ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire. Whoſe fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and will gather the wheat into his garner; but the chaff he will burn with fire unquenchable. And many other things in his exhortation preached he unto the people. But Herod the tetrarch being reproved by him for Herodias, his brother Philip's wife, and for all the evils which Herod had done, Added yet this above all, that he ſhut up John in priſon. Now when all the people were baptized, it came to paſs that Jeſus alſo being baptized, and praying, the heaven was opened: And the Holy Ghoſt deſcended in a bodily ſhape like a dove upon him, and a voice came from heaven, which ſaid, Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleaſed. And Jeſus himſelf began to be about thirty years of age, being (as was ſuppoſed) the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Heli, Which was the ſon of Matthat, which was the ſon of Levi, which was the ſon of Melchi, which was the ſon of Janna, which was the ſon of Joſeph, Which was the ſon of Mattathias, which was the ſon of Amos, which was the ſon of Naum, which was the ſon of Eli, which was the ſon of Nagge, Which was the ſon of Maath, which was the ſon of Mattathias, which was the ſon of Semei, which was the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Juda, Which was the ſon of Joanna, which was the ſon of Rheſa, which was the ſon of Zorobabel, which was the ſon of Salathiel, which was the ſon of Neri, Which was the ſon of Melchi, which was the ſon of Addi, which was the ſon of Coſam, which was the ſon of Elmodam, which was the ſon of Er, Which was the ſon of Joſe, which was the ſon of Eliezer, which was the ſon of Jorim, which was the ſon of Matthat, which was the ſon of Levi, Which was the ſon of Simeon, which was the ſon of Juda, which was the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Jonan, which was the ſon of Eliakim, Which was the ſon of Melea, which was the ſon of Menan, which was the ſon of Mattatha, which was the ſon of Nathan, which was the ſon of David, Which was the ſon of Jeſſe, which was the ſon of Obed, which was the ſon of Booz, which was the ſon of Salmon, which was the ſon of Naaſſon, Which was the ſon of Aminadab, which was the ſon of Aram, which was the ſon of Eſrom, which was the ſon of Phares, which was the ſon of Juda, Which was the ſon of Jacob, which was the ſon of Iſaac, which was the ſon of Abraham, which was the ſon of Thara, which was the ſon of Nachor, Which was the ſon of Saruch, which was the ſon of Ragau, which was the ſon of Phalec, which was the ſon of Heber, which was the ſon of Sala, Which was the ſon of Cainan, which was the ſon of Arphaxad, which was the ſon of Sem, which was the ſon of Noe, which was the ſon of Lamech, Which was the ſon of Mathuſala, which was the ſon of Enoch, which was the ſon of Jared, which was the ſon of Maleleel, which was the ſon of Cainan, Which was the ſon of Enos, which was the ſon of Seth, which was the ſon of Adam, which was the ſon of God.

Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleaſed.] Anciently in the room of theſe words were ſubſtituted thoſe of the ſecond Pſalm, " Thou art my ſon, this day have I begotten thee." St. Jerome, in his treatiſe of the Agreement of the Evangeliſts, is of the ſame opinion; he writes there, " Illud vero, quod nonnulli codices habent, ſecundum Lucam, hoc illa voce ſonuiſſe, quod in Pſalmo ſcriptum eſt, Filius meus es tu, ego hodie genui te: quanquam in antiquioribus codicibus Græcis non inveniri perhibeatur, tamen ſi aliquibus fide dignis exemplaribus confirmari poſſit, quid aliud intelligendum eſt, quolibet verborum ordine de cœlo ſonuiſſe?" " That which ſome copies have according to Luke, is ſuppoſed to be the ſame mentioned in the Pſalm, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee; tho' in the more ancient Greek copies nothing of that kind can be found, yet if it could be confirmed by ſome copies of authority and credit, what muſt we conſequently underſtand of both, that both were delivered out of heaven?" This is no more than the opinion of Hillary, Methodius, and Laudantius, who, in the room of theſe words, which we read in the other Evangeliſts, ſubſtitute theſe, " Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee:" not to omit Juſtin Martyr, another follower in this matter. Let none be ſurpriſed that copies ſhould vary ſo frequently. A little after it follows, " And Jeſus himſelf began to be about thirty years of age, being, as was ſuppoſed, the ſon of Joſeph, which was the ſon of Heli." In which paſſage there are many particulars that deſerve our conſideration, to the end that thoſe, who have not conſidered every circumſtance, may come to the knowledge of the reſt. They took extraordinary pains to argue, among other things, concerning its juſt diſtinction. Neither is it ſimply true what they imagine, and what ſome of the ancients were pleaſed to lay as the foundation of this paſſage, that Joſeph, in the opinion of mankind, was no other than the father of our Lord, whereas, according to the Law, as Cornelius Bertram, a very learned author, has proved a long time ago, pater eſſet. Neither if Luke had diſcovered a contrary opinion, who ſays being, and then ſubjoins as was ſuppoſed, when he might without any difficulty have ſaid, " Suppoſing him to be the ſon of Joſeph, had it been ſufficient. Now if he thought otherwiſe, what occaſion for Joſeph's genealogy, if Joſeph's was no way anſwerable to Chriſt. Tho' I know what anſwers others will give concerning Mary's pedigree. The following queſtion was moved about very warmly formerly, How came Joſeph's pedigree to be ſet down, when he was not the father of Chriſt? They who are of this opinion do not imagine how ſollicitouſly, and not without reaſon, they have made our Lord the ſon of Joſeph according to the Law; who was God bleſſed for ever, which is approved by Luke. Add to all this, that the more eaſily to obtain credit in this affair, the Jews themſelves will aſſiſt us, who believed long ago that the Meſſiah ſhould be the ſon of Joſeph. Which the moderns have fooliſhly oppoſed. Galataunus proved this to a great many; which opinion is ſuppoſed to be taken firſt from Bereſchith Rabba. Whereas it ſeems more evident, that the ancient Jews drew that place of Geneſis xlix. 24. hither. Where, according to the old tranſlation, Jacob ſays of Joſeph, "From hence ſhall go out a ſhepherd, the ſtone of Iſrael." Luke, before he ſets down the genealogy of Joſeph, before he deſcends to particulars, informs us in a few words. In the firſt place, when our Lord was baptized. In the ſecond, whoſe ſon he was, namely, Joſeph's. In the third, (wherein the Jews are miſtaken) how he ſhould be the ſon of Joſeph according to the Law, as he diſcovers in that genealogy, that he was at the ſame time both the ſon of David and Joſeph. Now as it obtained place at this time amongſt the Jewiſh laws, for learning and education to take place before adoption, that year when every one ſet about his employment, and diſcovered his own and parents names, our Lord performed the ſame, who from that time began to be reputed the ſon of Joſeph. Whence this ſame Evangeliſt, in the ſermon of our Lord, which is explained in the fourth chapter, ſays he called aloud, "Is not this the ſon of Joſeph?" And John vi. 42. after another ſermon, "Is not this Jeſus the ſon of Joſeph, whoſe father and mother we know?" Which Philip, in the beginning of the ſame chapter, proves from the Law, "Of whom in the Law, Moſes and the Prophets, we have found Jeſus the ſon of Joſeph of Nazareth." Now the year the parents went up to preſent themſelves to the Levites, it was commanded, Numbers iv. 2. "Take the ſum of the ſons of Cobat, from the midſt of the ſons of Levi, by their families, and by the houſes of their fathers." For which thing moſt accurate genealogies were preſerved, ſuch as Luke has put down here. Where it immediately follows, "From thirty years old and upwards, even until fifty years old, all that entered into the hoſt, to do work in the tabernacle of the congregation," that is, to do work in the tabernacle of the church." So that the Evangeliſt, to the end none might ſuppoſe that our Lord was conceived of any other than the Holy Ghoſt, after having ſignified that he was call'd the Son of God, by God himſelf, he ſhews afterwards how he comes to be the ſon of Joſeph. When he ſet about preaching, and began to diſplay his miracles, he owned no other name than what his parents had given him. As he had not only a true father from the law, which the law gave (tho' he was his father in another view) ſo he had another by nature. This is ſufficient for this genealogy. This was Joſeph, who was his father, and Mary his mother; and he ſoon was ſuppoſed their ſon. A certain Grecian, without ſtanding to conſider things right, with ſome aſſurance and pleaſantry, as we find it in Suidas, places our Lord among the number of the Levites, with this inſcription, "The Son of God and of Mary." As tho' all the account Luke hath given us of this matter was falſe. That he who came to fulfill the law ſhould take a father from the law, as was ſuppoſed. Now Luke has given us his genealogy, which is not drawn from the mother's ſide, according to the preſcription of the law, who owned him as his Lord, aſſoon as he had given himſelf a name, and by right of adoption profeſſed his father according to the law. He called himſelf the ſon of Joſeph, and mankind began to look upon him as ſuch. It had been ſufficient if he had ſaid, that he was the Son of God, a father above a genealogy, a father without a father. In whom the genealogy of Luke, tho' traced upwards from man to man, concludes. Whoever has perſuaded the Jews this? Now as to the phraſe, "As was ſuppoſed the ſon of Joſeph, the ſon of Heli;" to ſay that he was actually ſo, and then that he was reputed ſo, is a contradiction too evident: ſo the other manifeſtly takes away both from the law and the adoption, which depended upon the law. To illuſtrate this; ſuppoſing that any one ſhould ſay that Auguſtus, who was the ſon of Octavius, and adopted by Julius, after he had been thus adopted and transferred into the family, was only in his opinion his ſon: Upon which the very ſtrength of the empire depended. Now adoption was of the ſame power among the Jews according to the Moſaic law, as it was among the Romans. But how ſhall one opinion be ſufficient for a lawful admiſſion? Tho' Bertram and his aſſiſtant, with all the critical diſtinctions they have endeavoured to make, have not, in my opinion, managed the affair as it ought. The following turn ſeems to pleaſe him, And Jeſus himſelf began to be as if about thirty years of age, being as was ſuppoſed the ſon of Joſeph, the ſon of Heli. Now as the Evangeliſt ſays he began, why did he add as if? What man would ſay, When he began as if to be thirty years of age? Now one of theſe ways, which cuſtom hath eſtabliſhed, hath put down an even and adequate number; whereas the other takes it away. We poſitively are of opinion, that the meaning of the Evangeliſt was thus; "And Jeſus himſelf was about thirty years old, when from the law he began to be accounted the ſon of Joſeph." Add to all theſe things, that it had been impoſſible for our Lord to enter upon his office of preaching with full authority, that it had been impoſſible to have arrived at this authority, but every one muſt underſtand who his parents were, or rather who was his father: which otherwiſe was to be traced from his pedigree, which the Evangeliſt has ſet down. Moreover, ſince it was neceſſary for to deduce the ſynodia, or pedigree, or family, as it was cuſtomary to lay open this before the perſon's employment, what remained after all this, but for Joſeph to aſſert his right, and vindicate himſelf to be his father. In ſhort, Luke lays open the vocation, whereby he evidently diſcovered what our Lord was, namely, the ſon of Joſeph; ſo that the meaning is, "with the profeſſion of his education he began, according to the law, to be reputed the ſon of Joſeph." So that the words as was ſuppoſed is to be referred to the law, as ſeveral learned men have taken notice of before, but not to my opinion. Our Evangeliſt, after Chriſt began to preach, and draw every one into admiration of his doctrine, adds this, "And all bore witneſs of him, and wondred at the words that came out of his mouth:" and they ſaid, "Is not this the ſon of Joſeph?" ſo very frequently, when we enquire into the original and family of Chriſt, and come to admire the ſurpriſingneſs and excellency of his talents, we call him ſon, on account of the law and his education. Now 'tis believed that the ſons of Joſeph had ſons, who by the ancients were called adelphothei, or brothers of God. Chriſt was truly and certainly the ſon of Joſeph, and by all accounted ſo. Since, therefore, we have ſet down his education, his profeſſion of employment, and the inſtitutions which followed, when came the legal adoption, which depended upon his education, it was impoſſible at that time for any to be ſtrangers to his parents. The Evangeliſt well expreſs'd himſelf, "as was ſuppoſed, Jeſus began to be the ſon of Joſeph." And no one can doubt in the leaſt, but that the original of our Lord ſhould be referred to that. St. Jerome has ſpoke handſomely on this paſſage, in ſaying that education was in the room of nature, as ſeveral fathers are ſaid to beget in ſcripture, who are fathers by education. Methinks I have dwelt long enough on this article. Suffer me by way of appendix to ſubjoin a few more obſervations on ſynodia, and its meanings. Whence the ancient fathers called a congregation or meeting (aſchonmenon) ſuch as the monks had at that time, by ſynodia. The author of the aſceticks, which is commonly attributed to great Baſil, ſays thus, "That every one may pay obedience to ſuch things as regard the aſſembly." And again, "If it be therefore reaſonable that the aſſembly or congregation ſubmit itſelf to the determination of the præfect or governor." And again, "That every thing he ſhall determine, or order to be done, ſhall be taken by the congregation for a law." Thus in the Collectanea of Simeon Magiſter we read, "'Tis but juſt that all thoſe who live within the pale of the aſſembly preſerve mutual love, and reciprocal kindneſs, for one another." This paſſage either ſeems to allude to, or to have been taken from the paſſage before us, tho' probably he did not underſtand it. Athanaſius, in his apology concerning his baniſhment, acquaints us thus, "Theſe are not words, but the fact itſelf; all the Mareotæ, who are prieſts, being witneſſes, that the biſhops themſelves were always preſent there." And further, "That he was always well pleaſed, when walking with one of the Mareots; That he did not confine himſelf entirely to the latter, but was accompanied by prieſts, deacons, and many others. This, as I had their company ſo frequently, makes me venture to affirm ſo much in this matter. Now let us return to the word ſynodia. Our wonder is the more, when we conſider how ſeveral great and learned men have differed in this article, ſince the Evangeliſt has given us the clear meaning of his mind, when he ſays, "And they ſought him amongſt his relations and acquaintance." Give a reaſon for this. Becauſe they ſuppoſed he was buſied amongſt his relations or acquaintance. This circumſtance made Epiphanius think he had laid hold of the truth. Without multiplying of words or circumſtances, I muſt ſay at laſt, that ſynodia comprehends all ſuch as are conjoined to us by blood or otherwiſe; who went up annually to perform the feaſts, and who were ſet down together in the genealogical volume. This was the reaſon that made them ſuppoſe our Lord Chriſt was converſant with his relations and friends, who went up together to Jeruſalem to the celebration of the feaſt. Whence, as he diſcovered the truth of his humanity, ſo 'tis apparent he retained his ſynodia while on earth. From him we learn a right leſſon, that we and our deſcendants ſhould imitate the ſame exemplary courſe, and copy after ſuch divine beginnings; however, as we received our birth after the ſame manner, tho' the conception was different. However, we are not in the mean time to forget his being of the ſeed of David, and promiſed as ſuch a great many ages before. Who cannot with ſurpriſe and wonder enter into an examination of the pedigree of our Lord, eſpecially before the Evangeliſt has exhibited it here? Principally if he is of opinion that he was born from Adam with us, born of God the Father, of God from eternity, with whom, we being loſt in Adam, he mercifully and bountifully joined us. As we derived the original of ſin from the firſt Adam, ſo we regained our deliverance from it by the ſecond; and being endowed with the ſame nature, we have the happineſs to have a father. God gave this nature to man, that he might join him to himſelf. The ſame who was God was pleaſed to be man; he who condeſcended to be our Saviour would alſo be our brother; and willing to be above the account of genealogy, to exerciſe the curious, he would be our relation. God, who for the ſake of man became man, nay, almoſt below man, was made in the earth: whom, as a certain perſon has juſtly obſerved, he formed out of the duſt, regenerated with water, augmented with the ſpirit, and inſtituted by his word, whoſe nature he carried up to heaven, ſet it above the angels themſelves, he being God and man. As for my part (tho' there may be others of a different opinion, who have an averſion to real and ſound erudition, ſuch as the ſtudy of letters and languages) I cannot ſee how either true divinity or learning, which frequently depend upon the different ſenſes of words, ſhould be obtained, if neither the words nor the dialect are rightly underſtood. And if I am not miſtaken, this can never be done without learning it before-hand. Indeed thoſe who are ignorant may poſſibly deſpiſe; and conſequently they may deſpiſe, becauſe they have never been informed. (D. H.)

CHAP. IV.

Of the tempting and faſting of Chriſt. He teacheth in Nazareth, to the great admiration of all people. A prophet is contemned in his own country. One poſſeſſed with a devil is healed. The infirmed are heal'd. Devils confeſs that Chriſt is the Son of God.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. AND Jeſus being full of the Holy Ghoſt returned from Jordan, and was led by the ſpirit into the wilderneſs, Being forty days tempted of the devil; and in thoſe days he did eat nothing: and when they were ended, he afterward hungred. And the devil ſaid unto him, If thou be the Son of God, command this ſtone that it be made bread. And Jeſus anſwered him, ſaying, It is written that man ſhall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God. And the devil taking him up into an high mountain, ſhewed unto him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time. And the devil ſaid unto him, All this power will I give thee, and the glory of them; for that is delivered unto me, and to whomſoever I will I give it. If thou therefore wilt worſhip me, all ſhall be thine. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, Get thee behind me, Satan: for it is written, Thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve. And he brought him to Jeruſalem, and ſet him on a pinnacle of the temple, and ſaid unto him, If thou be the Son of God, caſt thyſelf down from hence. For it is written, He ſhall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee. And in their hands they ſhall bear thee up, leſt at any time thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto him, It is ſaid, Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God. And when the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from him for a ſeaſon. And Jeſus returned in the power of the ſpirit into Galilee: and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about. And he taught in their ſynagogues, being glorified of all. And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his cuſtom was, he went into the ſynagogue on the ſabbath-day, and ſtood up for to read. And there was delivered unto him the book of the prophet Eſaias; and when he had opened the book, he found the place where it was written.

Opened the book.] The Greek word anatuſſo refers to the manner of writing among the Jews, which was not in parchments or papers ſewed together, as we now uſe, but in one continued page or long roll, and that folded up, to ſave it from duſt, or any other harm. So the phraſe in the Hebrew ſignifies no more than charta volutilis, a paper or parchment folded up, according to that of Iſaiah iii. 4. "And the heavens ſhall be folded up as a book;" referring to the cuſtom of folding books and writings: and ſo, Apoc. vi. 14. "The heavens paſſed away as a folded book;" that is, which is ſometimes by the Greeks called biblion, and by us rightly render'd a bill, Deut. xxiv. 1. and ſometimes kephalis, from the round form when 'tis folded up, as in architecture ſome round parts are called kephalide, Exodus xxvi. 32. 37. And ſo ſaith Suidas, "The volume or round form of a book, which ſome call the folding." Thus it is uſed, Heb. x. 7. out of the Pſalmiſt, for a roll, or inſtrument, or indenture, wherein Chriſt undertakes in writing, under his hand, as it were, "to do God's will," or that which God requires of him, by way of office. And Theophylact, who explains it by a roll. After the manner of theſe rolls or bills were their books and other writings rolled up, when they ſhould ſhut them: "The books of the law folded up," ſays Eliezer, and opened by way of unfolding, or unrolling, and then again rolled up, as here, "rolling it up," ver. 20. which the Hebrews commonly expreſs by, "and he folded up the book or roll," that is, he ſhut it up. (H.)

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21. The ſpirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe he hath anointed me to preach the Goſpel to the poor, he hath ſent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of ſight to the blind, to ſet at liberty them that are bruiſed, To preach the acceptable year of the Lord. And he cloſed the book, and he gave it again to the miniſter, and ſat down: and the eyes of all them that were in the ſynagogue were faſtned on him. And he began to ſay unto them, This day is this ſcripture fulfilled in your ears.

This day is this ſcripture fulfilled in your ears.] Our bleſſed Saviour being thus fitted and prepared, by his baptiſm and temptations, for the execution of his miniſterial office, he now enters upon the great work of preaching the Goſpel. And St. Luke here declares the firſt place he preached at, he beſtowed his firſt ſermon upon Nazareth, and the firſt text he preached upon, Iſaiah lxi. 1. Obſerve firſt, the place which our Saviour preached at, he beſtowed his firſt ſermon on Nazareth, the place of his conception and education; for tho' Chriſt was born at Bethlehem, yet he was bred and brought up at Nazareth. There he had his poor but painful education, working upon his father's trade, that of a carpenter. This prejudiced the Jews againſt him, who looked for a ſcepter, not an ax, in the hand of him who was born king of the Jews. Our Saviour's ſhort and ſecret abode at Bethlehem, and his long and publick living at Nazareth, occaſioned him to be called Jeſus of Nazareth. Yet ſome conceive it was a nick-name thrown upon our Saviour by the devil, that he might diſguiſe the place of Chriſt's nativity, and leave the Jews at the greater loſs concerning their Meſſiah. Certain it is, that this name "Jeſus of Nazareth" ſtuck upon our Saviour all his life-time, and at his death was fixed by Pilate on the croſs. Nay, after his aſcenſion, ſuch as believed on him were called the "ſect of the Nazarenes, or the followers of Jeſus of Nazareth." Remark the text which our Saviour preached upon at Nazareth, he takes it out of the prophet Iſaiah, lxi. 1. "The ſpirit of the Lord is upon me, and he hath appointed me to preach the Goſpel to the poor;" that is, God the Father hath poured forth the holy ſpirit without meaſure upon me, in all the gifts and graces of it, to furniſh me in the work of a Mediator, and particularly to preach the Goſpel to the poor in ſpirit, and to ſuch as are poor in outward condition, if humbled with the ſight and ſenſe of their ſins; "to bind up the broken-hearted;" that is, to comfort them with the glad tidings of the Goſpel; to preach deliverance to the captives;" to let ſuch ſinners know, who were ſlaves to ſin and Satan, that a Deliverer is come, if they are willing to be delivered by him; "to preach the acceptable year of the Lord;" or to proclaim a ſpiritual jubilee, in which God proffers pardon of ſin, and reconciliation with himſelf, upon the terms of the Goſpel. Learn hence, that God ſtirreth up none to take upon him the office of the miniſtry, whom he hath not fitted and furniſhed with gifts for the regular diſcharge of it. Secondly, that Chriſt himſelf did not undertake the office of Mediator, but by the ordination of God the Holy Spirit; "the ſpirit of the Lord is upon me, and he hath ſent me to preach the Goſpel." Thirdly, that no creature, angel, or man, could perform the office of a Mediator, but only Chriſt, who was conſecratad to that office, by an anointing from the Holy Spirit without meaſure; "the ſpirit of the Lord hath anointed me." Fourthly, that the preaching of the Goſpel, the great ordinance which Chriſt himſelf made uſe of, and recommended to his apoſtles and miniſters, for enlightning blind ſinners, for comforting broken hearts, and for delivering captive ſouls from the ſlavery and dominion of ſin and Satan; "he hath ſent me to preach the Goſpel to the poor, to heal the broken hearted, to publiſh deliverance to the captives, and recovering of ſight to the blind." What enemies then are they to the ſouls of men, who have mean and low thoughts of this high and honourable ordinance of God, the preaching the everlaſting Goſpel, which is the power of God unto ſalvation. Obſerve, ſecondly, the behaviour of our Saviour's auditors (the men of Nazareth) under his preaching; their eyes were fix'd, and their minds intent upon him, upon what was ſpoken by him; the eyes of all that were in the ſynagogue were faſtned upon him, not cloſed with ſleep, nor gazing about, but fixed upon Chriſt the preacher. Fixing of the eye is a great help to the attention of the ear, and the intention of the mind: a faſtned eye is a means to help us to a fixed heart; as a wandring eye is both a ſign and a cauſe of a wandring heart. O that our hearers would imitate our Saviour's hearers under the word: they faſtned their eyes upon him, as if they meant to hear with their eyes as well as with their ears; and yet we have cauſe to ſuſpect, that curioſity rather than piety cauſed this their attention; ſeeing, as you will find, ver. 29. that thoſe very perſons, who out of novelty were ready to eat his words, ſoon after, out of cruelty, were ready to devour the ſpeaker; for they thruſt him out of the city, led him to the brow of the hill, and would have caſt him down headlong. What wonder is it, that the perſons of Chriſt's miniſters are deſpiſed, and their doctrine neglected, when Chriſt himſelf, the firſt preacher of the Goſpel, and for his firſt ſermon at Nazareth, was thus ignominiouſly treated. Laſtly, how Chriſt conforms to the ceremonies of the Jewiſh doctrine, who, in honour of the law and the prophets, ſtood up when they read them, and, according to cuſtom, ſat down when they explained them. And altho' the worſhip in the ſynagogue was then loaden with rules and ceremonies of human invention, and alſo the lives and manners both of prieſts and people were much corrupted, yet both our Saviour and his diſciples went to the ſynagogue as members of the church of Nazareth every ſabbath-day, joining with them in the publick worſhip. From whence we may reaſonably infer, that ſuch Chriſtians as do quietly and peaceably comply with the practice of the church in whoſe communion they live, in the obſervation of ſuch indifferent rites, as ſhe uſes, act moſt agreeably to the practice and example of our Saviour. (B.)

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37. And all bare him witneſs, and wondred at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth, And they ſaid, Is not this Joſeph's ſon? And he ſaid unto them, Ye will ſurely ſay unto me this proverb, Phyſician, heal thy ſelf: whatſoever we have heard done in Capernaum, do alſo here in thy country. And he ſaid, Verily I ſay unto you, No prophet is accepted in his own country But I tell you of a truth, many widows were in Iſrael in the days of Elias, when the heaven was ſhut up three years and ſix months, when great famine was throughout all the land: But unto none of them was Elias ſent, ſave unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow. And many lepers were in Iſrael in the time of Eliſeus the prophet: and none of them was cleanſed, ſave Naaman the Syrian. And all they in the ſynagogue, when they heard theſe things, were filled with wrath, And roſe up, and thruſt him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill (whereon their city was built) that they might caſt him down headlong. But he paſſing through the mids of them, went his way: And came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and taught them on the ſabbath-days. And they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine: for his word was with power. And in the ſynagogue there was a man which had a ſpirit of an unclean devil, and cried out with a loud voice, Saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jeſus of Nazareth? art thou come to deſtroy us? I know thee who thou art; the holy One of God. And Jeſus rebuked him, ſaying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil had thrown him in the mids, he came out of him, and hurt him not. And they were all amazed, and ſpake among themſelves, ſaying, What a word is this? for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean ſpirits, and they come out. And the fame of him went out into every place of the country round about.

The fame of him went out into every place.] Our bleſſed Saviour being driven out of Nazareth, by the fury of his countrymen, departs to Capernaum, where he enter'd into their ſynagogues and taught. Who can declare the pains that Chriſt took, and the hazards he ran, in preaching the everlaſting Goſpel to loſt ſinners? But obſerve the ſmallneſs of his ſucceſs; the people were aſtoniſhed, but believed not; his doctrine produced admiration, but not faith; his auditors were admirers, but not believers; the people were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine, the reaſon of which aſtoniſhment is added, for his word was with power, that is, there was majeſty in his perſon, ſpirituality in his preaching, and powerful miracles accompanying both, and confirming both, of which the Evangeliſt here gives us an account, namely, the caſting out a devil in one poſſeſs'd, ver. 33 There was a man which had a ſpirit of an unclean devil, and he cried out, that is, the devil, that unclean ſpirit, did enter into him, and bodily poſſeſs him. Among many other calamities, which ſin hath brought upon our bodies, this is one, to be bodily poſſeſs'd by Satan. The devil hath an inveterate malice againſt mankind, ſeeking to ruin our ſouls by his ſuggeſtions and temptations, and to deſtroy our bodies by ſome means or other. O how much is it our intereſt as well as our duty, by prayer, to put our ſelves, morning and evening, under the divine care and protection, that we may be preſerved from the power and malice of evil ſpirits! Obſerve the title here given to the devil, he is called the unclean ſpirit; the devil, thoſe wicked ſpirits of hell, are moſt impure and filthy creatures; impure, by reaſon of their original apoſtacy; impure, by means of their daily ſins; ſuch are murder, lying, malice, and the like, by which they continually pollute themſelves; and impure, by means of their continual deſire and endeavours to pollute mankind with the contagion of their own ſin: Lord, how foul is the nature of ſin, which makes the devil ſuch a foul and filthy, ſuch an impure and unclean creature. Obſerve, thirdly, the ſubſtance of the devil's outcry, Let us alone, what have we to do with thee? Art thou come to deſtroy us? That is, to reſtrain us from the exerciſe of our power; the devil thinks himſelf deſtroyed, when he is reſtrained from doing miſchief. Obſerve fourthly, the title given by the devil to our Saviour; he ſtiles him, The holy One of God: How comes this acknowledgment out of the devil's mouth? Could an apoſtate make a confeſſion beyond this? But how comes Satan to make it? For no good end, and with no good intention, we may be ſure, for the devil never ſpeaks truth for truth's ſake, but for advantage ſake, probably, he might make this confeſſion, that ſo he might bring the truth profeſs'd into queſtion, hoping that the truth, which received teſtimony from the father of lies, would be ſuſpected, or it perhaps be done to make the people believe, that our Saviour had ſome familiarity with Satan, and did work miracles by his aſſiſtance, becauſe he did confeſs him, and ſeem to put honour upon him. Hence we may learn, that it is impoſſible for a perſon to own and acknowledge Chriſt to be the true and only Saviour, and yet to miſs of ſalvation by him, if a ſpeculative knowledge, and a verbal profeſſion of Chriſt, were ſufficient to ſalvation, the devil himſelf would not miſs of happineſs. Obſerve, fifthly, how our Saviour rebukes the devil, for this confeſſion, and commands him ſilence, Jeſus rebukes him, ſaying, Hold thy peace: But why was this rebuke given the devil, and his mouth ſtopp'd when he ſpake the truth. Anſwer, 1. Becauſe Chriſt knew that the devil confeſs'd the truth, on purpoſe to diſgrace the truth. 2. Becauſe the devil was no fit perſon to make this profeſſion; the teſtimony of truth from the father of lies is enough to render truth itſelf ſuſpected; yet the devil's evidence, that Chriſt was the holy One of God, will riſe up in judgment againſt the wicked Phariſees, who ſhut their eyes againſt the miracles, and ſtop their ears againſt the doctrine, of the holy One of God. Obſerve, laſtly, how the unclean ſpirit obeys the voice of Chriſt, but with great reluctancy, and regret, when the unclean ſpirit had thrown him in the midſt, he came out; where obſerve the devil's ſpite at parting, he throws the man violently from place to place, ſhewing how loth he was to be diſpoſſeſſed; where Satan has once gotten hold, and ſettled himſelf for a time, how unwilling is he to be caſt out of poſſeſſion. (B.)

Ver. 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44. And he aroſe out of the ſynagogue, and entred into Simon's houſe: and Simon's wife's mother was taken with a great fever; and they beſought him for her. And he ſtood over her, and rebuked the fever, and it left her. And immediately ſhe aroſe and miniſtred unto them. Now when the ſun was ſetting, all they that had any ſick with divers diſeaſes, brought them unto him: and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them. And devils alſo came out of many, crying out, and ſaying, Thou art Chriſt the Son of God. And he rebuking them, ſuffered them not to ſpeak: for they knew that he was Chriſt. And when it was day he departed, and went into a deſert place: and the people ſought him, and came unto him, and ſtayed him, that he ſhould not depart from them. And he ſaid unto them, I muſt preach the kingdom of God to other cities alſo: for therefore am I ſent. And he preached in the ſynagogues of Galilee.

And he preached in the ſynagogues of Galilee.] Preaching was Chriſt's great work. Chriſt omitted ſometimes the performance of miracles, that he might preach to other cities. This was his great work. (B.)

CHAP. V.

Chriſt teaches out of a ſhip. The capture of fiſhes. Chriſt in the deſart. Faſtings and afflictions attend the Apoſtles after the aſcenſion.

Ver. 1, 2. AND it came to paſs, that as the people preſſed upon him to hear the word of God, he ſtood in the lake of Genneſareth, And ſaw two ſhips ſtanding in the lake:. for the fiſhermen were gone out of them, and were waſhing their nets.

Gone out of them.] Some differences ſeem to be between the ſtory of Chriſt's coming to theſe two boats, &c. here ſet down, from what it had been in St. Matthew. There Peter and Andrew were caſting nets into the ſea, or lake, Matt. iv. 18. and James and John were in the ſhip mending their nets, ver. 21. but here 'tis ſaid indifferently of them, apobantes ap' autoon, having departed from their boats, apeplunan ta diktua, they waſhed, or had waſhed, their nets. So, again, 'tis ſaid that Chriſt called Andrew and Peter, and they followed him, Matt. iv. 20. and departing thence, he ſaw the other two, and called them, ver. 22. whereas here, when Peter is called, James and John are with him, ver. 10. and unleſs they were called at the ſame time with Peter, there would be found no other mention of their call, or their following of him. In anſwer to theſe, it muſt firſt be obſerved in general, that Matthew and Mark making a brief ſummary relation, and leaving out a main particular of this ſtory, which Luke takes in, that of the miracle of the fiſhes, and ſetting down no more but his ſeeing and coming to their boats, and his calling them, and their following him, do, upon occaſion of his coming firſt to one boat, then to the other, ſet down all that belongs to the one, before they proceed to the other, which is very ordinary in all ſtories, when yet many of the paſſages are intermix'd. This being ſaid, it muſt next (for the reconciling of the firſt ſeeming difference) be obſerved, that what is here ſaid, apeplunan in the Aaoriſt, muſt be underſtood of the time paſt indefinitely, and be beſt rendered, they had waſhed their nets, and ſo for the apobantes, after that they had gone out and waſh'd (that is, they had given over fiſhing at that time) and having done ſo, they were returned to their boats again before this time, when 'tis ſaid of Chriſt, that he ſaw their ſhips ſtanding by the lake, that is, at the point ſpecified here, ver. 1. when ſtanding by the lake the people preſs'd upon, or flock'd unto, him, to hear the word. And as this is intimated by St. Luke, v. 3. (when 'tis ſaid that Chriſt entered into one of the ſhips, and deſired Simon, the owner of it, to thruſt out a little, which notes that he was come back to the boat again) and as this is all that is affirmed by St. Luke, ſo it agrees very well with what is ſaid by St. Matthew. For before this it is, at Chriſt's firſt coming to the lake, that St. Matthew deſcribes them in another poſture, "Jeſus walking by the ſea of Galilee ſaw two brothers, Simon and Andrew, caſting a net into the ſea." Which as it may poſſibly ſignify fiſhing, ſo it may otherwiſe be interpreted, not to denote their being actually a fiſhing at that time (for that is expreſſed, Luke v. 4. by a very diſtant phraſe, "letting down their nets to catch," and that by lanching out into the deep, or midſt of the lake) but more probably their waſhing their nets in the ſea, as they were ſitting on the ſhore, (and then that will be directly all one with the waſhing or ſecuring of them; which, as now paſt, is here mentioned by St. Luke) "And departing thence (ſaith St. Matthew) he ſaw other two brothers, the ſons of Zebedee, in the ſhip mending their nets." Where, as their mending their nets was ſubſequent to the waſhing of them (and ſuppoſes it paſt, as apoplunan, they had waſhed, here doth) ſo it agrees with St. Luke's affirmation, ver. 7. where they are ſuppoſed to be, en ploio, in the boat. The deſign of St. Luke in ſetting down this circumſtance of their having gone out of their boats, and waſhed their nets, was doubtleſs to intimate, what is after affirmed, ver. 5. that at the time of Chriſt's coming thither, they had deſpaired of catching any fiſh, and ſo had given over for that time, and had ſet to waſhing, and after that they in one boat, ſaith St Matthew, to mending their nets; which as it is a farther evidence of their reſolution to fiſh no more at that time, ſo it is an enhancement of the miracle following, of the great draught of fiſh, which St. Luke ſets down at large, but Matthew and Mark did not meddle with. Which order being thus ſuppoſed in the firſt part, the ſecond will follow very agreeably, and all be capable of an exact harmony, by compounding of Matthew and Luke together thus, "Jeſus walking by the ſea of Galilee, at his firſt coming thither, ſaw two brothers, Simon called Peter, and Andrew his brother, caſting their net into the ſea," Mat. iv. 18. that is, waſhing of it, Luke v. 2. When he had ſtaid a while with them, he went on to another boat, and there he found "other two brethren, James the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother, in a boat with Zebedee their father," who having newly waſhed, were now mending their nets, ver. 21. both theſe precedent to, and ſo reconcileable with the ſubſequent paſſages, mentioned Luke v. 2. "He ſaw two ſhips ſtanding, or abiding, by the lake," that is, at the ſhore, and the "fiſhermen having gone out of them had waſhed their nets." And then (upon the people's preſſing about him to hear, Luke v. 1.) follows that paſſage (not at all related by St. Matthew or St. Mark) that "he went into one of the ſhips or boats," that of Peter, ver. 3. and having, contrary to Peter's intention, perſuaded him to lanch out, and let down the net, to try what he could catch, he there wrought that miracle, which had like to have drowned the boat, and occaſioned the calling in of James and John to their relief, and gave them all an aſtoniſhing evidence of his power. Hereupon, to remove their fears, Chriſt ſaith to Simon here in the end of ver. 10. "Fear not, henceforth thou ſhalt catch men." At which time, I ſuppoſe, he called not him only, but all the other three, that had their parts in this miracle. This Matthew ſets down firſt of Peter and Andrew, iv. 19. to whom he ſaith, "Follow me, and I will make you fiſhers of men; and immediately they followed him," ver. 20. and then of the other two, ver. 22. who alſo left their nets, and boat, and father, and followed him; which act of their ready following St. Luke ſets down agreeably, tho' more diſtinctly, ver. 11. "When they had brought their boats to land, they left all, and followed him;" i. e. when the two pair of fiſhermen, with their two boats, ſo laden that they were afraid they would ſink, had brought them ſafe to ſhore, and had this farther evidence of Chriſt's power in delivering them from that danger, being all called, they all obeyed his call, left their trade and goods, and attended him as diſciples ever after. And whereas of his calling the ſons of Zebedee, St. Mark interpoſes, "He ſaw them mending their nets, and ſtraitway he called them," Mark i. 19, 20. which ſeems to place no ſpace or interval betwixt his coming to their boat and his calling them, that may eaſily be anſwered by obſerving, firſt, that the word eutheoos, preſently, is not always taken in that nice ſenſe, to ſignify immediately, but often is taken in a latitude, and includes a greater interval, than here is ſuppoſed to have been; and, ſecondly, that it is not unlikely, that here ſhould be an uperbaton in the period, which will thus be cleared in conſtruction, "he ſtraitway called them; and they left their father," that is, aſſoon as he called them, they immediately left; for ſo 'tis read in St. Matthew, "He called them, and they immediately left their boat," &c. (W.)

Ver. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. And he entred into one of the ſhips which was Simon's, and prayed him that he would thruſt out a little from the land: and he ſat down and taught the people out of the ſhip. Now when he had left ſpeaking, he ſaid unto Simon, Lanch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. And Simon anſwering, ſaid unto him, Maſter, we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing: nevertheleſs at thy word I will let down the net. And when they had this done, they incloſed a great multitude of fiſhes: and their net brake. And they beckned unto their partners which were in the other ſhip, that they ſhould come and help them: and they came, and filled both the ſhips, ſo that they began to ſink. When Simon Peter ſaw it, he fell down at Jeſus knees, ſaying, Depart from me, for I am a ſinful man, O Lord. For he was aſtoniſhed, and all that were with him, at the draught of the fiſhes which they had taken: And ſo was alſo James and John, the ſons of Zebedee, which were partners with Simon. And Jeſus ſaid unto Simon, Fear not; from henceforth thou ſhalt catch men. And when they had brought their ſhips to land, they forſook all, and followed him. And it came to paſs, when he was in a certain city, behold, a man full of leproſy: who ſeeing Jeſus, fell on his face, and beſought him, ſaying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou can'ſt make me clean. And he put forth his hand, and touched him, ſaying, I will; be thou clean. And immediately the leproſy departed from him. And he charged him to tell no man: but go and ſhew thy ſelf to the prieſt, and offer for thy cleanſing, according as Moſes commanded, for a teſtimony unto them. But ſo much the more went there a fame abroad of him: and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by him of their infirmities. And he withdrew himſelf into the wilderneſs, and prayed. And it came to paſs on a certain day, as he was teaching, that there were Phariſees and doctors of the law ſitting by, which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judea, and Jeruſalem: and the power of the Lord was preſent to heal them. And behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palſy: and they ſought means to bring him in, and to lay him before him. And when they could not find by what way they might bring him in, becauſe of the multitude, they went upon the houſe top, and let him down through the tiling with his couch, into the midſt before Jeſus. And when he ſaw their faith, he ſaid unto him, Man, thy ſins are forgiven thee. And the ſcribes and the Phariſees began to reaſon, ſaying, Who is this which ſpeaketh blaſphemies? Who can forgive ſins but God alone? But when Jeſus perceived their thoughts, he anſwering ſaid unto them, What reaſon ye in your hearts? Whether is eaſier to ſay, Thy ſins be forgiven thee, or to ſay, Riſe up and walk? But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power upon earth to forgive ſins, [he ſaid unto the ſick of the palſy] I ſay unto thee, Ariſe, and take up thy couch, and go into thine houſe. And immediately he roſe up before them, and took up that whereon he lay, and departed to his own houſe, glorifying God. And they were all amazed, and they glorified God, and were filled with fear, ſaying, We have ſeen ſtrange things to-day. And after theſe things he went forth, and ſaw a publican named Levi, ſitting at the receipt of cuſtom: and he ſaid unto him, Follow me.

A publican named Levi.] That this Levi was not the ſame with Matthew, mentioned Matt. ix. 9. Grotius, and thoſe who follow him, conceive; firſt, becauſe Matthew never calls himſelf Levi, nor doth Mark, chap. ii. 14. or Luke, ever call Levi, Matthew. To which argument St. Jerom anſwers, that Matthew out of modeſty, and in remembrance of his former life, ſtiles himſelf Matthew the publican, chap. x. 3. But Mark and Luke never call him the publican, but mention his more honourable name, leſt they ſhould ſeem to reproach him by remembring his former converſation: it is enough that St. Mark calls his Levi the ſon of Alphæus, as Matthew is in church hiſtory ſaid to be the ſon of Alphæus. As therefore Saul after his converſion is almoſt always called Paul, ſo might Matthew the publican by theſe two Evangeliſts be called Levi. Secondly, He adds that Heracleon, who was near to the Apoſtles time, reckons Matthew and Philip, and Thomas and Levi, among them who had no occaſion to own Chriſt before princes, or ſuffer martyrdom on that account, as Clemens of Alexandria teſtifies. I anſwer, There is no regard to be had to this Valentinian heretick, eſpecially when he contradicts the opinion of all the ancients, in ſaying that Matthew, and Philip, and Thomas, did not ſuffer martyrdom. See Dr. Cave in the life of Matthew, p. 124. of Philip, p. 125. of St. Thomas, p. 139. Againſt him we oppoſe the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, introducing him ſpeaking thus, "I Matthew named alſo Levis;" the teſtimonies of St. Jerom and Sophronius, in voce Matthæus, and others of the ancients; ſee Cotelerius in Conſtit. Apoſt. p. 315. Thirdly, He adds, that when Celſus objected that our Lord gathered publicans, Origen confeſſes that Matthew was a publican, but he denies that Levi was ſo. To this it is anſwered, that the ſame Origen, in his preface to the epiſtle to the Romans, and in the place cited in the Catena on St. Matthew, ſays expreſsly, that he whom St. Matthew ſtiles by the name of Matthew the publican is by St. Luke called Levi. See another anſwer in Cotelerius, ibid. In a word, ſure it muſt be in vain to object againſt an hiſtory in Mark and Luke, where he is called Levi, ſo exactly agreeing with that in St. Matthew, where he is called Matthew, that not a circumſtantial difference can be diſcerned; inſomuch, that even Mr. Cl. who in his annotations quarrels with Dr. Hammond, for following an opinion confuted by Grotius, in his Harmony is himſelf forced to do what he corrects Dr. Hammond for doing; his words are theſe, "Vidit publicanum cui nomen erat Levi, ſeu Matthæus:" "He ſaw a publican named Levi, or Matthew." Moreover, that this Levi being called, inſtantly left all, and followed Chriſt, both Mark and Luke atteſt; now this is the note of an apoſtle, Matt. xix. 27. See alſo Examen var. lect. Mill. in Matth. x. 3.

Ver. 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39. And he left all, roſe up, and followed him. And Levi made him a great feaſt in his own houſe: and there was a great company of publicans, and of others that ſat down with them. But their ſcribes and Phariſees murmured againſt his diſciples, ſaying, Why do ye eat and drink with publicans and ſinners? And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto them, They that are whole need not a phyſician, but they that are ſick. I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance. And they ſaid unto him, Why do the diſciples of John faſt often, and make prayers, and likewiſe the diſciples of the Phariſees; but thine eat and drink? And he ſaid unto them, Can ye make the children of the bride-chamber faſt, while the bridegroom is with them? But the days will come, when the bridegroom ſhall be taken away from them, and then ſhall they faſt in thoſe days. And he ſpake alſo a parable unto them, No man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old: if otherwiſe, then both the new maketh a rent, and the piece that was taken out of the new agreeth not with the old. And no man putteth new wine into old bottles; elſe the new wine will burſt the bottles, and be ſpilled, and the bottles ſhall periſh. But new wine muſt be put into new bottles; and both are preſerved. No man alſo having drunk old wine, ſtraightway deſireth new: for he ſaith, The old is better.

Roſe up, and followed him.] The number of our Lord's Apoſtles not being filled up, obſerve, firſt, what a free and gracious, what an unexpected and undeſerved choice Chriſt makes. Levi, that is, Matthew (for he had both names) a grinding publican, who gathered the tax for the Roman emperor, and was probably guilty, as others were, of the ſins of covetouſneſs and extortion, yet is he called to follow Chriſt, as a ſpecial diſciple. Learn hence, That ſuch is the freeneſs of divine grace, that it ſometimes calls and converts ſinners unto Chriſt, when they think not of him, nor ſeek unto him. Little did Levi now think of a Saviour, much leſs ſeek after him, yet is he here called by him, and that with an efficacious call; Matthew, a publican; Zacheus, an extortioner; Saul, a perſecutor; all theſe are effectually called by Chriſt, as inſtances and evidences of the mighty power of converting grace. Obſerve, ſecondly, Levi or Matthew's ready compliance with Chriſt's call, He preſently aroſe, and followed him; when the inward call of the Holy Spirit accompanieth the outward call of the Word, the ſoul readily complies, and yields obedience to the voice of Chriſt. Our Saviour (ſays the pious biſhop Hall) ſpeaks by his Word to our ears, aad we hear not, we ſtir not; but when he ſpeaks by his Spirit efficaciouſly to our hearts, Satan cannot hold us down, the world ſhall not keep us back; but we ſhall, with Levi, inſtantly ariſe and follow our Saviour. Obſerve, thirdly, Levi, to ſhew his thankfulneſs to Chriſt, makes him a great feaſt. Chriſt invited Levi to a diſcipleſhip, Levi invites Chriſt to a dinner; the ſervant invites his maſter, a ſinner invites his Saviour; a better gueſt he could not invite, Chriſt always comes with his coſt with him. We do not find, when Chriſt was invited to any table, that he ever refuſed to go; if a publican, if a Phariſee invited him, he conſtantly went; not ſo much for the pleaſure of eating, as for the opportunity of converſing, and doing good; Chriſt feaſts us when we feed him. Levi, to give Chriſt a pledge and ſpecimen of his love, makes him a feaſt. Learn thence, That new converts are full of affection towards Chriſt, and very expreſſive of their love unto him. Levi's heart being touch'd with a ſenſe of Chriſt's rich love, makes him a royal feaſt. Obſerve, fourthly, The cavil and exception which the ſcribes and Phariſees made at our Lord's free converſation. They cenſure him for converſing with ſinners: Malice will never want matter of accuſation. Our Saviour juſtifies himſelf, telling them he converſed with ſinners as their phyſician, not as their companion; "They that are whole need not a phyſician, but they that are ſick:" as if our Lord had ſaid, With whom ſhould a phyſician converſe, but with ſick patients? and is he to be accuſed for that? now this is my caſe. I am come into the world to do the office of a kind phyſician unto men; ſurely then I am to take all opportunities of converſing with them, that I may help and heal them, "for they that are ſick need the phyſician;" but as for you ſcribes and Phariſees, who are well and whole in your opinion and conceit, I have no hopes of doing good upon you, for ſuch as think themſelves whole deſire not the phyſician's help. Now from this aſſertion of our Saviour, "The whole need not the phyſician, but the ſick;" theſe truths are ſuggeſted to us, Firſt, That ſin is the ſoul's malady, its ſpiritual diſeaſe and ſickneſs. Secondly, That Chriſt is the phyſician appointed by God for the cure and healing of this diſeaſe. Thirdly, That there are multitudes of ſinners ſpiritually ſick, who yet think themſelves ſound and whole. Fourthly, That ſuch, and only ſuch, as find themſelves ſin-ſick, and ſpiritually diſeaſed, are ſubjects capable of Chriſt's healing; "They that are whole need not the phyſician, but they that are ſick." I came not (ſays Chriſt) to call the (opinionately) righteous, but the (ſenſible) ſinner, to repentance. (B.)

CHAP. VI.

The diſciples pull the ears of corn on the ſabbath-day. Chriſt heals a withered hand. The election of the Apoſtles. Of bleſſings and miſeries.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. AND it came to paſs on the ſecond ſabbath after the firſt, that he went through the corn-fields: and his diſciples pluck'd the ears of corn, and did eat, rubbing them in their hands. And certain of the Phariſees ſaid unto them, Why do ye that which is not lawful to do on the ſabbath-days? And Jeſus anſwering them, ſaid, Have ye not read ſo much as this, what David did, when himſelf was an hungred, and they which were with him: How he went into the houſe of God, and did take and eat the ſhew-bread, and gave alſo to them that were with him, which is not lawful to eat but for the prieſts alone? And he ſaid unto them, That the Son of man is Lord alſo of the ſabbath. And it came to paſs alſo on another ſabbath, that he entred into the ſynagogue and taught: and there was a man whoſe right-hand was withered. And the ſcribes and Phariſees watched him, whether he would heal on the ſabbath-day; that they might find an accuſation againſt him. But he knew their thoughts, and ſaid unto the man which had the withered hand, Riſe up, and ſtand forth in the mids. And he aroſe, and ſtood forth. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, I will aſk you one thing, Is it lawful on the ſabbath-day to do good, or to do evil? to ſave life, or to deſtroy it? And looking round about upon them all, he ſaid unto the man, Stretch forth thy hand. And he did ſo: and his hand was reſtored whole as the other. And they were filled with madneſs; and communed one with another what they might do to Jeſus.

Second ſabbath after the firſt.] This phraſe hath been matter of trouble to interpreters. The moſt probable conjecture concerning it is that of the learned H. Grotius, which I ſhall thus explain and confirm. When any of the ſolemn yearly feaſts fell on the ſabbath-day, that ſabbath had a ſpecial extraordinary reſpect attributed to it, and was called ſometimes a great ſabbath, and a great day of ſabbath, John xix. 31. Now three of theſe feaſts there were, the Paſſover, Pentecoſt, and the Feaſt of Tabernacles. Of theſe feaſts ſome days there were days of holy aſſemblies, wherein the aſſemblies were called together, as the firſt day of unleavened bread, Lev. xxiii 7. and the ſeventh day of it, ver. 8. the day of pentecoſt, Lev. xxiii. 21. the firſt of the feaſt of tabernacles, Lev. xxiii. 35. and the eighth, ver. 36. And theſe being days of reſt (as 'tis appointed in every of thoſe places) were a kind of ſabbaths, and diſtinguiſh'd from the other days of the feaſt, and therefore called the great day, Iſaiah i. 13. and the great day of the feaſt, John vii. 37. And accordingly Tertullian, Cont. Marcion, l. 5. ſpeaking of the obſervation of days, mentions faſts and great days. But when any of theſe great days fell on the ſabbath too, then that was not only a great day, but a great ſabbath. Now this great ſabbath was called alſo a prime, or firſt ſabbath (as prooton and mega are all one) and conſequently three of theſe prime, or firſt ſabbaths there were. 1. When the Paſſover, that is, either of the great days of that feaſt, but eſpecially the firſt, fell on a ſabbath; and, 2. when the feaſt of Pentecoſt; and, 3. when the great day of the Feaſt of Tabernacles fell on a ſabbath-day, and theſe prime or great ſabbaths were thus diſtinguiſhed one from another; the firſt of them call'd the firſt prime ſabbath, i. e. when the firſt day of the feaſt of Paſſover fell upon a ſabbath-day. The ſecond of them, the ſecond prime ſabbath, that is, the day of Pentecoſt falling on a ſabbath. The third of them, the third prime ſabbath, that is, the great day of the Feaſt of Tabernacles falling on a ſabbath; of which Joſephus ſaith, that 'tis then a ſabbath moſt adored, or reverenced. By all this it appears, that by this phraſe is meant on the day of Pentecoſt falling on a ſabbath at that time. (H.)

This ſhould have been render'd, in the firſt ſabbath after the ſecond day of the Paſſover; for after the firſt day of the Paſſover, which was a ſabbath, Exod. xii. 16. from the morrow after the ſabbath (that is, ſaith Joſephus, from the ſecond day of unleavened bread, that is, the ſixteenth of the month. Antiq. l. 3. c. 10.) ye ſhall count unto you ſeven ſabbaths complete, Lev. xxiii. 15. reckoning that day for the firſt of the firſt week, which was therefore called the firſt ſabbath, from this ſecond day of unleavened bread; the ſecond was called the ſecond ſabbath, from that day; and the third the third ſabbath, from that ſecond day; and ſo on till they came to the ſeventh ſabbath from that day, i. e. to the forty-ninth-day, which was the day of Pentecoſt. The mention of the ſeven ſabbaths, to be number'd with relation to this ſecond day, anſwers all that Grotius objects againſt this expoſition: See Petavius on Epiphan. Hær. 30. n. 32. where Epiphanius expreſsly ſays, our Lord's diſciples did this on the ſabbath following the day of unleavened bread; which, if underſtood of the ſecond day, is the truth. And if Pentecoſt was called The feaſt of harveſt, Exod. xxiii. 16. (as Bochart, Hieroz. part 2. l. 3. c. 13. Nicholas Fuller, Miſcell. l. 3. c. 11. Mr. Mede, Diſc. 46. p. 355. Dr. Lightfoot, and the Jews, ſay. See Temple Serv. c. 14. ſect. 4.) becauſe then their barley and wheat harveſt was gathered in, this feaſt could not be Pentecoſt, as Grotius conjectures, becauſe then the corn muſt be gathered in, and therefore could not be pluck'd up by Chriſt's diſciples in the field. (W.)

In the former part of this chapter we find our bleſſed Saviour defending his diſciples from the clamorous accuſations of the Phariſees for breaking the ſabbath-day, becauſe "they plucked the ears of corn, and rubbed them in their hands," in order to the ſatisfying of their hunger. Where note, firſt, the great poverty, the low eſtate and condition, of Chriſt's own diſciples in the world. They wanted bread, and are forced to pluck the ears of corn to ſatisfy their hunger: God may, and ſometimes does, ſuffer his deareſt children to fall into ſtraights, and to taſte of want, for the trial of their faith, and dependance upon his power and goodneſs. Note, ſecondly, how the hypocritical Phariſees blame this action of the diſciples, namely, their plucking of the ears of corn, yet did they not charge them with theft for ſo doing; becauſe, to take, in our great neceſſity, ſo much of our neighbour's goods, as we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that, if he were preſent, and knew our circumſtances, he would not deny us, is no theft. But it was the ſervile labours on the ſabbath-day, in gathering the ears of corn, which the Phariſees ſcruple and object againſt. Where note, how hypocrites expend their zeal in and upon the leſſer things of the law, whilſt they neglect the greater; placing all holineſs in the obſervation of outward ceremonies, whilſt they neglect moral duties. Note, thirdly, the argument with which our Saviour defends this action of his diſciples; it is taken from the example of David: neceſſity freed him from fault and blame, in eating the conſecrated bread, which none but the prieſts might lawfully eat; for, in caſes of neceſſity, a ceremonial precept muſt give place to a moral duty. Works of mercy, for the preſervation of our lives, and the better fitting us for ſabbath-ſervices, are certainly lawful on the ſabbath-day. Note, laſtly, the argument which our Saviour uſes to prove the ſabbath's obſervation may be diſpenſed with in caſes of abſolute neceſſity; and that is drawn from the authority which Chriſt, the inſtitutor and Lord of the ſabbath, had over it; The ſon of man is Lord alſo of the ſabbath; that is, he hath authority and power, as God, and as mediator, to inſtitute and appoint a ſabbath, to alter and change it, to diſpenſe with the breach of it, upon a juſt and great occaſion; and, conſequently, acts of mercy, which tend to fit us for works of piety, not only may, but ought to be done upon the ſabbath-day. This action of the diſciples being of that nature, is, without juſt cauſe, cenſured and condemned by the Phariſées; a ſort of men who were reſolved to cavil and quarrel with whatever our Saviour or his diſciples either did or ſaid. (B.)

Ver. 12. And it came to paſs in thoſe days, that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God.

Prayer.] The Greek word proſeuche, prayer, ſignifies an oratory, a place where men are wont to pray, and ſo ſeems to be uſed in ſome places of ſcripture, eſpecially in St. Luke's writings. So Acts xvi. 13. where a houſe of prayer was ſeen, a praying-place by a river-ſide, as here on a mountain; ſuch an one there was in Miſpah, 1 Macc. iii. 46. where, upon occaſion of the victory gotten by Joſhua in that place, Joſ. xi. 3, 8. they were wont to meet to pray, and to deliberate on any great affair; and there was an altar built by Joſhua, and an houſe of prayer, or an houſe conſecrate for prayers, which prayers and conſecration, being both made unto God, it is very obſervable, that thoſe places, ſo conſecrated to him, ſhould be called, as here, oratories, or praying-houſes of God. Of theſe proſeuchai, we find frequent mention in Joſephus; in his own life, the people convened in a proſeuche, as they call it, a houſe of prayer, ample and capacious of great multitudes; and, ſpeaking of Tiberias, I found the people convened in a proſeuche; and Epiphan. t. 2. l. 3. c. 80. There were ancient places of prayer both among the Jews without the city, and among the Samaritans, as we find, ſaith he, in the Acts of the Apoſtles. Such a place there is in Sichem, which is now called Neapolis, without the city, in a plain region. And ſome ſuch place it may ſeem to be, wherein Jeſus continued all night, in this verſe. (H.)----And he continued all night in prayer to God.] Or in a houſe of prayer of God, or in a ſynagogue dedicated to the ſervice of God: for as the mountain of God, Exod. iii. 1.---iv. 27. the bread of God, Lev. xxi. 17. the lamp of God, 1 Sam. iii. 3. the veſſels of God, 1 Chron. xxii. 19. the altar of God, Pſal. xliii. 4. the ſacrifices of God, Pſal. li. 17. the gifts of God, Luke xxi. 4. the miniſters of God, 2 Cor. vi. 4. the tabernacle of God, 2 Chron. i. 3. the temple of God, Matt. xxi. 12. and the ſynagogues of God, Pſal. lxxiv. 8. are all things conſecrated or appropriated to God's ſervice. So proſeuche ton Theou, muſt in all reaſon be an houſe of prayer to God; whence it is called a place of prayer, 1 Macc. iii 46. And ſo the word proſeuche is certainly uſed, Acts xvi. 13. and by Philo, in his oration againſt Flaccus, where he complains, that their houſes for prayer were pull'd down, and there was no place left, in which they might worſhip God, or pray for Cæſar; and by Joſephus, who ſays, the multitude was gathered into the houſe of prayer: and ſo Juvenal ſpeaks of the mendicant Jew, "Ede ubi conſiſtas, in qua te quæro proſeucha?" In what houſe of prayer may I find thee begging, or asking alms? (W.)

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. And when it was day, he called unto him his diſciples: and of them he choſe twelve, whom alſo he named Apoſtles: Simon (whom he alſo named Peter) and Andrew his brother, James and John, Philip and Bartholomew, Matthew and Thomas, James the ſon of Alpheus, and Simon called Zelotes, And Judas the brother of James, and Judas Iſcariot, which alſo was the traitor. And he came down with them, and ſtood in the plain, and the company of his diſciples, and a great multitude of people out of all Judea, and Jeruſalem, and from the ſea-coaſt of Tyre and Sidon, which came to hear him, and to be healed of their diſeaſes; And they that were vexed with unclean ſpirits: and they were healed. And the whole multitude ſought to touch him: for there went virtue out of him, and healed them all.

Apoſtles.] The title Apoſtoloi, Apoſtles, which is here by Chriſt ſaid to be given to the twelve, is a name of power, and dignity, and authority in the church; and how it doth ſignify ſo, will deſerve to be explained. That the government of the church of God was now ſettled on the ſon of man upon earth, that is, upon Chriſt incarnate, had been foretold, Iſa. ix. 6. "The government ſhall be upon his ſhoulders;" and Iſa. lxi. 1. "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, becauſe the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings, &c. He hath ſent me to bind up, &c. to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord," &c. (See Luke iv. 18, 19. In which place, as the anointing, and the Spirit of the Lord being upon him; ſo the ſending is the ſettling the government upon him. And the ſending is a ſolemn word, noting a diploma, or commiſſion, ſealed to him (as it were, by God in heaven) by the Spirit's deſcending on him, Matt. iii. 17. and that ſupplied the place of the ſolemn unction (the ceremony of advancing to any office, which is therefore paraphraſed by the Chaldee by exaltation) which was now out of faſhion under the ſecond temple, and was to be ſupplied by God's teſtimony from heaven, as to Chriſt it was, and is accordingly ſtiled God's anointing him with the Holy Ghoſt, Acts x. 38. and ſimply God's anointing, Acts iv. 27. Hence it is, that Chriſt is ſaid to be ſent by his Father, John xx. 21. To have power on earth to forgive ſins, Matt. ix. 6. To have all power in heaven and earth delivered to him, Matt. xxviii. 18. To be the teacher, and Lord of his church, or diſciples, John xiii. 1. and as the high prieſt of our profeſſion; ſo Apoſtolos, the Apoſtle, Heb. iii. 1. in the ſame ſenſe as the great paſtor of his ſheep, Heb. xiii. 20. and the only (as paſtor, ſo) biſhop of our ſouls, 1 Pet. ii. 25. From whence, ſaith Origen, on Matt. xxiv. "Proprie epiſcopus Dominus Jeſus eſt," The Lord Jeſus is properly a biſhop. Now what was thus conferred on Chriſt, was alſo perſonally exerciſed by him upon earth; while he remained here, he preached the Goſpel, inſtituted rites in his church to continue for ever, called diſciples, gave them commands, uſed their miniſtry, deſigned them to certain offices, ſent out ſeventy, Luke x. 1. as heralds, before his face, gave them power to cure diſeaſes, ver. 9. and ſo committed to them ſome, tho' but a temporary, office, or commiſſion, which ceaſed at their return to him, ver. 17. On others he reſolved to inſtate a larger and more durable power, to ſend them, as his father had ſent him, to make them his ſucceſſors on earth, but this he did not at this time. He ſent them indeed (the twelve peculiarly) Matt. x. 5. and that with no ſmall power, power to caſt out unclean ſpirits, ver. 1. and to preach, ver. 7. and that was the ſum of his miſſion, ver. 8. Preach, cure, cleanſe, raiſe, caſt out devils, freely ye have received, freely give, diſpenſe the powers liberally to the advantage of others, which are ſo freely beſtowed on you. Proportionably to this, and that other of the ſeventy, Luke x. it is to be remember'd, that among the Jews all ſorts of meſſengers are called Apoſtoloi. So Ahijah, 1 Kings xiv. 6. is called an harſh Apoſtle, or meſſenger, of ill news; ſo the twelve ſpies, Numb. xiii. were ſaid to be ſent to explore the land (and were, as it were, a ſampler of the twelve that here Chriſt ſends out on the like account:) and in the Old Teſtament the word is no otherwiſe uſed. Among the Talmudiſts 'tis uſed of them that were by the rulers of the ſynagogue ſent out to receive the tenths, and dues belonging to the ſynagogues, ſuch as Philo calls ſent for the moneys of the temple, Leg. ad Caium, and by the emperor Auguſtus, receivers; (and, in like manner, the meſſengers of the church that carried their liberality, or letters congratulatory, from one to another, are by Ignatius called the divine carriers, or embaſſadors) and ſo in Theodoſian Codex, tit. De Judæis, Apoſtoli are thoſe that were ſent by the patriarch at a ſet time to require the gold and ſilver due to them. Of theſe, it is obſervable, that when they were thus employ'd, tho' not on any very high employments, and but for a ſhort time, they yet were furniſhed with letters of proxy, or attorney, that what they did might be done in the names and perſons of thoſe from whom they were ſent; and from thence the axiom is known among the Jews, that every man's Apoſtle is as himſelf; to which Chriſt ſeems to refer, Matt. x. 14. He that receiveth you, receiveth me, &c. So when Saul was ſent by the Jewiſh Sanhedrim to Damaſcus, Acts ix. he had the letters of the high prieſt with him, ver. 2. And hitherto there is nothing diſcernible in this word Apoſtle, that hath any denotation of dignity or government: that muſt be fetched from John xx. 21. where Chriſt ſends his diſciples, as his Father had ſent him, ſends them ſolemnly, and with commiſſion, in that notion of ſending, wherein the procurator, or proconſul, is ſent to his province, or wherein Moſes is ſent to the Iſraelites in Egypt (Send by whom thou wilt ſend, ſaith Moſes) or wherein kings, and judges, and ſaviours, are every where in the Old Teſtament ſaid to be ſent, when they are by God advanced to any government. Thus muſt Chriſt mean of himſelf, that he was ſent by his Father. (See Matt. x. 40. and xv. 24. and John iii. 24. and v. 38. and vi. 57. and xviii. 3.) and, conſequently, thus muſt it be underſtood, that they are ſent by Chriſt; and ſo John xvii. 11. As thou haſt ſent me into the world, I alſo have ſent them (without referring to the ordinary way of the Jews, the meſſengers of the patriarchs. And as in the earthly kingdom the rulers, or procurators (ſuch was Pilate in Judea) which are next the regal authority, are ſaid to be ſent, 1 Pet. ii. 14. ſo the Apoſtles of Chriſt are ſent alſo in Chriſt's ſpiritual kingdom, ſent not before his face, as miniſters, diſciples, the ſeventy, Luke x. 1. And generally meſſengers are ſaid to be ſent, but ſent as his ſucceſſors and heirs on earth, endued with that power, by commiſſion from him, which he here executed. And this is the meaning of the word here, which ſeems not as yet to be beſtowed on them by Chriſt; but being after really inſtated on them, 'tis here, and chap. xvii. 5. and xxii. 14. occaſionally mentioned; and ſo Matt. x. 2. by way of anticipation (as the name Peter is Matt. iv. 18.) the title that belonged to them at the writing of this. Thus when we read, that the Father gave Judgment to the Son, John v. 22. we read alſo, in effect, that the Son gives judgment to the Apoſtles, Matt. 19. 28. Luke xxii. 30. 2 Cor. 10. 6. when the Father gives the Son power to forgive ſins upon earth, Matt. x. 6. the Son gives power to the Apoſtles to remit ſin on earth alſo, John xx. 23. The teſtification of the reſurrection of Chriſt and the Chriſtian faith, to which the Apoſtles were ſent by Chriſt, being, as 'tis there ſaid, the ſpirit of prophecy, the moſt honourable office that any mortal can be deſigned to by Chriſt, and there put in compariſon with that joyful news brought them by that Angel, of the emperor's giving up their names unto Chriſt. See more of this word, note on John xx. Rom. xvi. and 2 Cor. v. (H.)

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29. And he lifted up his eyes on his diſciples, and ſaid, Bleſſed be ye poor: for yours is the kingdom of God. Bleſſed are ye that hunger now: for ye ſhall be filled. Bleſſed are ye that weep now: for ye ſhall laugh, Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall hate you, and when they ſhall ſeparate you from their company, and ſhall reproach you, and caſt out your name as evil, for the ſon of man's ſake. Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy: for behold, your reward is great in heaven: for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets. But wo unto you that are rich: for ye have received your conſolation. Wo unto you that are full: for ye ſhall hunger. Wo unto you that laugh now: for ye ſhall mourn and weep. Wo unto you when all men ſhall ſpeak well of you: for ſo did their fathers to the falſe prophets. But I ſay unto you which hear, Love your enemies, do good to them which hate you: Bleſs them that curſe you, and pray for them which deſpitefully uſe you. And unto him that ſmiteth thee on the one cheek, offer alſo the other: and him that taketh away thy cloak, forbid not to take thy coat alſo.

Bleſſed are ye.] The beatitudes here repeated, are the ſame which are mentioned Matt. v. there is little cauſe of doubting; tho' whether they were but once delivered only in the ſermon on the Mount, or whether again repeated in ſome other ſermon to other auditors, it is uncertain. That there is ſome variety in the words, as alſo in ſome other places ſome light differences between this and the other Goſpels, ſeems to be cauſed by St. Luke's writing his Goſpel by ſhort notes, which he had received from thoſe which were preſent, being not an eye-witneſs or ear-witneſs himſelf. From whence it follows, that theſe words in St. Luke are to be interpreted according to the importance of thoſe in St. Matthew, who ſets them down more fully. And accordingly by the poor here, muſt be underſtood the poor in ſpirit there; by the hungry here, thoſe that hunger and thirſt after righteouſneſs there; as the words of an epitome are to be interpreted according to the ſenſe of the entire copy, before it was thus contracted. (H.)

Bleſſed are the poor, the hungry, the mourners, for the ſon of man's ſake.] Here being but four of the eight beatitudes, mentioned Matt. v. and not one of theſe being delivered in the ſame words which are there uſed; as it is certain, this muſt be another ſermon than that on the Mount, and ſpoken to other auditors; ſo is it only probable, not neceſſary, that they ſhould bear the ſame ſenſe. However, it ſeems neceſſary, that what is here added to the laſt clauſe ſhould agree to them all, Bleſſed are they who patiently ſuffer poverty and hunger, grief and perſecution, for the ſake of Chriſt, that they may obtain that kingdom, and that reward in heaven, he hath promiſed to his faithful ſervants; or, that the poor ſhould be the poor in ſpirit; the hungry, thoſe that hunger after righteouſneſs; and the mourners, thoſe that ſorrow to repentance after a godly manner; 2 Cor vii. 9. For to thoſe that are otherwiſe poor and hungry, and upon other accounts, theſe bleſſings cannot always belong; and the oppoſite woes, which ſeem to favour the firſt interpretation of theſe four beatitudes, muſt be reſtrained to them, who, by the love of riches, pleaſures, and plentiful proviſions, are kept from preparing themſelves by repentance for, and ſo from entring into Chriſt's kingdom, and chuſing that narrow and afflictive way which leadeth unto life eternal; for even here, the very Chriſtian ſufferer is to rejoice, and leap for joy; and the rich man, who is ready when Chriſt calleth, to leave all, and follow him, who is rich in good works, ready to give, and willing to diſtribute, layeth up for himſelf a good foundation againſt the time to come, 1 Tim. vi. 19. (W.)

Wo unto you when all men ſhall ſpeak well of you: for ſo did their fathers to the falſe prophets.] For he that will be pleaſing to all, muſt ſpeak things grateful to all, and do what they like; now that cannot be good which is grateful to bad men: Thus the falſe prophets, whom the Jews commended, ſpake to them ſmooth things, Iſa. xxx. 10. they propheſied lies, becauſe the people loved to have it ſo; "they propheſied of peace, when war was at hand," Jer. vi. 14. — viii. 11 — xiv. 13. Ezek. xiii. 10, 16. Zach. x. 2 "they ſtrengthened the hand of evil doers," Jer. xxiii. 14. "and daubed with untempered mortar," Ezek. xiii. 10, 11. See examon Milii. (W.)

Ver. 30, 31, 32, 33, 34. Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods, ask them not again. And as ye would that men ſhould do to you, do ye alſo to them likewiſe. For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? for ſinners alſo love thoſe that love them. And if ye do good to them which do good to you, what thank have ye? for ſinners alſo do even the ſame. And if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thank have ye? for ſinners alſo lend to ſinners, to receive as much again.

Ask.] What the word apaitein here ſignifies, will be worth the enquiry, for if it ſignify to require, demand, or ask again, the prohibition will be ſomewhat ſtrange, and not ſo agreeable either to the context, or to the duty of liberality here preſcribed, that any thing but neceſſity ſhould incline us to pitch on that interpretation. For if the words from him that taketh thy goods be ſo rendred, as to underſtand his forcible or involuntary depriving thee, it will then be a means to offer up the Chriſtian to the violence of every unjuſt perſon, and oblige him never to make uſe of Chriſtian judicatures, or arbitrations (which appear not to be forbidden the Chriſtian, 1 Cor. vi. 4, 7.) to gain his own again, nay not ſo much as to challenge, or make claim to it, when he finds it in another's hands. Which, beſides that it is not agreeable to any other precept of the Goſpel, is not at all pertinent to the buſineſs of liberality, that uſhers in, and of charity, that immediately attends theſe words. Or if the airoon ta ſa, he that taketh thy goods, be (as no doubt it ought) interpreted of borrowing, or receiving by way of loan, then the not demanding, or asking them again, makes that loan all one with a gift, and ſo the ſame that had before been ſaid, only an addition of a fraud in him that borroweth and payeth not again. The ſurer way then of underſtanding theſe words aright, which are a double rule for our charity, regulating both our gifts and our loans (both ſpecial charities, and diſtinctly mention'd in the Scripture, Pſ. cxii. 5. "the good man is merciful, and lendeth;" and Pſ. xxxvii. 26. "the righteous is ever merciful, and lendeth;" and Eccluſ. xxix. 1. "he that is merciful will lend to his neighbour) will be to obſerve the force of the apaitein among the Greek tranſlators of the Old Teſtament, particularly in the book of Nehemiah, where it frequently occurs for exacting of uſury: and where the Hebrew, ſignifying uſuram exigentes, is rendred ſimply by apaitein, to exact, without any ſubſtantive added to it, and ſo the Greek noun apaiteſis, exacting, ſignifies there the requiring of uſe. So 2 Macc. iv. 27. that which is rendred required it, moſt probably ſignifies the receiving uſe, the period being beſt rendred thus, "As for the money, &c. he put it not into any good courſe, but Soſtratus took the uſe of it, for unto him belonged the managing of the monies." According to which notion the tranſlation here will be very agreeable, and the ſenſe commodious: From him that receiveth (not taketh by force, but as airein is all one with to take or receive) by way of loan, ta ſa, thy goods, me apaitei, require no uſury of him, lend freely to the poor borrower, without taking or requiring uſe of him, which being here a precept of charity and mercy from the rich to the poor, may not ſo be interpreted as to bind the poor to do the ſame to the rich, or any to any but the poor, as indeed the every one that asketh, to whom we are commanded to give, is not to be extended to the covetous, craving, rich, but to the diſtreſſed deſtitute poor man, and obligeth him that is able, not him that is not able to give. (H.)

Ver. 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49. But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again: and your reward ſhall be great, and ye ſhall be the children of the Higheſt: for he is kind unto the unthankful, and to the evil. Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father alſo is merciful. Judge not, and ye ſhall not be judged; condemn not, and ye ſhall not be condemned; forgive, and ye ſhall be forgiven: Give, and it ſhall be given unto you; good meaſure, preſſed down, and ſhaken together, and running over, ſhall men give into your boſom. For with the ſame meaſure that ye mete withal, it ſhall be meaſured to you again. And he ſpake a parable unto them, Can the blind lead the blind? ſhall they not both fall into the ditch? The diſciple is not above his maſter; but every one that is perfect ſhall be as his maſter. And why beholdeſt thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but perceiveſt not the beam that is in thine own eye? Either how can'ſt thou ſay to thy brother, Brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye, when thou thyſelf beholdeſt not the beam that is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, caſt out firſt the beam out of thine own eye, and then ſhalt thou ſee clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye. For a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit: neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. For every tree is known by his own fruit: for of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble-buſh gather they grapes. A good man, out of the good treaſure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is good: and an evil man, out of the evil treaſure of his heart, bringeth forth that which is evil: for of the abundance of the heart his mouth ſpeaketh. And why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I ſay? Whoſoever cometh to me, and heareth my ſayings, and doeth them, I will ſhew you to whom he is like. He is like a man which built an houſe, and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock: and when the flood aroſe, the ſtream beat vehemently upon that houſe, and could not ſhake it: for it was founded upon a rock. But he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that without a foundation built an houſe upon the earth, againſt which the ſtream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell, and the ruin of that houſe was great.

Hoping for nothing again.] The word apelpizein, compared with apolabein, going before, ver. 34. may ſeem to ſignify proportionably to that, hoping for a return of kindneſs from him to whom kindneſs hath been ſhewed, and ſo as apeckein, ver. 24. ſignifies no more than to receive. So by analogy might apelpizein be to hope from. But the truth is, there is not in the Bible any ſuch notion of the word apelpizoo, but the word conſtantly ſignifies to diſtruſt, or deſpair; ſo Eſth. xiv. 19. Judith ix. 12. Iſa. xxix. 19. forlorn perſons, in a deſperate condition. So alſo Ecclus. xxii. 22. fear not, and chap. xxvii. 21. is without hope, and 2 Macc. ix. 18. deſpairing; and in all the Bible in no other ſenſe but that of diſtruſt or deſpair. And this will very well agree with the context alſo; thus, "The heathens give and lend to other men, knowing that they may want themſelves," and ſo deſigning their preſent act of charity with reflection on themſelves, that they to whom they lend or give may do as much for them at another time, but the Chriſtian is to do his acts of charity without any ſuch purpoſe or deſign of receiving any retribution from man, and yet need not diſtruſt, or doubt, or be diſcouraged in his work. For tho' he loſe that preſent advantage, yet God, who is the great rewarder, antapodotes, the God of recompence, or retributions (to which the next words refer, "your reward ſhall be plentiful," and ſo ver. 38. "it ſhall be given unto you) will not ſee him a loſer by it, he may be as confident (thro' the bleſſing of God which is promiſed to an alms-giver) that he ſhall be never the worſe for any thing he thus gives or lends, as if he had in his view a preſent retribution from him to whom he hath given or lent. To this ſenſe perfectly agreeable is that apoſtolical ſaying of Barnabas, in his Epiſtle, p. 251. "Doubt not to give, neither murmur when thou giveſt; give to every one that asketh thee:" where the before giving, and the after doubting and murmuring, make up the full notion of diſtruſting or deſpairing here, and ſeem to be ſet by him, as his way of rendring this ſpeech of Chriſt. In the ſame ſenſe duſelpiſtia is uſed in Teles his Commentary of riches and poverty, where ſpeaking of covetouſneſs, that it permits not men to uſe or communicate their wealth, he adds, "Some mens illiberality and diffidence hath ſealed up their poſſeſſions. (H.)

Ibid.] They who render theſe words, "making no man to deſpair," put a double force upon the words; firſt, reading no man for nothing; and, ſecondly, interpreting apelpizein "to make to deſpair;" of which ſenſe they afford no inſtance. They who render them, diſtruſting nothing, i e. not fearing leaſt thou ſhould'ſt be reduced to poverty by this charity, give a ſenſe alien from the text; for when they ſay, "the heathens give, and lend, knowing that they may want themſelves;" this they add of their own to the words of Chriſt, who ſays, "they lend, that they may receive as much again;" and they reject that ſenſe the text doth manifeſtly require; for ſo run the preceding words, "If ye lend to thoſe, from whom you hope to receive again what you lend, what thank have you? for do not ſinners lend to ſinners, to receive, or that they may receive what they lend again? But, lend not you on ſo mean account, but even when you hope to receive nothing back from them you lend to. And whereas we are told, that the word apelpizoo bears no ſuch ſenſe; I hope the credit of Stephanus, who ſays, the word is rightly render'd by the vulgar, "nihil inde ſperantes;" and of Caſaubon, who ſaith, "to hope for ſomething from a perſon or matter; may be ſufficient to ſupport the credit of our tranſlation; eſpecially when we read in the life of Solon, that he made no law againſt parricides, becauſe he did not expect that ſuch a crime would be committed, Diog. Laert. l. 1. p. 17. See Additions No. 10. But, ſecondly, Where it is render'd by them, to deſpair, or to be deſperate, the ſenſe is ſtill the ſame, viz. to be meden apelpizontes, "hoping for nothing from men," and therefore repairing to God. This is the plain ſenſe of it, Iſa. xxix. 19. Jude ix. 12. Eſth. xiv. 19. So Eccluſ. xxii 21.---xxvii. 21. "Be not without hope of reconciliation with thy friend;" and why then may not the words here ſignify, "Being without hope of receiving any thing again from him you lend to?" So that it is not to be doubted, that theſe words are well render'd by Chryſoſtom, "from whom you expect not to receive. (W.)

C H A P. VII.

Of the centurion's ſervant. The faith of the centurion. The widow's ſon is raiſed from the dead. John ſends his diſciples to Chriſt.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. NOW when he had ended all his ſayings in the audience of the people, he enter'd into Capernaum. And a certain centurion's ſervant, who was dear unto him, was ſick and ready to die. And when he heard of Jeſus, he ſent unto him the elders of the Jews, beſeeching him that he would come and heal his ſervant. And when they came to Jeſus, they beſought him inſtantly, ſaying, That he was worthy for whom he ſhould do this. For he loveth our nation, and he hath built us a ſynagogue. Then Jeſus went with them. And when he was now not far from the houſe, the centurion ſent friends to him, ſaying unto him, Lord, trouble not thy ſelf, for I am not worthy that thou ſhould'ſt enter under my roof. Wherefore, neither thought I myſelf worthy to come unto thee: but ſay in a word, and my ſervant ſhall be healed. For I alſo am a man ſet under authority, having under me ſoldiers, and I ſay unto one, Go, and he goeth: and to another, Come, and he cometh: and to my ſervant, Do this, and he doeth it. When Jeſus heard theſe things, he marvelled at him, and turned him about, and ſaid unto the people that followed him, I ſay unto you, I have not found ſo great faith, no, not in Iſrael. And they that were ſent, returning to the houſe, found the ſervant whole that had been ſick. And it came to paſs the day after, that he went into a city called Nain; and many of his diſciples went with him, and much people. Now when he came nigh to the gate of the city, behold, there was a dead man carried out, the only ſon of his mother, and ſhe was a widow: and much people of the city was with her. And when the Lord ſaw her, he had compaſſion on her, and ſaid unto her, Weep not.

Sent unto him] A ſeeming difference there is in the ſetting down this relation of the centurion here, from what we find Matt. viii. 5. There the centurion is ſaid to "come unto him, beſeeching him, and ſaying," ver. 6. and anſwering, ver. 8. Here "he ſent unto him the elders of the Jews, and they beſought him, and when Jeſus was not far from his houſe, (ver. 6.) he ſent friends to him, ſaying," and part of his ſpeech is unreconcileable with his having come unto him himſelf, "wherefore neither thought I myſelf worthy to come unto thee," ver. 7. rendring a reaſon, why he had not come in perſon to him. This ſeeming difficulty may be anſwered by proportion with that known ſaying of Ariſtotle, "Thoſe things that are poſſible by our friends are poſſible to us," which ſuppoſes that thoſe things which we do by others, we are ourſelves thought to do; and ſo what the centurion did and ſpake here by the elders of the Jews, ſent on purpoſe by him, ver. 3. and by his friends, ſent again by him, ver. 6. he may be truely ſaid by St. Matthew to have done and ſpoken himſelf, eſpecially when (the matter of the ſtory being directly all one in both relations) the Jews have a ſaying, that removes all difficulty, Apoſtolus cujuſque eſt ut quiſque, "Every man's proxy, or ſolemn meſſenger, is as himſelf," in which notion Chriſt ſpake when he ſaid, "He that receiveth me, receiveth him that ſent me, Matt. x. 40. and conſequently what is done by a proxy is done by himſelf. Thus is Chriſt ſaid to have preached peace to the Epheſians, Eph. ii. 17. which perſonally he did not, but by the Apoſtles; and repentance to the old world, 1 Pet. iii. 19. which he did by Noah; ſo James and John are ſaid to come unto Chriſt, and petition him, Mark x. 35. which, Matt. xx. 20. their mother is ſaid to do for them. Which notwithſtanding St. Luke, willing to add one evidence more of the centurion's humility, from the reaſon of his not going perſonally to Chriſt, chuſes rather to ſet it down exactly, as it was in each circumſtance, than only in brief, yet without all diminution of the matter, as St. Matthew had done. (H.)

In our Saviour's miraculous cure of the centurion's ſervant, we have ſeveral particulars very obſervable, as, firſt, The perſon aplying himſelf to our bleſſed Saviour for help and healing, he was a gentile, an heathen, a Roman ſoldier, an officer and commander; yet he believes in, and relies upon the power of Chriſt. Note, That ſuch is the freeneſs of divine grace, that it extends itſelf to all ſorts and ranks, to all orders and degrees of men without exception; even the bloody trade of war yields worthy clients to Chriſt: He doth not ſo much regard what we are, and when we are, as with what diſpoſitions and deſires, with what purpoſes and inclinations we come unto him. Obſerve, ſecondly, The perſon whom the centurion came to Chriſt for; not for himſelf, not for his ſon, but for his ſervant, "his ſervant was ſick:" He doth not drive him out of doors, nor ſtand gazing by his bed-ſide, but looks out for help and relief for him; a worthy example of humanity. Some maſters have not ſo much regard to their ſick ſervants, as they have to their oxen and their ſwine. But he is not worthy of a good ſervant, that in time of ſickneſs is not willing to ſerve his ſervant. Obſerve, thirdly, Unto whom the centurion ſeeks, and with what zeal and application; he ſeeks not to wizards and conjurers, but to the phyſician, for his ſick ſervant, yea, to Chriſt his chief phyſician, and this not with a formal relation in his mouth, but with a vehement aggravation of his diſeaſe, "My ſervant lies ſick of the palſy, grievouſly tormented," Matt. viii. 6 where the Maſter's condolency, and tender ſympathy with his afflicted ſervant, is both matter of commendation and imitation. Obſerve, fourthly, The happy mixture of humility and faith, which was found in this centurion. See his wonderful humility, in not thinking himſelf worthy to come into Chriſt's preſence, or that Chriſt ſhould come under his roof. The beſt men have always the loweſt thoughts of themſelves; when we eſteem ourſelves unworthy of any favours, Chriſt accounts us worthy of all. See alſo his faith in Chriſt's divine power; he believed that Chriſt was able at a diſtance, and by a ſingle word, to command off a diſtemper of his ſervant; he tells him, That diſeaſes were as much at Chriſt's command, as his ſervants were at his command. Humility, we ſee, is both the fruit of faith, and the companion of faith. An humble ſoul has evermore an high eſteem of Chriſt's power, and a low eſteem of itſelf. Obſerve, fifthly, How our bleſſed Saviour exceeds not only the centurion's deſires, but his expectations alſo. Matt. viii. 7. "Jeſus ſaith unto him, I will come and heal him." O wonderful condeſcenſion! In St. John, iv. 47. we read of a certain nobleman and ruler, that twice intreated our Saviour to come to his houſe, and heal his ſon, but he refuſed. Here the centurion doth but barely tell Chriſt of his poor ſervant's ſickneſs, and Chriſt, both unaſked and undeſired, ſays, "I will come and heal him." O how far is Chriſt from ſeeming in the leaſt to honour riches and deſpiſe poverty; he that came in the form of a ſervant, goes down to viſit a ſick ſervant upon his poor pallet-bed, who did not come near the rich couch of the ruler's ſon. Obſerve, ſixthly, The notice and obſervation which our Saviour takes of the centurion's faith, he wondred at it from him: Admiration agreed not to Chriſt as God, but as man it did. Chriſt wrought this faith as God, and wondred at it as man. What can be more wonderful than to ſee Chriſt wonder? We find not our Saviour wondring at worldly pomp and greatneſs; when the diſciples wondred at the magnificence and ſtately buildings of the temple, Chriſt rather rebuked them than wondred with them, but when he ſees the gracious acts and exerciſe of faith, he is raviſhed with wonder. Let it teach us to place our admiration where Chriſt fixes his; let us be more affected with the leaſt meaſures of grace in a good man, than with all the gaieties and glories of a great man; let us not envy the one, but admire and imitate the other. Obſerve, laſtly, Chriſt doth not only admire the centurion's faith, but publiſhes it, "Verily, I have not found ſo great faith, no not in Iſrael," that is, amongſt the generality of the Jewiſh nation. For as to particular perſons, ſeveral had ſhewed a greater faith than this, as Joſeph and Mary. This expreſſion lets us know, that where the means of faith are but ſmall, the noble acts and exerciſe of faith are wonderful and ſoul-amazing. (B.)

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19. And he came and touched the bier (and they that bare him ſtood ſtill) and he ſaid, Young man, I ſay unto thee, ariſe. And he that was dead, ſat up, and began to ſpeak: and he delivered him to his mother. And there came a fear on all: and they glorified God, ſaying, That a great prophet is riſen up among us; and, That God hath viſited his people. And this rumour of him went forth throughout all Judea, and throughout all the region round about. And the diſciples of John ſhewed him of all theſe things. And John calling unto him two of his diſciples, ſent them unto Jeſus, ſaying, Art thou he that ſhould come, or look we for another?

And he ſaid Young man, I ſay unto thee, Ariſe.] Here Woltzogenius owns that Chriſt ſpake this by that divine power which he had over inanimate things, as the wind, and the ſea; "This indeed (ſaith he) is proper to God, who calleth things that are not as if they were," Rom. iv. 17. but God had communicated this power to his Son, by whom he would moſt perfectly manifeſt himſelf to the world. So Peter ſpeaks to Tabitha, "Tabitha ariſe," Acts ix. 40. as Chriſt to Lazarus, "Lazarus, come forth," John xi. 43. Now to this I reply, firſt, That the inſtance of St. Peter ſaying to Tabitha, Ariſe, doth not leſſen the ſtrength of the argument from theſe words for the divinity of Chriſt, ſeeing he doeth this only prayer to, and faith in, the Lord Chriſt; to which he aſcribes all his miracles, doing them in his name, or power, and "through faith in his name," Acts iii. 16. and ſo in effect ſaith to her as he did to Æneas, ver. 34. "Jeſus Chriſt healeth thee, ariſe," &c. Chriſt here doeth this by his own power, without any prayers, as appears from thoſe words, "I ſay to thee, ariſe;" and he will raiſe all his ſervants from the dead, and "change their vile bodies into the likeneſs of his glorious body, according to the mighty power by which he is able to ſubdue all things to himſelf," Philip. iii. 21. He prayed indeed when he raiſed Lazarus, but then, even Woltzogenius obſerves, he could not do this to receive power to raiſe him, becauſe he had this power in himſelf already, John v. 26. and doth there challenge himſelf to be "the reſurrection and the life," John xi. 25. but for other reaſons accounted for, John xi. 41, 42. Secondly, When Woltzogenius can prove that divine virtue, which is proper to God alone, ever was, or ever can be communicated to a creature, or to another without communication of the divine nature, then, and not till then, will he have given a ſatisfactory anſwer to this argument. (W.)

There were three perſons raiſed from death to life, by the powerful word of Chriſt's mouth, namely, Jairus's daughter, mentioned by St. Matthew, Lazarus recorded by St. John, and here the widow's ſon, only taken notice of by St. Luke. The place where this miracle was wrought was the city of Nain; out of their cities, and not within them, the Jews were wont to bury their dead. Our Saviour at the gates of the city meets with the ſad pomp of a funeral, a ſorrowful widow, attended with her mournful neighbours, following her only ſon to the grave. Where note, firſt, The doleful and diſtreſſed condition of the widow; there were many heart-piercing circumſtances in her affliction, 1. It was the death of a ſon. To bury a child rends the heart of a parent, for what are children but the parent multiplied? But to lay a ſon in the grave, which continues the name, and ſupports the family, is a ſore affliction. 2. This ſon was a young man, in the ſtrength and flower of his age, not carried from the cradle to the coffin: Had he died an infant, he had not been ſo much lamented; but then when the mother's expectations were higheſt, and the endearments greateſt, even in the flower of his age he is cut off. 3. He was not only a ſon, but an only ſon; one in whom all his Mother's hopes and comforts were bound up. The death of one out of many is much more tolerable, than of all in one. The loſs of one that admits of no conſolation. 4. Still to heighten the affliction, it is added, that "ſhe was a widow;" ſhe wanted the counſel and ſupport of a loving yoke-fellow. Had the root been left entire, ſhe might better have ſpared the branch; now both are cut down, and ſhe has none left to comfort her in her comfortleſs ſtate of widowhood. In this diſtreſſed condition, Chriſt the God of comfort meets her, pities her, relieves her. Obſerve, ſecondly, The compaſſion of Chriſt towards this diſtreſſed widow; "He ſaw her, and had compaſſion on her." Chriſt ſaw her, ſhe did not ſpeak to him; no tears, no prayers can move Chriſt ſo much as our afflictions and his own compaſſions: Chriſt's heart pitied her, his tongue ſaid to her, Weep not, his feet went to the bier, his hand touched the coffin, and the power of his Godhead raiſed the dead. But how ſtrange doth Chriſt's counſel ſeem! To bid a mother not weep for ſuch a loſs, was to perſuade her to be miſerable, and not feel it; to feel it, and not regard it; to regard it, and yet conceal and hide it It is not the decent expreſſion of our ſorrow then, which Chriſt condemns, but the undue exceſs, and extravagances of it, which our Saviour blames. And the leſſon of inſtruction which we learn from hence is this, That Chriſtians ought to moderate their ſorrow for their dead relations, how many afflicting circumſtances and aggravations ſoever do meet together in their death; here was a child, that child a ſon, that ſon an only ſon, that only ſon carried to the grave in the flower of his age: yet Chriſt ſays to the penſive mother, a ſorrowful widow, Weep not. Obſerve, thirdly, The power of Chriſt, in raiſing the widow's ſon to life. The Lord of life arreſts the ſerjeant death, and reſcues the priſoner out of his hand: Chriſt ſays not, "In the name of God, young man, ariſe," but "I ſay unto thee, ariſe." Chriſt had a power in himſelf, and of himſelf, to command the dead to ariſe; and the ſame powerful voice, which raiſed this young man, ſhall in the laſt day raiſe up our vaniſhed bodies; for it is as eaſy for omnipotency to ſay, Let them be repaired, as to ſay at firſt, Let them be made. The Socinians here own, That Chriſt raiſed this young man by a divine power, which God had communicated to him, yet deny him at the ſame time to be eſſentially God. But let them prove, if they can, That a divine power, which is proper to God alone, ever was, or ever can be communicated to a creature, without the communication of the divine nature: True, we find St. Peter, Acts ix, 43. commanding Tabitha to ariſe; but we find all he did was by faith in Chriſt, and by prayer unto Chriſt. Acts iii. 34. "Jeſus Chriſt healeth thee, ariſe." But Chriſt here raiſed the widow's ſon without prayer, purely by his own power, which undeniably proves him to be God. Obſerve, fourthly, the reality of the miracle, "He ſits up, he begins to ſpeak, and is delivered to his mother." Death has no power to hold that man down, whom the Son of God bids riſe up; "Immediately he that was dead ſat up:" and the ſame power which raiſed one man, can raiſe a thouſand, a million, a world; no power can raiſe one man, but an Almighty Power, and that which is Almighty can raiſe all men. It was not ſo much for the child's ſake, as the mother's ſake, that the ſon was raiſed; it was an injury to the ſon, tho' a kindneſs to the mother, for he muſt twice paſs thro' the gates of death, to others once; it returned him from reſt to labour, from the peaceful harbour back again to the tempeſtuous ocean. Obſerve, laſtly, What effects this miracle had upon the multitude; ſeeing the divine power thus manifeſtly exerted, they are filled with aſtoniſhment and amazement; they look upon our Saviour with awful and admiring looks; "they glorify and praiſe God for ſending a great prophet amongſt them," accounting it a great act of favour that God had in this wonderful manner viſited his people; yet a prophet was the higheſt name they could find for him, whom they ſaw like themſelves in ſhape, but above themſelves in power, "A great prophet is riſen up amongſt us, and God hath viſited his people." (B.)

Ver. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36. When the men were come unto him, they ſaid, John Baptiſt hath ſent us unto thee, ſaying, Art thou he that ſhould come, or look we for another? And in that ſame hour he cured many of their infirmities and plagues, and of evil ſpirits, and unto many that were blind he gave ſight. Then Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have ſeen and heard, how that the blind ſee, the lame walk, the lepers are cleanſed, the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed, to the poor the Goſpel is preached. And bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me. And when the meſſengers of John were departed, he began to ſpeak unto the people concerning John, What went ye out into the wilderneſs for to ſee? A reed ſhaken with the wind? But what went ye out for to ſee? A man cloathed in ſoft raiment? Behold, they which are gorgeouſly apparel'd, and live delicately, are in kings courts. But what went ye out for to ſee? A prophet? Yea, I ſay unto you, and much more than a prophet. This is he of whom it is written, Behold, I ſend my meſſenger before thy face, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee. For I ſay unto you, Among thoſe that are born of women, there is not a greater prophet than John the Baptiſt: but he that is leaſt in the kingdom of God is greater than he. And all the people that heard him, and the publicans, juſtified God, being baptiſed with the baptiſm of John. But the Phariſees and lawyers rejected the counſel of God againſt themſelves, being not baptiſed of him. And the Lord ſaid. Whereunto then ſhall I liken the men of this generation? and to what are they like? They are like unto children ſitting in the market-place, and calling one to another, and ſaying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced: we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept, For John the Baptiſt came neither eating bread, nor drinking wine; and ye ſay, He hath a devil. The Son of man is come eating and drinking; and ye ſay, Behold, a gluttonous man, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and ſinners. But wiſdom is juſtified of all her children. And one of the Phariſees deſired him that he would eat with him. And he went into the Phariſee's houſe, and ſat down to meat.

But the phariſees and lawyers rejected the counſel of God againſt themſelves, being not baptized of him.] That ſome of them came to be baptized, we read, Matt. iii. 7. it therefore muſt be ſaid, either that this is here ſaid of them in general, becauſe it was true of many of them, or that thoſe who came to him, hearing the character he gave of them, refuſed his baptiſm. But the chief thing here obſervable is this, that in rejecting John's baptiſm they are ſaid to reject the counſel of God towards them, that is, his gracious deſign of calling them by him to that repentance, which could alone exempt them from the wrath to come; and by that refuſal declared they approved not of God's counſel, as juſt and righteous, in calling ſuch unblameable perſons as they were, and ſuch zealots for the law, to repentance, that ſo they might eſcape the ruin threatned by St. John; for thus Eleazer, one of them, ſpeaks, after the deſtruction of the Jews, that tho' all the reſt of the Jews periſhed, "We alone expected to be preſerved, as having not ſinned againſt God, nor been guilty of any fault, and who were teachers to others." Chriſt tells us they were "confident in themſelves, that they were righteous," Luke xviii. 9. and repreſents them by the elder ſon, ſaying, "I never tranſgreſſed at any time thy commandments", Luke xv. 29. They therefore judged it an incongruous thing to call ſuch righteous perſons to repentance, and threaten them with ruin who were ſo dear to God; but the publicans and common people were conſcious to themſelves of ſins ſufficient to expoſe them to divine judgments, and therefore they approved of this counſel God ſent them by his meſſenger, and declared him righteous, both in calling them to repentance, and threatning his judgments if they did neglect it; and therefore they ſubmitted to this baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins, to which God by the Baptiſt called them: That dicaioun ia to declare or approve a thing or perſon righteous, ſee ver. 35. They whoſe principles will not allow them to believe, that God had any ſuch benign deſigns towards ſuch a generation of vipers, ſay, firſt, That boulee tou Theou is not the counſel, or the purpoſe, but only the command of God: But, 1. This phraſe in ſcripture never ſignifies a bare command, but always the decree, the purpoſe, or the counſel of God. See Acts ii. 23. --- iv. 28. --- xiii. 36. --- xx. 27. Eph. i. 11 Heb. vi. 17. Nor, 2. Can it be rationally ſuppoſed that God ſhould give men any virtuous or moral precepts, which he doth not deſign and purpoſe that they ſhould obey. Secondly, They add, that eis eautous, towards them, is here put for en eautois, in themſelves, and therefore render the text thus, "they deſpiſed in themſelves the counſel of God." But, 1. Was it his counſel towards them, or was it not? If not, how could they, by neglecting that which concerned not them, deſpiſe it? If ſo, then is it certain, that the purpoſe, and counſel of God towards them, was this, That they ſhould repent, and bring forth fruits meet for repentance. 2. The phraſe, in themſelves, is always expreſſed by en eautois, chap. iii. 8. --- vii. 49. --- xviii. 9. eis eautous occurs but twice elſewhere, viz. 1 Pet. iv. 8, 10. and then it plainly ſignifies towards themſelves. (W)

Ver. 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46. And behold, a woman in the city, which was a ſinner, when ſhe knew that Jeſus ſat at meat in the Phariſee's houſe, brought an alabaſter-box of ointment, And ſtood at his feet behind him weeping, and began to waſh his feet with tears, and did wipe them with the hairs of her head, and kiſſed his feet, and anointed them with the ointment. Now when the Phariſee which had bidden him, ſaw it, he ſpake within himſelf, ſaying, This man, if he were a prophet, would have known who, and what manner of woman this is that toucheth him: for ſhe is a ſinner. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid unto him, Simon, I have ſomewhat to ſay unto thee. And he ſaith, Maſter, ſay on. There was a certain creditor, which had two debtors: the one owed five hundred pence, and the other fifty. And when they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Tell me therefore which of them will love him moſt? Simon anſwered and ſaid, I ſuppoſe that he to whom he forgave moſt. And he ſaid unto him, Thou haſt rightly judged. And he turned to the woman, and ſaid unto Simon, Seeſt thou this woman? I entred into thine houſe, thou gaveſt me no water for my feet: but ſhe hath waſhed my feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head. Thou gaveſt me no kiſs: but this woman, ſince the time I came in, hath not ceaſed to kiſs my feet. Mine head with oil thou didſt not anoint: but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment.

A ſinner.] Heis een amartoolos, "which was a ſinner," here applied to the woman, may be taken in the notion wherein we find amartooloi ex ethnoon, Gal. ii. 15. ſinners of the Gentiles, and to ſignify no more than a Gentile woman. Thus the word ſeemed to ſignify, c. vi. 32, 34. where it is ſaid that "ſinners love thoſe that love them," that is, aliens from the law of God or Chriſt, (Amicos diligere omnium eſt, ſaith Tertullian, 'tis common to all men to love friends) for which St. Matthew ſets publicans, c. v. 46. who we know are oft joined with ſinners, and for their converſation with the heathen (from the neceſſity of their office) are look'd upon as a kind of heathens, whether they were ſuch or no, and were moſt of them Gentiles, as 'tis probable, their office being an employment under the Romans, to bring in taxes to them. But 'tis alſo true that publicans and harlots are put together, Mat. xxi. 31. and that ſeems to refer to the baſeneſs and unworthineſs of thoſe two infamous callings, and then amartoolos, ſinner, as it is of affinity of ſignification with theſe, may perhaps ſignify one that had been a whore, and that is very reconcileable with the former conjecture, that vice or trade of proſtitute whores being among the Gentiles ſo ordinary: And ſo this woman, if ſhe were a whore, was either a Gentile alſo, or becauſe guilty of that Gentile ſin, called by this common name of Gentiles, amartoolos, a ſinner. That this woman, whoſoever ſhe was, was not Mary Magdalene, is probable, firſt, by the no-argument on that ſide, but only the mention of the name of Mary in St. John, c. xii. 3. which preſently ſhall appear to be Martha's and Lazarus's ſiſter, and that another ſtory, Secondly, By the words in the chapter here following, c. viii. 2. where when it is ſaid that Mary Magdalene was with Chriſt, ſhe is deſcribed by another character, taken from that remarkable mercy wrought on her by Chriſt, that ſhe had ſeven devils caſt out of her, the very mark which is again given her, Mark xvi. 9. when 'tis ſaid that "Chriſt firſt appeared to her," and no other mention is made of her in any of the Goſpels, but only of her watching where Chriſt was laid after his crucifixion, and her going to the ſepulchre, &c. Chriſt's firſt appearing to her, and her witneſſing his reſurrection. Beſides Mary Magdalene, 'tis evident there was another Mary, the ſiſter of Martha and Lazarus, John xii. and ſhe brought "a pound of ſpikenard, and anointed the feet of Jeſus, and wiped his feet with her hair," as is evident by comparing that paſſage, John xii. 3. with John xi. 2. where 'tis ſet down of her punctually, by way of anticipation, "It was Mary which anointed the Lord with ointment, and wiped his feet with her hair, whoſe brother Lazarus was ſick." And this Mary was not ſhe in this chapter of St. Luke neither; for that ſiſter of Lazarus, ſo beloved of Chriſt, will be much injured in her ſtory, if ſhe be made an amartoolos, whether a whore or a Gentile. The ſtory of Mary in St. John is indeed all one with that in Matt. xxvi. 6. and Mark xiv. 3. "in the houſe of Simon the leper." As appears, firſt, by the mention of Bethany, where it was, in all three Goſpels, and that the town of that Mary and Lazarus, who are therefore both of them ſaid to be at the feaſt, Mary as a waiter, Lazarus lying at meat with them, John xii. 2. And ſo, ſecondly, by the mention of thoſe two ſpeeches of Chriſt on that occaſion, 1. that what was done by her was for his embalming, and, 2. that wherever the Goſpel was preached, this fact of that woman ſhould be preached alſo, the former mentioned in all three, (and ſo likewiſe Judas's murmuring) the latter in two of the Goſpels. But none of all theſe circumſtances belong here to this ſtory in St. Luke. But on the contrary, it was in one of the Phariſees houſes, not in Simon the leper's, nor at all, that we have any reaſon to gueſs, in Bethany. And the Phariſee objected againſt Chriſt for this, not Judas, or one of the diſciples; and the objection was not at the unneceſſary expence, as there, but that Chriſt would let a ſinner be ſo kind to him, if he knew it, or if he did not, that he was no prophet. And then the diſcourſe between Chriſt and Simon, occaſioned by this fact of the ſinner woman in Luke (about the creditor and his debtors, and the application of it to the exceſs of this woman's love above his, cauſed by the mercy of having many ſins forgiven, which ſhe had received) is far diſtant from that in the other Goſpels of "anointing him for his burial," by way of embalming, as it were, which alſo contains another circumſtance in it, that that of Mary's was immediately before his death, Judas going out immediately upon it to betray him, Mark xiv. 10. Matt. xvi. 14. and ſo likewiſe in St. John his death follows ſoon after, but this paſſage in St. Luke hath nothing to do with his death, and is ſet down on another occaſion here by St. Luke (whenſoever it was acted, as Luke indeed obſerves not the order of ſtory in all his relations) viz. to ſhew that which Chriſt was upon in the former paſſage, that thoſe which had not lived the beſt lives formerly, were more ready to receive the mercies offered by Chriſt than the Phariſees, &c. that had a better opinion of themſelves. All the affinity between theſe ſtories is that of the alabaſter or cruiſe of ointment poured upon him, but when that is known to be the ordinary name of a veſſel, that was uſed to that purpoſe, and that it was very ordinary at feaſts to uſe ointment to pour on them, and perfume them, this will be but a poor evidence to prove theſe ſtories to be all one, becauſe many ſeveral feaſts there might be, and were, and this civility uſed in all or many of theſe. And altho' in one particular wherein the ſtory in John differs from the ſame in Matthew and Mark, this in Luke agrees with that in John (which many perſuade ſome that 'tis the ſame ſtory at leaſt, which Luke and John ſet down) as that John mentions not the pouring out the ointment on the head (as Matthew and Mark do) but only on the feet, which they do not (in both which Luke agrees with him) yet will not this be of any force againſt the former arguments, eſpecially when 'tis remember'd (what is peculiarly obſerved of St. John's Goſpel, written after and as a ſupplement of the others) that John finding the mention of the anointing of Chriſt's head by Mary in the two Goſpels, did not need mention it again, but thought it neceſſary to add all the reſt, which they had not mentioned, of "anointing his feet, and wiping them with the hairs of her head," which as it is certain that it was done by Mary, becauſe St. John affirms it, ſo might it alſo at another time be done by another woman, and no wonder at all be in it, nor matter of objection againſt what we have ſaid of theſe being diverſe ſtories. Nay, one obſervable difference there is in this very thing, wherein theſe two Evangeliſts thus ſeem to agree. For St. John ſaith clearly that "Mary anointed his feet with the ſpikenard," John xii. 3. mentioning no tears, nor any thing but the ointment, the odour of which ſo filled the houſe: but this ſinner woman in Luke, tho' ſhe brought into the houſe with her her veſſel of ointment, yet in another kind of addreſs, (and that which more became her that remember'd her former heathen or ſinful courſe) ſhe firſt "ſtood by his feet behind him weeping," and began to "bedew his feet with tears," then "wiped off the tears with the hairs of her head," and yet farther "kiſſed his feet (all which we find not in St. John) and then anointed his feet with the ointment," which is the only circumſtance wherein they agree, and ſo it cannot be thought argumentative againſt ſo much to the contrary. And if it be farther granted that this Phariſee's name was Simon alſo, but yet was another perſon from Simon the leper (as 'tis ſure enough Simon was a very ordinary name at that time) I cannot foreſee any the leaſt probability againſt the truth of what hath been here obſerved. (H.)

Ver. 47, 48, 49, 50. Wherefore I ſay unto thee, Her ſins, which are many, are forgiven; for ſhe loved much: but to whom little is forgiven, the ſame loveth little. And he ſaid unto her, Thy ſins are forgiven, And they that ſat at meat with him, began to ſay within themſelves, Who is this that forgiveth ſins alſo? And he ſaid unto the woman, Thy faith hath ſaved thee; go in peace.

For.] That oti ſignifies therefore, and not for, in this place, is apparent, not only by the clear importance of the parable precedent, where he that had the greater debt forgiven is ſuppoſed to have greater love and kindneſs to the creditor, and not, therefore, forgiven, becauſe he had that love and kindneſs, but alſo by the ſignification of the Hebrew word, which is promiſcuouſly taken oti or dioti, for, or therefore; and ſo, according to the practice of theſe writers, one of theſe Greek words may be taken for the other, oti, for, uſed when the ſenſe bears dioti, therefore. And ſo Mark ix. 28. the ſame oti clearly ſignifies dia ti, for what cauſe, or why? interrogatively. And ſo, I conceive, on the other ſide, Rom. v. 12. dia touto is ſet when the ſenſe carries it oti, not therefore, but for, that verſe being the proof of the former, not proved by it; and ſo Heb. xi. 23. dioti, therefore, is uſed for oti, for, or becauſe: Moſes was hidden by his parents, dioti, becauſe he was a comely child; ſo James iv. 5. dioti kakoos aiteiſthe, becauſe ye ask amiſs; ſo the Hebrew word alſo ſignifies both quia and ideo; and Eccluſ. xxxi. 15. is render'd dia touto, wherefore, when it ſhould be oti, for; and 1 Pet. i. 24 dioti, wherefore, is put for oti, for. But as a more direct example of oti, wherefore, I ſuppoſe one place in St John to be worth obſerving, John xiv. 17. where Chriſt having, upon condition of their loving and obeying him, promiſed the Comforter, or Paraclete, to the diſciples, ver. 15, 16. that he might abide with them for ever; he ſaith of him, that worldly men cannot receive him, becauſe they neither ſee nor know him, but, ſaith he, ye know him, oti par' umin menei, kai en umin eſtai, which, in all reaſon, is to be ſo render'd, that it may be the effect or conſequent, not as the cauſe or antecedent of the former; as the coming and abiding of the Paraclete was before-mentioned as the conſequent and reward of their loving and obeying, and not as the cauſe of that. And then the oti muſt bear the ſame ſenſe exactly which here we affix to it, therefore, or for this cauſe (as if it were dioti, or dia touto) he remaineth with you, and ſhall be in, or among, you (H.)

Wherefore I ſay unto thee, her ſins, which are many, are forgiven, for ſhe loved much.] Chriſt ſaith not, her ſins were forgiven, becauſe ſhe loved much, but this ought to be a token to thee that her ſins, which render'd her unworthy to touch me, have been forgiven; this great love to me being an indication of her deep ſenſe of God's mercy to her in pardoning her many ſins: And this do I the prophet, and the Son of God declare unto her: To this ſenſe lead both the parable of the great debtor, to whom the Lord frankly had forgiven all, for he loved much, becauſe much had been forgiven, and the concluſion of it in theſe words, He that hath leſs forgiven, loveth leſs; whence it appears, that oti here cannot be cauſal, or intimate ſhe was forgiven much, becauſe ſhe loved much; the cauſe aſſigned of her forgiveneſs being not her love, but faith, ver. 50. but only conſequential, denoting the effect, or indication of the forgiveneſs of her many ſins. So Hoſea ix. 15. All their iniquity was in Gilgal, oti, therefore there I hated them; for they did not ſin in Gilgal, becauſe he hated them there, but he hated them there, becauſe they were offended, Eccleſ. v. 7. oti ſu ton Theon phobou, wherefore fear thou God. So John xiv. 17. The world cannot receive the Spirit of truth oti ou theorei auto, therefore it ſees him not, neither knows him, but ye know him, oti, therefore he abideth with you, and ſhall be with you. In one, at leaſt, of theſe two paragraphs oti muſt bear this ſenſe. (H.)

CHAP. VIII.

Women miniſtring unto Chriſt of their ſubſtance. The parable of the ſower. The lamp. The mother and brothers of Chriſt. Chriſt ſtills the wind.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. AND it came to paſs afterward, that he went throughout every city and village preaching and ſhewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God: and the twelve were with him; And certain women which had been healed of evil ſpirits and infirmities, Mary called Magdalene, out of whom went ſeven devils. And Joanna the wife of Chuza, Herod's ſteward, and Suſanna, and many others, which miniſtred unto him of their ſubſtance. And when much people were gathered together, and were come to him out of every city, he ſpake by a parable: A ſower went out to ſow his ſeed: and as he ſowed, ſome fell by the way-ſide, and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it. And ſome fell upon a rock, and as ſoon as it was ſprung up, it withered away, becauſe it lacked moiſture. And ſome fell among thorns, and the thorns ſprang up with it, and choked it. And other fell on good ground, and ſprang up, and bare fruit an hundred-fold. And when he had ſaid theſe things, he cried, He that hath ears to hear, let him hear. And his diſciples asked him, ſaying, What might this parable be?

Miniſtred.] The true notion of the word diakonein, ſo often uſed in the ſcripture, will be worth conſidering a while, for the right underſtanding of all places where 'tis uſed. And, firſt, it is ſufficiently known to belong unto, and to be frequently taken in general for any kind of ſervice, or miniſtry. Such was that of diſciples, who waited, attended on the prophets, did their ſervile offices (ſee Matt. iii.) and accordingly diakonos is taken for ſuch a diſciple, John xii. 26. compared with Luke vi. 40. Matt x. 25. But omitting this ordinary notion, the beſt riſe will be by conſidering the word diakonoi, and diakonein, as it refers to that one particular office of ſervants, that of waiting at feaſts. Thus Lucian, in his Cronoſel, among the Leges Convivales, mentions this; "Let the waiters do nothing out of favour, or partiality, to any;" where diakonoi are thoſe that in feaſts diſtribute the moiras, or portions, to each gueſt, as it follows there; "Not to one a larger or better, to another a meaner or leſſer piece, but equality in all." For this we find among thoſe rites or cuſtoms of feaſts, that the diakonoi diſtributed the portions, firſt to the maſter of the feaſt, and then to the gueſts, each of them in order, either according to the direction of the architriklinos, or the order of the feaſt, or as they pleaſed themſelves, when he did not direct, only according to that rule of equality, that they ſhould not "give one a greater, another a very little portion. This we find in Lucian, both in his Cronoſel, and Epiſt Saturn. and, ſpeaking of unjuſt officers, he ſaith; "In the diviſion of a ſwine, the ſervant gives his maſter half of it, with the head, and to the reſt a few bones." Agreeable to this cuſtom of the diakonoi, giving to every man his portion, is that of our Saviour, Luke xii. 37. ſpeaking of a maſter that entertains his ſervants; "He ſhall gird himſelf like a ſervant, and make them lie down, and paſſing from one to another, ſhall diſtribute to every man his portion." A parallel to which we have in Lucian; "When a rich man entertains his ſervants, and miniſters to them, he and his friends with him." This, as was even now intimated, belonged primarily to the governor, or orderer of the feaſt: And thus we read of Chriſt, when he entertained the multitudes, he acted the part of the architriklinos, "When he had given thanks, he gave to his diſciples," as the Oeconomus to the waiters, "and they to the multitudes," to every man ſingle his portion. So that ſtill the office of the doakonos is to diſtribute the nomai, or merides, tho' the œconomus break or divide them. So that that ſaying of Chriſt, Matt. xx. 28. and, in the ſame words almoſt, Mark x. 45. may juſtly be underſtood of this cuſtom, and this uſe of the word diakonein; "The Son of man came not that others might miniſter to him, or diſtribute favours, or ſhew kindneſſes to him, but he to diſtribute to them;" and, as it follows, to diſtribute that great gift among his diſciples, and all mankind, "his life for the redemption of the world." Neither is this interpretation reſiſted, or made leſs probable by that which went before; "But it ſhall not be ſo among you, but he that will become great among you, let him be your miniſter, and he that will be firſt, let him be your ſervant;" as if the word belonged only to the humility required by Chriſt of Chriſtian governors: for there be two things there ſpoken of by Chriſt concerning the Heathen rulers (to which the Chriſtians are oppoſed) one that they do uſe their ſervants as lords, and owners of them as of a poſſeſſion (as ſervants were reckoned by them among their wealth or riches) and ſo reap fruit and profit by their labours, which Xenophon calls, "to be profited by them; the ſecond, that they do exerciſe deſpotical power over them: To which two, Chriſt here oppoſes theſe two other duties of a Chriſtian governor in his church; 1. That he ſhall be beneficial or profitable to thoſe that are under him; 2. That he ſhall be humble towards them, and the firſt of theſe is here meant by being a miniſter, as the ſecond by being a ſervant, and therefore Chriſt returns and ſpeaks farther to that; "The ſon of man came not to be miniſtred unto, but to miniſter; "and to give his life," &c. From this feſtival, cuſtom ſet down in all the parts, John ii. 9. (where there is, beſide the maſter of the feaſt, the divider of the meats and wine; and again, the diakonoi, ver. 5. which diſtribute and carry it, being divided, to each gueſt) we may clearly fetch the office of the firſt deacons in the church, who were to diſtribute to the poor, as every one had need, under the Apoſtles, as the œconomi, or chief diſpenſers, and to take off that toil from them; and ſo, in like manner, at the adminiſtration of the Euchariſt, to be miniſterial to the biſhop, or præfect, and diſtribute that wine and bread which he had conſecrated: See Juſtin Martyr, Apol. 2. But to the former of theſe, that of diſtributing to the poor, the word diakonia, miniſtring, in ſcripture, peculiarly belongs, and ſo ſtill makes good that notion which we now take it in. So Acts xi. 29. To ſend relief to be diſtributed to them that want; and Acts xii.

25. and 2 Cor. viii. 4. The liberality of diſtribution to the ſaint. So 1 Pet. iv. 10. where, ſpeaking of hoſpitality, he bids them dipenſe, or diſtribute, that is, give: And again, ver. 12. If any man exerciſe liberality to the poor; ſo Acts vi. the daily diſtribution to the poor widows; or, as the ſixteenth Canon of the Council in Trullo interprets the place, the diſpenſing of neceſſaries at their tables; and, therefore, Zonæras, on that canon, explains it by oikonomoi trophoon, diſpenſers of meat (meaning, I ſuppoſe, under the chief œconomus, or ſteward) rather the diſtributors of it. Thus in Julian, ſpeaking of the Galileans, as he ſtiles the Chriſtians, "You ſhall find, ſaith he, their feaſts of love and entertainments, and diſtribution at tables; by which, ſaith he, they allured many to their religion." So in Procopius's Scholia on 1 Sam. ix. there is mention apoploon diakonoumenoon, which ſure is ill render'd apoſtolorum miniſtrantium, of the Apoſtles that miniſtred, and ſhould be render'd in the paſſive ſenſe, adminiſtratione, or liberalitate aliorum mentium, they that were miniſtred to, for ſo he adds out of St. Paul, you ſent twice to my wants. I ſhall need to add no more to this, but only, that what ſome did diſtribute, or diſpenſe, only as inſtruments, or officers, or miniſters of others liberality, that alſo ſome did, out of their own eſtates; and ſo here theſe women did out of their own goods. So, I ſuppoſe, Oneſiphorus, 2 Tim. i. 18. So Phœbe, Rom. xvi. 1. the miniſter of church in Cenchrea, who is therefore called (ſaith Heſychius) an entertainer, and ſuccourer of many, and of Paul himſelf. It is a military word, of ſoldiers relieving, and defending, and reſcuing one another, which is a work of mercy; and he that exerciſeth it, is called indifferently proſtatees, epiſtatees, paraſtatees, (ſee Rom. xvi. 2.) So in Demoſthenes, "Who help'd Aphobus to defraud me;" and in Strabo, "He maintained, defended a falſe opinion;" and many the like. And this Phœbe thus called, and ſuch as ſhe were the adelphai, ſiſters or Chriſtian women, that accompanied the Apoſtles in their travels, and provided for them, that they might preach, and not be put to earn their livings with their hands, 1 Cor. ix. 5. (H.)

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. And he ſaid, Unto you it is given to know the myſteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that ſeeing they might not ſee, and hearing they might not underſtand. Now the parable is this: The ſeed is the word of God. Thoſe by the way-ſide, are they that hear: then cometh the devil, and taketh away the word of their hearts, leſt they ſhould believe, and be ſaved. They on the rock are they, which when they hear, receive the word with joy; and theſe have no root, which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away. And that which fell among thorns, are they, which when they have heard, go forth, and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleaſures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. But that on the good ground, are they, which in an honeſt and good heart, having heard the word, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience.

That ſeeing they might not ſee, and hearing they might not underſtand. Mark iv. 12. That ſeeing they may ſee and not perceive, and hearing they may hear and not underſtand, leſt they ſhould be converted, and their ſins ſhould be forgiven them.] Here, ſay ſome, this is plainly given as the reaſon why our Saviour ſpake to them without in parables, viz. that they may not perceive, or underſtand, or be converted. But to take off this pretenſion, 'tis ſufficient to obſerve, that the words in St. Mark and St. Luke are only as an abbreviation, or ſhort hint, of what St. Matthew ſaith was ſpoken by our Lord more fully; for Chriſt might ſay what St. Mark and St. Luke relate, and yet ſay more than they relate, as St. Matthew doth aſſure us he did; but then St. Matthew could not have given us his diſcourſe more fully, unleſs our Lord had ſpoken it more fully than it is related by St. Mark and St. Luke; whence it muſt follow, that the relations of Mark and Luke muſt be allowed to be deficient, i. e. not to contain all that our Saviour ſaid on this occaſion, and therefore muſt be filled up, or render'd entire, by the addition of the words recorded in St. Matthew; ſince then St. Matthew doth expreſly tell us, from the mouth of Chriſt; "He therefore ſpake to them in parables, becauſe they ſeeing would not ſee, or did not ſee, and hearing did not underſtand;" and that they, therefore, did not ſee, hear, and underſtand, "becauſe their heart was waxed groſs, and their ears heavy, and they had cloſed their eyes, leſt they ſhould ſee, and hear, and be converted." It ſeemeth evident, that the words of St. Mark and St. Luke muſt be filled up, or made entire, thus: To others (of the Jews) ſpeak I in parables, (becauſe they ſeeing ſee not, and hearing do not underſtand, for their hearts are waxed groſs, and their ears heavy, and their eyes have they cloſed) that ſeeing they may ſee, and not perceive, and hearing they may hear, and not underſtand, leſt they ſhould be converted: And tho', doubtleſs, this ſad effect of their not hearing and ſeeing, viz leſt they ſhould be converted, was not intended by them, yet ſince it was the natural iſſue of their ſhutting their eyes againſt the light, it fitly is aſcribed to them; as when the prophet Hoſea ſaith, chap. viii. 4 "Of their ſilver and gold have they made them idols, that they might be cut off;" and the prophet Micah, chap. vi. 16. "For the ſtatutes of Omri are kept, and all the works of the houſe of Ahab, and ye walk in their counſels, that I ſhould make thee a deſolation." A like expreſſion to this, we find Iſaiah lxiii. 17. "Why haſt thou cauſed us to err from thy ways? why haſt thou hardned our hearts, that we ſhould not fear thee?" And yet this is the church's prayer, imploring God's mercy, and the removal of his judgments, viz. the long oppreſſion of the Heathens, which was a temptation to them to depart from him, and to caſt off his fear, and therefore ſhews they were no otherwiſe harden'd by God, than as theſe providences were a ſtrong temptation to them to caſt off his ſervice. (W.)

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40. No man when he hath lighted a candle, covereth it with a veſſel, or putteth it under a bed: but ſetteth it on a candleſtick, that they which enter in may ſee the light. For nothing is ſecret, that ſhall not be made manifeſt: neither any thing hid, that ſhall not be known, and come abroad. Take heed therefore how ye hear; for whoſoever hath, to him ſhall be given; and whoſoever hath not, from him ſhall be taken even that which he ſeemeth to have. Then came to him his mother and his brethren, and could not come at him for the preſs. And it was told him by certain which ſaid, Thy mother and thy brethren ſtand without, deſiring to ſee thee. And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, My mother and my brethren are theſe which hear the word of God, and do it. Now it came to paſs on a certain day, that he went into a ſhip with his diſciples: and he ſaid unto them, Let us go over unto the other ſide of the lake. And they lanched forth. But as they ſailed, he fell aſleep: and there came down a ſtorm of wind on the lake, and they were filled with water, and were in jeopardy. And they came to him, and awoke him, ſaying, Maſter, maſter, we periſh. Then he aroſe and rebuked the wind, and the raging of the water: and they ceaſed, and there was a calm. And he ſaid unto them, Where is your faith? And they being afraid wondered, ſaying one to another, What manner of man is this? for he commandeth even the winds and water, and they obey him. And they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes, which is over againſt Galilee: And when he went forth to land, there met him out of the city, a certain man which had devils long time, and ware no clothes, neither abode in any houſe, but in the tombs. When he ſaw Jeſus, he came out, and fell down before him, and with a loud voice ſaid, What have I to do with thee, Jeſus, thou Son of God moſt high? I beſeech thee torment me not. (For he had commanded the unclean ſpirit to come out of the man. For oftentimes it had caught him: and he was kept bound with chains, and in fetters; and he brake the bands, and was driven of the devil into the wilderneſs.) And Jeſus asked him, ſaying, What is thy name? And he ſaid, Legion: becauſe many devils were entered into him. And they beſought him, that he would not command them to go out into the deep. And there was there an herd of many ſwine feeding on the mountain: and they beſought him that he would ſuffer them to enter into them. And he ſuffered them. Then went the devils out of the man, and enter'd into the ſwine: and the herd ran violently down a ſteep a place into the lake, and were choked. When they that fed them ſaw what was done, they fled, and went and told it in the city, and in the country. Then they went out to ſee what was done; and came to Jeſus, and found the man out of whom the devils were departed, ſitting at the feet of Jeſus, clothed, and in his right mind: and they were afraid. They alſo which ſaw it, told them by what means he that was poſſeſſed of the devils, was healed. Then the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about beſought him to depart from them: for they were taken with great fear: and he went up into the ſhip, and returned back again. Now the man out of whom the devils were departed, beſought him that he might be with him: but Jeſus ſent him away, ſaying, Return to thine own houſe, and ſhew how great things God hath done unto thee. And he went his way, and publiſhed throughout the whole city, how great things Jeſus had done unto him. And it came to paſs, that when Jeſus was returned, the people gladly received him: for they were all waiting for him.

When Jeſus was returned, the people gladly received him.] This piece of hiſtory gives us a very ſad relation of a perſon that was poſſeſſed with a legion of devils; we read of few, if any, in the Old Teſtament, that were thus poſſeſs'd, but of many in the New. Our Saviour came into the world to deſtroy the works of the devil; therefore he ſuffered Satan to enter ſome human bodies, to ſhew his divine power in caſting him out. Obſerve here, firſt, That the evil Angels, by their fall, loſt, their purity, but not their power; for, with God's permiſſion, they have power not only to enter mens bodies, and to poſſeſs them, but alſo to diſtemper their minds, and to drive them to frenzy and madneſs; ſuch was the deplorable caſe here. Note, ſecondly, that the reaſon why the evil Angels do no oftener exert their power in doing miſchief to the bodies and lives of men, is from the reſtraining power of God; the devil cannot do all the miſchief he would, and he ſhall not do all he can. Obſerve, thirdly, the place where the evil ſpirits delighted to make their abode, amongſt the tombs, or graves, places deſolate, forlorn, and ſolitary, which are apt to breed horror of mind, and to give advantage to temptation. From whence I gather, That it is very dangerous and unſafe for perſons, eſpecially in whom melancholly prevails, to give themſelves too much to ſolitarineſs, to frequent deſolate places, and to affect being much alone; for it gives advantage to Satan, to ſet upon them with powerful temptations. It is much better to frequent human ſociety, eſpecially to delight in the communion of the ſaints, by means whereof we may be more and more ſtrengthned againſt Satan's temptations. Obſerve, fourthly, how the devils own Chriſt to be the ſon of God, and pay unwillingly worſhip and homage to him, yielding ſubjection to him as his ſlaves and vaſſals, not a free and voluntary ſervice; They cried out, and fell down before him, ſaying, What have we to do with thee, Jeſus, thou Son of God? Where, by calling him Jeſus, they own him to be a Saviour, but none of their Saviour; What have we to do with thee, Jeſus? O! what an uncomfortable expreſſion is this, to own Chriſt to be a Saviour, and at the ſame time to know and declare, that he is none of our Saviour; Quid eſt Deus, ſi non ſit meus? "What is God, if he be not my God?" What comfort in a Saviour, if he be not my Saviour? Obſerve, fifthly, what a multitude of evil ſpirits do enter into one man. Oh the extreme malice and enmity of the devil againſt mankind, in that ſo many evil ſpirits ſhould at once afflict and torment a ſingle perſon, even a legion, many thouſands of them. Note likewiſe, the unity and agreement which is amongſt theſe evil ſpirits in doing miſchief; tho' there was a multitude of them in this one perſon, yet have they all but one name: We ſee the very devils have a ſort of unity amongſt themſelves, and in their malicious and miſchievous deſigns againſt mankind, they are as one. O how happy were it, if good men were as united in their deſigns and endeavours for the glory of God, and the good of one another, as devils conſpire and contrive againſt them. Obſerve, ſixthly, the requeſt which the devils makes to Chriſt, We beſeech thee torment us not. From whence we may gather, 1. That there are torments appointed to the ſpiritual nature of evil angels. 2. That the evil angels, or devils, are not ſo full of torment as they ſhall be, altho' they are as full of ſin and diſcontent as they can be, there will be a time when their torments ſhall be increaſed; therefore they pray, Torment us not before the time; that is, do not increaſe our torments before the appointed time of their increaſe. Obſerve, ſeventhly, the devils requeſt for permiſſion and leave to go into the herd of ſwine. Where note, 1. The devil's malice; he will hurt the poor beaſts, rather than not hurt at all. 2. His powerful reſtraint; he cannot hurt a poor pig without a permiſſion, Suffer us to enter. Satan's malice indeed is infinite, but his power is bounded: it is poteſtas ſub poteſtate, a power under a power; if he could not hurt the ſwine, much leſs can he afflict the children of men without leave. Obſerve, eighthly, How Satan's requeſt is yielded to by our Saviour; He ſuffered them to go into the ſwine, not to gratify their deſire in doing miſchief, but firſt thereby Chriſt ſhewed his power over the devils, that they could not act without his permiſſion and leave, next to ſhew how great the malice and power of the devil is, if not reſtrained, and, laſtly, that the miracle of caſting out ſo many devils might appear to be the greater. Learn hence, That ſometimes Almighty God, for wiſe ends and juſt cauſes, doth ſuffer the devil to enjoy his deſire, in doing miſchief unto the creatures, "Jeſus ſaid unto them, Go." Obſerve, ninthly, What a bad effect this miracle had upon the minds of the Gadarenes; inſtead of believing and owning Chriſt's divine power, the loſs of their ſwine enrages them, and makes them deſire Chriſt's departure from them. Learn, That carnal hearts prefer their ſwine before their Saviour, and would rather loſe Chriſt's preſence than their worldly profit, "They beſought him to depart from them." Sad is the condition of thoſe from whom Chriſt depart, more ſad the condition of ſuch who ſay unto Chriſt, Depart; but more ſad the condition of them, who beſeech and intreat Chriſt to depart from them: Thus did the Gadarenes here, and we do not read that ever Chriſt returned more to them. Obſerve, tenthly, How deſirous the poſſeſſed man was to continue with Chriſt after he was come to himſelf, "He prayed that he might be with him." This he might deſire, partly to teſtify his thankfulneſs to Chriſt, partly out of fear of being re-poſſeſſed again by Satan, or perhaps to have the opportunity of hearing Chriſt's doctrine, and ſeeing his miracles: For ſuch as have once taſted that the Lord is gracious, and experienced the pleaſure and pr[illegible]t of Chriſt's company, are very deſirous of the continuance of [illegible], and exceeding loth to part with it. However, our Saviour at this time did not think fit to ſuffer him, knowing that more glory would redound to God by publiſhing this miracle to his friends. Chriſt expects, after eminent deliverances wrought for us, that we ſhould be publiſhers of his praiſes, and declare to all far and near the great and wonderful things which he has done for us. Obſerve, laſtly, How Chriſt aſcribes that power to God, by which he had wrought this miracle of healing, "Shew how great things God has done for thee." From whence the Socinians infer, that had he been God Moſt High, and the Author of that power by which he wrought this miracle, he would have aſcribed it to himſelf. Anſwer, Chriſt doeth this, as not ſeeking his own glory, but the glory of him that ſent him; that is, executing his prophetic office in his Father's name, and caſting out devils by that Spirit which he had received from his Father. (B.)

Ver. 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52. 53, 54, 55, 56. And behold, there came a man named Jairus, and he was a ruler of the ſynagogue: and he fell down at Jeſus feet, and beſought him that he would come into his: For he had one only daughter, about twelve years of age, and ſhe lay a dying. (But as he went, the people thronged him. And a woman having an iſſue of blood twelve years, which had ſpent all her living upon phyſicians, neither could be healed of any, Came behind him, and touched the border of his garment: and immediately her iſſue of blood ſtanched. And Jeſus ſaid, Who touched me? When all denied, Peter, and they that were with him, ſaid, Maſter, the multitude throng thee, and preſs thee, and ſay'ſt thou, Who touched me? And Jeſus ſaid, Somebody hath touched me: for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me. And when the woman ſaw that ſhe was not hid, ſhe came trembling, and falling down before him, ſhe declared unto him before all the people, for what cauſe ſhe had touched him, and how ſhe was healed immediately. And he ſaid unto her, Daughter, be of good comfort: thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace.) While he yet ſpake, there cometh one from the ruler of the ſynagogue's houſe, ſaying to him, Thy daughter is dead; trouble not the Maſter. But when Jeſus heard it, he anſwered him, ſaying, Fear not: believe only, and ſhe ſhall be made whole. And when he came into the houſe, he ſuffered no man to go in, ſave Peter, and James, and John, and the father and mother of the maiden. And all wept, and bewailed her: but he ſaid, Weep not; ſhe is not dead, but ſleepeth. And they laughed him to ſcorn, knowing that ſhe was dead. And he put them all out, and took her by the hand, and called, ſaying, Maid, ariſe. And her ſpirit came again, and ſhe aroſe ſtraightway: and he commanded to give her meat. And her parents were aſtoniſhed: but he charged them that they ſhould tell no man what was done.

I perceive that virtue is gone out of me.] As our Saviour was on his way to Jairus's houſe, a diſeaſed woman cometh behind him, toucheth his cloaths, and is preſently healed. The virtue lay not in her finger, but in her faith, or rather in Chriſt, which her faith inſtrumentally drew forth. Obſerve, firſt, The diſeaſed woman, one with a bloody flux; let women here take notice of the miſeries which the ſin of the firſt woman brought upon all women; amongſt which this is one, that it has made their bodies ſubject to præternatural iſſues and fluxes of blood. Obſerve, ſecondly, The long continuance of this diſeaſe, twelve years; it pleaſes God to lay long and tedious afflictions upon ſome of his children in this life, and particularly to keep ſome of them a very long time under bodily weakneſs, to manifeſt his power in ſupporting them, and to magnify his mercy in delivering them. Obſerve, thirdly, This poor woman was found in the uſe of means; ſhe ſought to phyſicians for help, and is not blamed for ſo doing, altho' ſhe ſpent all ſhe had upon them. The uſe and help of phyſick is by no means to be neglected by us in times of ſickneſs, eſpecially in dangerous diſeaſes of the body; to truſt to means is to neglect God, and to neglect the means is to tempt God. The health of our body ought to be dear unto us, and all lawful means uſed, both to preſerve it, to recover it, and confirm it. Obſerve, fourthly, The actings of this poor woman's faith; her diſeaſe was unclean by the ceremonial law, and ſhe to be ſeparated from ſociety. Accordingly ſhe is aſhamed to appear before Chriſt, but comes behind him to touch his cloaths, being firmly perſuaded, that Chriſt had a power communicated to him miraculouſly to cure incurable diſeaſes; and ſee how our Saviour encouraged her faith, he ſaith, "Thy faith hath made thee whole." Learn hence, That faith oft-times meets with a better welcome from Chriſt, than it did or could expect; this poor woman came to Chriſt trembling, but went away triumphing. Obſerve, fifthly, Chriſt would have this miracle diſcovered, he therefore ſays, "Who toucheth me? for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me." Chriſt ſays this, firſt in reference to himſelf, to manifeſt his divine power, that by the touch of his cloaths he could cure ſuch an incurable diſeaſe; Secondly, In relation to the woman, that ſhe might have opportunity to give God the praiſe and glory for the cure. And, thirdly, With reſpect to Jairus, that his faith might be ſtrengthened in belief of Chriſt's power to raiſe his daughter. (B.)

C H A P. IX.

Chriſt calls his twelve diſciples together. How Herod heard of all that had been performed by him. He takes the five loaves, and performs ſeveral miracles.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. THen he called his twelve diſciples together, and gave them power and authority over all devils, and to cure diſeaſes. And he ſent them to preach the kingdom of God, and to heal the ſick. And he ſaid unto them, Take nothing for your journey, neither ſtaves, nor ſcrip, neither bread, neither money; neither have two coats apiece. And whatſoever houſe ye enter into, there abide, and thence depart. And whoſoever will not receive you, when ye go out of that city, ſhake off the very duſt from your feet for a teſtimony againſt them. And they departed, and went through the towns, preaching the Goſpel, and healing every-where. Now Herod the tetrarch heard of all that was done by him: and he was perplexed, becauſe that it was ſaid of ſome, that John was riſen from the dead: And of ſome, that Elias had appeared: and of others, that one of the old prophets was riſen again. And Herod ſaid, John have I beheaded: but who is this of whom I hear ſuch things? and he deſired to ſee him. And the Apoſtles, when they were returned, told him all that they had done. And he took them, and went aſide privately into a deſart place, belonging to the city called Bethſaida. And the people, when they knew it, followed him: and he received them, and ſpake unto them of the kingdom of God, and healed them that had need of healing. And when the day began to wear away, then came the twelve, and ſaid unto him, Send the multitude away, that they may go into the towns and country round about, and lodge, and get victuals; for we are here in a deſart place. But he ſaid unto them, Give ye them to eat. And they ſaid, We have no more but five loaves and two fiſhes; except we ſhould go and buy meat for all this people. For they were about five thouſand men. And he ſaid to his diſciples, Make them ſit down by fifties in a company. And they did ſo, and made them all ſit down. Then he took the five loaves, and the two fiſhes, and looking up to heaven, he bleſſed them, and brake, and gave to the diſciples to ſet before the multitude. And they did eat, and were all filled: and there was taken up of fragments that remained to them twelve baskets. And it came to paſs as he was alone praying, his diſciples were with him: and he asked them, ſaying, Whom ſay the people that I am? They anſwering, ſaid, John the Baptiſt: but ſome ſay, Elias: and others ſay, that one of the old prophets is riſen again. He ſaid unto them, But whom ſay ye that I am? Peter anſwering, ſaid, The Chriſt of God. And he ſtraitly charged them, and commanded them to tell no man that thing, Saying, The Son of man muſt ſuffer many things, and be rejected of the elders and chief prieſts, and ſcribes, and be ſlain, and be raiſed the third day. And he ſaid to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily, and follow me. For whoſoever will ſave his life ſhall loſe it: but whoſoever will loſe his life for my ſake, the ſame ſhall ſave it. For what is a man advantaged, if he gain the whole world, and loſe himſelf, or be caſt away? For whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me and of my words, of him ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed, when he ſhall come in his own glory, and in his Father's, and of the holy angels. But I tell you of a truth, there be ſome ſtanding here, which ſhall not taſte of death, till they ſee the kingdom of God.

If any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily, and follow me.] Daily; i. e. as often as an occaſion offers itſelf. Here I ſhall recollect all that is ſaid in ſeveral places of the Goſpel concerning this ſelf-denial, and taking up the croſs; and thence give rules compriſing this whole duty. And,

Firſt, We muſt deny father and mother; for, "If a man come to me (ſaith Chriſt) and hate not, Luke xiv. 26. (i. e. forſake not father and mother, Matt. xix. 29.) he cannot be my diſciple. For he that loveth father and mother more than me, is unworthy of me," Matt. x. 37. Our Lord hath told them, ver. 35, 36. That his Goſpel would accidentally cauſe great variance and diviſion, betwixt "the father and the ſon, the mother and the daughter, and render thoſe of their own houſhold the moſt fierce and cruel enemies; he therefore lets them know, that if, when this ſhall come to paſs, father or mother did prevail upon them, either by that affection which men naturally bear to their parents, or by that reverence they give to their authority and commands, when theſe commands do thwart his precepts; or elſe by thoſe advantages, or outward comforts, which they expect to receive from their parents, and, by adhering to the doctrine of their Lord, might loſe or hazard, i. e. if they by any of theſe motives were induced to prefer the commands or will of their parents before Chriſt, and value their countenance and affection before his favour, they could not be ſincerely his diſciples. Now this, by parity of reaſon, holds concerning civil magiſtrates, who are the fathers of their country, and ſpiritual ſuperiors, who are fathers of the church; and of all others who have like power to command, reward, or puniſh us; and ſo this inſtance affords this rule of ſelf-denial.

Rule I. That they to whom we bear the greateſt natural affection, and the higheſt reverence, to whoſe commands we owe the moſt entire obedience in lawful matters, from whom we have received already, and may expect the greateſt temporal advantages, provided we comply with their deſires, or the worſt temporal evils upon refuſal, muſt be denied, forſaken, and comparatively hated for the ſake of Chriſt; ſo that altho' the yearning bowels of a tender mother, which at firſt conceived me, and the grey hairs of an indulgent father, ſhould be pleaded as motives to induce me to break the leaſt commandment of the holy Jeſus; tho' the authority of civil, natural, and eccleſiaſtical ſuperiors, ſhould combine to tempt me to do what Chriſt forbids; tho' this authority ſhould allure me with proffers of the higheſt honours or rewards, or ſhould endeavour to affright me with the ſevereſt menaces; yet if all theſe conſiderations ſhould prevail with me, to gratify myſelf and them, by doing that which my own conſcience, and God's Word, aſſures me will be diſpleaſing to my Saviour, or oppoſite to his commands, 'tis evident that I regard myſelf, or them, more than I do my Saviour, and therefore am unworthy of him, and cannot be ſincerely his diſciple.

Secondly, We muſt deny our wife and children, even that wife of our boſom who is made one fleſh with us, whom we muſt love as dearly as we love ourſelves, Eph. v. 33. and for whoſe ſake father and mother muſt be left, Gen. ii. 24. We alſo muſt deny thoſe children which are the off-ſpring of our bowels, the joy and comfort of our lives; for, If any man come to me (ſaith Chriſt) and hate not his wife and children, Luke xiv. 26. (If he forſake not wife and children for my name's ſake, and the Goſpel's, Mark x. 28.) he cannot be my diſciple." Accordingly, it is recorded for the everlaſting honour of the Levites, that they obſerved God's word, and kept his covenant, "ſaying unto their father and mother, I have not ſeen them, not knowing their own children, not acknowledging their brethren;" that is, being commanded by God's ſervant Moſes, to kill every man his brother, friend, and ſon, that had been guilty of idolatry in worſhipping the golden calf, they executed the command of God, without regard to father, mother, ſon, or brother, Exod. xxxii. 27, 28. Now the children of our loins, and the wife of our boſom, being the objects of our ſtrongeſt love, and greateſt pity, and thoſe in whom we chiefly take delight and pleaſure, this ſecond inſtance will afford this rule, viz.

Rule II. That whatever we moſt paſſionately love, are moſt eſpecially concerned for, do cleave moſt cloſely to in our affections, and above all enjoyments do take the moſt pleaſure in, muſt be loved leſs than Chriſt; and conſequently muſt be denied, forſaken, and comparatively hated for his ſake and the Goſpel's. Now to this rule, by parity of reaſon, may be reduced all our immoderate affections to the pleaſures of this world, whether they be the pleaſures of the appetite, ſuch as the glutton and the drunkard do purſue; the pleaſures of the ſenſes, which the voluptuous and luſtful perſons chiefly proſecute; the pleaſures of vain ſports and paſtimes, gamings, and other recreations: So that if our affection to a boſom friend prevail upon us to deſert that religion we profeſs without conviction, or to act in contradiction to any precept of it, of which our conſcience is convinced; if our love to our own off-ſpring will not permit us to reprove, correct, or to reſtrain them, when they diſhonour God, and render themſelves vile, but with old Eli, we deſpiſe our God, by thus preferring our ſons before him; if our affections are inordinately ſet upon the pleaſures of the world, now mentioned, ſo that we do more paſſionately covet, and delight more in them than the things of God, we do more eagerly purſue, more conſtantly employ our care and time about them than about ſpiritual things, and ſo become "lovers of pleaſures more than lovers of God;" if our affection to them doth prevail upon us to neglect our duty towards God, our neighbour, or ourſelves, or to enjoy them in that degree or manner which is forbidden by the laws of Chriſt, then do we love them more than Chriſt, and therefore cannot be ſincerely his diſciples.

Thirdly, We muſt deny brother and ſiſter, which may be fitly ſtiled denying of ourſelves, ſeeing a brother is a ſecond ſelf, of the ſame fleſh and blood with us, and therefore ſtiled frater, quaſi fere alter; for, "he that cometh unto me (ſaith Chriſt) and hateth not his brother and his ſiſter, Luke xiv. 26. (i. e. who will not leave them for my ſake, Mark x. 28.) cannot be my diſciple." Now a brother naturally, and in the ſcripture import of the word, denotes a perſon with whom we do familiarly converſe, and have an intimate acquaintance; hence, when the ſpouſe deſireth to have more near acquaintance, and more cloſe communion with Chriſt, ſhe thus expreſſeth her deſire, "Oh that he were as my brother, that ſucked the breaſts of my mother," Cant. viii. 1. And the Wiſe-man exhorting others to aſſociate themſelves with wiſdom, and be more intimately acquainted with her ways, doth bid them "ſay to wiſdom, Thou art my ſiſter," Prov. vii. 4. Moreover, this relation intimates the cloſeſt union of affection, and the greateſt friendſhip; when friends in ſcripture are ſo often ſtiled brethren, and Chriſtian love in the ſuperlative degree is often repreſented by the love of brethren. So that our third rule will be this, viz.

Rule III. That Chriſtians muſt deny, forſake, and muſt comparatively hate their neareſt relative, and deareſt friend, who is as their own ſoul, Deut. xiii. 6. and cleave cloſer to them than a brother, Prov. xviii. 24. and him with whom they have enjoyed the ſweeteſt and moſt delightful converſe, and moſt familiar acquaintance, when it is neceſſary, for the ſake of Chriſt, and in obedience to his precepts, ſo to do; and then a fortiori this rule muſt bind us to deny our pot-companions, our luſtful Dalilahs, our brethren in iniquity, our vain and ſinful company, and to have no communion with them in their works of darkneſs, but reprove them. If then the importunity of friend or brother prevail upon thee to tranſgreſs wilfully any commandment of thy God and Saviour, if they draw thee by their examples or perſuaſions to exceſs or riot, to chambering or wantonneſs, or any other ſin, which is in effect to perſuade thee to be damn'd for company; if in diſpenſing puniſhments, rewards, preferments, favours, thou do'ſt tranſgreſs this rule of equity on their accounts; if thy regard to them reſtrain thee from reproving their drunkenneſs and ſwearing, their leud or atheiſtical diſcourſe; nay, if the plain command of God, to hold no friendſhip or familiarity with them, doth not prevail upon thee to abandon and forſake their company, as much as may be, then evident it is, thou loveſt the company of ſuch vile creatures, more than communion with thy Saviour; thou do'ſt more prize their friendſhip than his favour; thou wilt not leave thy friend for him, and therefore art not worthy of him.

Fourthly, We muſt deny ourſelves in houſes, lands, and goods, or in thoſe things by which we, with God's bleſſing on them, do ſubſiſt; and tho' theſe things be not ſo properly ourſelves, as wife and children, yet ſince men are ſo hot in the purſuit of them, that they will hazard their reputation, health, life, ſoul, or their whole ſelves, in proſecution of them; ſince when theſe things are loſt, we are ſo apt to think and ſay we are undone; ſince by the ſcriptures theſe things are called our ſubſtance, and are indeed the things by which our nature does ſubſiſt; our denial of them upon theſe accounts may very fitly be called ſelf-denial, and thus we are obliged to deny ourſelves: for "whoſoever he be of us, that forſaketh not all that he hath, panta ta uparchonta, all his poſſeſſions, or his worldly goods, he cannot be my diſciple," ſaith our Lord, Luke xiv. 33. Hence doth our Saviour lay this command on the young man, to ſell his great poſſeſſions, and give them to the poor, and follow him, in expectation of an heavenly treaſure; and did pronounce, on his refuſal to obey ſo irkſome a command, that he could not enter into the kingdom of God: Here then the rule runs thus, viz.

Rule IV. That Chriſt's diſciples muſt, when his providence doth call them to it, renounce, caſt from them, abandon, even their whole ſubſiſtance, and all their temporal good things, in proſpect of thoſe ſpiritual bleſſings which he hath promiſed to all, who for his, and his Goſpel's ſake, do thus deny themſelves. And then much more muſt we renounce our ſuperfluities, and thoſe accommodations whereby we only gratify our fancies, and our carnal minds, viz. our ſtately palaces, our numerous attendants, our delicious fare, our rich attire, our large and flouriſhing eſtates. If then we cannot freely ſpend theſe temporal enjoyments in the cauſe of Chriſt, or part with ſuperfluities for the relief and comfort of his members, if we cannot caſt away, abandon, or reject theſe things, tho' dear unto us as a right hand, or eye, when they prove ſnares, temptations, and offences to us; if the rich man cannot be contented to be brought low, and to take joyfully the ſpoiling of his goods, in proſpect of thoſe never-failing riches Chriſt hath promiſed; if to enjoy or to preſerve theſe things, we venture to make ſhipwreck of faith or a good conſcience, or out of love unto this preſent world, are moved with Demas to forſake or to neglect our duty to Chriſt, then we love mammon more than Chriſt, and therefore cannot be his true diſciples.

Fifthly, We muſt deny even life itſelf, which is ſtill a more high degree of ſelf-denial: There is ſcarce any thing we do ſo highly value, and dearly love, and ſo much labour to preſerve, and ſo unwillingly let go, as life; for "Skin for (or after) skin, and all that a man hath, will a man give for his life," and yet this alſo muſt be denied for Chriſt's ſake; for "if any man come unto me, and hateth not his own life (ſaith Chriſt) he cannot be my diſciple;" i. e. if he doth not love God better, and prize his favour more than he doth value the continuance of this preſent life; if he cannot prevail upon himſelf to die for Chriſt, that he may live for ever with him, and loſe this miſerable life, to find it happily improved into a life of endleſs bliſs and happineſs; if he cannot follow the example of his Lord, who ſuffered firſt, then enter'd into his glory, he vainly doth pretend to be a follower or a diſciple of the holy Jeſus. This inſtance then of ſelf-denial doth inform us, that even natural life muſt be forſaken, and renounced, when we cannot preſerve it without the loſs of our more valuable intereſt in Chriſt, and thoſe eternal bleſſings he has promiſed to all thoſe that ſuffer for the ſake of righteouſneſs. And if this natural life muſt be denied for Chriſt, much more my perſonal, or civil liberty, my habitation, or my country.

Rule V. If then I cannot live a pilgrim and ſtranger upon earth, in expectation of an heavenly country, or live in baniſhment and exile for the cauſe of Chriſt; if I cannot ſuffer bonds and impriſonment, that I may ſtill continue the Lord's freeman; if I cannot be induced to loſe my life that I may find it, but will endeavour to preſerve my life, or liberty, by the violation of any laws of Chriſt, 'tis evident I love this preſent life more than I love my Saviour, more than that crown of life which he hath only promiſed to thoſe who ſhall continue faithful to the death, and therefore am unworthy of him, and falſly do pretend to be a true diſciple of the holy Jeſus.

Sixthly, We muſt deny our honour, and our reputation, our eaſe, and our deliverance from thoſe afflictions which render life a burden, which is the laſt and higheſt pitch of ſelf-denial; even when our afflictions, and our perſecution, do render death itſelf a mercy and deliverance; when, with good Job, "our ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling and death, rather than life, and longeth for it, more than for hid treaſure," Job iii. 21. when for his ſake we are reproached all the day long, and are expoſed as ſpectacles of ſhame and infamy to the beholder; all this we muſt with patience ſuffer for the name of Jeſus; for even after that our Lord had ſaid, "If any man come to me, and hate not his own life, he cannot be my diſciple," he adds, Luke xiv. 27. "And whoſoever doth not bear his croſs, cannot be my diſciple:" Wherefore this bearing of the croſs, imports ſome farther act of ſelf-denial; which, that we may the better underſtand, conſider, 1. That the croſs among the Romans was accounted the moſt ignominious and ſhameful death, inflicted only upon ſlaves; for, as Lactantius ſaith, Homine libero quamvis nocente indignum videbatur; "Now to a generous ſpirit, it is not ſo much to die, as it is to ſuffer in an ignominious manner, and as the worſt of malefactors, being innocent." Whence, as the Heathen Seneca well notes, no perſon can ſo much expreſs his love to virtue, or more entirely be devoted to her, than he, qui boni viri famam perdit, ne conſcientiam perderet, "that loſes his reputation to preſerve his conſcience." 2. Conſider that this was a moſt bitter, painful, and afflictive death; whence, as Auſtin notes, Acerbiſſimi dolores, cruciatus, a cruce vocabantur. From this expreſſion, therefore, thus explained, I collect this rule, viz.

Rule VI. That the diſciples of the holy Jeſus muſt endure the moſt fiery trials, the moſt ſharp afflictions, and chuſe to die in the moſt ſhameful, ignominious manner, for the cauſe of Chriſt; i. e. when he cannot eſcape thoſe things without denial, or acting contrary to the commandments of his Saviour; and then much more, when equal circumſtances do concur, muſt he deny himſelf his eaſe and worldly quiet, his places of grandeur, his honour, and his reputation, and thoſe punctilio's of honour, which the Hectors of our age ſo much inſiſt on; and muſt with patience bear, and readineſs forgive all the affronts he ſuffers from the hands of men, which he can never leſs deſerve than by adhering firmly to his Lord. If then we cannot quit our eaſe and wordly quietneſs for Chriſt, but rather will neglect known duty, than give our ſelves the trouble which Chriſt's ſervice calls for, rather comply with what is uppermoſt, than put our ſelves to any trouble or diſquiet, to preſerve an upright conſcience; if the example and authority of Chriſt be not ſufficient to curb our angry paſſions, quell our malicious and revengeful tempers; if the punctilio's of honour tempt us to duel, and to ſpill our brother's blood; if we cannot lay down our honour and our reputation at the feet of Chriſt, not ſeeking honours from frail creatures, but that which comes from God alone, and being willing to be diſhonoured for his ſake; if fiery trials do cool our love to Chriſt, or the moſt ſharp afflictions do cauſe us to forget our duty to him; if we do not rather chuſe to endure affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleaſures of ſin for a ſeaſon, we either love or fear thoſe things more than we love the favour, or fear the frowns of our bleſſed Lord, and therefore cannot be his true diſciples. (W.)

Ver. 28, 29, 30, 31. And it came to paſs about an eight days after theſe ſayings, he took Peter, and John, and James, and went up into a mountain to pray. And as he prayed, the faſhion of his countenance was altered, and his raiment was white and gliſtering. And behold, there talked with him two men, which were Moſes and Elias. Who appeared in glory, and ſpake of his deceaſe, which he ſhould accompliſh at Jeruſalem.

Deceaſe.] That Chriſt's exodos here ſignifies his death, and going out of this world, will be acknowledged, 1. By the uſe of a parallel phraſe to this ſenſe, John xiii. 1. where his death is called a paſſing out of this world, typified there by the paſch in the beginning of the verſe, and that we know was inſtituted as a commemoration of the Exodus, or going out of Egypt. 2. By St. Peter's uſing it of himſelf, 2 Pet. i 15. to ſignify his departure, before expreſs'd by the laying down his tabernac le, ver. 13. But that it is here alſo, in a more ſolemn ſenſe, of ſomewhat a greater latitude, may appear by this, that the Exodos of Chriſt is here ſaid to be the ſubject of the diſcourſe betwixt Elias and Moſes, and Chriſt, upon mount Tabor. And ſo again, 1 Pet. v. 1. when he ſaith, he was "a witneſs of Chriſt's ſufferings, and a partaker of that glory which ſhould be revealed;" that latter ſeems to refer to his preſence at the transfiguration, where this glory, that was to follow Chriſt's ſufferings, was repreſented to him, and two other diſciples. To which purpoſe 'tis alſo obſervable in what ſenſe we find the word Exodos uſed Heb. xi. 22. and in the title of the ſecond book of Moſes, to denote the departure of the Iſraelites out of Egypt to Canaan. And accordingly, in St. Jude's Epiſtle (which is but the epitome of, and parallel to that ſecond of St. Peter) where St. Peter ſaith, 2 Pet. i. 15, 16. "I will endeavour to put you in mind of theſe things;" that is, of this power and coming of our Lord, which he had made known to them, he hath theſe words, ver. 5. "I would put you in mind, that the Lord having delivered the people of Iſrael out of the land of Egypt, deſtroyed thoſe that did not believe." Which referring to that Exodos, Moſes's bringing the Iſraelites out of Egypt, ſuppoſes that to be an image or reſemblance of that coming of Chriſt, that is, of what Chriſt ſhould now do within a while, viz. that being gone out of the world, and by that means of his death having brought his people out of their captivity, he ſhould not only overwhelm his enemies the Jews, like Pharaoh and the Egyptians, but withal deſtroy the wicked, impure, Gnoſtick Chriſtians, like the diſobedient Iſraelites in the wilderneſs. And that this (as it may properly be contain'd under the word Exodos, ſo) was the thing that St. Luke meant here by it, may probably appear, 1. By the agreeableneſs of it, and by the Evangeliſt's referring it (It came to paſs, ſaith he, after theſe words about eight days, that Jeſus took Peter and John, &c. ver. 8.) to the diſcourſe immediately precedent (for the expreſſing of which, as by an emblem, the transfiguration ſeems to have been deſigned) which is all to that purpoſe of preſerving the believers that take up Chriſt's croſs, and deſtroying all ſuch who (as the Gnoſticks afterward, and thoſe that were corrupted by them) ſhould be moſt careful to preſerve their lives. 2. By the mention of Jeruſalem, where all this was to be fulfilled, firſt Chriſt to die there, then all theſe glorious works of God to be ſhewn upon that people, in deſtroying the unbelievers, and the diſobedient provokers, Heb. iii. 12, 16, 18. among them, and preſerving the ſincere, pure, perſevering, faithful Chriſtians, in the midſt of that deſtruction. Theſe arguments do not pretend to demonſtrate, but have been added, ex abundanti, to that one ground laid Matt. xvii. only as probabilities concurring with that which is there evidenced. To this may be added an obſervation of St. Chryſoſtom; "Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt calls his coming in the fleſh by this title of Exsdcs, or Going out," citing Matt. xiii. 3. of the ſower going out; and John xvi. 28. of his having come out from the Father; and the ſame again, Chriſt fitly calls his coming Exodos: Which obſervation, if it have any force in it, then may this other middle coming of Chriſt to the deſtruction of the Jews, ſo often ſtiled parouſia, the coming of the Lord, and of Chriſt, be as fitly here expreſs'd by Exodos, not the going away, or departure from this earth, but his coming in power and vengeance from heaven, a conſequent of his aſcenſion thither. On this place of St. Chryſoſtom, the learned Andrew Downes obſerves that the Hebrews expreſs oikonomia and dioikeeſis, any adminiſtration, or diſcharge of any office, by going in and going out. Which, if it be appliable to the latter of them, taken alone (as it is both here, and in that place of St. Chryſoſtom) then 'tis a farther account of the propriety of this ſenſe which I have affix'd to it; this coming of Chriſt to the deſtruction of his crucifiers, being an eminent act of adminiſtration of his regal office (and thence oft called the kingdom of God) in the executing judgment on ſuch traiterous oppoſers of his kingdom. (H.)

Ver. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50. But Peter, and they that were with him, were heavy with ſleep: and when they were awake, they ſaw his glory, and the two men that ſtood with him. And it came to paſs as they departed from him, Peter ſaid unto Jeſus, Maſter, it is good for us to be here; and let us make three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moſes, and one for Elias: not knowing what he ſaid. While he thus ſpake, there came a cloud and overſhadowed them: and they feared as they entered into the cloud. And there came a voice out of the cloud, ſaying, This is my beloved Son, hear him. And when the voice was paſt, Jeſus was found alone: and they kept it cloſe, and told no man in thoſe days any of thoſe things which they had ſeen. And it came to paſs, that on the next day, when they were come down from the hill, much people met him. And, behold, a man of the company cried out, ſaying, Maſter, I beſeech thee look upon my ſon, for he is mine only child. And lo, a ſpirit taketh him, and he ſuddenly crieth out, and it teareth him, that he foameth again, and bruſing him, hardly departeth from him. And I beſought thy diſciples to caſt him out, and they could not. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid, O faithleſs and perverſe generation, how long ſhall I be with you, and ſuffer you? Bring thy Son hither. And as he was yet a coming, the devil threw him down, and tare him: and Jeſus rebuked the unclean ſpirit, and healed the child, and delivered him again to his father. And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God: But while they wondered every one at all things which Jeſus did, he ſaid unto his diſciples, Let theſe ſayings ſink down into your ears: for the Son of man ſhall be delivered into the hands of men. But they underſtood not this ſaying, and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not: and they feared to aſk him of that ſaying. Then there aroſe a reaſoning among them, which of them ſhould be greateſt. And Jeſus perceiving the thought of their heart, took a child, and ſet him by him, And ſaid unto them, Whoſoever ſhall receive this child in my name, receiveth me: and whoſoever ſhall receive me, receiveth him that ſent me: for he that is leaſt among you all, the ſame ſhall be great. And John anſwered and ſaid, Maſter, we ſaw one caſting out devils in thy name; and we forbad him, becauſe he followed not with us. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Forbid him not: for he that is not againſt us, is for us.

They ſaw his glory.] Here we have recorded the hiſtory of our holy Saviour's transfiguration, when he laid, as it were, the garments of our frail humanity aſide for a little ſeaſon, and put on the robes of his divine glory, to demonſtrate and teſtify the truth of his divinity; for this divine glory was an evidence of his divine nature, and alſo an emblem of that glory which he and his diſciples, and all his faithful ſervants and followers, ſhall enjoy together in heaven. Obſerve, firſt, The deſign of our Saviour in this his transfiguration, namely, to confirm his diſciples faith in the truth of his divine nature; he was therefore pleaſed to ſuffer the rays of his divinity to dart forth before their eyes, ſo far as they were able to bear it; his face ſhined with a pleaſing brightneſs, and his raiment with ſuch a glorious luſtre, as did at once both delight and dazzle the eyes of his diſciples. Obſerve, ſecondly, The choice which our Saviour makes of the witneſſes of his transfiguration, his three diſciples, Peter, James, and John: But why diſciples? why three diſciples? and why theſe three? 1. Why diſciples? Becauſe this transfiguration was a type of heaven: Chriſt vouchſafes therefore the earneſt and firſt-fruits of that glory only to ſaints upon earth, on whom he intended to beſtow the full crop in due time. 2. Why three diſciples? Becauſe three were ſufficient to witneſs the truth of this miracle: Judas was unworthy of this favour, yet leſt he ſhould murmur or be diſcontented, others are left out as well as he. 3. But why theſe three rather than others? Probably, 1. Becauſe theſe three were more eminent for great zeal and love towards Chriſt: now the moſt eminent manifeſtations of glory are made to thoſe that are moſt excelling in grace. 2. Becauſe theſe three diſciples were to be witneſſes of Chriſt's agony and paſſion; to prepare them for which, they are here made witneſſes of his transfiguration. This glorious viſion upon mount Tabor, fitted them to abide the terror of mount Calvary. Obſerve, thirdly the glorious attendance upon our Saviour at his transfiguration; they were two, thoſe two men, Moſes and Elias. This being but a glimpſe of heaven's glory, and not a full manifeſtation of it, only two of the glorified ſaints attended it, and theſe two attendants are not two Angels but two men; becauſe men were more nearly concerned than Angels in what was done: But why Moſes and Elias, rather than any other men? 1 Becauſe Moſes was the giver of the law, and Elias the chief of the prophets. Now both theſe attending upon Chriſt, did ſhew the conſent of the law and the prophets with Chriſt, and their accompliſhments and fulfilling in him. 2. Becauſe theſe two men were the moſt laborious ſervants of Chriſt; both adventured their lives in God's cauſe, and therefore were highly honoured by him; for thoſe that honour him, he will honour. Obſerve, fourthly, The carriage and behaviour of the diſciples upon this great occaſion. 1. They ſupplicate Jeſus; they do not pray to Moſes or Elias, but to Chriſt, Maſter, it is good being here: O what a raviſhing comfort and ſatisfaction is the communion and fellowſhip of the ſaints; but the preſence of Chriſt amongſt them, renders their joys tranſporting. 2. They proffer their ſervice to further the continuance of what they did enjoy; Let us make three tabernacles: Saints will ſtick at no coſt or pains for the enjoyment of Chriſt's preſence, and his people's company. Learn hence, That a glimpſe of heaven's glory is ſufficient to raiſe a ſoul into extaſy, and to make it out of love with worldly company. 2. That we are apt to deſire more of heaven upon earth than God will allow us; we would have the heavenly glory come down to us, but are not willing by death to go up to that. Obſerve, fifthly, How a cloud was put before the diſciples eyes, when the divine glory was manifeſted to them, partly to allay the luſtre and reſplendency of that glory, which they were ſwallowed up with; the glory of heaven is inſupportable in this imperfect ſtate, we cannot bear it unveiled; and partly did this cloud come to hinder their looking and prying farther into this glory: We muſt be content to behold God through a cloud darkly here, e'er long we ſhall ſee him face to face. Obſerve, ſixthly, the teſtimony given out of the cloud by God the Father, concerning Jeſus Chriſt his Son; This is my beloved Son, hear him. Where note, 1. The dignity of this perſon, he is my Son, for nature co-eſſential, and for duration co-eternal with me his Father. 2. The endearedneſs of his relation, He is my beloved Son, becauſe of his conformity to me, and compliance with me; likewiſe is the cauſe of love, and an union of harmony of wills, cauſes a mutual endearing of affections. 3. The authority of his doctrine, Hear ye him; not Moſes and Elias, who were ſervants, but Chriſt my Son, whom I have authorized and appointed to be the great prophet and teacher of my church; therefore adore him as my Son, believe in him as your Saviour, and hear him as your law-giver. The obedient ear honours Chriſt more than either the gazing eye, the adoring knee, or the applauding tongue.

Ver. 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62. And it came to paſs, when the time was come that he ſhould be received up, he ſtedfaſtly ſet his face to go to Jeruſalem, And ſent meſſengers before his face: and they went, and entered into a village of the Samaritans, to make ready for him. And they did not receive him, becauſe his face was as though it would go to Jeruſalem. And when his diſciples James and John ſaw this, they ſaid, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and conſume them, even as Elias did? But he turned, and rebuked them, and ſaid, Ye know not what manner of ſpirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to deſtroy mens lives, but to ſave them. And they went to another village. And it came to paſs that as they went in the way, a certain man ſaid unto him, Lord, I will follow thee whitherſoever thou goeſt. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, Foxes have holes, and birds of the air have neſts, but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head. And he ſaid unto another, Follow me: But he ſaid, Lord, ſuffer me firſt to go and bury my father. Jeſus ſaid unto him, Let the dead bury their dead; but go thou and preach the kingdom of God. And another alſo ſaid, Lord, I will follow thee: but let me firſt go bid them farewel which are at home at my houſe. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, No man having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God.

But he turned, and rebuked them, and ſaid, Ye know not what manner of ſpirit ye are of.] Here interpreters truly note, that pneuma, ſpirit, is put for the affection or diſpoſition of the mind; as when the ſcripture ſpeaks of the ſpirit of bondage, and adoption, Rom. viii. 15. and of the ſpirit of fear, power, love, and of a ſound mind, 2 Tim. i. 7. But that which is here chiefly to be obſerved, is, the contradiction of this ſaying to the popiſh practice of perſecuting, deſtroying, and exterminating thoſe whom they call hereticks, purely on the account of their religion. For obſerve, Firſt, That whereas they who are thus perſecuted by the church of Rome, are falſly ſuppoſed to be ſchiſmaticks, and hereticks; the Samaritans, undoubtedly, were both. For, 1. In oppoſition to the temple of Jeruſalem, which God himſelf appointed for the place where he would be worſhipped, commanding all men to repair to it, they erected a temple upon mount Gerizim, and there they worſhipped, deſerting the temple of Jeruſalem; this was their ſchiſm. 2. They alſo were hereticks and idolaters, for they erred in matters which concerned ſalvation; and this our Saviour teſtified in theſe words, Ye worſhip ye know not what, we know what we worſhip; for ſalvation is of the Jews, John iv. 22.

Secondly, Obſerve, that whereas Romaniſts do exerciſe this cruelty on them whom they call ſchiſmaticks and hereticks, chiefly for their refuſing to receive and own him as Chriſt's vicar, who manifeſtly doth uſurp that title; theſe Samaritans refuſed to receive our Saviour himſelf in his own perſon, and that becauſe he ſeemed to be going to Jeruſalem to worſhip; ſo that the honour of God, and of religion, and of Jeruſalem, the place of his peculiar worſhip, were all concerned in this caſe.

Thirdly, Obſerve, that the permiſſion of what was here deſired by St. John and Peter, would have been more effectual for the conviction of the heretical, ſchiſmatical Samaritans, than any of the puniſhments inflicted by the inquiſition, or any arts of papal tyranny, can be for the conviction of thoſe whom they call hereticks and ſchiſmaticks; for theſe diſciples did not deſire that they themſelves might execute on the Samaritans this ſentence, by committing them to the flames, or by imploring the magiſtrate's aſſiſtance to conſume or burn them; they only did requeſt, that they might call upon the God of heaven to rain down fire upon them, and conſume them; which had it pleaſed him to do on this occaſion, the reſt of the Samaritans, by what this village ſuffered, muſt have been evidently convinced, by demonſtration from heaven, of God's diſpleaſure againſt their way of worſhip, and of the truth of that Meſſiah, and his doctrine, who procured this vengeance to be executed upon them: whereas the perſecutions of the church, becauſe they miniſter no conviction to the conſcience, ſerve only to harden mens hearts, and imbitter their ſpirits againſt thoſe who uſe them, and to induce them more firmly to believe, that ſuch a barbarous religion cannot be of God.

From theſe three obſervations, it is evident, that whatſoever may be pleaded by the church of Rome to juſtify her practice in burning, maſſacreing, extirpating of hereticks and ſchiſmaticks, might with advantage have been pleaded here. "Doth ſhe practice her ſeverities out of a zeal for truth, and for the honour of God and Chriſt, and of the true religion, and for the reclaiming hereticks and ſchiſmaticks, and the preventing or terrifying others from adhering to them, or being deluded by them?" Dr. Tillotſon's Sermon, Nov. 5. 1678, p. 15. Upon all theſe accounts, you ſee that the diſciples had far greater cauſe to call for fire from heaven upon this village of Samaria: And yet our Saviour, under theſe circumſtances, thinks fit to rebuke even the deſires of doing this to one ſmall village; how then will he rebuke the actual performance of it to many hundred thouſand ſouls, after his ſolemn declaration of the repugnancy of theſe proceedings to the deſign of his moſt bleſſed advent, and to the ſpirit of the Goſpel? For the true reaſons why Chriſt rebuked his diſciples, for their deſire of dealing thus ſeverely with theſe ſchiſmatical and heretical Samaritans, were theſe.

Firſt, Becauſe this ſpirit of ſeverity towards erroneous perſons, in whomſoever it is found, is highly oppoſite to the calm temper of Chriſtianity, as is inſinuated in that reply of Chriſt to his diſciples, Ye know not what ſpirit ye are of; that is, ye do not well conſider under what way of diſpenſation ye are placed by me. The way I come to teach men, the temper, diſpoſition and affection I would fix within them, is not a furious, perſecuting, and deſtructive ſpirit, but mild and gentle, and tender of the lives and intereſts of men, even of thoſe who are our greateſt enemies: Tillotſon, ibid. p. 7. Under the Old Teſtament indeed (ſee Hammond in locum) they who rejected, and ſcoffed at a prophet, ſuffered ſeverely for it; the prophet had commiſſion to call for fire from heaven to deſtroy them preſently, and curſe them in the name of the Lord, 2 Kings ii. 24. But they who reject, and crucify Chriſt, are by him prayed for, and are, by his command, to be ſtill preached to, and, if poſſible, brought to repentance; and according to this example are all Chriſtians to conform themſelves, acting towards contemners of their perſons, or rejecters of their doctrine, not according to the legal, but the evangelical diſpenſation; not according to the ſeverity of Elias, but the meekneſs and gentleneſs of Chriſt: And therefore your deſire of proceeding, according to the extraordinary ſpirit of Elias, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, is intolerable; for that deſigns univerſal love, peace, and good-will even to enemies; it doth engage us to ſhew all meekneſs to all men, and ſo no difference of religion, no pretence of zeal for God, can juſtify this fierce, vindictive, and exterminating ſpirit.

Secondly, Our Saviour's ſecond reaſon againſt this proceeding is, that it was repugnant to the end for which he came into the world, which was, not to deſtroy men's lives, but to ſave them. "He came to diſcountenance all fierceneſs and rage, and cruelty in men one towards another; to reſtrain and ſubdue that furious and unpeaceable ſpirit, which is ſo troubleſome to the world, and the cauſe of ſo many miſchiefs and diſorders in it; to beget a peaceable diſpoſition in men of the moſt diſtant tempers." Tillotſon, ibid. p. 8. Making "the lamb and the wolf lie down together," Iſaiah xi. 6, 9. and "no more to deſtroy and hurt each other, but turn their ſwords into plow-ſhares, and their ſpears into pruning-hooks," Mich. iv. 3. engaging them to lay aſide "all bitterneſs and wrath, anger and clamour, and evil ſpeaking, with all malice." He came to introduce that excellent ſpirit, which conſults not only the external ſalvation of men's ſouls, but their temporal peace and ſecurity, their comfort and happineſs in this world, whoſe fruits are "righteouſneſs and peace," Rom. xiv. 17. "Love, peace, long-ſuffering, gentleneſs, goodneſs, and meekneſs," Gal. v. 22, 23. whoſe wiſdom is "pure and peaceable, gentle, and eaſy to be entreated, full of mercy and good works," James iii. 17. and which commands the wiſe and knowing man, "to ſhew forth, out of a good converſation, his works with meekneſs of wiſdom," ver. 13. condemning all his bitter zeal, as "earthy, ſenſual, and deviliſh," ver. 14, 15. which ſuffers not the ſervants of Chriſt to be engaged in fooliſh queſtions, which beget ſtrife; becauſe that the diſciple of this mild and gentle Saviour muſt not fight, but muſt "be gentle towards all men, patient, in meekneſs inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves againſt the truth, tho' their doctrine ſpread as a gangrene, and overthrow the faith of ſome," 2 Tim. ii. 24, 25. xvii. 18. not diſpatching them out of the way, as in the manner of the Romaniſt, but "with long-ſuffering expecting, if God peradventure will give them repentance, to the acknowledgment of the truth;" which teacheth us to "bear the infirmities of perſons weak in faith," Rom. xv. 1. "To reſtore them in the ſpirit of meekneſs," Gal. vi. 1. "To become as weak to the weak, that we may gain the weak," 1 Cor. ix. 22. To bear with the weak, and "be long-ſuffering to all men," 1 Theſſ. v. 14. "To ſpeak evil of no man; to be no fighters, but meek, ſhewing all gentleneſs towards all men;" and that upon this ſole account, that "we our ſelves were ſometimes fooliſh, and deceived," Tit. iii. 2, 3.

Now both theſe reaſons are ſuch as equally concern all perſons, magiſtrates as well as miniſters, them who thus perſecute out of miſguided zeal towards God, as well as thoſe who do it out of envy, hatred, and ſuch carnal principles: And they ſeem plainly to infer, that no man ſhould be perſecuted, as in the church of Rome men are, purely for his miſtake concerning, or his denial of any article of faith revealed by the Goſpel, but only for ſeditious and treaſonable doctrines, or for ſuch crimes as, had the Goſpel never been revealed, might juſtly have been puniſhed by the civil magiſtrate. (W.)

Spirit] The word pneuma, ſpirit, is very diverſly taken in the New Teſtament: 1. Sometimes (with the addition of Theou or Chriſtou, God or Chriſt, or agiou, holy, and ſometimes without it) for the eternal Spirit of God, the Holy Ghoſt, the third perſon in the ſacred Trinity, Matt. xxviii. 19. into which we are baptized. And from thence, ſecondly, for the graces and gifts of the Spirit, whether thoſe that are of uſe to all ſorts of men, as the ſpirit of ſupplication, Zach. xii. 10. that is, zealous ardent prayer; and accordingly we read of praying, en pneumati, Epheſ. ix. 18. in, or with, the Spirit; and Jude 20. with the addition of agioo, in, or with, the Holy Spirit, praying, as thoſe do that are by the Spirit of God enabled, or raiſed to perform this duty with ſome ardency. So Eph. v. 19. being filled with the Spirit (in oppoſition to being drunk with wine) is expreſſed by ſpeaking in pſalms, and hymns, and ſpiritual ſongs, in, or with, the heart, zealouſly and cordially. Or whether thoſe which belong not to all, but only to thoſe which are thus to be qualified for any office, whether regal, or prophetick, or evangelical. So the ſpirit of prophecy, Acts ii. 18. and the double portion of Elias's ſpirit, that is, the right (as of primogeniture) ſucceeding him in his prophetick office. So 1 Cor. xiv. 12. zeelootai pneumatoon, zealous of ſpirits, that is, of thoſe gifts of tongues, &c. that were given the Apoſtles for the planting of the Goſpel. So ver. 2. "He ſpeaks with tongues, ſpeaks in an hidden, unintelligible manner by that gift of tongues (ſee ver. 19. and 23.) for no man hears," that is, underſtands him; and in the ſame ſenſe, ver. 14 my Spirit, that is, my gift of tongues, prayeth; I make uſe of that gift, which no body but my ſelf underſtands, &c. 3. 'Tis taken for an Angel, whether good or bad; good, Rev. i. 4. bad, Mark i. 23. v. 2. and unclean, that is, diabolical, or evil ſpirit, as appeareth ver. 9. From the ambiguity of which it is, that pneumatikoi, 1 Cor. xii. 1. is taken in the latitude both for thoſe that are acted with an evil, and which are inſpired with a good Spirit, the Spirit of God, which is looked on as a fountain of all ſupernatural revelations, 1 Cor. ii. 12. and oppoſed there to the ſpirit of the world, that which the world knows, or can reveal to us. To this, I ſuppoſe, muſt be reduced another notion not far diſtant, wherein the word ſpirits ſignifies teachers, pretenders to inſpiration from God, whether truly or falſly; ſo 1 John iv. 1.

" Believe not every ſpirit, but try the ſpirits, whether they be of God," give not heed to every teacher, but examine all ſuch pretenders, whether they be truely of God, or no; " for (as it follows) many falſe prophets have gone out into the world," where thoſe falſe prophets are one ſect of thoſe ſpirits which muſt be tried. So ver. 2. " By this ye know the Spirit of God," that is, a truely inſpired teacher ſent by God, " Every ſpirit which confeſſes Jeſus Chriſt, which is come in the fleſh, is from God," And ver. 3. " Every ſpirit which confeſſeth not," &c. (the Spirit again is the teacher, for to him only it belongeth to confeſs or not confeſs.) " And this is that of antichriſt (the antichriſtian teachers) which cometh and now is in the world," which cannot be affirmed again but of a perſon. Which is yet more manifeſt, ver. 5. " They are from the world (autoi in the maſculine) therefore they ſpeak from the world, and the world heareth them, you are from God, he that knoweth God heareth you." Where the ſpirits before are now deſcribed as teachers, worldly or divine, and again expreſſed in the end of ver. 6. by " the ſpirit of truth, and the ſpirit of error," either orthodox or erroneous, ſeducing teachers, the latter of which are diſtinctly called planci, deceivers or impoſtors, 2 John vii. and thoſe with the ſame character affixed to them that belonged to the ſpirits which were not of God, 1 John iv. 3. From whence it will be moſt reaſonable to interpret the pneumata plana, ſeducing ſpirits, 1 Tim. iv. 1. of perſons alſo, tho' the " doctrines of devils," that are joined with them, would incline to interpret them of doctrines taught by ſuch. Fourthly, 'Tis taken ſometimes for an apparition, the ſhape or ſeeming of a body, without any real corporiety in it. So Luke xxiv. 37, 39. edokeun pneuma theorein, they thought they ſaw a ſpirit, for which Matt. xiv. 26. and Mark vi. 49. phantaſma, a phantaſme, is uſed. Fifthly, It is taken for the ſpirit of man, the ſupreme diviner faculty, oppoſed to the body of fleſh, Gal v. 17. 1 Theſſ. v. 23. and ſet higher than pſuckee, the ſoul, common to man with other ſenſitive creatures. So 1 Cor. ii. 11. " The ſpirit of a man that is in him," to which it belongeth to ſearch to the ſecrets and bottom of him. So 1 Pet. iii. 19. pneumata en phulakee are the ſpirits and ſouls of men. So John vi. 63. " the ſpirit that enliveneth" is the ſoul that animates the body (as James ii. 26.) And from thence, in the end of that verſe (where he ſaith that " the words which he ſpake unto him were ſpirit and life) the meaning muſt be, that Chriſt ſpake not of a carnal, groſs, but of an immaterial, ſpiritual eating, that is, receiving and laying up his doctrine in their hearts and ſouls, and amending their lives by it, (which is alſo the true, durable, profitable eating, far beyond the corporeal, external, as Chriſt and his doctrine are the true manna, ver. 55.) So John iv. 23. " the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in ſpirit," that is, the ſervice and worſhip of God, now under the Goſpel, ſhall not conſiſt in the external legal performances, but extend to the heart and ſoul, thoſe duties of real purity and piety, which were typified by thoſe legal ſhadows: So when the Spirit ſignifies the Goſpel, as that it is oppoſed to the law under the title of the fleſh, Gal. iii. 3. and in many other places, this is taken by analogy from that acceptation of the ſpirit for the ſoul, as that is the principle of life, and that an inward principle. Theſe are the more obvious acceptions of the word, which belong to moſt of the places where the word is uſed, and in moſt of them the context will readily determine to which. In ſome few other places it is uſed in a different ſenſe, and notes, ſixthly, A way of diſpenſation or œconomy, a diſpoſition or courſe of things, as when the law is called " the ſpirit of bondage," Rom. viii. 15. that is, the way of dealing with men as with ſervants (as it was with the Jews) and on the other ſide " the ſpirit of adoption," the more ingenuous way of dealing, as with ſons, now under the Goſpel. And ſo here, when they would, as Elias had done, have called for fire on the Samaritans, Chriſt tells them " they know not of what ſpirit they are," that is, they conſidered not under what diſpenſation they were, " Chriſt came to ſave," &c. The courſe or way of proceedings which the Goſpel brought in, or was meant to teach men, was very diſtant from that which had been obſervable in Elias under the Old Teſtament, and conſequently they muſt not do as Elias had done. Chriſt came to infuſe, and teach by his example and ſermons, an higher charity (even to enemies and rejecters of Chriſt himſelf) than was thought neceſſary before. They that rejected and ſcoffed at a prophet then, the prophet had commiſſion to deſtroy them, and accordingly without farther admonitions calls for fire from heaven to devour them preſently: But they that refuſe and crucify Chriſt, are by him pray'd for, and are by his command yet farther to be preach'd to, and, if poſſible, brought to repentance; and according to his example, ſo are all Chriſtians to conform themſelves; and if they do, then are they ſaid to be of Chriſt's, and not of Elias's kind of ſpirit, of the Evangelical diſpenſation or œconomy. So 1 Pet. iv. 14. " If ye be reproached for the name of Chriſt, &c. the Spirit of God, (that is, the ſame way of œconomy which was uſed toward Chriſt incarnate) reſteth on you," is uſed among you. Seventhly, It ſignifies affection, temper, diſpoſition of any (which is a ſenſe lightly varied from the former.) So Luke i. 17. " The ſpirit of Elias" is that temper, affection, zeal, that was obſervable in Elias. So 1 John iii. 24. " By this we know that God abideth in us, by the ſpirit that he hath given us," that is, by our having the ſame temper, the ſame affection, which is ſo obſervable in God, that is, that of charity to our brethren, ver. 23. That this is the meaning appears by comparing it with chap. iv. 12, 13. " If we love one another God abideth in us, &c. by this we know that we abide in him, and he in us, becauſe he hath given us of his ſpirit." So Rom. viii. 9. " Ye are not in the fleſh, but in the ſpirit," that is, (in the former notion of the ſpirit for that inward purity and obedience required under the Goſpel) ye muſt live pure ſpiritual lives (without which there is no pleaſing God, ver. 8.) " if ſo be the ſpirit of God dwelleth in you," that is, if the ſacred Evangelical temper, of which we have the precepts and pattern in Chriſt, continue among you, " but if any man have not the ſpirit of Chriſt," that is, if that temper ſo obſervable in Chriſt be not at all diſcernible in you, " ye are none of his," ye cannot pretend to be Chriſtians, or expect to enjoy the privileges of ſuch; and ver. 11. " If the ſpirit of him that raiſed up Jeſus dwell in you," that is, if that divine Godlike temper be conſtantly in you, " he that raiſed up Jeſus from the dead (that is, God) will alſo quicken your mortal bodies," give even theſe mortal bodies of yours a joyful reſurrection, " by his ſpirit dwelling in you," that is, by the power of that ſame Spirit that raiſed Chriſt, if ye be now animated and quicken'd by that, if that divine temper of his continue in you. So ver. 14. " Being led by the Spirit" is living according to the pattern ſet before us by Chriſt. And ſo the " ſpirit of fear, and of power, and love," &c. 2 Tim. i. 7. are thoſe affections of fear, on one ſide cowardiſe and timidity; and of courage and conſtancy, and adherence to Chriſt (ſuch as was exemplified to us in Chriſt, in declaring and aſſerting his Father's will) on the other ſide. In the Old Teſtament 'tis farther uſed, ſometimes for skill and abilities, Exod. xxviii. 3. " The ſpirit of wiſdom to make Aaron garments," and Exod. xxxi. 2. " Bezaleel is filled with the ſpirit of God in wiſdom, and in underſtanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanſhip." Sometimes for zeal, as 1 Sam. xi. 6. where " the Spirit of God came upon Saul, and his anger was kindled greatly." Sometimes for a commiſſion to an office or employment, as Judges iii. 10. " The Spirit of God came upon Othniel, (that is, he received miſſion from God) and he judged Iſrael." So upon Gedeon, chap. vi 34. and on Jeptha, chap. xi. 29. and on Samſon, chap. xiii. 25. but this ſtill joined with extraordinary abilities for the diſcharge of the office, and with particular incitations to ſome extraordinary things, which might teſtify to men this their commiſſion from God, or to themſelves, that they are thus deſigned and qualified for it. As appears by Sampſon, c. xiv. 6. where the " Spirit of the Lord coming mightily upon him," denotes the ſtrength which God gave him to kill the lion, and that an eſſay of what he ſhould be able to do to the Philiſtines, ver. 19. Thus Numb. xi. 17. when " God takes of the ſpirit which is upon Moſes, and puts it upon the ſeventy," 'tis apparent that the ſpirit there ſignifies the commiſſion or authority that Moſes had to govern the people, together with abilities to diſcharge it (ſee Deut. xxxiv. 9.) which is there communicated by God to the ſeventy, as it follows, " and they ſhall bear the burden of the people with thee," that is, take part of the burden of ruling them. So ver. 25. " The Lord took of the Spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the ſeventy, and when the Spirit reſted upon them, they propheſied," &c. that is, ſome gifts extraordinary attended this commiſſion, partly to ſignify that they were thus apart and endowed with authority by God, and partly to fit them for the diſcharge of their office conferred on them. So ver. 27. " the Spirit's reſting on Eldad and Medad " was God's conferring this authority on them, to which were joined alſo thoſe gifts of the Spirit, and they propheſied alſo, and ſo ver. 29. " Would God all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them," that is, communicate that power to them which he had given to Moſes, and qualify them with extraordinary gifts accordingly. So at the making of Saul king," The Spirit of the Lord ſhall come upon thee," 1 Sam. x. 6. ſome extraordinary change wrought on him, by which his commiſſion was evidenced to himſelf and others, and ſo ver. 10. And proportionably in the New Teſtament, Chriſt's prophetic commiſſion was thus conferred on him, " The Spirit of God deſcending like a dove, and lighting (or reſting) on him," and (above what had before been done to any) a " voice from heaven," proclaiming this commiſſion to be given to him from his Father, and this from Iſa. lxi. 1. is called " the Spirit of the Lord being upon him," and that explained by his being anointed to preach, Luke iv. 18. and by the ſpirit of wiſdom, &c. Iſa. xi. 2, 3. which ſignifies a commiſſion and all other extraordinary gifts and powers conferred upon him, and is called his being " anointed with the Holy Ghoſt and with power." And ſo of his Apoſtles, Acts ii. 4. their being filled with the Holy Ghoſt, is their being endow'd with commiſſion from heaven for that ſacred function, and accordingly they "ſpake with tongues (as the ſeventy and Saul, after the Spirit's coming on them, propheſied) as the Spirit gave them utterance," and this as the completion of that promiſe of Chriſt that they ſhould be "endued with power from on high," Luke xx. 49. or receive "the power of the Holy Ghoſt" coming upon them. And ſo ever after, the ordaining of a biſhop in the church was expreſſed by his "receiving the Holy Ghoſt." Other uſes there are of the word ſpirit, which will be diſcernible by the context, and be reduceable to one or more of theſe, but are too long to be more particularly ſet down here. (H.)

CHAP. X.

Chriſt ſendeth out ſeventy diſciples. And admoniſheth them to be humble. Martha reprehended.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. AFTER theſe things the Lord appointed other ſeventy alſo, and ſent them two and two before his face into every city and place, whither he himſelf would come. Therefore ſaid he unto them, The harveſt truely is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harveſt, that he would ſend forth labourers into his harveſt. Go your ways: behold, I ſend you forth as lambs among wolves. Carry neither purſe, nor ſcrip, nor ſhoes: and ſalute no man by the way. And into whatſoever houſe ye enter, firſt ſay, Peace be to this houſe. And if the ſon of peace be there, your peace ſhall reſt upon it: if not, it ſhall turn to you again. And in the ſame houſe remain, eating and drinking ſuch things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from houſe to houſe.

The Lord appointed other ſeventy alſo.] Grotius ſaith, they were choſen according to the number of the Sanhedrim, and ſo were ſeventy two; ſix of them being choſen out of every tribe, for which he cites the authority of Joſephus: Now Joſephus doth indeed ſay of the ſeniors ſent to Ptolomæus Philadelphus, That they were ſix out of every tribe, but he ſays not ſo of the Sanhedrim. And that they were only ſeventy without, and ſeventy one with Moſes their governour, ſee Selden. de Synedr. l. 2. c. 4. ſect. 5. and Dr. Lightfoot here. And, ſecondly, He proves this from the authority of Origen, who, in his book De recta in Deum fide, ſaith, Chriſt choſe ſeventy-two diſciples; and from Epiphanius, who ſaith, That St. Mark was one of the ſeventy-two. But this they both ſpeak by-the-by: And to Origen, if that be indeed his work, we may oppoſe Tertullian, who ſtiles them the ſeventy, ſaying, "Adlegit & alios ſeptuaginta Apoſtolos ſuper duodecim." To Epiphanius, St. Jerom, who ſaith, The ſeventy palm-trees in the ſixth manſion of the Jews ſignified ſecundi ordinis prædicatores, the preachers of the ſecond order, as the fountains ſignified the twelve Apoſtles: And to both, we may oppoſe the more ancient teſtimonies of Irenæus, who ſaith, That after the twelve Apoſtles, ſeptuaginta alios Dominus noſter ante ſe miſiſſe invenitur, our Lord ſent ſeventy others before him: And of Clemens, who in his Hypotypoſes makes frequent mention of Chriſt's ſeventy diſciples; of Euſebius there, and Ambroſe here; and the council of Neocæſarea, ſaying, The Chorepiſcopi were conſtituted after the example of the ſeventy. But it is more material to obſerve, That as the firſt miſſion of the Apoſtles was only for a ſeaſon, and ceaſed at their return, Mat. x. 1. ſo was this firſt miſſion of the ſeventy, they returning quickly from it, ver. 7. and they receive a new commiſſion. Note, ſecondly, That whereas ſome compare the biſhops to the Apoſtles, the ſeventy to the presbyters of the church, and thence conclude, that divers orders in the miniſtry were inſtituted by Chriſt himſelf; it muſt be granted that ſome of the ancients did believe theſe two to be divers orders, and that thoſe of the ſeventy were inferiour to the order of the Apoſtles; and ſometimes they make the compariſon here mentioned; but then it muſt be alſo granted, that this compariſon will not ſtrictly hold, for the ſeventy received not their miſſion as presbyters do, from biſhops, but immediately from the Lord Chriſt, as well as the Apoſtles, and in their firſt miſſion were plainly ſent on the ſame errand, and with the ſame power. Nevertheleſs, I think here is a fair foundation for that, in which St. Chryſoſtom and others place the ſuperiority of biſhops over presbyters, to wit, in this, That the power of ordination belongs to them alone. For tho' the commiſſion to preach the Goſpel belonged to the ſeventy, as well as to the twelve Apoſtles, yet the power of conferring the Holy Ghoſt, by laying on of hands, belonged peculiarly to the twelve. This then ſeems to be the reaſon, why the conferring of the Holy Ghoſt for the uſe of the miniſtry, hath been perpetually eſteemed peculiar to thoſe biſhops, who in the eccleſiaſtical ſtile are always called the ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles, and they have always done it by impoſition of hands. (W.)

Ibid.] The captain general of our ſalvation, Chriſt Jeſus, having called, commiſſioned, and ſent forth his twelve Apoſtles, as great commanders, to ſubdue his native kingdom of Iſrael to himſelf, at the ſixth chapter of this Goſpel, in this chapter he ſendeth after them a band of ſeventy auxiliary forces to aid and aſſiſt them; "After theſe things the Lord appointed other ſeventy diſciples, and ſent them two and two before his face." Where note, 1. The perſon commiſſioning and ſending them forth, Chriſt himſelf. Thence learn, That none ought to take upon them the office of preaching, or other miniſterial functions in the church, till thereunto called by Chriſt himſelf. The twelve Apoſtles, and ſeventy diſciples, had an immediate miſſion from Chriſt himſelf: All his miniſters now are called mediately, and receive their authority from Chriſt by the hands of the governours of his church. Note, 2. The manner of their ſending, two and two in a company, partly to make their meſſage of more authority, partly to teſtify their mutual conſent in the doctrine they taught, and partly to comfort and encourage, to help and ſtrengthen, to aſſiſt and ſupport each other. In imitation of this example, the Jeſuits ſend forth their emiſſaries by pairs, "Jeſuitæ ſemper ſunt bini," &c. Learn hence, That the miniſters of the Goſpel do ſtand in great need of the mutual help and comfort of the united aſſiſtance and encouragements of each other, in the weighty duties of their calling and function. Our Saviour in the next verſe compares his miniſters to harveſt labourers, who are to help and aſſiſt one another, the ſtrong endeavouring to ſtrengthen the hands of the weak. But Lord! what tears are ſufficient to bewail the want of love and unity, yea the prevalency of that envy and malignity which is found too often among the miniſters of the Goſpel? ſo that inſtead of going forth two and two, happy is he that is alone in a place: Well might Melancthon bleſs God, when he lay a dying, that he was going to a place where he ſhould be freed from the implacable hatred of divines; this is, and ought to be for a lamentation. (B.)

Ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. And into whatſoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat ſuch things as are ſet before you. And heal the ſick that are therein, and ſay unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you. But into whatſoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the ſtreets of the ſame, and ſay, Even the very duſt of your city, which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off againſt you: notwithſtanding be ye ſure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you. But I ſay unto you, that it ſhall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom, than for that city. Wo unto thee, Chorazin, wo unto thee, Bethſaida: for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, ſitting in ſackcloth and aſhes. But it ſhall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment, than for you. And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, ſhalt be thruſt down to hell. He that heareth you, heareth me: and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me: and he that deſpiſeth me, deſpiſeth him that ſent me.

Heal the ſick that are therein.] Here our Saviour gives his diſciples ſundry directions, how to manage themſelves in this expedition for preaching the Goſpel. He enjoins them, 1. To obſerve the rule of decency in going from place to place, having enter'd an houſe to continue there, not changing their lodging, and going from houſe to houſe, thereby avoiding all ſhew of lightneſs and inconſtancy, and teſtifying all gravity and ſtayedneſs in their behaviour; this being a ſpecial means to win authority to their perſons and miniſtry. 2. He gives them a power to work miracles, for the confirming of the doctrine which they preached, "Heal the ſick that are therein." This was neceſſary, partly to procure reverence to their perſons, being poor and unlearned men; and partly to gain credit and authority to their doctrine, for the doctrine of faith in the Meſſias, as now come and exhibited in the fleſh, being a ſtrange and new doctrine to the Jews, the truth and certainty of it was to be extraordinarily ratified and confirmed by working miracles; one ſort of which was healing of diſeaſes in an extraordinary manner. Obſerve, 3. How Chriſt encourages his diſciples againſt the want of ſucceſs; he bids them denounce the judgments of God againſt ſuch contemners of their doctrine, "by ſhaking off the duſt of their feet," which action was emblematical, and ſignified that God in like manner would ſhake off them, and eſteem them no better than the vileſt duſt. Learn hence, That thoſe which deſpiſe the meſſage that the miniſters of the Goſpel bring, ſhall hereafter find the duſt of their feet, and the aſhes of their graves, to give a judicial teſtimony againſt them in the day of Chriſt: Wherever the word is preached, it is for a teſtimony, either a teſtimony for or againſt a people. For if the duſt of a miniſter's feet bear witneſs againſt a people, their ſermons much more Obſerve, laſtly, the dreadful judgment denounced by our Saviour againſt the contemners of his diſciples doctrine; "Verily it ſhall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment than for that city." Where note, 1. That there ſhall be a day of judgment. 2. That in the day of judgment ſome ſinners ſhall fare worſe than others. 3. That of all ſinners, the condition of ſuch ſhall be ſaddeſt at the day of judgment, who living under the Goſpel, die, after all, in their impenitency and infidelity; "It ſhall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha than for that city." (B.)

Ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. And the ſeventy returned again with joy, ſaying, Lord, even the devils are ſubject unto us through thy name. And he ſaid unto them, I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven. Behold, I give unto you power to tread on ſerpents and ſcorpions, and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing ſhall by any means hurt you. Notwithſtanding in this rejoice not, that the ſpirits are ſubject unto you: but rather rejoice, becauſe your names are written in heaven. In that hour Jeſus rejoiced in ſpirit, and ſaid, I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe and prudent, and haſt revealed them unto babes: even ſo, Father, for ſo it ſeemed good in thy ſight. All things are delivered to me of my Father: and no man knoweth who the Son is, but the Father: and who the Father is, but the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal him. And he turned him unto his diſciples, and ſaid privately, Bleſſed are the eyes which ſee the things that ye ſee. For I tell you, that many prophets and kings have deſired to ſee thoſe things which ye ſee, and have not ſeen them; and to hear thoſe things which ye hear, and have not heard them.

And the ſeventy returned again with joy.] Obſerve, 1. The ſeventy diſciples return to give Chriſt an account of the ſucceſs of their expedition: They return as victors with joy and triumph, ſhewing Chriſt the trophies of their conqueſt, Lord, even the devils are ſubject to us, thro' thy name; the weapons of their warfare were not carnal, but ſpiritual, and mighty through Chriſt; the powers of darkneſs cannot ſtand, but muſt fall before the power of Chriſt; the devils are no match for Chriſt, no not for the meaneſt of the miniſters of Chriſt, who go forth in his name, armed with his authority and power. Obſerve, ſecondly, Our Saviour's reply to the ſeventy diſciples upon this occaſion; I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven: A two-fold interpretation is given of theſe words. 1. Some look upon them as a ſecret rebuke given by our Saviour to the Seventy for that exceſs of joy, and mixture of vain-glory which was found with them, upon the account of thoſe extraordinary gifts and abilities of caſting out devils and healing diſeaſes, which were conferred upon them; I beheld Satan, ſays Chriſt, falling like lightning from heaven; as if Chriſt had ſaid, Take heed of being puff'd up with pride, upon the account of thoſe endowments which I have beſtowed upon you; Remember Lucifer, the prince of pride, how he fell from heaven by his arrogancy, and labour you to aſcend thither by humility. The words in this ſenſe afford this inſtruction, that thoſe whom Chriſt has beſtowed the greateſt meaſure of ſpiritual graces, miniſterial gifts, and temporal bleſſings upon, ought to be very watchful againſt the hateful ſin of pride, which has ruined and deſtroyed ſo many thouſands of Angels and men. 2. Some underſtand this fall of Satan not literally, but figuratively and myſtically, of his ruin by the power and preaching of the Goſpel: As if Chriſt had ſaid, I know that this is no vain boaſt of yours, no vaunt nor brag of your valour, that devils are conquered by your courage; for when I firſt ſent you forth to preach the Goſpel, and armed you with divine power, I eaſily foreſaw that the devil's kingdom would ſhake about his ears, and that his power would be ruined by the power of the Goſpel; and that where-ever you preached, Satan's ſtrength and power ſhould vaniſh like a flaſh of lightning, ſuddenly, and irrecoverably. Learn hence, that the powerful and efficacious preaching of the Goſpel, is the ſpecial means ordained and appointed by Chriſt for the ruin and ſubverſion of Satan's kingdom in the world: as the Goſpel is the power of God unto ſalvation to them that believe and obey it; ſo it is the power of God unto deſtruction to Satan, and all that fight under his banner againſt it. (B.)

I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven.] Tho' Satan be reckoned among ſpiritual wickedneſſes, in heavenly places, Eph. vi. 12. yet Chriſt ſeems not here ſo much to reſpect that, as the diſſolution of that kingdom he had erected in the world; he is ſtiled, "the God of this world," 2 Cor. iv. 4. "the ruler of the darkneſs of this world," Eph. vi. 12. and to him is aſcribed the "kingdom of darkneſs," Col. i. 13. and a principality over the children of diſobedience: Chriſt therefore here foretels, that this dominion ſhould be in great part loſt by the tranſlation of the "heathens from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan to God;" and Satan being thus ſpoiled of his dominions, may be ſaid to fall from heaven, by a phraſe familiar both to ſacred and prophane writers. So of the fall of the king of Babylon the prophet ſaith, "How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer?" Iſaiah xiv. 12. Of the fall of the colleague of Antonius, Cicero ſaith, "Collegam tuum de cœlo detraxiſti," "Thou haſt pulled him down from heaven;" and when Pompey was overthrown, he is ſaid by him, "ex aſtris decidiſſe," "to have fallen from the ſtars," Ep. l. 1. ad Atticum, Ep. 20. (W.)

Ver. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37. And behold, a certain lawyer ſtood up, and tempted him, ſaying, Maſter, what ſhall I do to inherit eternal life? He ſaid unto him, What is written in the law? how readeſt thou? And he anſwering, ſaid, Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy ſtrength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbour as thy ſelf. And he ſaid unto him, Thou haſt anſwered right: this do, and thou ſhalt live. But he willing to juſtify himſelf, ſaid unto Jeſus, And who is my neighbour? And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid, A certain man went down from Jeruſalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, which ſtripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead. And by chance there came down a certain prieſt that way; and when he ſaw him, he paſſed by on the other ſide. And likewiſe a Levite, when he was at the place, came and looked on him, and paſſed by on the other ſide. But a certain Samaritan, as he journey'd, came where he was: and when he ſaw him, he had compaſſion on him, And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and ſet him on his own beaſt, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him. And on the morrow when he departed, he took out two pence, and gave them to the hoſt, and ſaid unto him, Take care of him; and whatſoever thou ſpendeſt more, when I come again, I will repay thee. Which now of theſe three, thinkeſt thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves? And he ſaid, He that ſhewed mercy on him. Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, Go, and do thou likewiſe.

By chance.] The word ſugkuria ſignifies literally concurrence, when two things fall out together. Sugkurei (it ſhould be ſugkuria) ſuntuchia, ſaith Heſychius, and ſugkureema, ſuntucheema (not with any reſpect to tuchee, fortuna, but from tugchanoo, ſum, the word ſignifying being, and no more.) So places that lie together are called ſugkurounta, Numb. xxi. 25. and xxxv. 3. and Deut ii. 37. according to the notion of the ſimple kuroo, tugchanoo, ſaith Heſychius, and kurei, uparchei, and kuria, ee kata phuſin uparchouſa dunamis. And then the rendring will be moſt exactly thus, And the ſame time it fell out that a certain prieſt came down the way; according to Calcidius's definition of fortune, that it is "concurſus ſimul cadentium cauſarum duum, originem ex propoſito trahentium, ex quo concurſu provenit aliquid præter ſpem cum admiratione;" "a concurrence of two cauſes falling together, having their beginning from counſel, from which concurrence ſomething proceeds beſides hope with admiration." But in Hippocrates it is uſed frequently to ſignify any occaſion of doing any thing, l. de Med. vet. di eedoneen ee di alleen tina ſugkurieen, “ for pleaſure, or for any other occaſion, or concurrent thing,” that being at the ſame time is the occaſion of any thing; and then it may be render'd upon occaſion, that is, having ſome buſineſs that occaſion'd his going by at that time. (H.)

Ver. 38, 39, 40, 41, 42. Now it came to paſs, as they went, that he enter'd into a certain village: and a certain woman named Martha received him into her houſe. And ſhe had a ſiſter called Mary, which alſo ſat at Jeſus feet, and heard his word. But Martha was cumbred about much ſerving, and came to him, and ſaid, Lord, doſt thou not care that my ſiſter hath left me to ſerve alone? bid her therefore that ſhe help me. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things. But one thing is needful. And Mary hath choſen that good part, which ſhall not be taken away from her.

Help.] The word antilambaneſthai, eſpecially with a genitive of the perſon joined with it, ſignifies to ſuccour or relieve any in diſtreſs. So Luke i. 54. antelabeto Iſraeel, “ he hath relieved Iſrael: ” a work of eleos, mercy (as it follows) and a filling them with good things when they were hungry, ver. 43. So antilambaneſthai aſthenountoon, Acts xx. 35. to relieve the poor, and, as it there follows, to give to them. So antileepſeis, 1 Cor. xii. 28. the office of relieving the poor. From hence 'tis diſcernible, what is the full importance of ina ſunantilabeetai moi here; Chriſt was received and entertained in the houſe of Martha and Mary: Martha made proviſion for him and all that were with him; this is called pollee diaconia, “ a great deal of work in providing for them all,” at the beginning of the verſe; hereupon ſhe complains to Chriſt, that Mary, by hearkening to him, left her diaconein moneen, to miniſter to them, or provide for them, alone, without any body elſe, and thereupon deſires him to bid her bear her company in making proviſion for them; the antilambaneſthai, as diaconein, noting the making this proviſion, and the ſun, added to it, the joining with her, or bearing her company, contrary to the moneen, her doing it alone, precedent. Thus Rom. viii. 26. ſunantilambaneſthai aſtheneiais eemoon is “ to join in relieving our neceſſities.” We have no means but prayer to God, to relieve ourſelves in any diſtreſs. But then again, we know not what is abſolutely beſt for us, nor, conſequently, to pray as we ought; therefore when we want and pray for ought, the Spirit of Chriſt joineth with us in relieving us, that is, in interceding for us, that what is abſolutely beſt may be granted us; joins with us in prayer, and ſo in relieving us, by praying ſilently for us, and aſking thoſe things which Chriſt knows us to ſtand moſt in need of, when we do not. (H.)

CHAP. XI.

Chriſt teacheth to pray, and that inſtantly; with encouragement to expect a return. Rebuketh the blaſphemous Phariſees, preacheth to the people, and reproveth hypocrites.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. AND it came to paſs, that as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceaſed, one of his diſciples ſaid unto him, Lord, teach us to pray, as John alſo taught his diſciples. And he ſaid unto them, When ye pray, ſay, Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done, as in heaven, ſo in earth. Give us day by day our daily bread. And forgive us our ſins; for we alſo forgive every one that is indebted to us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.

Praying in a certain place.] This was another time, and another occaſion, than that in his ſermon on the mount, before-mention'd by St. Matthew, vi. 9. (H.)

Teach us to pray.] I ſuppoſe no-body hath ſo mean an opinion, either of St. John's or our Saviour's diſciples, as to think they were ignorant how to pray; therefore 'tis plain, they could mean nothing elſe by this requeſt, but that Chriſt would give them a peculiar form, as a badge of their belonging to him; according to the cuſtom of the Jewiſh doctors, who always taught their diſciples a peculiar form to be added to their own prayers. (Wheatly.) From whom we receive the revelation of the will of God, we cannot but deſire to be taught to pray according to it. Thus St. John the Baptiſt taught his diſciples, and the diſciples of our Lord (ſome of whom had belonged to John before) deſired as much of him. (Pearſon.)

As John alſo taught.] 'Tis probable, that John had compiled ſome certain form of prayer, out of ſelect places of ſcripture, which might be moſt ſuitable to his time, with reſpect to the kingdom of Chriſt, which was then begun to be preached. (Beza.)

When ye pray, ſay.] Whenſoever ye pray ſolemnly, omit not to uſe this form of words. (H.) Whatever diſpute may be made about the word houtoos in St. Matthew, which is tranſlated, not exactly but paraphraſtically, after this manner, (but ought with greater accuracy to be render'd ſo or thus, in which ſignification it is always uſed in the Septuagint) yet here he preſcribed the uſe of theſe very words, expreſsly commanding them, “ When ye pray, ſay, Our Father,” &c. And if he had not inſtructed them to uſe it as a form of prayer, he had not anſwered the deſign of his diſciples requeſt. (Wheat.) If we conſult not only the practice of the church in all ages, but the ſcripture itſelf, in theſe two paſſages compared together, we ſhall find that it is both a pattern for us to form our prayers by, and alſo a prayer itſelf; which our Saviour, in condeſcenſion to our infirmities, hath framed for us; putting words into our mouths, to beg of God thoſe bleſſings, which through his moſt prevalent interceſſion ſhall not be denied us. (Hopkins.)

Our Father.] God is a Father, 1. by eternal generation; having, by an inconceivable and ineffable way, begotten his Son, God co-equal, co-eternal with himſelf; and therefore called “ the only begotten Son of God,” John iii. 16. 2. By temporal creation, as he gives a being and exiſtence to his creatures; creating thoſe, whom he made rational, after his own image and ſimilitude: And therefore he is called “ the Father of ſpirits,” Heb. xii. 9. And Adam is called “ the ſon of God,” Luke iii. 38. And, 3. by ſpiritual regeneration and adoption; and therefore all true believers are ſaid to be “ the ſons of God, and born of God,” John i. 12, 13. and “ the children of God,” Rom. viii. 16. Now, tho' this title of Father, in the firſt of theſe three ſignifications, is proper to the firſt perſon in the bleſſed Trinity, yet in the two latter it is a relative attribute, equally belonging to all the three perſons. For Chriſt is expreſly called “ the Father,” Iſa. ix. 6. and we are ſaid to be “ born of the Spirit,” John iii. 5. (Idem.)

Hallowed be thy name.] The name of God is any perfection aſcribed to him, whereby he hath been pleaſed to make himſelf known to the ſons of men, whether they relate to his titles or his attributes: And by hallowing it, is meant our acknowledging and reverencing it as holy; being the very ſame with that common ſcripture phraſe of glorifying God. We cannot add any thing to his infinite perfections, nor to the luſtre and brightneſs of his crown: Yet we are ſaid to ſanctify and glorify God, and to hallow his name, when we moſt reverently obſerve and admire his holineſs and other attributes, and endeavour by all holy ways to declare them unto others, that they may do the like. (Idem.) So that, in plain ſpeech, this petition is thus much; “ O Lord, let that majeſty and holineſs that is in thyſelf, that juſtice mercy and power which thou ſheweſt in thy works, and that truth wiſdom and goodneſs which is in thy word, with all thy virtue generally whatſoever comprehended in thy nature, and fit for the knowledge and uſe of man, be more and more daily known of man, and received among us, with that dread, and honour, and reverence, that is fit for ſuch a name, both in word and work, thought and deed, and every way.” (Babington.)

Give us day by day our daily bread.] Interpreters have been much divided about the word epiouſios, which is uſed by St. Matthew, vi. 11. as well as here by St. Luke. Some will have it to mean only our natural bread, or bodily neceſſaries; others, our ſpiritual food; and others, both: Some again underſtand it to extend to all the reſt of our life, and others only to this day, or the time preſent, &c. But St. Luke muſt be allowed to be the beſt interpreter of the word, who here explains it to ſignify ſuch bread (and other neceſſaries) as ſhall be ſufficient for us, day by day: Which therefore muſt needs be bodily, becauſe ſpiritual food, once truly received, ſerves not only for the day, but for ever, John iv. 14. (Leigh.) By teaching us to pray for our temporal comforts this day, or day by day, our Saviour intimates to us, that we ſhould be content with our daily allowance; and therefore he bids us “ take no thought for the morrow,” Matt. vi. 34. that is, not to have any tormenting, carking, and deſponding thoughts about it, but to truſt in God's providence, who has promiſed, that he “ will never leave us nor forſake us,” Heb. xiii. 5. (Hopk.) If this petition had been wanting, this prayer had been deficient. Nor is there any need for the ancient doctors to allegorize this phraſe, as if we asked Chriſt, the bread of life, and the communication of him in the Sacrament, for the food of our ſouls: For, tho' this may be underſtood by way of alluſion, yet not as the principal ſenſe; nor is it below us to aſk that which God knows we cannot be without. (Comber.)

And forgive us our ſins.] St. Matthew uſes the word opheileemata, debts, Matt. vi. 12. but St. Luke uſes hamartias, ſins. Which words are thus uſed promiſcuouſly, becauſe a ſinner both owes a puniſhment at the hand of God, and a recompence to his injured neighbour. (Leigh.)

Indebted to us.] The verb opheilein, to owe, is here to be taken in a notion peculiar to the Syriac language (wherein Chriſt certainly ſpake) which neither the Greek, nor Latin, nor Hebrew, had made uſe of: For he that ſins or offends, either againſt God or man, is in Syriac ſaid to be a debtor. Thus the Targum (or Chaldee paraphraſe) renders it, " This people hath owed a debt, Exod. xxxii. 31. and in other places. (H. and W.) But, for other annotations on this incomparable prayer, I refer the reader to what is before noted on St. Matt. vi. 9. &c.

Ver. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. And he ſaid unto them, Which of you ſhall have a friend, and ſhall go unto him at midnight, and ſay unto him, Friend, lend me three loaves; For a friend of mine in his journey is come to me, and I have nothing to ſet before him: And he from within ſhall anſwer and ſay, Trouble me not: the door is now ſhut, and my children are with me in bed; I cannot riſe and give thee. I ſay unto you, Tho' he will not riſe and give him, becauſe he is his friend: yet becauſe of his importunity, he will riſe and give him as many as he needeth. And I ſay unto you, Aſk, and it ſhall be given you: ſeek, and ye ſhall find: knock, and it ſhall be opened unto you. For every one that aſketh, receiveth: and he that ſeeketh, findeth: and to him that knocketh, it ſhall be opened. If a ſon ſhall aſk bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a ſtone? or if he aſk a fiſh, will he for a fiſh give him a ſerpent? Or if he ſhall aſk an egg, will he offer him a ſcorpion? If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more ſhall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that aſk him?

And he ſaid.] This which here follows was all ſpoken plainly, to encourage them to expect and depend upon a return of their prayers. (W.)

The door is now ſhut.] The Romans were wont to expreſs the firſt part of the night, or cloſe of the evening, by this phraſe, prima face, that is, candle-lighting; and the latter part of it was, in other nations, denominated from the " ſhutting up the doors: " Which time, in Greek called clauſithuron, was commonly cried about the ſtreets by a kind of a bell-man. Thus, where 'tis ſaid, " about the time of ſhutting of the gate," Joſh. ii. 5. as well as here, " the door is ſhut," 'tis expreſſive of the lateneſs of the night, which in ver. 5. is explained by meſonuction, midnight. (H.)

Becauſe of his importunity.] The Greek word anaideia, here uſed, in its proper ſignification expreſſes impudence; and the Jews have a ſaying, " that the impudent man overcomes the modeſt and the baſhful; how much more God, who is goodneſs itſelf! " But 'tis here underſtood, that his requeſt is ſo importunate, as to admit of no refuſal; coming and crying as vehemently and inceſſantly as the poor widow in chap. xviii. (W.) If reſpect of friendſhip will not work upon him, yet his coming without baſhfulneſs, at ſuch a time of night, which is an argument of his real want, and of his confidence in him to whom he comes, will certainly make him. (H.) This word is not always to be taken in a bad ſenſe, any more than the Latin word improbus, where Virgil ſays,

Unwearied pains o'ercome the hardeſt taſk.

Aſk, and it ſhall be given you.] We muſt aſk in faith, ſeek diligently, and knock earneſtly. (W.) No former unworthineſs of our own can exclude us from the mercy of God: For he receiveth the prayer, not only of the publican, chap. xviii. 14. but of the prodigal ſon, chap. xv. 20 and promiſeth mercy to the thief hanging on the croſs, chap. xxiii. 43. if at the laſt hour he thus ſeek it by prayer. (Andrews.) Againſt invocation of any other than God alone, " If all arguments elſe ſhould fail, the number whereof is both great and forcible, yet this very bare and ſingle challenge might ſuffice; that whereas God hath in ſcripture delivered us ſo many patterns for imitation when we pray; yea, framed ready to our hands in a manner all, for ſuits and ſupplications, which our condition of life on earth may at any time need, there is not one, no not one, to be found directed unto angels, ſaints, or any, ſaving God alone. So that, if, in ſuch caſes as this, we hold it ſafeſt to be led by the beſt examples that have gone before, when we ſee what Noah, what Abraham, what Moſes, what David, what Daniel, and the reſt did; what form of prayer Chriſt himſelf likewiſe taught his church, and what his bleſſed Apoſtles did practiſe, who can doubt but the way for us to pray, ſo as we may undoubtedly be accepted, is by conforming our prayers to theirs, whoſe ſupplications we know were acceptable?" (Hooker.)

Every one that aſketh, receiveth.] i. e. who aſks in faith, ſeeks with diligence, and knocks with importunity and perſeverance, receives all that is needful for him. So the connexion ſhews, " he will ariſe and give him (hoſon creezei) as much as he wants," ver. 8. " And I ſay to you, aſk and ye ſhall receive " all knowledge neceſſary to your ſalvation, all that aſſiſtance which is neceſſary to preſerve you from thoſe ſinful courſes which will exclude you from ſalvation, or to the performance of that obedience which God hath made the condition of your ſalvation under the new covenant, and to your perſeverance in that obedience to the end: Ye ſhall receive all things ſpiritually good for you. For " If ye being evil will give good things to your children, much more will your heavenly Father give ta agatha, good things, (Matt vii. 11. His Holy Spirit, ver. 13.) to thoſe that aſk him." (W.)

A ſcorpion.] i. e. Things unprofitable and hurtful to, rather than what is good and needful for him. (Idem.) The ſcripture may be compared to an egg, which we muſt open, in order to diſcover the truths of religion therein contained; and on which a good heart feeds, taking it with the ſalt of wiſdom and diſcretion: Hereticks and libertines find therein that which poiſons them, becauſe they have the heart of a ſcorpion. (Queſnel.) See the notes before on Matth. vii. 7. &c.

Ver. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. And he was caſting out a devil, and it was dumb. And it came to paſs, when the devil was gone out, the dumb ſpake; and the people wondred. But ſome of them ſaid, He caſteth out devils through Beelzebub, the chief of the devils. And others tempting him, ſought of him a ſign from heaven. But he knowing their thoughts, ſaid unto them, Every kingdom divided againſt itſelf is brought to deſolation: and a houſe divided againſt a houſe, falleth. If Satan alſo be divided againſt himſelf, how ſhall his kingdom ſtand? becauſe ye ſay that I caſt out devils through Beelzebub. And if I by Beelzebub caſt out devils, by whom do your ſons caſt them out? therefore ſhall they be your judges. But if I with the finger of God caſt out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you. When a ſtrong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace: But when a ſtronger than he ſhall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he truſted, and divideth his ſpoils. He that is not with me is againſt me: and he that gathereth not with me, ſcattereth. When the unclean ſpirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, ſeeking reſt: and finding none, he ſaith, I will return unto my houſe whence I came out. And when he cometh, he findeth it ſwept and garniſhed. Then goeth he, and taketh to him ſeven other ſpirits more wicked than himſelf, and they enter in, and dwell there: and the laſt ſtate of that man is worſe than the firſt.

And it was dumb.] The diſeaſe which that devil had inflicted on the man had deprived him of his ſpeech. (H.)

Some of them.] St. Matthew ſays the Phariſees, chap. ix. 34. and xii. 24 And that moſt like them, becauſe they were always pickeering for occaſions to find fault with our bleſſed Saviour, and to revile him.

Beelzebub.] Of the right reading of this word " Beelzebub, the lord of flies," or " Beelzeboul, the lord of dung" (as St. Jerome reads it, on Matt. xii. 24.) you may ſee Lightfoot there. But tho' both he and the great Bochart are at a loſs, how this god of flies ſhould be ſtiled " the chief (or prince) of the devils," that ſeems to be no great wonder, he being probably no leſs than Jupiter, the prince and father of the heathen gods; as appears from the titles given him a muſcis abigendis, from his reputed office of chaſing away the flies from their ſacrifices and temples. (H. and W.) This was he who is called "the god of Ekron," 2 Kings i. 2. being indeed an idol, which the inhabitants of that city worſhipped. Pliny calls him Achor deus, and ſays, when the Cyreneans were afflicted with any plague of flies, they were wont to ſacrifice and pray to him, on which the flies preſently died away. This gives the reaſon that he is called "the prince of the devils," meaning one who hath power over them, as 'twas ſuppoſed, able to throw them out of thoſe who were poſſeſſed with them, (whole legions together) like ſwarms of flies, which, with their chief, fly about the upper and middle regions of the air. For when the Phariſees ſaw Chriſt viſibly "caſting out devils," they reviled him, as if he had done it through the power of Beelzebub. (H.) Some authors, and particularly Scaliger, believe the Jews gave this name to the idol in deriſion; becauſe, in the temple at Jeruſalem, there were no flies ſeen on the victims. But 'tis much more probable, that the Ekronites themſelves gave this name to their god; ſince king Ahaziah, ſending to conſult that falſe deity, calls him by this very name, which ſurely he would not have done, eſpecially in a caſe of life or death, if he had derided him.

A ſign from heaven.] They had ſeen divers miraculous cures, and other tokens of his divine power already: and yet nothing will ſatisfy them, without a ſign from heaven; becauſe the ſon of man was to come in the clouds of heaven, Dan. vii. 13. To which demand, his anſwer is ſet down in St. Matthew, xii. 39. See the notes there. "Infidelity has never ſufficient arguments for conviction. Faith, tho' wiſe and diſcreet, having likewiſe humility and ſincerity, is ſatisfied with ſuch as God is pleaſed to uſe: To one who has a ſincere faith, it is enough, that God has once declared himſelf: He who is not content with this, wants faith, not proofs." (Queſn.)

Your ſons.] To what hath been ſaid, on Matt. xii. 27. we may here add, that ſome think, this relates to the ſeventy diſciples ſent by Chriſt to preach the kingdom in every city and place whither he himſelf would afterwards come, Luke x. 1. For they return to him with theſe words, Even the devils are ſubject to us in thy name, ver. 17. Now, doubtleſs, they were the ſons of the Jews: and tho' they caſt out devils in Chriſt's name, yet this is not ſufficient to take off the force of Chriſt's argument. For, it was not eaſy to ſuſpect ſo great a number of honeſt men, of their own nation and acquaintance, ſent, by two and two, into their villages and cities, of being all confederates with Satan: They therefore, going through their cities to aſſure them, the kingdom of God was at hand, and confirming their teſtimony, by healing diſeaſes, and caſting out devils in Chriſt's name, gave in full teſtimony againſt them who ſaid, that Chriſt himſelf did this by a confederacy with Satan. (W.)

When a ſtronger.] Here Chriſt, by an argument from the impoſſibility, proves that Satan cannot be caſt out by Satan, becauſe of the equality of power among the devils; but that Beelzebub is rather overcome and made captive by him, than an aſſiſtant to him: for when Chriſt caſteth out the angels (or miniſters) of Beelzebub out of men, what is that, but invading the dominions of Beelzebub himſelf, "taking from him all his armour, and dividing his ſpoils?" (Beza.)

Worſe than the firſt.] He who doth not perſevere, is in a worſe ſtate than he who never began. (Idem.) "Satan ejected by me, finding no where elſe perſons ſo fitted to receive him, will return, and take more durable poſſeſſion of you, and render you ſeven times more the children of Satan than ye were before." (W.) How dangerous are relapſes! If the Jews, deliver'd from their bondage in Egypt, and become the people of God by the covenant of the law, fell into a ſtate much worſe than their firſt, by the abuſe of that covenant, and by rejecting Jeſus Chriſt: Good God! what is the laſt ſtate of a Chriſtian, who falls from the divine adoption, by loſing the grace of his baptiſm, by trampling under foot the blood of Chriſt, and obliging his Holy Spirit to withdraw from him, and give place to the evil ſpirit! (Q.) See the notes on Matt. xii. 45.

Ver. 27, 28. And it came to paſs, as he ſpake theſe things, a certain woman of the company lift up her voice, and ſaid unto him, Bleſſed is the womb that bare thee, and the paps which thou haſt ſucked. But he ſaid, Yea, rather bleſſed are they that hear the word of God and keep it.

Bleſſed is the womb.] Here the holy virgin-mother might hear part of her own prophecy verified, that the generations of the earth ſhould call her Bleſſed. (Taylor.) For, about this time, one having told our Lord, that his mother and brethren were come, deſiring to ſpeak with him, Matt. xii. 47. that mentioning of his mother gave occaſion to this woman to break forth aloud into theſe words. (H.) And ſure, ſhe deſerves the more eſteem, becauſe ſhe returned the honour to God. "Wherefore they are moſt wretched, who diſreſpect her, whom God hath choſen, and out of pretended hatred to ſuperſtition, will ſcarce allow her the reverence of an excellent perſon: And yet, no doubt, ſhe would deteſt thoſe Ave's and gratulations, which ſome ſuperſtitious votaries (to the diſhonour of God, whom ſhe praiſed) do beſtow upon her; becauſe ſhe calls her Son her Saviour, Luke i. 47. and her ſelf the handmaid of the Lord, ver. 38, 48. So that it is our duty to reverence, but not adore her." (Comb.)

Yea, rather bleſſed.] The word menounge does neither deny, nor conceal the truth of what the woman had ſaid; but refers to what is of greater importance. (Beza and Grot.) "The bleſſedneſs of my mother ariſeth not from this, that ſhe conceived, and brought me forth into the world; but in order to that, 'tis neceſſary for her, as well as others, to believe and obey my word. So Theophylact." (W.) Chriſt does not blame the praiſe here given to his mother; but he compleats and perfects it, by intimating, that her bleſſedneſs proceeded from her having borne the Son of God in her heart, even before ſhe bare him in the womb; and from her having been nouriſhed her ſelf with the milk of the word and will of his Father, even before ſhe nouriſhed his Son with her own milk. (Queſn.)

Ver. 29, 30, 31, 32. And when the people were gathered thick together, he began to ſay, This is an evil generation: they ſeek a ſign, and there ſhall no ſign be given it, but the ſign of Jonas the prophet. For as Jonas was a ſign unto the Ninevites, ſo ſhall alſo the Son of man be to this generation. The queen of the ſouth ſhall ariſe up in the judgment with the men of this generation, and condemn them: for ſhe came from the utmoſt parts of the earth, to hear the wiſdom of Solomon; and behold, a greater than Solomon is here. The men of Nineveh ſhall riſe up in the judgment with this generation, and ſhall condemn it: for they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and behold, a greater than Jonas is here.

He began to ſay.] This was ſpoken in the preſence of a great multitude, with reſpect to what had been ſuggeſted before, by ſome of the Phariſees, ver. 16.

They ſeek a ſign.] When the Jews believed not Chriſt for his miracles, and yet perpetually called for a ſign, he refuſed to give them a ſign which might be leſs than their prejudice: But he gave them one, which alone is greater than all the miracles which ever were done, or ſaid to be done, by the enemies of religion, put all together; that is, the Son of man lying in the grave three days and three nights, and then evidently riſing again. (Taylor.) The reſurrection of Chriſt was the laſt of his miracles for the Jews, and filled up the meaſure of their impenitency: It was the firſt for the Gentiles; the ſignal that they ſhould be called to repentance, and the cauſe and pattern of their converſion, prefigured by that of the Heathen Ninevites. (Q.) See the notes on Matt xii. 38.

From the utmoſt parts of the earth.] The ſituation of Sheba in Arabia, whence the queen of the ſouth came to hear the wiſdom of Solomon, will not allow us to take theſe words abſolutely, and in the ſtrictneſs of the letter, but ſhews the meaning of them to be only, that ſhe came from a far country: And it ſeems, ſome other places are to be underſtood with the like reſtriction; as Pſal. lxi. 2. Luke ii. 1. Rom. x. 10, &c.

The men of Nineveh.] In the prophecy of Jonah, there is no mention made of Iſrael, but only of theſe Gentiles; that they might be an example to the Iſraelites: becauſe the Ninevites repented ſo ſoon as ever they were admoniſhed to it; whereas the Iſraelites, tho' warned over and over, by ſeveral prophets, ſcarce ever thought of repentance. (Heinſ.) "What a repentance was this, at the preaching of a perſon unknown, of a different nation and religion, and working no miracles; and this only to avoid temporal evils! Where is that of the generality of Chriſtians, tho' inſtructed by the Son of God himſelf; and by which they are to deliver themſelves from an eternity of torments, and to gain heaven? (Q.)

Behold a greater.] Here is more wiſdom, and heavenly divine doctrine, than ever was in all Solomon's words or writings: and more powerful preaching, and a denunciation of ſeverer judgments, than thoſe which Jonah denounced againſt Nineveh. (H.)

Ver. 33, 34, 35, 36. No man, when he hath lighted a candle, putteth it in a ſecret place, neither under a buſhel; but on a candleſtick, that they which come in may ſee the light. The light of the body is the eye: therefore when thine eye is ſingle, thy whole body alſo is full of light: but when thine eye is evil, thy body alſo is full of darkneſs. Take heed therefore, that the light which is in thee be not darkneſs. If thy whole body therefore be full of light, having no part dark, the whole ſhall be full of light, as when the bright ſhining of a candle doth give thee light.

No man, &c.] Some give here the connection thus: Tho' ye generally receive very little benefit by my preaching, it becomes neither me, nor my diſciples, to conceal our wiſdom, but ſtill to let it ſhine forth to the world, Matt. v. 15. But ſeeing it is evident that the ſame expreſſions are oft applied to different things, in divers ſenſes, why may not this have relation to the following verſe, thus? God never gives the light of nature, or of revelation, as he hath done to you Jews, but that it may be improved, and ſhine forth in them to others: Now as the light of the body is the eye, ſo the light of the ſoul is that reaſon, and that revelation of his mind which God affords; and therefore it becomes you to take as great care, that your light be not turned into darkneſs, by prejudices which blind the eyes, or by ſhutting your eyes againſt the light, or by your infidelity, or thoſe vicious habits which will not ſuffer you to come to the light, or believe in it; as that the eye of the body be not darkned, or put out. (W.) The truths of the Goſpel are not to be concealed, nor held captive in unrighteouſneſs; but the people are to be inſtructed in them. The ſcripture, and particularly the Goſpel, is our candle. It is the Spirit of God, which has lighted and placed it on the candleſtick of the church, that the light of it might be ſeen by all the faithful. To forbid Chriſtians the reading of the ſcripture, is to forbid the uſe of light to the children of light, and to make them ſuffer a kind of excommunication. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. v. 15, 16.

The light of the body.] This is to be underſtood of the perverſe opinions of men concerning Chriſt, ariſing from the darkneſs of their clouded minds and affections. (G.) There is no tautology in theſe and the following words; but only a progreſſion from the mind, clearly enlightned, and directed, and the faculties of the ſoul, rightly diſpoſed, to a life led according to them, or, in the ſcripture phraſe, a walking in the light. For Chriſt here compares the inward light of the ſoul, or the eye of it, to that of the body, ſhewing, that as that being pure from ſpots, adventitious humours, cataracts, and other blemiſhes, gives a clear light for the direction of the body; but when it is ill affected, by reaſon of theſe, or other maladies, the body is in the dark: So if the eye of the ſoul be not ſingle, i. e. if it be not pure from covetouſneſs, which is the luſt of the eye after worldly things, 1 John ii. 16. from carnal concupiſcence, which renders it the adulterous eye, Matt. v. 28, 29. 2 Pett. ii. 14. from envy, which is the evil or bewitching eye, Prov. xxiii. 6. Ecclus. xiv. 3--10. from pride, which is the high look, Pſal. ci. 5. the proud look, Prov. vi. 17. the lofty eye, Iſaiah v. 15. If, I ſay, it be not purified from theſe diſtempers, it will not direct our way aright, or preſerve us from walking in the dark; for theſe are the luſts of the world, which are contrary to the friendſhip of God, making all the actions of the life perverſe; and therefore they who do ſuch things, are ſaid to walk on ſtill in darkneſs, Pſal. lxxxii. 5. Eccleſ. ii. 14. John viii. 12.--xii. 46. 1 John ii. 9. to be in darkneſs, 1 Theſſ. v. 4. and to love darkneſs more than light, John iii. 19. Whereas, when the mind is free from theſe vices, and adorned with the contrary virtues, it directs all our actions to piety, virtue, and the love of God; as a lantern ſhining in darkneſs directs our feet, or as a candle enlightens the whole room where it is; and hence ſuch perſons are ſaid to walk in the light, 1 John i. 7. and to be children of the light, and of the day, Luke xvi. 8. John xii. 36. Eph. v. 8. 1 Theſſ. v. 5. This therefore is the import of theſe words, that a mind thus enlightned, and free from all theſe diſtempers, which darken and make blind the ſoul, will direct all our faculties and inclinations, and all the actions of the life aright, as a light doth the body when it walks in a dark night. (W.) See notes on Matt. vi. 22.

Ver. 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54. And as he ſpake, a certain Phariſee beſought him to dine with him: and he went in, and ſat down to meat. And when the Phariſee ſaw it, he marvelled that he had not firſt waſhed before dinner. And the Lord ſaid unto him, Now do ye Phariſees make clean the out-ſide of the cup and the platter: but your inward part is full of ravening and wickedneſs. Ye fools, did not he that made that which is without, make that which is within alſo? But rather give alms of ſuch things as you have: and behold, all things are clean unto you. But woe unto you, Phariſees: for ye tithe mint and rue, and all manner of herbs, and paſs over judgment and the love of God: theſe ought ye to have done, and not to leave the other undone. Woe unto you, Phariſees: for ye love the uppermoſt ſeats in the ſynagogues, and greetings in the markets. Woe unto you, ſcribes and Phariſees, hypocrites: for ye are as graves which appear not, and the men that walk over them are not aware of them. Then anſwered one of the lawyers, and ſaid unto him, Maſter, thus ſaying, thou reproacheſt us alſo. And he ſaid, Woe unto you alſo, ye lawyers: for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourſelves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers. Woe unto you: for ye build the ſepulchres of the prophets, and your fathers killed them. Truly ye bear witneſs that ye allow the deeds of your fathers: for they indeed killed them, and ye build their ſepulchres. Therefore alſo ſaid the wiſdom of God, I will ſend them prophets and apoſtles, and ſome of them they ſhall ſlay and perſecute: That the blood of all the prophets, which was ſhed from the foundation of the world, may be required of this generation; From the blood of Abel unto the blood of Zacharias, which periſhed between the altar and the temple: verily I ſay unto you, it ſhall be required of this generation. Woe unto you, lawyers: for ye have taken away the key of knowledge: ye entred not in your ſelves, and them that were entring in ye hindred. And as he ſaid theſe things unto them, the ſcribes and the Phariſees began to urge him vehemently, and to provoke him to ſpeak of many things: Laying wait for him, and ſeeking to catch ſomething out of his mouth, that they might accuſe him.

He went in, and ſat down.] Our Saviour, being the great phyſician of ſouls, went about continually viſiting his patients; and conſulted their benefit more than his own ſafety or reputation. He would keep company with publicans and ſinners, in order to the reforming them, and frankly accepted the invitation of Phariſees, tho' he knew they lay in wait, and deſign'd only to intrap him; converſing familiarly with them, and eating at their tables, that by ſuch obliging condeſcenſion he might, by degrees, win them to love and embrace the divine truth. (B. Calamy.)

Had not firſt waſhed.] The ſtrict Phariſee thought it a great profaneneſs and wickedneſs in his gueſt, not to obſerve the previous waſhings before dinner; which tho' not ordained by God, nor any part of Moſes's law, were religiouſly uſed by the ſtricter Jews, in obedience to the preſcriptions of their doctors. For, of ſuch neceſſity did they think theſe outward purgations to be, that it was a determin'd caſe among them, "that if any one, in great diſtreſs, had water ſufficient for waſhing, but not enough to waſh and drink too, he ought rather to periſh by thirſt, than neglect to waſh himſelf; and it was commonly ſaid among them, that to eat with unwaſhen hands was a greater pollution, than to defile one's body with an harlot." (Idem.) Much more of this may be ſeen in the notes upon Mark vii. 3.

Ye fools!] This apparent ſeverity of expreſſion is often uſeful, and even neceſſary, to awaken the ſinner, and to give him a more lively ſenſe of his faults: and none think themſelves wiſer than hypocrites do; for which reaſon our Lord here expoſes their folly. (Q.)

That which is within.] Since God made the ſoul no leſs than the body, he cannot be ſatisfied with outward appearances: Why then do not ye take care to cleanſe your inward part as well as your outſide? (Beza.)

But rather.] Here Chriſt ſhews them how to cleanſe the inward part. The ſoul is cleanſed by repentance; which conſiſts of two parts, to ceaſe to do evil, and to begin to bring forth good fruits; among which, works of mercy is one of the principal. (G.) See the notes on Matt. xxiii. 23.

Give alms.] It is very ordinary in ſcripture, to expreſs the whole of our duty, by ſome one eminent part of it; as very frequently by charity, and that here by alms-giving. So that the ſenſe ought not to be reſtrained to this ſingle inſtance, to the excluſion of the reſt; but all duties that are of the ſame weight and neceſſity are here underſtood, as well as that one which is mentioned. (Calamy.) 'Tis certain, the meaning of theſe words is not, that alms-giving will atone for a careleſs and wicked life; for ſuch a ſenſe would contradict one great deſign of the Goſpel, which is to purify and exalt the mind of man, and make him meet for heaven. Some ſuppoſe theſe words ſpoken by way of irony; as if our Lord had ſaid, "Ye Phariſees give alms, and think that that will make all things clean unto you; but do not miſtake, for it is as neceſſary to cleanſe your hearts, and to purify yourſelves within, as it is to give alms, and outwardly waſh and cleanſe yourſelves." Dr. Whitby thinks, that our Lord here inſtructs us, "That all our temporal enjoyments are unclean, that is, unlawful to be uſed, till we have ſanctified them by ſome act of charity." Sir Norton Knatchbull's opinion is, that the Phariſees, being guilty of rapine and extortion, and having much ill-gotten goods in their poſſeſſion, and not knowing the perſons they had wronged, to whom reſtitution was due, our Lord here tells them, they ſhould give it to the poor. (Fox.)

Such things as ye have] The phraſe ta enonta ſignifies "according to ability, (or) as far as we are able;" agreeable to that of Deut. xvi. 10. which we read, "according as the Lord thy God hath bleſſed thee." The injurious is bound to reſtore all that he hath taken away: But, in caſe he be not able to reſtore all, yet certainly he muſt go as far as he can; and that is the leaſt will be accepted. Zaccheus made a "fourfold reſtitution, and gave half of his goods to the poor," over and above, Luke xix. 8. And the like holds in other ſins; wherein, tho' no others be wronged, yet there is pollution contracted; and that muſt be cleanſed by ſome effectual works of repentance; and mercy to the poor is ſpecified, as an eminent work of this kind, Dan. iv. 27. (H.) Thus,

All things are clean to you.] Be but careful to avoid every thing which God hath forbid, to do every thing which he hath commanded, and then trouble not your conſciences about eating with unwaſhen hands. Thus, as Grotius obſerves, theſe words ſignify the ſame with what St. Paul ſays, Tit. i. 15. Unto the pure all things are pure. (Calamy.)

Woe unto you.] Father Queſnel obſerves here the ſeveral marks and characters of a Phariſaical ſpirit, deſcribed in this and the following verſes; which are briefly theſe, 1. Being very exact in external performances, but negligent in moral duties, (ver. 42.) 2. Being proud of honour and precedency, (ver. 43.) 3. Hiding their corrupt maxims under an external piety and falſe charity, (ver. 44.) 4. Being no farther concerned at the diſgrace of others, than as it falls upon themſelves, (ver. 45.) 5. Not obſerving themſelves what they impoſe upon others, (ver. 46.) 6. Perſuading the world that they condemn perſecution, tho' they themſelves do perſecute the truth, and the preachers of it, (ver. 47.) 7. Imitating their wicked and cruel forefathers, (ver. 48.) 8. Ruining thoſe who contradict them, (ver. 49.) 9. Drawing down God's curſe upon a whole people, by engaging them in their paſſions, (ver. 50.) 10. Flattering themſelves with the hopes of impunity, (ver. 51.) 11. Valuing themſelves too much upon their own ſlender knowledge, and endeavouring to keep others in ignorance, (ver. 52.) And, 12. Placing all their ſtrength in confidence, craft, and deceit, (ver 53, 54.)

Ye tithe mint.] In paying of tithes they were ſo very punctual and ſcrupulous, as to deſcend to the tithing even of herbs; of which it was doubtful and diſputable, by the laws of Moſes, whether tithes ought to be paid or no. (Hickes.) By ſuch wonderful ſtrictneſs in ſome inſtances, they gained the reputation of the greateſt ſaints; ſo that it was a proverb among the Jews, "That if but two perſons in the world went to heaven, one of them would be a ſcribe, the other a Phariſee." (Calamy.)

Judgment, and the love of God.] Judgment, meaning that which is juſt and right, comprehends the laws of the ſecond table, as the love of God does thoſe of the firſt. (Beza.) See the notes upon St. Matt. xxiii. 23.

Theſe ought ye.] The moral laws of God are his primary and more principal laws: But yet the obſervation of them doth not excuſe any man from obſerving his mere poſitive laws. It was not the careful obſervation of the mere poſitive laws that Chriſt blamed in them, but their acquieſcing in it, and putting a mighty ſtreſs upon it, as if that alone would juſtify them, and ſuperſede all obligation to obſerve the moral laws. (Hickes.)

Graves which appear not.] See the notes on St. Matt. xxiii. 27.

Reproacheſt us alſo.] By conſequence. For the Phariſees moſt ſtrictly obſerved the decrees of the doctors of the law: And the lawyers, on the other hand, highly cried up the ſanctity of the Phariſees. (G.)

Lawyers.] Doctors of the law, members of the Sanhedrin, or conſiſtories. (H.)

Build the ſepulchres.] The meaning of this paſſage will ſoon appear, if it be obſerved, 1. That the Woes ſo often denounced againſt the Phariſees, were for ſeveral acts of hypocriſy in them. Now hypocriſy, or perſonation, being the outward appearance, the diſguiſe, or ſpecious attire of an action, that is here ſet down by itſelf; the vice that was diſguiſed, and endeavoured to be concealed under it, is not here named, but by their preſent actions (perſecuting Chriſt) viſible and notorious, and withal intimated by St. Matthew, chap. xxiii. 32. As if he had ſaid, Your building and adorning the ſepulchres of the old prophets, which your fathers kill'd, is in you a ſolemn hypocriſy, acting the parts of very pious men, that bear much reverence to them; and ſuch is your ſpeech, Matt. xxiii. 30. that "if ye had lived in your fathers days, ye would not have had any hand in the killing the prophets." 2. By obſerving the and between the bearing witneſs, and the having a complacency with the deeds of your fathers; for that and conjoins two different things affirm'd of them by our Saviour, which are ordinarily confounded. 1. Ye bear witneſs to the works of your fathers; ye teſtify to all men, that your fathers kill'd the prophets that were ſent to them; and, 2. Ye like well, allow, and approve of their deeds, (not that by their building their tombs they expreſſed that approbation, but that otherwiſe was evidently ſeen) and tho' to diſguiſe this, "ye adorn their ſepulchres," yet ye do really the ſame things that ye profeſs to condemn, and ſo are hypocrites in ſo doing: which is more diſtinctly ſet down by St. Matthew, when he adds, in a prophetic ſtile, "Fill ye up the meaſure of your fathers;" noting their fathers ſins, that they diſclaim to be of the ſame kind, but of an inferior degree to thoſe which they are now ready to practiſe, and ſo to bring upon them thoſe woes, that utter exciſion, which had not befallen their fathers. 3. By taking into this period that which, both here and in St. Matthew, is at the cloſe of it, "I will ſend them prophets and apoſtles, and ſome of them they will ſlay and perſecute;" to evidence them the generation of thoſe vipers, whoſe practices they profeſs to diſlike, but do really imitate; which is the thing, wherein their hypocriſy conſiſted, and upon which the judgment of hell came upon them. (H.)

Said the wiſdom of God.] They are miſtaken, who would have this to be a ſaying quoted out of the Old Teſtament: And ſo are thoſe who underſtand the words as if they were thus, "I, who am the wiſdom of God, ſay this unto you." Nor are thoſe the leſs ſo, who take the meaning to be, that God had of old foretold by his prophets what ſhould happen to them, but yet cannot refer us to any certain place. Doubtleſs, 'tis an Hebraiſm; like thoſe, "ſaid in his heart (or) within himſelf," &c. So that the ſentence may be, "Therefore the wiſdom of God ordained, or willed:" which the Grecizing Jews interpret by dianoein, or thelein. Thus "the wiſdom of God ſaid," is as much as, "God in his wiſdom ſaid," or only, "God in his wiſdom purpoſed," viz. to ſend partly prophets, and partly apoſtles. (D. H.)

The blood of all the prophets.] The injuſtice and violence done to God's miniſters is that which generally fills up the meaſure of iniquity, and brings down utter deſolation upon ſtates and kingdoms. (Q.) If it be demanded, how 'tis conſiſtent with reaſon and juſtice, "to require the blood of all the prophets (and righteous men, which were ſlain from the beginning of the world) of this generation?" I anſwer, That they, however they might pretend to reverence the prophets, did, by their behaviour to thoſe who were at this time ſent to them by God, approve of what their forefathers did. Since therefore they imitated them, in their cruel treatment of prophets and righteous men, that teſtified, that they approved their deeds, and made them partakers of their ſin; and therefore it was juſt to puniſh them for it. But — our Lord's meaning ſeems to be this, that their puniſhment for rejecting him ſhould be ſo ſevere, as if God intended to revenge on them all the righteous blood that was ever ſhed in the world; tho' their puniſhment was in truth no greater than their own ſins had deſerved. (Fox.)

Zacharias.] See the notes on St. Matt. xxiii. 35.

Key of knowledge.] This is an alluſion to a known cuſtom among the Jews, in the admiſſion of their doctors: For to whomſoever they gave authority to interpret the law and the prophets, they were ſolemnly admitted into that office, by delivering to them a key and a table-book. So that, by "the key of knowledge" is here meant the interpretation and underſtanding of the ſcriptures, and by "taking away the key," not only that they arrogated to themſelves alone the underſtanding of the ſcriptures, but likewiſe that they had conveyed away this "key of knowledge," and, as it were, hid it out of the way; neither uſing it themſelves as they ought, nor ſuffering others to make uſe of it. And thus they are ſaid to have "ſhut up the kingdom of heaven againſt men," Matt. xxiii. 13. meaning that, under a pretence of interpreting the ſcriptures, they had perverted them, (eſpecially the old prophecies concerning the Meſſiah) and kept the true knowledge of them from the people: By which means, they not only rejected the truth themſelves, but hinder'd others alſo from embracing it, and thereby from "entring into the kingdom of heaven." (Tillotſ.)

Provoke him to ſpeak.] The Greek word, apoſtomatizein, properly ſignifies "to recite without book, by heart, or memory," as ſcholars do their leſſon; but, by an Hebraiſm, it is alſo uſed actively, to "make one recite," as the maſter does, who hears the leſſon. Thus did the ſcribes and Phariſees here urge Chriſt vehemently, asking him one queſtion after another, (as an angry ſchoolmaſter does, when he ſeeks occaſion of ſeverity againſt his ſcholar) that they might catch ſomething out of his mouth, whereof they might accuſe him.

CHAP. XII.

Chriſt teacheth his diſciples to avoid hypocriſy, and to be bold in publiſhing his divine truth: Warneth the people againſt covetouſneſs: Inſtructeth them to truſt in God's providence; to be charitable, and watchful: His miniſters to be careful of their charge; and prepared for perſecution: The people to lay hold of the preſent time of reconciliation.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. IN the mean time, when there were gathered together an innumerable multitude of people, inſomuch that they trode one upon another, he began to ſay unto his diſciples firſt of all, Beware ye of the leaven of the Phariſees, which is hypocriſy. For there is nothing covered, that ſhall not be revealed; neither hid, that ſhall not be known. Therefore whatſoever ye have ſpoken in darkneſs, ſhall be heard in the light: and that which ye have ſpoken in the ear in cloſets, ſhall be proclaimed upon the houſe-tops. And I ſay unto you, my friends, Be not afraid of them that kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye ſhall fear: Fear him, which after he hath killed, hath power to caſt into hell; yea, I ſay unto you, Fear him. Are not five ſparrows ſold for two farthings, and not one of them is forgotten before God? But even the very hairs of your head are all numbred. Fear not therefore: ye are of more value than many ſparrows. Alſo I ſay unto you, Whoſoever ſhall confeſs me before men, him ſhall the Son of man alſo confeſs before the angels of God. But he that denieth me before men, ſhall be denied before the angels of God. And whoſoever ſhall ſpeak a word againſt the Son of man, it ſhall be forgiven him: but unto him that blaſphemeth againſt the Holy Ghoſt, it ſhall not be forgiven. And when they bring you unto the ſynagogues, and unto magiſtrates, and powers, take ye no thought how or what thing ye ſhall anſwer, or what ye ſhall ſay: For the Holy Ghoſt ſhall teach you in the ſame hour what ye ought to ſay.

The leaven of the Phariſees.] That is, their doctrine, Matt. xvi. 12. See the notes there. The metaphor ſignifies, that they were puffed up with their own doctrines, and ſowred in their manners, as leaven doth ſwell and ſowre the bread with which it is mixed. (H. and W.) This caution is not inconſiſtent with our Lord's commanding the people to obſerve and do whatſoever they bid them, Matt. xxiii. 3. For our Lord's meaning there is, that they ſhould obſerve them, ſo far as their doctrines were agreeable to the laws of God: But, if their inſtructions did interfere with any duty required by God, then they were not to obſerve, but to be aware of them. Thus he charges them with making the commandments of God of no effect by their traditions, Matt. xv. 6. and elſewhere he calls them blind guides, and cautions the people not to be led by them. (Fox.)

Nothing covered.] That is, under your hypocritical pretences. Tho' ye ſhould be able to conceal the evil of your hearts and actions from men, they will be all made known, and laid open, at the great day of account. (W.) Sooner or later, the hypocrite will be known for what he is; and he is often diſcovered even in this life. (Queſn.) See the notes on Matt. x. 26. and Mark iv. 22.

My friends.] Our Lord calls his diſciples his friends, to comfort and ſupport them under what they ſhould ſuffer for his ſake. (Beza.) See John xv. 14, 15. Chriſt is not one of thoſe, who are altogether for ſparing thoſe they love the trouble of preſent evils, and for lulling them aſleep as to thoſe of eternity, for fear of diſturbing their minds. True friendſhip conſiſts in exciting our friends to do their duty, and ſave their ſouls, at the expence of all other things. (Q.)

Whom ye ſhall fear.] Tho' hypocritical princes have inſtruments of their cruelty, yet there is no reaſon to be afraid of them: for they can do nothing but what God permits; and God will not ſuffer them to do any thing but what ſhall turn to the happineſs of thoſe who fear him. (Beza.) It is our fondneſs for the preſent life, and the conveniences thereof, that makes us fear men; and the cauſe that we cannot prevail with ourſelves to fear God only. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. x. 28. and John xvi. 2.

Ye are of more value.] Since God's providence watches over the ſmalleſt things in the world, ye may be aſſured, that your leaſt concerns are not neglected by him, of whoſe care ye are the more peculiar objects. (W.) This will fortify you againſt all fear. (H.) See the notes on Matt. x. 29.

Confeſs me before men.] Chriſt does not only require of us to believe with the heart, but to confeſs with the mouth, Rom. x. 10. (G.) The inward frame of the heart is diſcovered by outward devotion; and he that does not confeſs his religion when he is put to it, either has none at all, or does not much care for it. God ſays not, I have yet left me ſeven thouſand men in Iſrael, which have not believed in Baal, but whoſe knees have not bowed unto Baal, 2 Kings xix. 18. Which ſhews, that he expects a publick owning of him, as well as a ſecret believing in him. (Sheridan.) Great is the reward of a conſtant confeſſion, dreadful the puniſhment of denying him: And therefore, hard is the trial of ſuch a confeſſion; but God, who is all-ſufficient, will not be wanting in due time, to ſtrengthen the very weakeſt of us, if we do our beſt, and rely on him. (Beza.) See the notes on St. Matt. x. 32.

He that denieth me.] What is here called denying of Chriſt, is, in St. Mark, termed being aſhamed of him, and of his words, Mark viii. 38. There the cauſe is expreſſed, but here the effect; for therefore we deny a thing, becauſe we are aſhamed of it. Now Chriſt and his truths may be denied, 1. By an heretical judgment; 2. Verbally, by oral expreſſions; and, 3. By our actions, which ſpeak louder than our tongues. (South.) Upon this text, Dr. Whitby takes occaſion, at large, to confute the pernicious doctrine of Mr. Hobbs, againſt that ſelf-denial, and taking up the croſs, which "our Lord, ſo expreſly and frequently, requires from all Chriſtians, and Mr. Hobbs, out of his more abundant wiſdom, fully doth excuſe us from." But the particulars of that confutation we ſhall not enter into in this place.

Before the Angels of God.] That is, before God, in whoſe preſence the Angels ſtand. (W.)

Againſt the Son of man.] Concerning the Son of man, and the ſpeaking a word againſt him, as well as the blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt, ſee the notes on Matt. xii. 31. and Mark iii. 29. To all which may be added a ſhort abſtract of ſome excellent obſervations, which may be of great uſe to thoſe, who have perplexed themſelves with the apprehenſion, that they have committed the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, when indeed they have not; as well as to others, who have lived ſo wickedly as to be diſcouraged from repentance, thinking their caſe to be deſperate. 1. The ſin, here ſpoken of, ſeems to be that of aſcribing the miraculous works, which our Lord did by the power of the Holy Ghoſt, to a power derived from the devil, as is before obſerved: And the rather, for that the very next verſe, in St Mark, runs thus, Becauſe they ſaid, he hath an unclean ſpirit. 2. The other ſins which come neareſt to this, ſeem to be the renouncing or apoſtatizing from the Chriſtian religion, (after baptiſm, and a clear conviction of its truth and certainty) and an obſtinate continuance in ſinful courſes without repentance, notwithſtanding all the means uſed to reclaim them. 3. Since 'tis as expreſly declared, that neither fornicators, nor adulterers, nor drunkards, &c. ſhall inherit the kingdom of God, 1 Cor. vi. 9, 10. and Gal. v. 21. and that all liars, &c. ſhall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone, Rev. xxi. 8. and yet all divines acknowledge, that repentance will ſave ſuch, tho' not expreſſed, but only ſuppoſed in thoſe caſes; why may not the like tacit condition be ſuppoſed in this caſe? Eſpecially ſince we find, that many of thoſe who denied the Holy One and the Juſt, and delivered him up to be crucified, were not only called upon, but actually did repent, Acts ii. 33, &c.—iii. 14. For, 4. There is an Hebraiſm in the text, frequent in ſcripture: Like that in Mark xiii. 31. Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away; which in Luke xvi. 17. is explained to mean, that it is eaſier for heaven and earth to paſs (or they ſhall ſooner paſs away) than one tittle of the law ſhall fall. And thus here we may underſtand, that tho' all manner of calumnies and ſlanders againſt the Son of man are grievous ſins, yet they will eaſier be forgiven, than blaſphemy againſt the Holy Ghoſt. And, 5. Whereas in Matt. xii. 32. 'tis ſaid, neither in this world, nor in the world to come, the Romaniſts in vain pretend to prove, that any ſins are forgiven in the world to come; ſince our Lord's meaning ſeems plainly to be, that puniſhment ſhall follow the guilty, both here and hereafter. (Fox.)

Unto the ſynagogues.] See the notes on Matt. x. 17.

Take ye no thought.] The Greek word, merimnao, ſignifies, in general, to be ſolicitous, or careful. It is ſometimes expreſſive of an anxious care for the neceſſaries of life, as is already noted on Matt.

vi. 25. But here it more particularly ſignifies the being thoughtful and ſtudious, as orators are wont to be, when they are preparing to plead a cauſe of great importance, and labouring to make the beſt of it. (G.) See more of this on Luke xxi. 14.

Ver. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34. And one of the company ſaid unto him, Maſter, ſpeak to my brother, that he divide the inheritance with me. And he ſaid unto him, Man, who made me a judge, or a divider over you? And he ſaid unto them, Take heed and beware of covetouſneſs: for a man's life conſiſteth not in the abundance of the things which he poſſeſſeth. And he ſpake a parable unto them, ſaying, The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully. And he thought within himſelf, ſaying, What ſhall I do, becauſe I have no room where to beſtow my fruits? And he ſaid, This will I do: I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I beſtow all my fruits and my goods. And I will ſay to my ſoul, Soul, thou haſt much goods laid up for many years; take thine eaſe, eat, drink, and be merry. But God ſaid unto him, Thou fool, this night thy ſoul ſhall be required of thee: then whoſe ſhall thoſe things be which thou haſt provided? So is he that layeth up treaſure for himſelf, and is not rich towards God. And he ſaid unto his diſciples, Therefore I ſay unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye ſhall eat; neither for the body, what ye ſhall put on. The life is more than meat, and the body is more than raiment. Conſider the ravens, for they neither ſow nor reap; which neither have ſtorehouſe nor barn; and God feedeth them: How much more are ye better than the fowls? And which of you with taking thought can add to his ſtature one cubit? If ye then be not able to do that thing which is leaſt, why take ye thought for the reſt? Conſider the lilies how they grow: They toil not, they ſpin not: and yet I ſay unto you, that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of theſe. If then God ſo clothe the graſs, which is to-day in the field, and to-morrow is caſt into the oven: how much more will he clothe you, O ye of little faith? And ſeek not ye what ye ſhall eat, or what ye ſhall drink, neither be ye of doubtful mind. For all theſe things do the nations of the world ſeek after: and your Father knoweth that ye have need of theſe things. But rather ſeek ye the kingdom of God, and all theſe things ſhall be added unto you. Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleaſure to give you the kingdom. Sell that ye have, and give alms: provide yourſelves bags which wax not old, a treaſure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. For where your treaſure is, there will your heart be alſo.

Who made me a judge?] Chriſt refuſed to be a judge, in the dividing of inheritance; 1. That he might not favour the carnal opinion of the Jews, concerning the temporal kingdom of the Meſſiah. 2. To diſtinguiſh the difference between the civil and eccleſiaſtical powers. And, 3. To caution us againſt thoſe, who abuſe the pretence of the Goſpel, and the name of miniſters, to their own private profit. (Beza.) 'Tis a fooliſh argument of the Anabaptiſts, to infer from this anſwer, that it is unlawful for a Chriſtian to intermeddle in the dividing inheritances, and matters of civil judicature, or to take upon him any ſecular office: for Chriſt does not ſpeak of the thing itſelf, but only of his own vocation; for as he was ſent by his Father to another purpoſe, ſo he refuſed to be a judge, becauſe he had no ſuch commiſſion. (Idem.) He, knowing what had happened to Moſes, Exod. ii. 14. gave here an anſwer in the ſame words, wherein the Greek render'd the Hebrew there; Who made me? &c. meaning, that he would not be liable to ſuch objections, as were then ungratefully made againſt Moſes. (H.)

Covetouſneſs.] The Greek word, pleonexia, literally ſignifies the having more. But it is not uſed for the ſimple deſire of having more; but for ſuch a greedineſs, as inclines men, by force or fraud, to get more than their own. (Gerhard.) Labouring to increaſe their own by leſſening the poſſeſſions of others, and not being content with what they have. (H.)

Man's life conſiſteth.] By a man's life is meant the happineſs and convenience of it: and abundance is that proportion which is more than ſufficient. (Collier.) But a man depends not, either for his being, or well-being, upon the ſuperfluity of his riches; as is exemplified in the parable here following. (Moſs.)

Thou fool.] None are greater fools, than rich men who place their happineſs in riches. (Beza.) God does not pronounce this ſentence upon each rich man in particular; but he ſpeaks here to all. Nothing is more inculcated in the ſcriptures, than the folly of the rich, and the vanity of riches; but no perſon applies it to himſelf. (Q.)

Be required of thee.] The meaning of the Greek word, apaitein, is already noted, upon Luke vi. 30. But, whereas 'tis here, apaitouſi, in the plural number, it muſt be obſerved, that, being expreſſed indefinitely, it ſignifies no more than this, that the rich man's life was not in his own power, but liable to be required of him on demand. (Beza.) See the notes on chap. xvi. 9. and 22.

So is he that layeth up.] This is directly the caſe of any man that makes no uſe of his increaſe and plenty, ſave only to poſſeſs it, and provide for himſelf by it; never thinking of employing that which he hath to ſpare, to the relieving the poor, or otherwiſe to the ſervice of God. (H.) As the deſire of having more than we really need, is one ſpecies of covetouſneſs before-mentioned; ſo from theſe words we learn, that to be more ſolicitous concerning temporal than ſpiritual riches, and to be anxious about them, when we are not yet rich towards God, is another ſpecies of it. This may probably be concluded from the concern of this perſon for the dividing his inheritance, rather than that our Lord ſhould inſtruct him in the way of life; it being this which gave occaſion to the foregoing admonition, to beware of covetouſneſs: And it more clearly follows from the example of the fool, who was ſo much concerned to hoard up his goods, but not at all concerned to be rich towards God; that is, to have his treaſure with God in the heavens, and to eſteem it his chiefeſt riches to be an heir of the kingdom of God, ver. 32. and to employ his riches ſo as to procure God's favour, and his own future happineſs: for this is a plain indication of an heart that values theſe temporal concernments more than God's favour, or celeſtial riches; which in St. Paul's judgment renders the covetous perſon guilty of idolatry, Col. iii. 5. (W.)

Take no thought.] See the notes on Matt. vi. 25. It is very eaſy to paſs from ſolicitouſneſs to covetouſneſs: Therefore, to avoid the latter, we muſt ſecure ourſelves from the former. Who is he who formed our body, compoſed of ſo many different parts, joined together in ſo juſt a proportion; who cauſes them to receive ſpirits and life, by means of ſo many different veſſels; who preſerves the temperature of the humours, ſo neceſſary to its health and conſervation; and keeps off ſo many inward and outward accidents, and ſo many dangers which are capable of deſtroying it? Is he not the ſame God? And can we then fear, that he will ſuffer us to want that little which is neceſſary to feed and clothe this body? That perſon who, with faith and gratitude, often reflects upon what he has already received from God, is far from diſtruſting his providence for the time to come. (Q.)

Conſider the ravens.] "The young ravens (excluded from their neſts by the old ones) which cry unto the Lord, and he feedeth them," Pſalm cxlvii. 9. 'Tis Ariſtotle's obſervation, that the old ravens drive their young out of their neſts. (G. and W.)

Add to his ſtature.] One moment to his life, or one inch to the growth of his body; and how much leſs will your ſolicitude preſerve the whole? (W.) See the notes on Matt. vi. 27.

How much more.] Here is matter of humiliation for the great; the gaiety of their cloaths does not come near the beauty of a flower of the field: Matter of conſolation for the poor; they have a great treaſure, if they have a great faith. (Q.)

Of doubtful mind.] The Greek verb meteoorizesthai ſignifies primarily and literally, "to be carried up high in the air," as clouds and birds, which having no firm foundation there, are driven about uncertainly. Hence it ſignifies, vagari, "to think of this and that without any conſiſtence of mind;" thus meteooros is uſed for him who has a wandring, and ameteooros, for him who has an intention of thoughts, in prayer: Alſo pendere, to hang, as clouds do in the air, in a ſuſpenſe or anxiety; as when we liſten attentively, and are impatient to hear a ſtory or news: So, meteooriſmoi ophthalmoon, in Ecclus. xxvi. 12. ſeems to ſignify the "ſuſpenſe, anxious, earneſt gazing of the eyes," in the character of a libidinous perſon. From hence again 'tis clearly "to be in doubt and uncertainty of reſolution," in the ſame manner as airein pſycheen, to "lift up the mind," is to "keep in ſuſpenſe," John x. 24. So in Dorotheus, Didaſc. i. adiaphorein and meteoorizein are all one; when one is not intent on what he hath in hand, but is uncertain and indifferent which to take to; all one with aſcopoos peripheresthai following, being "carried about without any certain aim." Thus it ſeems to ſignify in this place; where, as oligopiſtia, "littleneſs of faith," is forbidden, ſo is this "doubtful anxiety and ſolicitude" concerning God's providence, this "uncertainty of mind," betwixt hope and fear; merimna, ſolicitude, being put inſtead of it, in Matt. vi. 31. and ſo expreſſed in this chapter, ver. 12. and 25. And ſo ſaith Theophylact. Thus doth pendere, to hang, ordinarily ſignify in Latin; and anoocatheestkai, to be above, in Demoſthenes, de Coron. the very paraphraſe of this word, in its native ſignification. (H.) Meteoriſmos, the thing forbidden here, is (ſaith Theophylact) "a diſtracting and unſtable fluctuation of the mind, or reaſon, about proviſion for the body;" which Chriſt would here remove from the children of God, as being well aſſured, that his wiſdom knoweth what is needful for them, ver. 30. and his fatherly care would certainly provide for them what was ſo. (W.)

Your Father's good pleaſure.] By the word eudokein is ſignified that eternal life flows from the free fountain of mercy. Every word here has its proper emphaſis. If it be God's good pleaſure, what can hurt you, even tho' all others ſhould be diſpleaſed? If God is a Father, why do ye diſtruſt his will? Your Father; not the Father of the patriarchs and prophets only: To give; ye could not obtain this heavenly benefit by the merit of your good works, but it is conferred upon you by the free mercy of your Father: You; tho' poor and ſimple, unrighteous and ſinful: The kingdom, not an earthly and precarious one, but heavenly and eternal. (Beza.)

Sell that ye have.] This is both a precept and exhortation to charity: But it is not here commanded, that we preſently ſell all, and reduce ourſelves to the condition of the poor; but that we ſhould be ready, when God calls, and the neceſſities of Chriſt's needy members require it, to give largely of our ſubſtance. Our Lord bids us "take heed, and beware of covetouſneſs;" the temper therefore of a Chriſtian ſhould be widely different from that of the rich man here, who thought of providing only for himſelf. In the earlieſt times of the Goſpel, ſome ſold all, and put it into a common ſtock, Acts ii. 45. and iv. 34. tho' this practice continued but for a ſhort time, and was not even then laid upon Chriſtians as a neceſſary duty; as appears from St. Peter's reaſoning with Ananias, Acts v. 4. (Fox.) See the notes on Matt. xix. 21.

Give alms. The Greek word eleemoſyne is here uſed by a metonymy, ſignifying the kindneſs of a gracious and merciful diſpoſition, declared by a benefit; and is derived from the word eleemoon, which is alſo derived from eleos, mercy. He therefore is ſaid to give alms, who by doing an act of kindneſs to another, and beſtowing ſomewhat upon him who is in want, ſhews himſelf to be mercifully affected with his miſery. (Beza.) It is tranſlated alms, but ſignifies mercy and pity; therefore all our alms muſt proceed from a merciful and pitiful heart. (Perkins.) In the Syriac, as well as the Hebrew and Chaldee, it is render'd juſtice; to teach us, that alms ſhould be of things well-gotten. (Leigh.) See the notes on Matt. vi. 19. and Luke xi. 41.

Ver. 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44. Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; And ye yourſelves like unto men that wait for the Lord, when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately. Bleſſed are thoſe ſervants, whom the Lord when he cometh ſhall find watching: verily I ſay unto you, that he ſhall gird himſelf, and make them to ſit down to meat, and will come forth and ſerve them. And if he ſhall come in the ſecond watch, or come in the third watch, and find them ſo, bleſſed are thoſe ſervants. And this know, that if the good-man of the houſe had known what hour the thief would come, he would have watched, and not have ſuffered his houſe to be broken through. Be ye therefore ready alſo: for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not. Then Peter ſaid unto him, Lord, ſpeakeſt thou this parable unto us, or even to all? And the Lord ſaid, Who then is that faithful and wiſe ſteward, whom his lord ſhall make ruler over his houſhold, to give them their portion of meat, in due ſeaſon? Bleſſed is that ſervant, whom his lord when he cometh ſhall find ſo doing. Of a truth I ſay unto you, that he will make him ruler over all that he hath.

Let your loins be girded about.] Beſides the general and frequent uſe of girding, for putting on cloaths, there are three ſorts of men which in the ſcripture are proverbially ſaid to be girt: 1. The Jewiſh prieſts, who had a linen girdle, Lev. xvi. 4. and the high-prieſt, one embroider'd with gold, &c. Exod xxviii. 4, 8. and xxxix. 5. after whoſe example the Son of man is deſcribed to be "girt about the paps with a golden girdle," Rev. i. 13. and the ſeven angels alſo, Rev. xv. 6. 2. Soldiers, whoſe military girdle was ſo ſpecial a part of their armour, that in Homer zoonee ſignifies the whole armature, and zoonnusthai, to be girt, is uſed for being armed. Hence, where we render it "all that were able to put on armour," 2 Kings iii. 21. the Greek hath it literally "girt with a girdle:" And to this ſort of the girdle, or military belt, belongs that of Eph. vi. 14. "your loins girt about with truth." 3. Servants, or waiters; who, having their garments, after the Eaſtern manner, looſe and long, found it neceſſary to gird themſelves, that they might ſerve the more readily. In alluſion to which the ſame word, perizoonnumi, is uſed here, and in chap. xvii. 8. and in John xiii. 4. (H.) Chriſt, in theſe verſes, propoſes to us ſeveral means of ſecuring our ſalvation; 1. According to the cuſtom of ſervants, ſoldiers and travellers, to be always ready girt for ſervice, action, or removal. 2. To have in our hands the lamp of faith, ready lighted by God's word, always burning with the love of God and our neighbours, and filled with the oil of good works. 3. To live in expectation of our Lord's return to judgment, ver 36. 4. To be ready for death, and prepared to meet him, when he cometh. 5. To be watchful, and intent upon our duty, ver. 37. 6. To look upon every hour as our laſt, ver. 38. 7. To guard and watch againſt the artifices and ſnares of the devil, ver. 39. 8. To be ready to appear before the Son of God, ver. 40. 9. To perſuade ourſelves, that the truths of the Goſpel are ſeverally addreſſed to us in particular, ver. 41. And, 10. To be faithful in the diſcharge of our duties, like wiſe ſtewards. (Q.)

Your lights burning.] See the parable of the ten virgins, Matt. xxv. 1. and the notes there; as well as on Matt. xxiv. 42.

From the wedding.] Here the duties enjoined are illuſtrated by a compariſon. Suppoſe ſome great man, eſpouſed to a noble virgin, were gone to fetch home his ſpouſe to his own houſe, in order to conſummate the marriage, and intending to return (as the cuſtom was of old) with his bride late at night, would not all his ſervants, eſpecially the chief of them, be ready dreſs'd, put all in order, and wait with lighted torches to receive him, whenſoever he came? Now, our Lord eſpouſed our nature on earth at his incarnation: and when heaven is near filled with glorified ſaints, he will then return to earth with great majeſty, and carry the remainder of holy ſouls up with him, to compleat his great and glorious nuptials at the laſt day. Therefore, all things muſt be put in order, as ye would have him find them. (Comb.)

In the ſecond watch.] Tho' the coming of our Lord is uncertain, yet if we do our duty thus, the reward is certain. "And if he ſhall come" at ever ſo unſeaſonable an hour, as it is ſuppoſed he will (not at nine at night, the firſt watch, becauſe the moſt ſlothful are then ſcarce gone to ſleep;) but if it be "in the ſecond watch" that he come, between nine and twelve, when all, or moſt, are ſoundly ſleeping; or "in the third watch," between twelve and three, before the moſt diligent do awake, it is all one to ſuch a vigilant ſervant as hath made all ready. Let his heavenly Maſter come ever ſo ſuddenly, or (to others) unſeaſonably, and find him ſo prepared, he cannot miſs of an infinite and eternal reward of glory. (Idem.)

What hour the thief would come.] A motive to prevail with men to uſe the like vigilance in ſpirituals, as they do in temporals. (W.) With what care do people watch, that they may not loſe their money, their furniture, and other periſhing things? It ſeems, as if the ſoul were the only thing not worth the pains of being watched and guarded. (Q.)

Who then is, &c.] Our Lord here does not anſwer directly to the queſtion: Yet he ſufficiently doth it, by declaring, that this is to be done by every ſervant, who expects to be rewarded, or treated as one faithful to him; and eſpecially of the guides of the church. (W.) Obſerve here two main qualities in a paſtor, 1. Fidelity, in not appropriating to himſelf the gifts of God, as time, talents, &c. 2. Prudence, in employing them to the profit of his houſhold the church. (Q.) The foregoing parable doth, in ſeveral degrees, belong to every Chriſtian, who hath ſome truſt committed to him by Chriſt; to his Apoſtles as ſtewards, to all Chriſtians as ſervants; and no man's truſt is ſo mean, that diligence in it ſhall not be rewarded: But to them again with ſome difference, as they have received, more or leſs, of divine revelation, immediately or mediately; as it follows in ver. 47.

Ver. 45, 46, 47, 48. But and if that ſervant ſay in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and ſhall begin to beat the men-ſervants, and maidens, and to eat and drink, and to be drunken: The Lord of that ſervant will come in a day when he looketh not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware, and will cut him in ſunder, and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers. And that ſervant which knew his lord's will, and prepared not himſelf, neither did according to his will, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes. But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of ſtripes, ſhall be beaten with few ſtripes. For unto whomſoever much is given, of him ſhall be much required: and to whom men have committed much, of him they will aſk the more.

Shall begin to beat.] As the apoſtatizing Jews did the perſevering Chriſtians. (W.)

Cut him in ſunder.] Separate, or cut him off from the reſt. See the notes on Matt. xxiv. 51.

With the unbelievers.] With thoſe untruſty, falſe ſtewards, the unbelieving Jews. (H.) The puniſhment of an unfaithful miniſter, as well as of every wicked Chriſtian, is, 1. An untimely, ſudden or unexpected death. 2. An eternal ſeparation from God. And, 3. An everlaſting torment with the devils and the reprobate. (Q.)

That ſervant which knew.] This being one great difference betwixt the paſtors of the church and other Chriſtians, they muſt expect a ſeverer puniſhment, as ſinning againſt greater evidence and knowledge of their duty. For "to whom much is given, of them much will be required;" whereas they who, through ſlowneſs of underſtanding, or neglect of paſtors, and multitude of worldly buſineſs, are ignorant of their duty, and ſo neglect it, will find a milder puniſhment; for ignorance may be pitied, but contempt deſerves no mercy. (W.) What our Lord here ſays gives not the leaſt encouragement for any Chriſtian to continue wilfully ignorant. For then only may we hope that our ignorance will be admitted as an excuſe, when we have not a capacity, or the means or opportunities of knowing the will of God. When therefore we refuſe to know the will of God, becauſe we will not do it, our ignorance itſelf is criminal, and renders us worthy to be "beaten with many ſtripes;" and conſequently cannot be pleaded for an excuſe. It would be hard to determine which ſervant an earthly maſter would account moſt faulty, he who knew his will, but neglected to do it; or he who ſhould ſtop his ears, and would not hear what his commands were, having reſolved before-hand not to do them. (Fox.)

Prepared not.] This is well added: For he who prepareth himſelf to do it, even tho' he wants the opportunity or occaſion of doing it, is out of the danger of puniſhment. (G.)

Ver. 49, 50, 51, 52, 53. I am come to ſend fire on the earth, and what will I, if it be already kindled? But I have a baptiſm to be baptiſed with, and how am I ſtraitned till it be accompliſhed! Suppoſe ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay, but rather diviſion. For from henceforth there ſhall be five in one houſe divided, three againſt two, and two againſt three. The father ſhall be divided againſt the ſon, and the ſon againſt the father: the mother againſt the daughter, and the daughter againſt the mother: the mother-in-law againſt her daughter-in-law, and the daughter-in-law againſt her mother-in-law.

I am come to ſend fire.] Chriſt ſays this, not for that it was the primary will of God; but becauſe, tho' he perceived the diſpoſitions of wicked men, and the cruelty that would enſue upon it, yet he nevertheleſs did not forbear to preach his truth; making uſe even of the wicked as inſtruments, in order to the glorifying of his own name, and the purifying of his church. (G.) That doctrine which will cauſe great heats and contentions. (W.) And be the means of exploring and trying, who are faithful, and who are not. (H.) The fervour of charity, a zeal for the ſalvation of ſouls, a love of mortification, and the heat of perſecution, adverſity and affliction, are ſo many ſorts of fire, which conſume the filth of a ſinner, and compleat the ſacrifice of a Chriſtian. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. x. 34.

What will I, if it be already kindled.] The particle ei, which is ordinarily render'd if, is oft an optative, or expreſſion of wiſh or deſire. So, chap. xix. 42. ei egnoos, if thou kneweſt, for O that thou kneweſt! So, chap. xxii. 42. ei boulei, if thou wilt, for O that thou would'ſt! So, Numb. xxii. 29. Joſh. vii. 7. and in Moſes's ſpeech to God. Exod. xxxii. 32. "If thou wilt forgive their ſin!" And this moſt clearly, from the various uſe of the Hebrew, which ſignifies both ſi and utinam; if, and would to God! And thus may it be here, ei eedee aneephthee, "O that it were already kindled!" and then the latter part will be an anſwer to the queſtion propoſed in the former, thus ti theloo, "what will I? or, what do I deſire?" Beyond all things, "that it were already kindled." Another way of rendring the words will bear, "what do I deſire, if it were already kindled?" that is, I deſire no more but this. Or again, by rendring the ti as if it were poos, "how do I deſire that it were already kindled? But as all theſe come to the ſame ſenſe, ſo the former ſeems the more eaſy and natural; unleſs we prefer that other reading, which we find in Marcus Eremita, De Baptiſ. kai eethelon ei eedee aneephthee, "and I would be pleaſed, or glad, if it were already kindled." As for the fire here, altho' that may ſignify only a purgative fire, and intimate Chriſt's deſire of purifying the world from the droſs of ſin, for which he came, Tit. ii. 14. and to refer to the coming of the Holy Ghoſt, who appeared in fire, Acts ii. 3. yet it rather ſeems to be reſtrained by the context to the fire of perſecution, all one with diviſion, ver. 51. which tho' it cauſe ſome ſmart, yet it hath very uſeful qualities, as that of exploring or trying; in which reſpect 'tis ſaid, 1 Cor. xi. 19. "there muſt be diviſions among you, that they which are approved (tried, and found right in this fire) may be made manifeſt among you." And that this ſhould be conſequent to Chriſt's coming; ſee ver. 52. &c. and that of trying, Heb. iv. 12. Luke ii. 35. who are faithful adherents to him, who not; which is the ſpecial work of fire, and the effect of perſecution for Chriſt's ſake. (H. So then the ſenſe of the verſe is this; I come to deliver to the world a doctrine, which will incenſe the world againſt me and my followers, and ſubject us to great ſufferings, (ſignified in ſcripture by fire, Pſalm lxvi. 12. Iſa. xliii. 2. Ecclus. li. 4. and therefore called fiery trials, 1 Pet. iv. 12.) and will baptiſe me in my own blood: but yet I am ſo far from being moved from proſecuting my father's pleaſure, by the proſpect of them, that I wiſh the time of my ſuffering were at hand, and my Goſpel preached to the world (W.)

I have a baptiſm.] i. e. a death to ſuffer. (Idem.) The phraſe echoo baptistheenai is all one with melloo, the note of the future. So, 2 Eſdr. iv. 45. habet venire is uſed for mellei erchesthai, "is to come." And, in the Athanaſian creed, anaſteeſontai, "they ſhall riſe," is rendred in Latin, habent reſurgere. So in Chryſoſtom alſo, and Lactantius oft. (H.) See the notes on Matt. xx. 22.

How am I ſtreightned?] Poos ſynechomai; a ſimilitude taken from a big-bellied woman, who dreads the pains of child-birth, yet ſo as at the ſame time ſhe wiſhes to be delivered of her burden aſſoon as may be. (G. and H.) The earneſt deſire, by which he is ſtreightned, is to bring forth his church by his pains, to waſh her in his blood, to give her life by his own death, and to eſtabliſh the kingdom and glory of his father, by the ſacrifice of himſelf. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. xxvi. 39.

I tell you, Nay, but rather diviſion.] "Suppoſe ye, that I am come to give peace on earth, (i. e. to free you from the troubles of the world?) I tell you, Nay; but rather (to preach that doctrine which will cauſe) diviſion." (W.) See the notes on Matt. x. 34. To which may be added, that Dr. Lightfoot ſuppoſes theſe words to refer to the land of Judæa. If ſo, our Lord may be properly ſaid, to come, not to give that peace to the inhabitants which they expected from the Meſſiah, but a ſword, to deſtroy them for their rejecting him. But we may underſtand the words in a more general ſenſe; and then the meaning of them will be, that, notwithſtanding one great end of our Lord's coming, and of his Goſpel, to promote univerſal love and peace among men, yet through the inveterate malice of the devil, and the mighty corruption of men, it would occaſion much diſcord and ſtrife in the world; and that even between very near relations. (Fox.)

Ver. 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59. And he ſaid alſo to the people, When ye ſee a cloud riſe out of the weſt, ſtraightway ye ſay, There cometh a ſhower; and ſo it is. And when ye ſee the ſouth-wind blow, ye ſay, There will be heat; and it cometh to paſs. Ye hypocrites, ye can diſcern the face of the ſky, and of the earth: but how is it, that ye do not diſcern this time? Yea, and why even of yourſelves judge ye not what is right? When thou goeſt with thine adverſary to the magiſtrate, as thou art in the way, give diligence that thou may'ſt be delivered from him; leſt he hale thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and the officer caſt thee into priſon. I tell thee, thou ſhalt not depart thence, till thou haſt paid the very laſt mite.

When ye ſee a cloud.] See the notes on Matt. 16. 2.

Even of yourſelves.] Take an example from yourſelves. Ye are not wont to neglect the means by which ye may be preſerved from that priſon here, from which ye cannot eſcape till your whole debt be paid; why then neglect ye that repentance towards God, and faith in the Meſſiah, which alone can preſerve you from that infernal priſon, from which ye cannot eſcape? Ye can obſerve the ſigns of heaven for your own temporal advantage; why therefore do ye not obſerve the clearer ſigns of the Meſſiah's coming, and calling you to faith and repentance by his doctrine? (W.)

CHAP. XIII.

Chriſt preſſeth repentance: Healeth on the ſabbath-day: Deſcribeth the power of the Goſpel, in parables. The ſtrait gate. Herod and Jeruſalem reproved.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. THERE were preſent at that ſeaſon, ſome that told him of the Galileans, whoſe blood Pilate had mingled with their ſacrifices. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto them, Suppoſe ye that theſe Galileans were ſinners above all the Galileans, becauſe they ſuffered ſuch things? I tell you, Nay: but except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh. Or thoſe eighteen, upon whom the tower in Siloam fell, and ſlew them, think ye that they were ſinners above all men that dwelt in Jeruſalem? I tell you, Nay: but except ye repent, ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh. He ſpake alſo this parable: A certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard, and he came and ſought fruit thereon, and found none. Then ſaid he unto the dreſſer of his vineyard, Behold, theſe three years I come ſeeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none: cut it down, why cumbreth it the ground? And he anſwering ſaid unto him, Lord, let it alone this year alſo, till I ſhall dig about it, and dung it: And if it bear fruit, well: and if not, then after that thou ſhalt cut it down.

Galileans, whoſe blood.] It is not to be doubted, ſaith Grotius, but that the ſedition of Judas Gaulonites, as it had its riſe in Galilee, ſo found it many followers, and abettors there, who coming up to Jeruſalem, inſinuated into the people, that they were the Lord's people, and therefore were to own him only as their king, and to pay tribute, not to Cæſar, but to his temple. It therefore ſeemeth credible, ſays he, as ſome of the Greek fathers think, that ſuch as theſe were the Galileans, whoſe "blood Pilate mingled with their (paſchal) ſacrifice," as finding they were then ſowing theſe ſeeds of ſedition againſt Cæſar: And if this were at the Paſſover, then the words following, "ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh," agree wonderfully with that account of their deſtruction, which Joſephus and Euſebius give us, that when they were come up from all places to obſerve the Paſſover, they were incloſed in the city by the Romans, and upon the very day appointed for killing the Paſſover, many of them were ſlaughter'd like ſheep, in the very temple, for this very cauſe, that they ſhook off the Roman yoke, and refuſed to pay tribute to Cæſar. (W.)

Tower in Siloam.] The fountain of Siloam, ſaith Joſephus, was on the weſt of Jeruſalem without the wall, and running all along the ſouth of the city; but on the eaſt ſide came within the Lower Jeruſalem, and made the pool of Siloam, or Betheſda, mentioned John v. 2. and ix. 11. and near it, toward the weſt, ſtood the tower here ſpoken of. (W.) They are miſtaken, who think this tower was built upon the aquæduct of Siloam. In Siloam may be well underſtood of the gate in the wall near the pool; the walls and gates there being well furniſhed with towers; and an old ruinous tower might eaſily fall upon ſuch as happened to be paſſing at the time, without their being ſuppoſed to have been the greateſt ſinners in Jeruſalem. (Heinſ.) We muſt not pretend to give an account of the reaſons of the divine adminiſtrations, to ſay why God has done this or that; why he gave the Galileans into the power of Pilate, or why he was pleaſed to deſtroy theſe eighteen by the fall of a tower; for theſe things we cannot certainly know, becauſe the ways and counſels of God are unſearchable; and we do fooliſhly and raſhly, when we offer to give our judgment concerning them. (Blackall.)

Ye ſhall all likewiſe periſh.] Why does Chriſt repeat this truth ſo frequently and forcibly, but only becauſe there are fewer true penitents than we imagine, and becauſe men are not ſufficiently convinced of the neceſſity of repentance? There is no medium; either repentance or damnation. (Q) In the Greek, the phraſe is hooſautoos apoleiſthe, ver. 3. and homoioos apoleiſthe, ver. 5. both which we tranſlate likewiſe; that is, not only that the reſt ſhould alſo periſh, but in like manner as theſe did. Thus we find in Joſephus, that under the preſident Cumanus, 25000 Jews periſh'd about the temple at the feaſt of the paſſover; that under Florus, there was a multifarious ſlaughter of them fighting in the temple; that many of the zealots periſhed in the temple, and waſhed the holy ground with their blood: In that threefold ſedition, betwixt Eleazar, John and Simon, the temple was every-where polluted with the ſlaughters of the prieſts, and thoſe who officiated at the altar; many, who came from far to worſhip, falling before their ſacrifices, and ſprinkling the altar with their blood, inſomuch that the blood of the dead made a pool in the holy court: And, when Titus fought againſt the temple, a multitude of dead bodies lay round the altar, and the blood ran down the ſteps; and many likewiſe periſhed by the ruins of the towers or porches. (W.) The word apoleiſthe, which both the Vulgar and Beza tranſlate peribitis, hath certain obſcure ſignifications, but chiefly theſe three, 1. To be miſerably afflicted with croſſes in this life; as in the poet frequently, hem perii! "alas, I am undone." 2. To be deſtroyed, killed, or dead; as in Matt. xxvi. 52. and elſewhere. And, 3. To ſuffer everlaſting death; as in Rom. ii. 12. and other places. In all which ſenſes it is due to every one who repenteth not of every ſin he committeth. (Biſhop Griff. Williams.)

He ſpake alſo this parable.] Of which this is the plain ſenſe, "This people hath long been unprofitable, made no returns to all God's huſbandry beſtowed upon them, and yet God hath given them ſpace to repent, and ſent his Son to dreſs and manure them; and if this do not work upon them, there is nothing to be expected but deſtruction and exciſion." (H.) The barren fig-tree is faith without works. It is not enough, for a man to be grafted on Jeſus Chriſt by baptiſm, as all Chriſtians are; to be planted in the true church, as the orthodox; to be aſſociated to the prieſthood of Chriſt, as the clergy; or to be incorporated into ſome ſociety for the propagation of religion: The life muſt be anſwerable to the holineſs of the baptiſm, church, prieſthood, and religion. Let us ſeek for fruit ourſelves in our lives, before Jeſus Chriſt come to do it. (Q.)

Theſe three years.] God's patience is indeed both great and long; but yet he will execute judgment in his own time. (Beza.) Theſe three years ſeem not to ſignify only the time of our Lord's preaching among the Jews; for they were not deſtroyed the next year, but above thirty-ſix years after our Lord's aſcenſion: They rather ſeem to be mentioned, becauſe the fruit of ſome fig-trees came not to maturity till the third year. The time he expected afterwards includes the whole time of the Apoſtles preaching to them at Jeruſalem, and to their diſperſions, and to the Gentiles, to gather and ſet up his church among them; and then was the end of the Jewiſh church and temple, and the great deſtruction of that nation to come, Matt. xxiv. 14. Nor were the Jews then given over, but were after our Lord's aſcenſion to be under the diſpenſation of the Holy Ghoſt; and upon the rejection of that call, was Chriſt's prediction, that their houſe ſhould be left to them deſolate, to take place: Whence, after the Holy Ghoſt was fallen down upon them, the Apoſtles were to begin their preaching at Jeruſalem, and to go thence throughout all Judæa, Acts i. 8. and to preach to them remiſſion of ſins, Acts xiii. 38. and this they did with ſuch ſucceſs, as to convert many myriads of them, Acts xxi. 20. And the Apoſtle Paul declares it neceſſary for them to preach the word of God firſt to them, Acts xiii. 46. (W.)

Why cumbreth it the ground? The fig-tree draweth much vegetative moiſture out of the ground, which might have nouriſhed the more fruitful vines: and beſides, the very ſhadow of the fig-tree is hurtful to men. (G.)

Let it alone this year alſo.] Make this one experiment more, whether it will bear fruit or no. (H.) "And ſuch is now God's ſparing mercy to you: He is making further trial of you, whether what I, or my Apoſtles, preaching after my aſcent to heaven, can do, will make you fruitful; and if, after all our labours, ye continue ſtill unfruitful, ye muſt expect to be cut off. (W.)

Ver. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. And he was teaching in one of the ſynagogues on the ſabbath. And behold, there was a woman which had a ſpirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bowed together, and could in no wiſe lift up herſelf. And when Jeſus ſaw her, he called her to him, and ſaid unto her, Woman, thou art looſed from thine infirmity. And he laid his hands on her, and immediately ſhe was made ſtraight, and glorified God. And the ruler of the ſynagogue anſwered with indignation, becauſe that Jeſus had healed on the ſabbath-day, and ſaid unto the people, There are ſix days in which men ought to work: in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the ſabbath-day. The Lord then anſwered him, and ſaid, Thou hypocrite, doth not each one of you on the ſabbath looſe his ox, or his aſs, from the ſtall, and lead him away to watering? And ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo theſe eighteen years, be looſed from this bond on the ſabbath-day? And when he had ſaid theſe things, all his adverſaries were aſhamed: and all the people rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by him.

A ſpirit of infirmity.] The word aſtheneia ſometimes ſignifies a diſeaſe from the effect; as in this place, becauſe it enervates the bodily ſtrength: and ſometimes it is ſpoken, when we are deſtitute of ſpiritual good, according to Beza on Rom. v. 6. This word infirmity is variouſly taken; 1. Sometimes it is oppoſed to health, as in John xi. 4. 2. To ſtrength or perfection, as in Rom. xiv. 1. 3. To proſperity, as in 2 Cor. xii. 9, 10. And, 4. To power, as in 2 Cor. xiii. 4. (Leigh.)

Laid his hands on her.] It is this preventing eye of the mercy of God which ſees the ſinner in the depth of his miſery; it is his inward word which calls him; his ſovereign-will which draws and heals him; and his beneficent hand which confirms and ſtrengthens him, heaps his bleſſings upon him, and leads and conducts him in the way of ſalvation: This hand and this word ſtill act, whenever the church and her miniſters employ their own in his name. (Q.)

The Ruler of the ſynagogue.] One of them. See the Notes on Mark v. 22.

In which men ought to work.] i. e. Are allowed by the commandment to work. (W.) It is manifeſt, that Six days ſhalt thou labour is not a command to work the ſix days, but only an ordinary permiſſion or warrant to do it.

Not on the Sabbath-day.] See the Notes on Luke vi. 7. and Matt. xii. 10.

Thou Hypocrite] This Chriſt pronounced upon the ruler of the ſynagogue, partly becauſe he placed his holineſs chiefly in the obſervation of ritual precepts, or the reſt of the body on the ſabbath-day, preferring that before the great things of the law, which Chriſt ſtill repreſenteth as a ſign of hypocriſy, Mat. xxiii. 23 partly becauſe he pretended a great zeal for the law of God, when he was rather acted in this matter by black envy at the glory of Chriſt, which he that ſaw his heart well knew. (W.) See the Notes on Matt. vi. 2.

From the ſtall.] or ſtable; for ſo the word phatne ſignifies. See the Notes on chap. ii. 7. When the eſſence of religion is made to conſiſt in ceremonies and external uſages, every ſeeming violation of them paſſes for irreligion and profaneneſs. This is, in the judgment of Chriſt himſelf, the vice of hypocrites, as well as to have two different meaſures, and to object as a crime to others, that which they practice every day themſelves. (Q.)

Whom Satan hath bound.] That ſometimes by concurring with, and ſometimes without natural cauſes, many diſeaſes were, by Divine Permiſſion, brought on men by evil ſpirits, the goſpel and hiſtories of Job and Saul inform us. For that Saul, after the departure of the good ſpirit, fell into demoniacal paſſions, and had perturbations from dæmons, or, as the ſcripture expreſſes, by the evil ſpirit from God, 1 Sam. xxi. 14, 23. we learn from Joſephus. And, by confeſſion of Maimonides, Satan was the cauſe of all that Job ſuffered, not only in his ſubſtance but his body, Job ii. 7. And the Targum on Pſa. xci. 6, numbers Troops of dæmons, among thoſe who inflict plagues and death upon men. (W.) See the notes on Matt. iv. 24. and Luke. viii. 36.

Eighteen years.] This ſpace of time admoniſheth us, that tho' God doth not immediately remedy our miſeries, we ought never to deſpair. (Beza.)

Ver. 18, 19, 20, 21. Then ſaid he, Unto what is the kingdom of God like? and whereunto ſhall I reſemble it? It is like a grain of muſtard-ſeed, which a man took, and caſt into his garden, and it grew, and waxed a great tree: and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it. And again he ſaid, Whereunto ſhall I liken the kingdom of God? It is like leaven, which a woman took and hid in three meaſures of meal, till the whole was leavened.

The kingdom of God.] The kingdom of God, or the kingdom of heaven, is diverſely taken in Holy Scripture; but eſpecially theſe three ways, 1. For the kingdom in heaven, which the godly ſhall poſſeſs hereafter: In which ſenſe it is to be underſtood Matt. xxv. 34. 2. For that which qualifies and prepares us for the former, viz. Grace and holineſs: And this is called the kingdom of heaven, 1, Becauſe, even while ſuch do live on earth, their converſation is in heaven, Phil. iii. 20. and 2. Becauſe of the peace of conſcience and joy in the Holy Ghoſt, which is inſeparable from it, Rom. xiv. 17. 3. For that whereby we are prepared for both the former, that is, the preaching of the goſpel: And in this ſenſe we are to underſtand it here. The word of God, (which is called the Teſtimony, Iſa. viii. 20. becauſe it bears witneſs to itſelf,) examined and compared in like places, calls the preaching of the goſpel, the kingdom of God, Matt. xxi. 43. and Luke x. 11. and the kingdom of heaven, Matt. xxiii. 13. (T. Adams.) And this is compared unto ſeed, Matt. xiii. 3. Mark iv. 3. Luke viii. 5. to pearls, Matt. xiii. 46. to a net, ver. 47. to a grain of muſtard ſeed, ver. 31. Mark iv. 31. and here, ver. 19. to leaven, Matt. xiii. 33. and here alſo, ver. 21. For (as Beza obſerves) God lays the foundation of his kingdom upon ſmall beginnings, that the unexpected progreſs of it might the better illuſtrate the greatneſs of his power.

Like a grain of muſtard-ſeed.] That muſtard-ſeed grows into a great tree, is affirmed, Matt. xiii. 32. (where ſee the notes:) And thereupon it is there ſaid, that it is meizon lachanoon, not the greateſt of herbs, or things that grow of ſeeds, but (as meizon imports) greater than ſuch; and therefore it follows there, that it becometh a tree, and here that tree a great one, dendron mega. This is not to be meaſured by what we ſee of this ſeed among us, but by conſidering the Hebrew ſoil and clime, of which this is ordinarily affirmed among their authors. In the Babyloniſh Talmud, Ketub. fol. 3. there is mention of three boughs of "mustard, one of which being broken off from the reſt, yielded nine kabs of ſeed, and the wood thereof was ſufficient to cover a little houſe." So in the Jeruſalem Talmud, Pach. c. 7. there is mention of a bough which yielded three kabs of that ſeed. And again in the ſame place, of a ſtem or bough of muſtard, which Simon the ſon of Calaphta had in his garden, into which he could climb up as into a fig-tree. And therefore, agreeably to this it is that our Saviour here ſpeaks ſo great things of it. And whereas it is ſaid, Matt. xiii. 32. that it is the leaſt of all ſeeds, altho' among us ſome other ſeeds may be found leſs than that, as Rue, and Poppy, yet it is not neceſſary it ſhould be ſo there. However, it is apparent that the ſmallneſs of it was proverbial among them, and is therefore mentioned by Maimonides, More Neb. p. 1. c. 56. and ſet oppoſite to the firmament; the one as an inſtance of the ſmalleſt, the other of the greateſt magnitude. (H. and Gregory.) And thus ſhall the Goſpel of the kingdom of God, from a very ſmall beginning, grow up into the greateſt of all kingdoms. (W.)

Like leaven.] Chriſt's parables were divers, when yet by thoſe ſundry ſhadows he aimed directly at one light. He doth (as it were) draw the curtain of heaven, and deſcribe the kingdom of God by many reſemblances. In this and the foregoing here, he teaches the ſame doctrine, the ſpreading virtues of the Goſpel. Which intention is, to fit his documents to the diſpoſition of his patients. Chriſt derives a parable from an army, to teach ſoldiers; from legal principles, to inſtruct lawyers; from the field and ſowing, to ſpeak familiarly to the husbandman's capacity; and from domeſtical affairs, to that of the women. (Ad.) The ſame things are oft taken in different ſenſes; ſometimes oblique, not ſeldom oppoſite. Chriſt, in other places, pre-moniſheth his Apoſtles againſt the leaven of the Phariſees, Sadducees, and Herodians, Matt. xvi. 6. (where ſee the notes) Mark xvi. 15. and Luke xii. 1. and St. Paul bids us purge out the old leaven, 1 Cor. v. 7. But here it is uſed as graciouſly, as there grievouſly; and no meaner thing is compared to it than the kingdom of God. As leaven ſpreads into the whole lump, ſo the Goſpel regenerates the whole man. (Idem.) Yea, ſo ſhall it ſpread, till it hath ſeaſoned all the nations of the earth. (W.) As to the three meaſures of meal, ſee the notes on Matt. xiii. 33.

Ver. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30. And he went through the cities and villages, teaching and journeying towards Jeruſalem. Then ſaid one unto him, Lord, are there few that be ſaved? And he ſaid unto them, Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate: for many, I ſay unto you, will ſeek to enter in, and ſhall not be able. When once the maſter of the houſe is riſen up, and hath ſhut to the door, and ye begin to ſtand without, and to knock at the door, ſaying, Lord, Lord, open unto us; and he ſhall anſwer and ſay unto you, I know you not whence you are: Then ſhall ye begin to ſay, We have eaten and drunk in thy preſence, and thou haſt taught in our ſtreets. But he ſhall ſay, I tell you, I know you not whence you are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity. There ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth, when ye ſhall ſee Abraham, and Iſaac, and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and you your ſelves thruſt out. And they ſhall come from the eaſt, and from the weſt, and from the north, and from the ſouth, and ſhall ſit down in the kingdom of God. And behold, there are laſt which ſhall be firſt, and there are firſt which ſhall be laſt.

Are there few that be ſaved?] This queſtion ſeems to be propounded agreeably to that ſentiment of the Jews, that all Iſraelites ſhould have their portion in the world to come: To which Chriſt was not pleaſed to give an anſwer that might ſatisfy the curioſity of the man, but rather an inſtruction that might benefit him; it being not our concern to know how many will be ſaved, but how we may be ſaved. (W. and G.) But ſoozeſthai, to be ſaved, is not always to be interpreted of eternal ſalvation, but of temporal eſcaping. Thus, in the Old Teſtament, the original Hebrew for ſaving or delivering one's ſelf, is ordinarily render'd to be ſaved or delivered, meaning to eſcape. So 'tis uſed where Lot ſays, I cannot eſcape to the mountain, Gen. xix. 19. and where the Angel bids him make haſte and eſcape to Zoar, ver. 22. So again, 1 Sam. xix. 12. Iſa. xlv. 20. and xlix. 6. Joel ii. 32. and elſewhere. Thus it is alſo uſed in the New: As in John xi. 12. where 'tis ſaid of Lazarus, If he ſleep, he ſhall do well; ſootheeſetai, he will eſcape death; In Acts xxvii. 31. Ye cannot be ſaved, that is, ye cannot eſcape ſhipwreck; and again, chap. xxviii. 1. diaſoothentes, when they were eſcaped; beſides a great many more of the like import. The next thing obſervable is, that in the prophets there is frequent mention of a remnant that ſhould, by the mercy of God, be reſcued out of the common calamity of the Jews that was at hand. Theſe are ſometimes called the eſcaping of the houſe of Judah, or the eſcaping that remaineth, or the remnant that is eſcaped, Iſa. xxxvii. 31, 32. that is, the ſoozomenoi, they who eſcape when others periſh; according to that of Nehem. i. 2, 3. and other places. From this acceptation of the word ſoozomenoi, the ſaved, for the remnant which ſhould eſcape the deſtruction of the Jews, (and which are frequently called electoi, the elect, and ſometimes cataxioothentes ekphugein, thoſe who are accounted worthy of the honour or favour to eſcape, Luke xxi. 36.) another is taken of it, for thoſe who believe in Chriſt, and adhere to him. So, whereas it was propheſied, that the remnant of Iſrael ſhould return, Iſa. x. 22. (which was literally ſpoken of the return from captivity,) the Apoſtle applies it to their receiving the faith, to cataleimma ſootheeſetai, a remnant ſhall be ſaved, Rom. ix. 27. that is, ſhall eſcape out of that epidemical unbelief, and receive Chriſt. So the ſalvation (Scoteeria) which was come to Zaccheus, Luke xix. 9. was the converſion of the publican or ſinner to repentance, ver. 10. So 1. Cor. vii. 16. the believing wife's ſaving her huſband, is converting him to the faith: And Rom. xi. 14. the provoking and ſaving the Jews is by emulation bringing them to repent and receive the faith. And ſo the Soozomenoi here ſhall be thoſe, eſpecially the Jews, that believed in Chriſt and adher'd to him, according to the import of Acts xv. 17. that the reſidue of men, (that is, of the Jews, oppoſed to the Gentiles aftermentioned) might ſeek after the Lord. And then the clear meaning of this man's queſtion here will be, whether this doctrine of the faith of Chriſt, ſo contrary to the humour and paſſions of the world, ſhould be able to propagate itſelf, and prove ſo ſucceſsful, as to be received by many; or whether it ſhould be contained and incloſed within a narrow pale? that ſo he might either reſiſt Chriſt with the many, or have the honour of being one of the few ſingular perſons that received him. And accordingly Chriſt's anſwer is to put him on that narrow path that leadeth to life, that the few were likely to find; the way of infidelity being broad and beaten, tho' it led to abſolute deſtruction. By this explication of the word in this place, will appear alſo what is meant by it in Acts ii. 47. 1 Cor. i. 18. 2 Cor. ii. 15. and elſewhere. (H.)

Strive to enter in at the ſtrait gate.] The word agoonizomai, contendo, ſimply implies, 1. A power and ſtrength whereby to ſtrive: 2. An uſing that power by way of reſiſting and oppoſing the contrary: 3. Such oppoſing as overcomes. (Leigh.) It is a compariſon between the worldly combatant, and the ſpiritual; between the wreſtler of this world, and the wreſtler with it; between him who ſtrives for the maſtery over others, and him who ſtrives for the maſtery over himſelf; between the contenders in the olympick games, and the contender in the chriſtian race: And it is an apt and fit compariſon. Olympus in the heathen poets, is commonly uſed for heaven: So the olympick exerciſes may well be uſed to reſemble thoſe for heaven; and the heavenly crown likened to the olympick garland, without any offence, tho' with all advantage. (Frank.) Here Chriſt ſhews, that the number of them who may be ſaved is not defined by any decree of God, excluding all others from it, or rendring them unable to attain it; for then Chriſt muſt in vain exhort them to uſe their diligence to enter in at the ſtrait gate which leadeth to eternal life: And yet, by ſaying Agoonizeſthe, ſtrive, as men in agony, to do it, he ſhews, this requires great conſtancy, diligence and courage, and a ſtrong conflict with the world, the fleſh, and the devil; and ſo ſuch only will obtain it. (G. and W.) See the notes on Matt. vii. 13.

And ſhall not be able.] Not for want of power or ſufficient grace on God's part, but for its being too late to enter, when the door is ſhut, ver. 25. The ſenſe therefore runs thus; 'Be careful, O ye Jews, now to believe and obey my word, before the kingdom be taken from you, and the gate of the goſpel banquet be ſhut, ſo that ye after knock in vain for entrance.' Matt. xxv. 10, 11. (W.) Chriſt here gives an implicit anſwer to the preceding queſtion: For, as there are few, who ſtrive to enter in at the ſtrait gate, ſo there are few who are ſaved. Men may make devotion as eaſy as they pleaſe; they may widen the gate of heaven, and flatter themſelves and others that their ſalvation is continually in their own hands: The direct contrary is true, ſince truth itſelf aſſures us ſo. Salvation is neither for the ſlothful and idle who will not ſtrive; nor for ſuch as will not enter in at the ſtrait gate; nor yet for thoſe who preſume to the very laſt, either upon their own ſtrength, or upon the grace of God. (Q.)

We have eaten and drank.] We have eaten of the Manna from heaven, and drank of the water out of the rock; we have eaten of thy ſacrifices, and drank of thy drink offerings; we have heard thy voice on mount Horeb, and thy law daily in our ſynagogues. (Beza.)

I tell you, I know you not.] Ye were workers of iniquity; and therefore I never knew you; nor do I now approve of, or own you as ſuch: For, not to know here is not to approve; and on the contrary to know, is to approve and own. (Fox.) See the notes on Matt. vii. 23.

Depart from me.] Here is foretold the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. (Beza.)

Weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.] The joy and happineſs of the elect will be the diſpair and puniſhment of the reprobate; becauſe in hell envy will reign at its utmoſt height, as charity will be perfect in heaven. (Q.) See the notes on Matt. viii. 12.

And they ſhall come.] Tho' but few Jews ſhould receive the faith, yet diſciples ſhall come into Chriſt from all the quarters of the world; and by him be received and entertained in the church, as at a feaſt; and ſo conſequently bear the patriarchs company in heaven. (H.) See the notes on Matt. viii. 11.

There are laſt.] That is, rhe Gentiles, called at the laſt hour, which ſhall be firſt in this kingdom; and the Jews, to whom the goſpel was firſt preached, and who are ſtiled God's firſt born, Exod. iv. 22. ſhall be laſt; i. e, caſt out of this kingdom, and not recalled till the laſt, or at the cloſe of the world. (W.) The Gentiles, tho' they were laſt called into God's vineyard, yet they believing in, and thankfully receiving Chriſt, were made partakers of the bleſſings of his kingdom: Whereas the Jews, who were firſt in God's vineyard, and were by Jeſus Chriſt and his Apoſtles firſt called, were rejected, few of them coming, when they were called and invited by them; and continuing ſtill in unbelief, they ſhall be the laſt who ſhall partake of the privileges of the Goſpel, and not converted till the fulneſs of the Gentiles is come in. The reaſon therefore, why few of them were choſen, Matt. xx. 16. was, becauſe few of them complied with the call given to them. They were ſeriouſly called by Jeſus Chriſt; but they either did not anſwer, Iſa. l. 2. and lxvi. 4. or if they anſwered they refuſed to come, Luke xiv. 20. or if they came, their fear of men, and their love of riches, Mark x. 22. prevailed with them to go back and leave him: They wilfully rejected the gracious offers made to them by the ſon of God: It was their own fault therefore that they were not choſen; not God's, who did his part towards their being ſuch as he could chuſe and make happy. (F.) See the notes on Matt. xx. 16.

Ver. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35. The ſame day there came certain of the Phariſees, ſaying unto him, Get thee out and depart hence: for Herod will kill thee. And he ſaid unto them, Go ye and tell that fox, Behold, I caſt out devils, and I do cures to day and to morrow, and the third day I ſhall be perfected. Nevertheleſs, I muſt walk to day, and to morrow, and the day following: for it cannot be that a prophet periſh out of Jeruſalem. O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem, which killeſt the prophets, and ſtoneſt them that are ſent unto thee: how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not? Behold, your houſe is left unto you deſolate: And verily I ſay unto you, ye ſhall not ſee me, until the time come when ye ſhall ſay, Bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Herod will kill thee.] Upon his inſtructing the people, and doing miracles, ſome of the Phariſees, unwilling that they ſhould thus ſee his power, and hear his doctrine, were very deſirous to have him gone; and for a pretence, ſuggeſted the danger he was in from Herod, if he ſhould ſtay any longer in his juriſdiction. (H.) Grotius thinks, theſe Phariſees came not of their own accord, but at the private inſtigation of Herod, who was willing to have him removed farther off, becauſe he gave publick teſtimony of the innocence of John. (G.)

Tell that fox.] This meſſage to Herod is no breach of that command, which forbids the "ſpeaking evil of the ruler of the people;" and conſequently no blemiſh in our Lord's example. For our Lord here acts as a prophet, as one who had received an extraordinary commiſſion from God: And thoſe who were truly prophets, were, in the execution of their commiſſion, above the greateſt men, and moſt powerful princes; whom they were not to ſpare, when God ſent them to reprove for ſin. (Fox.)

I caſt out devils.] I hurt no-body; and I clear his country of diſeaſes and devils: why therefore does he ſeek to kill me? (G.)

I ſhall be perfected.] That is, by death be conſecrated to my prieſtly office: And ſo he needs not be concerned to put me to death, who ſhortly am to die, a ſacrifice for the ſins of the whole world. (W.)

I muſt walk to-day.] Dei me poreueſthai. This verb, which is commonly rendred proficiſci, ire, abire, diſcedere, vadere, pergere, iter facere; that is, "to go, to go on, to be gone," &c. is often metaphorically uſed to ſignify the courſe or conduct of man's life; as Luke i. 6. Thus, 1 Pet. iv. 13. 2 Pet. ii. 10. and iii. 3. Jude 16. and 18. It is uſed to ſignify Chriſt's going to death; including alſo his reſurrection; aſcenſion, and ſitting at the right hand of God the Father, John xiv. 2, 3, 12, 28. and xvi. 7, 28. 'Tis for the moſt part underſtood of a removal from one place to another; tho' it does not always ſignify a voluntary, but ſometimes an involuntary going; as where Judas is ſaid to be "gone to his own place," Acts i. 25. (Leigh.) Here it may be underſtood either generally of Chriſt's going to death, (and ſo it will be all one with teleiouſthai, "to be martyr'd," or, as it is render'd in the foregoing verſe, "to be perfected") or more particularly of his going from thence to Jeruſalem, where he was to ſuffer, when his work ſhould be done. (H.) For thoſe words "to-day, and to-morrow, and the day following" do not ſignify any more than that the time of his departure was drawing on, and would not be long deferred; as Theophylact rightly expounds them. (D. H.)

It cannot be that a prophet periſh out of Jeruſalem.] Becauſe that was the place where the judgment of the great Sanhedrim was; and where alone the caſes of prophets accuſed of great crimes were to be tried. (H. and W.) The only place where this great conſiſtory ſat, was within the court of the temple, in the paved chamber, ſo called from the curious cut ſtones wherewith it was paved, which is alſo called lithoſtrooton, the pavement, John xix. 13. (Godwyn.)

O Jeruſalem, Jeruſalem.] See the notes on Matt. xxiii. 37.

Under her wings.] This ſeems to be a proverbial phraſe among the Jews, for gathering and admitting of proſelytes. (H.)

CHAP. XIV.

Chriſt healeth the dropſy on the ſabbath; teacheth humility, and charity to the poor: Sheweth in a parable, that thoſe who contemn the feaſt of the Goſpel ſhall be ſhut out of heaven; that his diſciples muſt learn to bear the croſs, and to prepare for adverſity.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. AND it came to paſs, as he went into the houſe of one of the chief Phariſees, to eat bread on the ſabbath-day, that they watched him. And behold, there was a certain man before him which had the dropſy. And Jeſus anſwering, ſpake unto the lawyers and Phariſees, ſaying, Is it lawful to heal on the ſabbath-day? And they held their peace. And he took him, and healed him, and let him go: And anſwered them, ſaying, Which of you ſhall have an aſs or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not ſtraightway pull him out on the ſabbath-day? And they could not anſwer him again to theſe things.

One of the chief Phariſees.] Probably Nicodemus, mentioned in John iii. 1. (Fox.) One of the Phariſees who was a ruler in the Sanhedrim; for they are called archontes, rulers, Luke xxiv. 20. John iii. 1. Acts iii. 17. and 1 Cor. ii. 8. &c. (W.) See the notes on Matt. ix. 18. and Mark v. 22.

They watched him.] They themſelves who had invited him did inſidiouſly and treacherouſly watch and obſerve what he would do, on purpoſe to take advantage againſt him, contrary to all laws of hoſpitality. (H.) Two things concurred to cheriſh ſuch expectations; the preſence of a dropſical man, and its being the ſabbath-day. Hence naturally would ariſe this difficulty, that, either by forbearing to heal at that time, Jeſus would betray his fear, and ſtrengthen their ſuperſtitions with regard to ſuch ritual obſervances, or elſe by doing it he muſt incur the cenſure and odium of a ſabbath-breaker, and a contemner of the law. (Stanhope.)

Is it lawful to heal on the ſabbath-day?] The holy Jeſus, that he might draw off and ſeparate Chriſtianity from the yoke of ceremonies, by aboliſhing and taking off the ſtricteſt Moſaical rites, choſe to do very many of his miracles upon the ſabbath, that he might do the work of abrogation and inſtitution both at once: For, tho' upon all days Chriſt was operative and miraculous, yet many reaſons did concur, and determine him to a more frequent working upon thoſe days of publick ceremony and convention. (Howel.) See the notes on Matt. xii. 10. It is not to be thought this caſe was put to ſatisfy any ſcruples in our Lord, concerning the lawfulneſs of that action: But by offering thus to argue the point, he deſigned to gain an advantage from their inſidious ſilence. The act of healing had been equally lawful without it, but the manner of it had not been equally prudent. (St.)

Anſwered them, ſaying.] Anſwering is here put for ſpeaking, as 'tis frequently uſed in the Old Teſtament. (Tremel.) Apocrinomai, reſpondeo, according to the Hebrew phraſe, is ſpoken of him who begins a ſpeech, when no queſtion went before; as in Matt. xi. 25. xvii. 4. and xxviii. 5. Revel. vii. 13. and elſewhere: And ſometimes it is applied to him who moves any objection, whereby he contradicts what was ſaid before; as in Matt. xii. 38. and xxvi. 33. Luke xi. 45. and here in ver. 14. (Leigh.) Here apocritheis, anſwering, is twice uſed, where neither any queſtion was put, nor any thing ſaid to him: But then, 'tis ſtill an anſwer to ſome inward conception or reaſoning, or to ſome action expreſſive of their ſentiments concerning him. Sometimes it is uſed, when he perceived their inward thoughts and reaſonings, about his actions, words or perſon. Thus, when the Phariſees were conſulting, how they might apprehend him, for the parable he ſpake againſt them, he, anſwering, ſpake another parable, Matt. xxii. 1. So "when Jeſus perceived their thoughts, he anſwering ſaid," Luke v. 22. So he anſwers to what the Phariſee "ſpake within himſelf," chap. vii. 39, 40. Sometimes he anſwers to their actions, as diſcovering their apprehenſions of him. Thus, when they came to take him, Jeſus, anſwering, ſaid to them, "Are ye come out as againſt a thief?" Mark xiv. 48. So, to the barren fig-tree, he anſwering, ſaid, "No man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever," Mark xi. 14. So, reflecting on the infidelity and impenitence of thoſe cities, among whom he had done his mighty works, and of thoſe Phariſees who believed neither him nor the Baptiſt, he anſwering, ſaid, "I thank thee, Father," Matt. xi. 25. So, when Peter had ſmitten off the ear of Malchus, Jeſus, anſwering, with relation to that action, ſaith, "Suffer ye thus far," Luke xxii. 51. So, Peter anſwers not to what he had heard, but to what he had ſeen, Matt. xvii. 4. So Elizabeth anſwers, without being ſpoken to, the diſcourſe of the women about the name of her ſon, Luke i. 60. And the angel anſwers to the fear of the women, Matt. xxviii. 5. And the high-prieſt to Chriſt's ſilence, "I adjure thee to tell us," Matt. xxvi. 63. And St. John the Evangeliſt (to Chriſt's words, "Whoſoever ſhall receive one of ſuch children, in my name, receiveth me") "Maſter, we ſaw one caſting out devils in thy name," &c. Mark ix. 38. (W.)

Which of you ſhall have an aſs.] He might have diſcourſed very nicely upon the nature, the inſtitution, the end of the ſabbath; but he rather chuſes to turn their own practice upon them: And this, in truth, is the method of treating violent and ſelf-conceited men. (St.) See the notes on Matt. xii. 11. and Luke xiii. 15.

Ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. And he put forth a parable to thoſe which were bidden, when he marked how they choſe out the chief rooms; ſaying unto them, When thou art bidden of any man to a wedding, ſit not down in the higheſt room: leſt a more honourable man than thou be bidden of him; And he that bade thee and him come and ſay to thee, Give this man place; and thou begin with ſhame to take the loweſt room. But when thou art bidden, go and ſit down in the loweſt room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may ſay unto thee, Friend, go up higher: then ſhalt thou have worſhip in the preſence of them that ſit at meat with thee. For whoſoever exalteth himſelf ſhall be abaſed; and he that humbleth himſelf ſhall be exalted.

He put forth a parable.] In their feaſts the Jews were wont to ſeaſon their meat with good conference; ſuch as might either yield matter of inſtruction, or exerciſe their wits: And the ſame practice was alſo obſerved in the Chriſtian love-feaſts. Of the former ſort was this parable; of the latter was Sampſon's riddle, Judges xiv. 12.

To thoſe which were bidden.] Kekleemenoi, for the moſt part, are the cleetoi, or called, which are oppoſed to the eclectoi, or choſen; according to that in St. Matt. xx. 16. "Many be called, but few choſen." See the note there. To thoſe who were bidden, or called, or invited to a feaſt, the higheſt or chief place was ordinarily due. On which account Saul's being placed by Samuel, in the "chiefeſt place among them that were bidden" to a feaſt by him, 1 Sam. ix. 22. was looked upon as an omen of his deſignation to the kingdom. (Heinſ.)

A wedding,] i. e. a wedding-feaſt; for ſo the ſame word gamos ſignifies alſo, Matt. xxii. 3. xxv. 10. and John ii. 1. (H)

Sit not down.] The verb here uſed is cataclino, which ſignifies diſcumbo, to lye down. And, in the days of our Saviour, it is apparent, that the geſture of the Jews was ſuch as the Romans uſed. The table being placed in the midſt, round about the table were certain beds, ſometimes two, ſometimes three, ſometimes more, according to the number of the gueſts: Upon theſe they laid down in manner as followeth; each bed contained three perſons, ſometimes four, ſeldom or never more: if one lay upon the bed, then he reſted the upper part of his body upon the left elbow, the lower part lying at length upon the bed; but if many lay on the bed, then the uppermoſt did lie at the bed's head, laying his feet behind the ſecond's back; in like manner the third or fourth did lie, each reſting his head in the others boſom. (Godw.)

In the higheſt room.] When quality, cuſtom, or laws, have regulated and ſettled places in publick aſſemblies, a man may then take them, but he muſt not love them. When nothing of this nature is ſettled, the law of humility and the love of order are the only judges of what is proper. To take the higheſt place, when it is not our due, is a piece of vanity which is plain and viſible; obſtinately to refuſe it, is another inſtance of the ſame vice, tho' it be more private and concealed. Humility takes as much care to avoid the oſtentation of an affected refuſal, as the open ſeeking a ſuperior place. This parable does immediately relate to the outward behaviour, but the thing ſignified thereby is inward humility; which prefers itſelf to none, and is not at all ambitious of the firſt place in the eſteem of others. (Q.)

Then ſhalt thou have worſhip.] Doxa, that is, glory, or honour; which, tho' it ought not to be our chief deſign in any virtuous action, yet hence it follows, that this may be one motive to the performance of ſuch actions, Phil. iv. 8. (W.) Worſhip is explain'd to ſignify majeſty, dignity, excellency, what deſerves to be honoured, or is honoured; that glory and power in God to which we pay our devotion: For ſo it ſignified with our Saxon anceſtors, who uſed worthineſs and worſhip as words of the ſame power and ſignification. Our tranſlators of the Pſalter uſe the word in this ſenſe, Pſalm iii. 3. xcvi. 6. and elſewhere. We now by worſhip moſt commonly mean that honour which we pay to God; and our tranſlators do often take it in that ſenſe alſo. Further, worſhip does not only ſignify the eminent dignity which is in God, but that which is in a low degree in man: And this ſenſe of the word is not yet loſt, even in our own common language; for we ſtill call that honour and authority which belongs to a magiſtrate his worſhip. Our tranſlators of the Pſalter retain the word alſo in this ſenſe, when they ſay, that "God gives worſhip (that is, honour and dignity) to them who lead a godly life;" Pſalm lxxxiv. 12. Nay, our laſt tranſlators uſe the word in the ſame; viz. in this text. Who then can wonder, that, in the Matrimonial Office, the huſband is taught to worſhip his wife? that is, to pay her all due reſpect. (Johnſon.)

Whoſoever exalteth.] This was a moral ſentence, frequently repeated by the ancient Jewiſh doctors. (Tremel.)

Ver. 12, 13, 14, 15. Then ſaid he alſo to him that bade him, When thou makeſt a dinner or a ſupper, call not thy friends, nor thy brethren, neither thy kinſmen, nor thy rich neighbours; leſt they alſo bid thee again, and a recompence be made thee. But when thou makeſt a feaſt, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind: And thou ſhalt be bleſſed; for they cannot recompenſe thee: for thou ſhalt be recompenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt. And when one of them, that ſat at meat with him, heard theſe things, he ſaid unto him, Bleſſed is he that ſhall eat bread in the kingdom of God.

When thou makeſt a dinner.] Some think Chriſt ſpeaks here of the ſacred banquet made by the Jews, on their peace-offerings, and other feaſts, to which they are bid "to call the poor, the widow, and the Levite," Deut. xiv. 29. But this ſeems a miſtake; for Chriſt ſpeaks not of any ſpecial ſtated feaſts, but of ſuch banquets as he was then at: Nor hath he one word of the widow, and the Levite, who were to be gueſts there, but of the blind, the lame, the maimed, of which the law ſaith nothing; nor doth he ſay, "For this the Lord ſhall bleſs thee upon earth," as Deut. xiv. 29. but, "Thou ſhalt be recompenſed at the reſurrection of the juſt." 2. Chriſt doth not abſolutely forbid us to invite our friends, our brethren, or kinsfolk, to teſtify our mutual charity and friendſhip, and how dear our relations are to us; only he would not have us invite them out of a proſpect of a compenſation from them again; but to prefer the exerciſing our charity to them who cannot recompenſe us. Nor, 3. Doth he lay upon us a neceſſity, by this precept, to call the lame, the blind, or maimed, to our tables; but either to do this, or what is equivalent to us, in reſpect of charge, and more advantagious to them and their families, viz. to ſend them meat, or money to refreſh them at home. Note alſo, that Dion Chryſoſtomus, who flouriſhed in the time of Trajan, ſeems to have taken his obſervation hence, that "they did act ſordidly as to poor ſtrangers, who did entertain the rich only friendly, with their hoſpitalities and gifts, from whom they expected to receive as much again." (W.)

Call not thy friends.] Sometimes negative particles are to be underſtood by way of compariſon. Thus Prov. viii. 10. Receive my inſtruction, and not ſilver; i. e. rather than ſilver, or, prefer them before ſilver. Again, John vi. 27. Labour not for the meat which periſheth, but for that meat, &c. i. e. Labour more for that meat which endureth unto everlaſting life, than for that which periſheth: for our Lord did not mean that we ſhould live idly, without taking pains for a ſubſiſtence. So, in this place, when thou makeſt, &c. call not, that is, rather call the poor than thy friends, &c. The like may be obſerved in many other places: for our Lord does not here forbid us to invite our friends, &c. but he prefers mercy and charity before ſuch invitations. We may give ſuch teſtimonies of our friendſhip to our relations and rich neighbours; but whether this will entitle us to any reward from God, is another queſtion. Nor do I think that we are obliged actually to ſend for the poor, &c. to eat at our houſes; the duty required of us is, to relieve them in proportion to our ability. If therefore we ſend them proviſions, or money, or clothes, we may do a more ſubſtantial charity to them and their families, than if we feaſted them at our own dwellings. On the other hand, comparative particles are often to be underſtood in a negative ſenſe. Thus Luke xviii. 14. This man went down to his houſe juſtified, rather than the other; that is, the humble publican was juſtified, not the proud Phariſee. So John xii. 43. They loved the praiſe of men more than the praiſe of God; that is, not the praiſe of God. Theſe ways of ſpeaking are borrowed from the Jews; of which more examples might be produced. (Fox.)

Call the poor.] A man finds his friends, his brethren, his kinſmen, and his neighbours, in theſe poor people; ſince he finds in them Jeſus Chriſt, who is all things to thoſe who are entirely his. (Q.)

Thou ſhalt be recompenſed.] As temporal rewards may be a ſubordinate end, ſo our eternal reward muſt be the principal end of all our actions. (Wilkins.) So very much concerned was our Lord, leſt Chriſtians ſhould make any worldly conſideration their chief motive to be charitable, that he pronounceth thoſe Bleſſed who ſhould do their charity in ſuch a manner, as ſhould leave no room for any ſuch conſideration. (Dawes.)

At the reſurrection of the juſt.] By the reſurrection of the juſt here, is meant the general reſurrection; which ſhall be, as St. Paul tells us, Acts xxiv. 15. of the unjuſt, as well as of the juſt: But our Lord mentioned only that part of the reſurrection, which was neceſſary, with relation to the argument which he was upon: Otherwiſe the reſurrection of the unjuſt would have afforded likewiſe a moſt powerful motive to ſtir us up to charity, viz. that, in that he ſhall have judgment without mercy, who hath ſhewed no mercy, James ii. 13. (Idem.)

Eat bread in the kingdom of God.] It appears, from the enſuing parable, that the kingdom of God here doth not ſignify the kingdom of heaven in the higheſt ſenſe, but only the kingdom of the Meſſiah; of which the carnal Jew here ſpeaks, according to the received ſenſe of his nation; as of a glorious temporal kingdom, in which the Jews ſhould lord it over the Gentile world, enjoy their wealth, and be provided with all temporal bleſſings and delights, in which they placed their happineſs. (W.)

Ver. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24. Then ſaid he unto him, A certain man made a great ſupper, and bade many: And ſent his ſervant at ſupper-time, to ſay to them that were bidden, Come, for all things are now ready. And they all with one conſent began to make excuſe. The firſt ſaid unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I muſt needs go and ſee it: I pray thee have me excuſed. And another ſaid, I have bought five yoke of oxen, and I go to prove them: I pray thee have me excuſed. And another ſaid, I have married a wiſe, and therefore I cannot come. So that ſervant came, and ſhewed his lord theſe things. Then the maſter of the houſe being angry, ſaid to his ſervant, Go out quickly into the ſtreets and lanes of the city, and bring in hither the poor, and the maimed, and the halt, and the blind. And the ſervant ſaid, Lord, it is done as thou haſt commanded, and yet there is room. And the lord ſaid unto the ſervant, Go out into the high-ways, and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my houſe may be filled. For I ſay unto you, that none of thoſe men which were bidden ſhall taſte of my ſupper.

Then ſaid he.] By comparing this with that other parable in Matt. xxii. 2, &c. (where ſee the notes) we may ſee evident reaſon to conclude, that the kingdom of heaven, that is, the goſpel-diſpenſation, was repreſented by it. This, as miniſtring true plenty and pleaſure, all that men can want, all that they can wiſh, to render them perfectly happy, is compared to a ſupper. The bounty and infinite love of God are ſignified by the greatneſs of that ſupper, and the multitudes bidden to it: The firſt bidding denotes all the previous notices of the Meſſiah, by which the law and the prophets were intended to prepare the Jews for receiving him and his doctrine: The ſecond bidding, when all things were ready, ſeems to import all that Jeſus did, and taught, and ſuffered, for their converſion and ſalvation; and all the teſtimonies, and importunate exhortations of his Apoſtles and diſciples to the ſame purpoſe: The excuſes ſent for their abſence, are thoſe prejudices and paſſions, and worldly intereſts, which did not only hinder thoſe Jews from coming into the faith, but diſpoſed them to treat all attempts to win them over, with the moſt inflexible obſtinacy and utmoſt contempt: The gueſts brought in from abroad, to ſupply their places, are the Gentile world; to whom, after the Jews had thruſt it from them, the ſubſequent tenders of this grace and ſalvation were made: And the declaring, that none of thoſe that were bidden ſhould taſte of this ſupper, implies the giving thoſe Jews over to a reprobate ſenſe; and leaving them under that infidelity and perverſeneſs, in which they continue harden'd to this very day. (Stanh.)

With one conſent began to make excuſe.] As if they had conſulted and conſpired together: for tho' they made divers excuſes, yet they all agree in this common pretence, that their other buſineſs prevented their coming. (Beza.) Divers obſtacles to ſalvation are here denoted; 1. Idleneſs, pleaſure, and the pride of riches: 2. The curioſity of the mind and ſenſes, labour, employment, and buſineſs: And, 3. The luſts of the fleſh, and too great a fondneſs towards our family, pleaſures, diſorders, exceſſes, &c. (Q.) This is the danger of eagerneſs in ſuch purſuits, that objects in themſelves innocent, are apt to tranſport us to a degree of deſire and complacency; which by diminiſhing our zeal for better things, ceaſes to be innocent. (St.)

Bring in hither the poor, &c.] See the notes on Matt. xi. 5.

And yet there is room.] There is always room in heaven, for thoſe who will work out their ſalvation. (Q.)

The high-ways.] The hodoi here, or the diexodoi, (as it is in St. Matt. xxii. 9.) are the ways which lead out of the city; and ſignify the various opinions of philoſophers, and the divers ſuperſtitious rites, into which the nations had fallen, by leaving the paths, which Adam and Noah had directed them to follow. (G.)

Compel them to come in.] Not by corporal puniſhment, but by the force and efficacy of reaſon and importunity. (Idem.) How vainly theſe words are brought, to prove that men may be compelled by the ſecular arm to embrace the true faith, appears, 1. From the nature of a banquet, to which no man is compelled by force, but only by the importunity of perſuaſion; and from which no man's buſineſs doth by force reſtrain him, but only by the inconvenience of attending on it; and yet one of the gueſts ſaith, ver. 18. anagkeen echoo, I am compelled to be abſent. 2. From the ſcope of the parable, which reſpects the calling of the Gentiles, whom only Mahometans think fit by force of arms to compel to the faith. We do, anagkazein, compel not only by example, but by exhortation, Mark vi. 45. Luke xxiv. 29. as here: And Chriſt, ſaith Theophylact, here not only commands them to call, but to compel them; "tho' it be free to every one to believe that we may learn, that it is the work of God's great power to make the Gentiles believe." (W.) The compulſion here meant, is not a compulſion by threats and terrors, and bodily puniſhments in this world; but a compulſion or perſuaſion by ſetting a good example, by exhortation, and the moſt earneſt entreaties, laying before men the promiſes and threatnings of the Goſpel; as will appear from the conſideration of the parallel places. (Fox.) I don't believe, that they, who are ſo much for violence in matters of religion, are ſo unreaſonable as to think, that St. Peter uſed any force to bring the Gentiles over to Judaiſm, tho' St. Paul accuſes him of having compell'd them to Judaize, Gal. ii. 14. Nor that the two diſciples, who met Jeſus in the way to Emmaus, did offer any violence to him, to make him ſtay with them; ſince the Goſpel, which ſays that they conſtrained him to ſtay with them, tells us, that this conſtraint conſiſted only in ſaying, (no doubt with great earneſtneſs) Abide with us, Luke xxiv. 29.

Ver. 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35. And there went great multitudes with him: and he turned, and ſaid unto them, If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and ſiſters, yea, and his own life alſo, he cannot be my diſciple. And whoſoever doth not bear his croſs, and come after me, cannot be my diſciple. For which of you intending to build a tower, ſitteth not down firſt, and counteth the coſt, whether he have ſufficient to finiſh it? Leſt haply after he hath laid the foundation, and is not able to finiſh it, all that behold it begin to mock him, Saying, This man began to build, and was not able to finiſh. Or what king going to make war againſt another king, ſitteth not down firſt, and conſulteth whether he be able with ten thouſand to meet him that cometh againſt him with twenty thouſand? Or elſe, while the other is yet a great way off, he ſendeth an ambaſſage, and deſireth conditions of peace. So likewiſe, whoſoever he be of you, that forſaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my diſciple. Salt is good: but if the ſalt have loſt his ſavour, wherewith ſhall it be ſeaſoned? It is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghill; but men caſt it out. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.

And hate not his father.] It was the cuſtom of the Jewiſh doctors to lay down before their proſelytes what inconveniences would attend upon their precepts: But Chriſt here diſcovers much greater to his diſciples. (G.) If any man offer to undertake my diſcipleſhip, and doth not prefer me before all others that are neareſt to him, yea, and before his own life too, he is not for my turn: And my ſervice, being ſo ſure to bring perſecutions along with it, will not be for his. (H.) The word miſein, to hate, is, by an Hebraiſm, the ſame with en deuteroo echein, which is ſpoken of thoſe who value any one at a ſecond rate, or poſtpone him to another. (D. H.) The meaning of this place is not that a man ſhould, properly ſpeaking, hate his father or his mother; for how can our Lord, who enjoins us to love our enemies, make it our duty to hate our parents? The word therefore which is here render'd to hate, likewiſe ſignifies to love leſs, and to take leſs care of; and that it ſhould have been ſo tranſlated here, is plain from a parallel text, Matt. x. 37. which is likewiſe to be obſerved in many other places. Thus Leah, Gen. xxix. 31. is ſaid to be hated, that is, Jacob did not love her ſo well as he did Rachel. And the Apoſtle, Rom. ix. 13. cites theſe words, from Mal. i. 3. Jacob have I loved, and Eſau have I hated; which words have no relation to any eternal decree of God's, whereby Eſau was made incapable of everlaſting life. It is an unworthy thought of the greateſt, the beſt, and moſt perfect being, to ſuppoſe that he made any of his creatures merely to glorify his juſtice, or with a deſign that they ſhould be everlaſtingly miſerable. I would rather ſay, I do not underſtand a few difficult texts, than interpret them in a ſenſe which contradicts many plain ones, and faſtens ſuch imputation on the creator of the world. (Fox.) And thus alſo we are to underſtand the like expreſſions in Deut. xxi. 15. Matt. vi. 24. and elſewhere.

Bear his croſs.] i. e. With a preparation of mind to ſuffer any thing rather than part with me. (H.) See the notes on Matt. x. 38.

For which of you.] Our bleſſed Saviour, by theſe two parables, adviſes all his followers to ſit down, and conſider, to weigh well, and caſt up before-hand, what it is like to coſt them to go through with their profeſſion of religion: This, he tells us, common prudence will direct men to do in other caſes; particularly when they either go to build, or to fight: As a man that intends to build, will conſult whether he is able to defray the charges; and a king that goeth forth to war, will conſider what ſtrength he has to make oppoſition. In like manner ſhould perſons engage in religion; not raſhly, but adviſedly, with conſideration and judgment. (Burk.) Two things do uſually hinder men from embracing that narrow way which leadeth to eternal life: 1. The difficulties of the duties poſitively required of all Chriſtians, viz. the love of enemies; requiring us not only to forgive their injuries from the heart, but alſo to overcome their evil with our good: The reparation of any injury done to another in his good name, or fortunes, not only by begging his pardon, but by reſtoring what we got injuriouſly, and endeavouring to repair his credit; the reſtraining of the tongue from all evil ſpeaking, and uncharitable cenſures; and of our appetites from all carnal deſires; the exact government of our paſſions, and the moderatioa of our affections. to all worldly things; an heart reſtrained by the fear of God from doing evil, and conſtrained by the love of him to yield ſincere obedience to his holy laws. 2. The greatneſs of the temptations we muſt reſiſt, and of the injuries and loſſes we may ſuffer, by perſevering in this way, from the violent aſſaults of Satan, and the continual ſolicitations of the fleſh, the examples and allurements of the world, the perſecutions of it, the loſs of all things, and even life itſelf. Chriſt therefore, by theſe reſemblances, adviſeth us, before we enter on this Chriſtian life, ſeriouſly to conſider of, and weigh theſe things; to form within us the moſt ſtedfaſt reſolutions to perform the one, and arm our ſelves with fortitude and patience againſt the other, that ſo we may not afterwards be moved by them to depart from it. (W.)

Forſaketh not all.] Chriſt doth not here require, that we ſhould actually renounce theſe things; but that our heart, and our affections, ſhould be ſo taken off from them, that we always love them leſs than him; and that we, in preparation of mind, be always ready to part with them, when we cannot keep them without making ſhipwreck of faith and a good conſcience. (Idem.) This is a diſpoſition as neceſſary to make a good Chriſtian, as money is to build a tower, or an army to fight a battle. (Q.)

Salt is good.] This excellently connects with the diſcourſe preceding, thus: The Goſpel I require you to adhere to, is that ſalt with which every oblation that is acceptable to God muſt be ſeaſoned, Mark ix. 48, 49. The preachers of it are the ſalt of the earth, Matt. v. 13. As then ſalt, when it has loſt its ſavour, becomes good for nothing, but to be caſt out into the dunghill; ſo the Chriſtian profeſſor, who lives not according to the precepts of the Goſpel, can do no good to himſelf or others; and if he fall off from it, can hardly be recovered, Heb. vi. 6.—x. 27. When Mr. Le Clerc, and others, object againſt this compariſon, or ſimilitude, that ſalt cannot loſe its ſavour, they conſider not, that in the boiling up of the ſaline particles, of which ſalt is made, there is left a caput mortuum, which is inſipid. (W.) See the notes on Matt. v. 13. and Mark ix. 50. Here our Lord bids his diſciples, not only to practiſe upon themſelves the ſharpneſs of ſalt, by forſaking all they had, but to make themſelves the ſalt of the earth, by performing all thoſe offices to men, which ſalt is wont to do to other bodies: But if they, who ought to be like ſalt, both in reſpect of themſelves and others, ſhould neglect their duty, they would thereby become unſavoury; nor would they be only unprofitable, but hurtful alſo, and conſequently be deſpiſed, and caſt away. So that there is no contradiction between the Evangeliſts (as ſome object) but only a different application of the ſame ſimilitude. (Spanhem. and Burk.)

Fit for the land.] The meaning of eis geen here, may be underſtood either, 1. by that in St. Matt. v. 13. Ye are the ſalt of the earth; that is, the perſons by whom all the men on the earth muſt be ſeaſoned; or, 2. by the uſe of the word, he ge, the earth, or the land, ordinarily, for the inhabitants of the earth; as in 1 Sam. xxvii. 9. Smiting the land, &c. (H.)

He that hath ears.] The heathens obſerved, that ſoloeciſms may be committed in hearing, as well as in ſpeaking. In this reſpect, therefore, it is required, that we be ſo preſent, that we give ear, and that our hearts be as near as our bodies. (Andr.) To have ears to hear, is to have a mind free from corrupt and ſinful prejudices, diſpoſed to hear and embrace the truth, and deſirous to underſtand and practiſe it. It is a proverbial ſaying. (Fox.)

C H A P. XV.

Chriſt converſeth with publicans and ſinners; inſtructing them in the parables of the loſt ſheep; the piece of ſilver; and the prodigal ſon.

Ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. THEN drew near unto him all the publicans and ſinners for to hear him. And the Phariſees and ſcribes murmured, ſaying, This man receiveth ſinners, and eateth with them. And he ſpake this parable unto them, ſaying, What man of you having an hundred ſheep, if he loſe one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderneſs, and go after that which is loſt till he find it? And when he hath found it, he layeth it on his ſhoulders rejoicing. And when he cometh home, he calleth together his friends and neighbours, ſaying unto them, Rejoice with me, for I have found my ſheep which was loſt. I ſay unto you, that likewiſe joy ſhall be in heaven over one ſinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine juſt perſons which need no repentance. Either what woman having ten pieces of ſilver, if ſhe loſe one piece, doth not light a candle, and ſweep the houſe, and ſeek diligently till ſhe find it? And when ſhe hath found it, ſhe calleth her friends and her neighbours together, ſaying, Rejoice with me, for I have found the piece which I had loſt. Likewiſe, I ſay unto you, There is joy in the preſence of the angels of God, over one ſinner that repenteth.

Sinners.] They whom the ſcripture generally, and this portion of it in particular, characterizes by the name of ſinners, are the habitual and the obdurate, the great and eminent offenders. (Stanh.)

To hear him.] If we come to hear with a good intent, the Spirit of God takes order, that the word ſhall be profitable and fruitful, like good ſeed ſowed in good ground; and to this purpoſe it is, that St. Gregory ſaith, "When hearers come with a good appetite to hear the word, the teachers are enabled with greater gifts of underſtanding. For oft-times God gives his word to the teacher, in favour of the hearers." (Andr.) To draw near to Chriſt by faith, prayer, love, and meditation upon his word, is almoſt every thing which is to be done in this life. (Q.)

Murmured.] Not conſidering that he converſed with them as their phyſician, not as their companion; and therefore his proper work and employment lay among his patients. (Burk.) See the notes on Matt. ix. 11. and Luke xi. 37.

And he ſpake this parable.] For the better underſtanding of theſe three parables, note, 1. That publicans, groſs ſinners, and heathens, were, by the ſcribes and Phariſees, judged unfit to be converſed with, even tho' it were with a deſign to reduce them from their evil courſes; they thinking God had caſt off the care of them, and had no deſign to grant them repentance unto life. 2. That publicans and heathens, ſinners and heathens, are joined uſually together, as being accounted perſons of the ſame deſperate wickedneſs, and equally unworthy to be converſed with. 3. That theſe parables, and eſpecially the laſt, are deſigned againſt the ſcribes, and Phariſees, who thought ſo abjectly of publicans and ſinners, and ſo perverſely of the whole Gentile world. And, to convince them of their inhumanity, and ſhew them, that their deportment was very alien from God's merciful inclination to them, and that they ought not to be unmerciful to them, to whom God was ſo well inclined to ſhew mercy; or deny their charity to them, to whom he was ſo ready to afford it: for "he ſpake this parable to them, ſaying, Which of you? (W.) Several duties of a good paſtor, towards a ſoul which is gone aſtray, are here denoted: 1. To have, in ſome meaſure, a greater regard and concern for it, than for thoſe which are ſafe in the fold: 2. To ſeek it with care and perſeverance: 3. To ſupport the infirmities of ſouls with a diſcreet mildneſs, regulated by the divine law; to be ſenſible of their wounds, through a compaſſion which laments them; and to bear their ſins, as his own, by an humble and fervent repentance: 4. Joyſully to undergo the labour which is neceſſary to bring ſouls back to their duty: 5. To manifeſt by his joy, his charity for ſinners, and his value for ſouls: 6. To excite others to return thanks and praiſe to God, for the graces which ſouls have received by his miniſtry. (Q.)
